—— The swelling produced by the sting of mosquito, wasp, ant or bee, can be immediately reduced by the application of turpentine.

—— A fir forest is always a silent one. Birds almost always choose deciduous trees to sing in.

—— No principle of the laws of civilized warfare is better known, than that wanton and needless injury to an enemy is not justifiable.

—— The moral power exerted by good and wise councils, in contrast with despotic rule—whether of an Ultra Democracy or of a bigotted Aristocracy—should be a nation's bulwark in this 19th century.

—— The following recipe is given for making acorn coffee, which is said to be an excellent imitation of the genuine article: 1st. Take off the hull and dry the kernel. 2d. Roast and pulverize in the usual manner, using about the same quantity that you like of coffee.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Gen. Todleben, the famous Russian engineer, who gained so much reputation at Sebastopol, was in England. He had visited Woolwich, and tested a Whitworth gun, which throws 600 pound shot. It was, so they say, a perfect success.

The Emperors of France and Russia had met, and had several long interviews.

Nothing definite had been agreed on between the Danish and German Powers.

Franz Muller had been found guilty of murdering Mr. Briggs, and sentenced to be hanged.

Berryer, the famous French advocate, is paying a visit to Lord Brougham in London. A grand dinner will be given him there by the legal profession before he leaves.

Hong Kong advices to Sept. 10, state, that according to the latest intelligence from Yokohama, Japan, the marines were under orders for immediate embarkation, and the expedition was to sail three days later; viz., on on the 28th of August. It is to consist of 8 British ships, mounting 184 guns; 3 French ships and 5 Dutch. A merchant steamer had been chartered by the American Minister to carry the United States flag into action, in order that America also may be represented. The object is to enforce the opening of the inland sea according to treaty. It was intended that the marines should land and destroy the batteries so soon as the fleet had silenced the guns; 1,500 troops and half a battery of artillery would remain at Yokohama, together with two or three British men-of-war and the United States sloop Jamestown, to protect the settlements.

The London press is particularly severe upon Gen. Sheridan's devastating five miles of the Shenandoah valley, in retaliation for murdering a Union officer. The Times and Advertiser are especially so.

The Madrid papers announce that Peru, having refused explanations, all relations between the two countries are suspended.

The Italian Parliament, which met at Turin on the 24th Oct., was adjourned the very next day sine die. Considerable discontent was expressed at the proposed removal of the capital from Turin to Florence.

The last mail informs us that the news of the capture of the Florida by the U. S. gunboat Wachusett had reached Europe, and naturally caused much discussion, the British journals being particularly severe — the London Herald recommending the joint interference of the maritime Powers to punish such an outrage.

Peace between Denmark and the two great German powers has at length been concluded. The Danish Rigsraad was to meet on the 7th of November for the ratification of the treaty, which was to take place within three weeks. Twenty-one days after that event the Prussians will evacuate Jutland. It is said that France assents to the annexation of the Duchy of Lauenburg to Prussia.

A terrific cyclone has broken over Calcutta, causing enormous destruction of property. Of 200 vessels in the Hoogly (a branch of the Ganges) 10 are reported to be totally lost; and of the remainder 20 only are reported to be seaworthy.

The fleet of the English, French and Dutch has successfully attacked the forts of Prince Negato in the Straits of Shimonosaki. The Japanese have sued for peace, and promise to open the Straits.

THE SEA SHELL.

BY WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

But I have sinuous shells of pearly hue
Within, and they that lustre have imbibed
In the sun's palace-porch, where, when unyoked,
His chariot wheel stands midway in the wave.
Shake one, and it awakens—then apply
Its polish'd lip to your attentive ear;
And it remembers its august abodes,
And murmurs as the ocean murmurs there.

VAN ARDEN'S REVENGE.

"Let me see that, will you?" and the group separated to make room for the tall, dark-bearded man who pressed forward as he spoke.

"Hand it here, Hardy; it is mine," he continued, as he cast a rapid glance at the photograph which Hardy held, and around which an admiring group had gathered.

None thought of disputing the claim, as Hardy handed the picture to Van Arden, and in a moment more the men were engaged in their sad, but alas! not unaccustomed duty.

Two years ago, the sweet girl whose face was pictured on that tiny carte had parted from her lover one snowy December night, and in parting placed in his hand this counterfeit of her dear self.

Truly and tenderly it was prized, and many a night, while pacing to and fro on some lonely beat, Van Arden had gazed lovingly on those dear features by the pale light of the moon, or while sitting with his comrades near the cheerful camp fire, had managed, unseen by them, to place his picture so that the light shone upon it, and ever and anon to cast upon it a stolen glance.

In one place just over his heart it always lay, until on one disastrous day fate turned against our armies, and the brave and tender soldier lover was captured and taken with other unfortunates to Richmond. Here his watch was taken from him, his pockets rifled, and their contents appropriated to the rebel sergeant, who superintended the operation, when in an unlucky moment the eye of a gray uniformed captain, who stood near, fell upon the sweet face of this picture, which they had taken by main force from Van Arden, and retained in spite of all his entreaties.

Watch, money, letters, he had not condescended to ask for, but he had begged for his picture as he might have done for his life. But no. With a vile oath the captain sprang forward, and seized it from the sergeant's hand, and turned to the window that he might examine it more closely. With a brow black as night Van Arden watched him, but attempt to gain his lost treasure was vain. He was but one among twenty; unarmed amid a score of revolvers and bayonets.

He saw the captain scan that gentle face with his wicked gaze, heard his coarse comments on its beauty, and then, most horrible of all, saw him imprint a kiss on those pure lips, that even he had hardly presumed to touch.

Then stretching his hands towards heaven, in a voice deep with suppressed emotion, he exclaimed:

"As God lives I will be revenged!"

A year passed by. Van Arden had spent eleven long weary months in a Richmond prison. A month he had been with his regiment, and now in his old place, seemed panting for the fray.

A mile distant the battle raged, the most terrible of the war, they said; and Van Arden's regiment stood waiting to be called into action. Anxiously the men gaze down the long dusty road. A long line of ambulances only is to be seen moving slowly towards the distant hospital tents, with their loads of patient, suffering humanity. Now a young surgeon, with his green scarf fluttering in the breeze, gallops rapidly past, and following him an aide spurs his jaded horse to the uttermost.

He stops, a word to the colonel, who vaults into the saddle as he speaks, an instant more, and the men are marching at double quick down the dusty road along which they have gazed so long.

But a few moments more and they are enveloped in the dust and smoke and din of battle.

Our army fought, not like devils nor tigers, but like tried men and true, and the day was ours. Men said Van Arden never fought so well, as when a few hours later a party which had been detailed to bury the dead carried towards the long open trench the rebel captain he had slain. Then and there they had found the picture which Van Arden had claimed.

He had accomplished his revenge.

WATER BATTERY AT FORT MORGAN.

The capture of Fort Morgan, in Mobile Bay, was effected, after a bombardment of 24 hours' duration, on the 23d of August last. The attack was conducted—as all the world knows—by valiant old Admiral Farragut, the naval hero of our war. We present, on page 148, a sketch of the water battery at this fort. Beneath it Mobile Bay stretches away, into the distance. A portion of our fleet is riding at anchor off the fort. We do not hear much of late as to the progress of affairs at Mobile, but it is known that the city is in our power, and may be captured at any moment. The accessories of our sketch need not be particularised. They are such as are incidental to camp life in and around a fortress, and will be easily recognised.

Oysters in Paris.—The cost of the oyster in Paris confines its consumption to the richer classes. Notwithstanding, however, the high price at which it is sold—generally from 8d to 10d a dozen—enormous quantities are eaten. It has been calculated that 7,000 to 8,000 baskets are daily emptied in Paris. Every basket contains 150 oysters, so that nearly 1,200,000 are daily opened and swallowed in that greedy capital; 36,000,000 oysters a month, or 288,000,000 in the eight months of the year to which the consumption of that mollusk used to be limited.

There is a Massachusetts clergyman who rejoices in the singular name of Rev. Preserved Smith, a unique species, doubtless, of a common genus.

WATER BATTERY AT FORT MORGAN, IN MOBILE BAY, ALABAMA—PART OF OUR FLEET LYING OFF SHORE.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY MOSES & PIFFET, N. O.

THE SHENANDOAH VALLEY—WAGONS AND CANNONS CAPTURED AT THE BATTLE OF MIDDLETOWN, VA., OCT. 19, COLLECTED AT MAJOR-GEN. SHERIDAN'S HEADQUARTERS.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

WOMEN VOTING IN NEW JERSEY, TOWARDS THE CLOSE OF THE LAST CENTURY.—FROM AN OLD PICTURE.

SONGS OF THE WINDS.

BY WILLIAM ROSS WALLACE.

Ye winds of Palestine,
Sing softly o'er each holy shrine,
Sing of the prophet's wondering eye
That saw the Future shadow by

With all its pomp of woe and bliss,
The godlike birth, the traitor's kiss,
The temple rended and the night
That brought for man Redemption's light—
Sing, winds!

II.

Ye winds of iron Rome,
Sing of its wolf-fed founder's home,
Who, rearing high his hairy hands,
Shook law unto a thousand lands,
The law of force and only force,
The signet of his Empire's course,
With teeth of steel and brow of Fate,
Too stern for love, too proud for mate—
Sing, winds!

III.

Ye winds of myrtled Greece,
Sing of the azure eyes of Peace,
Of all her lovely Art that spread
Light on the living and the dead,
Light that is yet the light of mind
In an eternity enshrined,
Light that is yet the fondest nurse
Of the Ideal's Universe—
Sing, winds!

IV.

Ye winds of Freedom's Land,
Sing Power that wields with equal hand,
Where all behold a common shrine,
Let only by the Soul Divine
That rainbows every race with love;
Dropping for ever from above
Sweet benedictions, where the voice
Of choral Heaven cries, "Rejoice!"—
Sing, winds!

V.

Ye winds of every clime,
Sing to the waving wand of Time,
Religion, Freedom, Peace and Power,
Borne on the car of every hour,
When only joy shall lip the world,
One ensign over all unfurled,
Flaming upon its golden span
"The Endless Brotherhood of Man"—
Sing, winds!

A DOMESTIC STORM

"AND ITS REVELATIONS."

BY J. E. D.

Mrs. Kempler had been in the company of a gossiping young widow, a near neighbor, all the afternoon of a bright October day.

It is a curious yet an acknowledged fact, that young widows generally have a cognition of everything that transpires within their circle of society. I said everything, perhaps I should have said more than everything; they seem to have a sort of poetic license among both married and single ladies, therefore have a never-failing fund of idle words ready to run glibly from their tongue's end.

Mrs. Kempler had heard every subject exhausted—more than exhausted, she had heard upon some particular subjects more than she had wished for, and now was seated in her own well-furnished sitting-room, mentally rehearsing those same disagreeable words which she had laughed at when they came from the lips of her chattering neighbor.

THE EFFECTS OF SCANDAL.

The door gently opened, and in walked her husband, with a good-natured "Hem!" to announce that he was ready for the usual household words of greeting. Receiving no response, he made another and more emphatic "Hem!" and walking up to the luxurious easy-chair, with his folded evening paper he lightly tapped its fair occupant upon the cheek. Silence still held its sceptre over those compressed lips, and he repaired to a chair near, unfolded his paper, and commenced reading.

THE GOSSIPING WIDOW.

How conveniently interesting a newspaper is upon such occasions as this. No general, with his enemy's plan of battle drawn out before him, can make more strategic movements than he who sits behind a newspaper when a domestic storm is gathering. It is the most plausible pretext possible for not hearing any of the little peals of distant thunder; the dispatches are so exciting. There are a thousand different ways with this potent and powerful little instrument to disingenuously break the icy reserve which often steals into a fireside circle.

Mr. Kempler used none of them. He did not know the conflicting emotions struggling for the mastery at this time in the heart of his wife; not that we would carry the idea that he was unconscious of the unusual silence, and perfectly indifferent as to whether or no an air of cheerfulness pervaded his home; on the contrary, he was a very sensitive man, and loved home because it was really home. Neither were little domestic storms so rare under the canopy of his roof that he did not know their portentous signs. Doubtless he had carelessly, yet purposely, raised his eyes from the paper, and saw distant and faint flashes of a coming storm well defined upon the ruffled brow of his wife, for coming events cast their shadows before them. He retrospectively glanced at the past, and saw no circumstance which should at this time raise the slightest ripple upon the sea of happiness; but domestic storms, like the storms of Nature, are governed by incomprehensible laws; they are upon us in a moment, sometimes but a mere sprinkling in the sunshine, for an instant sody; again, they are more noticeable, yet gentle and mild, like April showers, soon gone. Sometimes they come unannounced, without lightning or thunder, a simple pouring down of reproachful words. Again, the whole horizon is overshadowed with clouds, the winds shriek bitter invectives, lightnings flash, and the reverberating thunders roll among their accusations. This is the ominous calm—death to females and blasted hopes mark its course. Woe betides those overtaken by one of these storms.

There are patches upon this terrestrial globe over which storm-clouds never brood—the tinted Chilians and Peruvians never hear the thunder-bursting over their heads, nor look upon the lightning's heavy dew at night descends to moisten the earth. Perhaps there are those of the more human family over whom never has the discordant notes of chasing opinions beneath their roof, but our imperfect natures are generally so warped that they carry forth their carcasts wherever an adverse current disturbs them, or else they soliloquily gather up moisture to distill a dew of bitterness. Would not prefer a good, warm, generous shower to a dew, a cold dampness, that settles down, rusts the soul, and corrodes all the finer feelings of our hearts? Again, further up the Pacific coast, the San Franciscans witness but one storm each year, but that one lasts for three consecutive months, followed by a dreary, sunless and golden sky. Of all these storms and tempests the last is typical of the one darkening the scene before us. The paper which Mr. Kempler was reading had ceased to interest him as an absorbing interest, but that he soon dropped it across his knees, and staring from a side-pocket a small document which, in the world of Government note, already folded, so that the denomination was not visible, and waiting to where his wife sat, he he dropped it into her lap, saying:

"Margaret, give this to Edith—in your name," he continued, after a moment's hesitation, "not mine."

Mrs. Kempler changed colors rapidly, her lips were white and moveless as marble. With a stern and inquiring gaze at him in return, as though she would penetrate, upon the instant, into the innermost recesses of his heart, she unfolded the bill mechanically, and as she glanced at it a shudder shook her clothes.

"A fifty dollar Government note for Miss Edith Mason, from Mr. Kempler; and for what, may I presume to ask?" were the words that came from her lips with seathing accents.

"Margaret, this display of ill-humor is disagreeable and uncalled for. This sayfulness is beyond to annoy you? It came into my mind to-day, while in my office, that you said, a few days since, 'Edith is not well in six months.' And, as I passed her slender means, I laid aside that Treasury-note that you might present it to her to replenish her wardrobe."

"Rather say, Mr. Richard Kempler, that the real motives of your heart were by this course to draw a veil over my face, blind my eyes, while you continued with your intrigues. This money shall never purchase a trousseau for Edith Mason, at least not from my hands," and she flung it contemptuously across her husband.

"Margaret, I don't understand you. Tell me what all this means."

"I have nothing to say that will be new to you," she said, without relaxing the cold and hard expression upon her face—"nothing that will be either interesting or agreeable to repeat. I thought that you should have asked me in marriage and wed me, when your affections were placed in another's keeping—in the keeping of Miss Edith Mason."

"I am still to be her father," he returned, eyeing his wife, as if to read the depth of her earnestness.

"So much the more disgraceful are the intrigues and amours," she returned. "Had you been sincere and frank with me at first, grieved and disappointed as I would have felt, I would have respected you the more, and loved you none the less, for the disclosure. But when, after two years of married life, I learn that the man I trust, love and trusted with my whole soul, from whom I have never concealed a thought that could interest him to know, that he has been playing a false part, avowing at the altar to love me and me alone, when he secretly loved another, my most intimate friend, thinking to provide for her, incurring not only debts as the most precious of his possessions, is it strange that when the tongue of a common gossip should come home to my ears, and other evidences prove, and my own judgment now verifies, what I thought an idle tale to be true as gospel, is it strange, I say, that I should feel incensed at the deception practised upon me, at the infamous outrage of my dearest hopes, my most holy affections?"

"Margaret, spare, tell me that all this is but a cruel pleasantry of yours to prove my heart, and that there is not a word of truth in it," he uttered, imploringly.

"A cruel pleasantry," she returned mockingly. "One does not treat upon thorns willingly. Do not pretend to say that it when I have overwhelming evidence to prove it a bitter truth? My suspicions were unwillingly aroused by rumor, then, for the first time in my life, I went to your private desk, your private drawers—locks did not stop me—and there I found your most valued and treasured keepsakes were tokens from Edith Mason. Not from the Edith Mason of to-day—for you have her, she read, under your roof—but from Edith Mason of years ago, a braid of her hair when she could have been but a mere child. Can you deny this? And remember, too, that I have been you together, day by day, and that glances and actions, unnoticed at the time in my stupid blindness, recur to me now with terrible meaning; all these and other circumstances which are not of themselves similarly trivial, cannot fail, when united, to give cogency to the one fearful conviction of my mind. For once speak the true voice of your heart, and own what I know already, that all the love you ever had to give belongs to Edith Mason."

"I will speak the truth," and he arose and stood before her; face to face, and eye to eye, there was no evidence now in his tone. "Edid love that girl, I do love her now, not with that unholy passion pictured by you, but with such a love and such a regard for her as for a child, such a love as we both have for little Margery our child. Anything farther than this is a vile slander upon her name and mine. Edith Mason is as pure as the dew of heaven yet unfallen, and to breathe a word against her fair fame is the basest of all baseness. I am sorry that you should have not defend her, she came under my roof at your invitation, has remained here as your companion." He picked up the bill as he spoke, returned it to his pocket-book, and continued. "I married you because I loved you, because I was satisfied you loved me in return, and since we were united in that bond, it has been my homely endeavor to act so as to honor a true, kind and faithful woman. In world, indeed, I might appear a little gayer than I have been true and honest with you. I have kept your image so lovingly before my eyes, and your memory so constant in my heart, as to become a mark an object of reproach and sarcasm to half of my intimate friends. Before we were married I told you that I was a plain, matter-of-fact man, and in the part of my life from a living existence. I have tried to look upon that past as a dead and forgotten past." He paused for a while, as if in reverie, and then went on, and went on. "If that veil could be withdrawn for a moment, those things you found in a drawer would be found the last ray of hope she might have had that the rumors were unfounded. She was ready to believe that she had not been deceived, and that she could perceive throughout his statements a disposition to screen Edith Mason, and that was in itself an additional confirmation. Margaret, you have spoken of Miss Little Edith? What that braid of hair? While these subtle queries were distilled into poison within her soul, her lips mockingly uttered them.

"Their history," he answered, with no touch of self-consciousness, "I will relate to you at a future period."

"Why keep them at all, unless as a memento of one still dear to you?"

"I have kept them, buried them with that past," he said, and now still more bitterly than ever before he felt the sad consciousness of not being able to pour out his most secret thoughts and feelings, to withdraw the veil. If he could have told with a perfect assurance of being believed, he would have told all; but he felt too well that the aroused jealousy of his wife, her sex prevented her from reposing a full and generous confidence and trust in her. "I once said to myself if the time ever came when I can without pain to others, tell their history without a pang or a fear, I shall gain a victory over my proud spirit."

"And that time has never come," she interrupted him.

He would have continued, but his tongue was tied forever, at least for the present, for pride would suppress his indignation at being questioned like a guilty culprit.

"You see that I read all," she resumed. "As you came into the room I was hesitating whether or no to accuse my husband. Alas! such a course I thought could never restore lost love." As she said these words she turned to him and waited directly. "I hesitated whether or no to send the object of his attachment away with no explanations. I would have done so, but you, you did not at that moment asked me to give her that money—a servier I have often performed before this without suspicion."

"Margaret," he interrupted her, for he was now aroused to a true realization of all the bitterness and baseness of her unjust suspicions of him; "Margaret, you have been deceived, grossly deceived, he said, "Margaret, if I could I would at this instant sever our marital vows and relations; I do not wish to live with you, for you have proved never love, honor and obey one you think unfaithful to you. It will be far better that this should be done than to continue, as at present, to live a lie."

"Have you forgotten our child?" she asked, slunderingly.

"I have not," his voice trembled; "she is all that unites us now. For her sake—the sake of her future, her good name—an open separation must not be avoided if possible. He stopped a moment as if lost in the deepest labyrinth of thought, and then continued. "I moved all this, by quiet management, and with the full concurrence of Edith Mason, I will leave you. I shall sail for San Francisco to-morrow afternoon."

"Husband, husband, you have not loved me—if you love your child, do not desert us now. I will submit to any disgrace but this."

A few moments before she had been defiant, now that she saw the marks of a resolute determination upon her husband's face, her pride unchanged in its nature, sank into humiliation.

"Objections are useless," he said.

"But you will not leave me in anger; say that you will return soon and this miserable scene be forgotten."

"Shall I tell you when I will return?" he looked steadfastly into her eyes. "When you write me that you are ready to believe unfalteringly all that I may say in candor, whatever opposing evidence may stand before you; when you are ready to challenge and repel gross falsehoods uttered against me, until then I shall believe that my presence will be irksome to you. It is necessary for our firm to have a resident agent or partner in California. We had designed sending an agent; I shall go in his stead. It shall be for you to say how long I remain."

Mrs. Kempler's proud spirit revolted at this speech. She had been uttering scathing reproaches against him, upon what she considered well grounded, and he was passing sentence for the love she imagined had never been here, while he, indifferent and independent, stood afar off awaiting her pleasure—her petition whom he was proposing to abandon, this was too degrading to her pride, the tide of her feelings turned again.

"You scorn my society?" she spoke proudly. "I asked you—a shame to me that I did—to remain for the sake of respectability; that would only be a contemptible mockery of respectability. I would not have you suppose, and she brought out the words with seething contempt—"that I shall sink to the level that these rumors have impressed you with Edith Mason. If the native dignity of my womanhood, the principles I inherit from my mother, my love for our innocent child do not hold me to you, I trust that the hope of winning your approval will not. I offer but one promise. If you choose to remain in California until I do return, I will write to you and try to receive a love such as most men are glad to win by assiduity of attention and proofs of unchanging affection. If you remain away by a wilful and unrevengeful absence, you will never see your native state until the grass grows over my grave."

Richard Kempler already had in his lips, but he too was proud, and his will unnerbed.

"Act your own pleasure—your anathema against Edith Mason is unjust and unwomanly, and it is more to save her reputation—to remove all grounds of scandal, that I take the course I do—before I go I shall make such provision for your support as to maintain you in comfort, and shall confide to no one the peculiar circumstances of my departure, leaving you at liberty to act in relation to me in any manner one particular case, according to the dictates of your own good will and pleasure."

"And now may that one restriction be," she asked eagerly.

"That you shall speak nothing about this matter to Edith Mason, by word or deed until you hear from me by letter."

"Have her under my roof!—me feigned words of esteem when her secret soul loathes her as much as it loved her before this."

"She proposes visiting a friend in the country; you can recede." His voice was calm now, with more of the retreating than a commanding tone. "In my request granted?"

"Certainly, if you desire it."

And that was the little bell rang for their late tea, and they directed their steps to the dining-room and sat down at the table as usual, but how changed from the hour—this had been her home ever since her dearest friend Margaret Rutland had married Richard Kempler, merchant, and how changed to her appeared the eyes of Edith that Margaret ate nothing, and that she spoke only to avoid the appearance of singularity. Her self-control was wonderful, and was broached, the pleasures and beneficial results conceded—she would see forth upon it in a day or two—Mr. Kempler continued his purpose of a business visit to the Pacific coast.

"Why don't you go with him?" inquired Edith of Mrs. Kempler, when she had not yet stop without me if I were in your place—only think of seeing the Sierra Nevadas—the famous Yo-Semite, the Gold Hills and Silver Mines."

But Margaret's response was a counterfeit composure spread over each face. After ten little Margery was brought up with a sitting-room. Her father was sitting with her before holding out his arms she almost sprang from the side of the nurse towards him. Mrs. Kempler took up the child and pressed it fondly to its contents. Mr. Kempler, with a word, dismissed the nurse, took his darling, and laying aside all dignity, sat down on the carpet for a frolic.

That was a happy hour for Richard Kempler, yet an unhappy one. Taking the little one to her father, he said:

"Margaret, in one respect I confess I envy you—the little child is a greater treasure of happiness than all the gold in the world to me, I fear. Do not let me keep you up longer. It is late."

Taking her little Margery, Mrs. Kempler withdrew. She had not yet learned cast herself upon the sofa, there to lie and meditate during the night. He had arisen and was busily writing at his desk when she entered the room, and never turned. He noticed the dark shadows under her eyes, and the tight-drawn lines about her mouth as she sat up and returned her cold yet polite "Good morning."

She made several errands about the room, and once paused as if to address him, but changed her mind.

"But a few hours more and this mockery of life will be ended," she thought to herself.

She arose and went to breakfast, but took only a cup of coffee and a slice of toast, then selected his wardrobe to be packed, and passed to and fro in the room of business. At the dinner hour he did not appear—an hour later he came into the house, and under the color of giving the carriage a precast, he sought her for a third parting with his child, little Margery. He soon returned and stood before his wife.

"It is time for me to go now, Margaret."

She did not utter a word, but looked steadily down at the floor.

"Will you write to me and let me know of little Margery?"

"If such is your wish—"

There was a silence for some moments; Mrs. Kempler was pale and composed.

"Margaret, we have both been wrong. Unfaithful and unworthy as you think me to have been, before me, it almost kills me to part with you so coldly. Can we not say to each other, forgive and forget?"

In the worst of jealousy at the word forgive whispered in her ear, "He is guilty." Her eyes, black and haughty, met his with an answer as clear as her tongue could have expressed.

"I have nothing to say."

"Nothing! A continent must separate us then for a long time—perhaps for ever."

"I was your proposal—I will not change it."

"Not if you knew you would never see me again?"

"Not if I knew I should never see you again," she returned, slowly repeating the words.

"Good-bye, Margaret."

"Good-bye," she said in return, without looking up to notice the last expression upon his countenance, as he left her presence.

An hour after this unceremonious parting, two members of the business firm of Jones, Kempler & Co. stood near the gang-plank of a steamer about to bear upon its passengers on their way to the Pacific coast.

"Jones, will you give this letter to my wife Margaret Kempler?"

"I will," and he received the well-sealed missive from the hands of Mr. Kempler.

"Do it personally, and tell—"

"He got no further aloud" separated the two partners. The letter was delivered to Mrs. Kempler, who received with a feigned smile of complacency. She could not conceal the bitterness which was weighing her down. She was not at all eager to break the seal, and an observer would have noticed that she already knew the contents of it, so indifferent did she appear. The handwriting of the address was too familiar for her to be mistaken—it was that of her husband, and could contain nothing to relieve her heart-sickness—there is no balm to cure the wounds of a woman's heart made by jealousy, and she thought it to be.

When alone she opened it and read as follows:

MARGARET—When this letter will have been placed in your hands I shall be upon the rolling Atlantic.

What I write is intended for your eyes only! Read it attentively to the end, and I know that, with your heart wholly given to God you will then look upon Edith Mason as a dearer friend than ever. You may still, after reading this, think me unworthy, but you cannot think me unfaithful.

I am at last obliged to rend the veil which has so long hidden the past of my life from even your eyes. I could not bring myself to discover I am about to make, before you, face to face. I have wished a thousand times that I could, but the fear of losing your esteem and love stopped me. Now I must, and now it is with the greatest reluctance, the deepest sense of mortification, that I place upon paper the sad story of my past.

Let me commence at the beginning, bring forth from the dusty past a true picture of a sad and bitter trial.

How clearly do I see a mother's face after so many long and eventful years? How plain do I hear her voice! How distinctly my ear—every tone and accent so familiar! How distinctly do I see that silvery sheet of water, and the little purling stream below! Memory, it, and the past, like my pool, she pointed out to me, where she was baptised when a girl. How well do I remember the little prayers she taught me to kneel and beside her knee. Prayer to her asked! Joy—joy to her soul for ever! How well do I remember my boyish longings, how I laid awake at night and prayed that I might be as good, if not a great man—that I might have some way opened to me to fulfil a noble destiny, and make the world, in some little degree, better for my existence.

Time sped on—I grew to manhood—my disposition developed itself—my temper was—ah! I fear should say—my passions were very ungovernable controlled. Before I was twenty-one years of age I was married—in four short years two little girls raised their eyes to mine, and called me father. Now I was a merchant, that I had this story locked within my heart, but I will not weary you with a recital of the various scenes that came before me—suffice it to say that I was a man of pride, rather than the exception, governed my actions—true, I had great faults, of which I thought I had fully made. I prided myself on my truthfulness, and on the absence from my nature of all that was small and selfish.

I passed years over all others and proceed now with the one event which has overshadowed my whole existence, from the day of its occurrence down to the present moment.

Back! memory—to the day and the hour—bring up from the grave of the past that morning of twilight with its sad woe.

It was near nine o'clock in the morning of the last day of December, in the year 18—. I remember it well. I was walking down State street, in Boston—having been commissioned to that city as an agent to dispose of a consignment of crude petroleum from one of the Pennsylvania oil explorations.

Do you not believe, Margaret, that there is a destiny which rules from the cradle to the grave—that in the unpenetrable yet mysterious laws are effecting their specific and certain changes daily by unseen hands, unthought of by us?

Now me though—look back at your own life. You can but believe it.

I had disposed of the oil to a well-known business firm, and by a remittance forwarded the proceeds of the sale to the shippers, after detaining barely enough for my personal and travelling expenses.

As I was upon the very point of setting out upon my return trip, I accidentally met a villain—I can use no more faithful word—named Marley, who, in a business transaction years before, had defrauded me of five thousand dollars, all the money I was possessed of. Heretofore I had been unable to obtain any traces of him. My first thought was to hand him over to the custody of an officer. I thought again: "He is older than I am, and perhaps among friends who will believe him in preference to me, and and are my proofs ready at hand?"

I did not have him arrested, but found myself listening as he told me that his ill-gotten gains had melted like snow under the rays of a vertical sun, barely lasting him a year's revel in New Orleans. He had returned to Boston—his old home—he said; had been upon the Grand Jury the six months previous—had been dabbling in stocks—was establishing a credit, the same as he had done years before when a Washington street merchant.

I know not how it was, but I found myself a ready listener to the dishonest scheme which he gradually unrolled, and which was to culminate in his buying as heavily as possible—upon short credit—and make a mercantile failure, the same as he had done years before.

Perhaps it was because he so faithfully promised to redeem his old obligations that made me listen and promise in return that I would wait and not molest him with any legal proceedings. I looked back at the happiness I had anticipated in rearing and educating my two little girls, and remembered it had been rudely torn asunder by the former wicked deceits of this same man. He had made "sorrow and disappointment handmaids at my fireside, famine and poverty guests at my table," and is it so great a wonder that I should be listening and secretly wishing he might be successful, so that he could restore my little fortune?

How true it is that vice in its true light is so deformed, that it shocks us at first sight, and would hardly ever seduce us did it not wear the mantle of virtue.

I was infatuated at the thought of getting back my honest dues, and gradually schooled myself to think I was doing right to secure from this man this indebtedness, no matter how he obtained the money.

One day he proffered me stocks amounting to forty-five hundred dollars, to cancel the obligation spoken of. I took them, without hesitation; and seeking to stultify my conscience, I did not ask him how he obtained them; yet, at the same time, I knew—or thought I knew—he had purchased them without any intention of paying for them; he intimated the same to me. Yet I did not return them, and therein consisted my guilt and in nothing more. I had deliberately received those stocks from him, knowing they had been obtained wrongfully.

Disguise it as best I could, I also felt guilty of the wrong perpetrated.

I turned part of the property into gold, yet I could not bear to touch it—its inherent attraction seemed changed into a repulsion. I sealed the bag and sent it by express to another State and followed it.

Arriving at my destination I sat down, without going to the express office, meditating whether the possession of this treasure would not be a source of misery rather than pleasure. He had paid it to me to cancel an honest indebtedness, I argued. Hesitating and uneasy, not knowing what to do, I picked up a paper. I am thus explicit, because I want you to know all. I fancied I could see nothing from top to the bottom of the sheet but one paragraph over and over again:

"He that covereth his sins shall not prosper, but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy."

One impulse urged me to stifle such thoughts. Another, to restore the ill-gotten property. Oh, if it could be restored, and I relieved of these self-accusations, I would be a happy man, I thought.

While my soul was engaged in this conflict, a hand was laid upon my shoulder, and I was told by an officer that I must consider myself in custody and await a warrant and requisition from Boston.

I at once volunteered, and did return to that city without either a warrant or requisition. I heartily wanted the ill-gotten treasure restored to its proper owners. Little did I imagine to what a boiling and seething cauldron I was hastening.

I was taken into the police court, and there stood the man, Marley—arraigned as a criminal—who had so lately in the same halls of justice, as a grand juror, passed judgment upon his fellow-man, and I was supposed to be his accomplice.

The web was then unrolled before my eyes, and I saw that instead of purchasing—as he told me he had done—he had procured upon forged checks thirteen thousand dollars' worth of stocks.

It was developed that he had purchased stocks several times in a legitimate manner, paying therefor in bank cheques certified; afterwards he had purchased personally three different bank cheques of the denomination of twenty-five dollars each, and that the twenty-five had been carefully extracted, by means of acids, and five thousand inserted in each cheque, and thus he procured the stocks and bonds—a part of which he had paid me.

I saw myself entangled in a combination of circumstances, small in themselves, yet enough to have the finger of suspicion pointed at me; a part of the proceeds of a forgery was found in my possession. My heart sunk within me and was full of fear; in vain did I stand at my prison door and assert my innocence—an ominous shake of the head was all the encouragement I received.

I essayed again and again to explain all I knew, hoping some one would listen to me; but as often as I sent forth the dove of hope, so often did it come back with no olive branch—no promise of a shore.

A day was fixed for the trial of us both. Days dragged slowly along, and weeks. At last the day came, and I was placed in the prisoners' box for trial, without counsel, penniless and friendless.

Marley had formerly been a wholesale and retail merchant in that same city; had many friends and relatives of power and influence; and with their aid, assisted by two eminent lawyers, he succeeded in making the Government counsel think he was but a mere dupe or tool of mine. There was no possibility of his escaping the penalty of his crime except by this course; therefore they represented that he received the forged cheques of me, he was to plead guilty of uttering them, go upon the stand as a witness, convict me of forging them, and then get a suspension of sentence on the plea of assisting the Government. This was to be the price of his perjury, and for this end he spared neither wealth nor influence—and he succeeded. Why should he not have succeeded? The six months' experience as a grand juror alone gave him sufficient knowledge of the quibbles or evasions of the laws.

His evidence was, that he purchased the original bank checks of twenty-five dollars each, carried them to me and that I altered them to five thousand dollars each, when he again took them and procured the stocks and bonds, and gave me forty-five hundred dollars' worth of them, while he retained the balance for himself. An expert was found who was quite positive from a comparison that the handwriting in the checks was mine. Had not the handwriting of Marley been studiously withheld it would have been too apparent that he was the author of all the writing produced in court, with the exception of two letters which I acknowledged to have written to my little girls a year before. I had no defence! I arose, my trembling limbs and voice spoke too plainly of the pent-up anguish in my heart—yet these uncontrollable emotions were seized upon and portrayed as symbols of guilt. I simply asked each witness in turn if he had ever seen me before, or ever heard a single word against my reputation as an honest man, to which they all emphatically replied "No." I could only say more that I was entirely innocent of that forgery.

The jury retired for a verdict. Can you imagine the feelings of a drowning man who clings for dear life to a rotten rope, and feeling it part strand after strand, sees a fearful death before him? Then you can imagine my feelings as I waited for the verdict of that jury. It came at last, and that word—Guilty—is still like knells ringing in my ears. There is no need that I should describe my feelings to you, Margaret, to whom I write these pages of troubled memories; then it was that I wanted a real friend to stand up and proclaim aloud against the injustice done me.

Have you never felt, from the days of your childhood, while traversing the pathways of life, have you not at some time felt that a friendly word from some one would have fallen like dew upon the arid sands of your thirsty heart? None came to me. I asked myself can this be life, or is it a dream? I wished I could lay my head down at night, and that its resting-place would be the grave. If a dream, the reality was a sad awakening; sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment.

I had let none of my friends know of the calamity which had overtaken me. I knew that the shock of a great misfortune always shivers every false sentiment, and silences all-feigned words, while at the same time it only brings out in added strength the true and natural affections. It would be useless to call upon my summer friends. I had only one true friend, an old mother, and I would sooner have let the rack of torture rend every bone in my body than let her know of my disgrace.

I entered the walls of a prison—a convict—and the grated doors that swang upon their massive hinges seemed like closing me in a tomb of living death. Upon my entrance to my narrow cell, scarcely any larger than will be my grave, hardly room enough before its iron cot to sink upon my knees and cry to the Father of Mercies for help and consolation; upon my entrance to that cell I fell down upon my knees and prayed earnestly, as my mother had taught me when a child, that God would take the bitter cup from me. Space will not allow me to unveil all the painful experiences of my prison life. A jury had pronounced me guilty of a crime. My assertions of innocence were now treated with indifference, or a curling lip silently proclaimed an immovable disbelief; no one imagined or thought of the possibility of my being innocent, even when I attested it from the very depths of my soul. Ah! how harshly this grated against my pride of having always had at least one virtue in its purity, truthfulness. I was almost ready at times to say I did commit the crime, to acknowledge anything I might be charged with, rather than have my words received with such cold distrust.

Hours I sat, my mind busied with the wicked questionings of God's purposes in thus afflicting me. Was it His own plan to bring me to Himself, to lead me to some higher good? The same sun that hardens clay softens wax. While many around me were cursing the consequences of their crimes, not its committal, I was secretly pouring out my heart that this affliction might make me a better man.

In looking at the past, what was most oppressive and most agonizing to my mind was thinking of my two little girls; their innocent and confiding reliance on me, and the shock their sensitive natures would receive, recoiling at the thoughts of being a convict's daughters; becoming the especial and unprotected objects of a libertine's arts; the finger of scorn pointing them out; or malice with ready sneer crimsoning their faces in coming years, because of a father's disgrace. I thought hundreds of times I could hear their voices repeating their little prayer—

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep," &c.

Think you, Margaret, I could cease to love them, even though I was disgraced and dishonored? No! as long as there is a pulsation of my heart I shall love them and their memories.

At last after long, long years of laborious toil I was set free. But where should I go? To whom could I look for an encouraging word? Had I once a home? it was now a lonely ruin. Had I a wife? she hearkened to the voice of evil rumor. Had I children? they would scorn to call me father. I was actually degraded and despised; the circles which once contained all my sympathies were now for ever closed against me. For years I had not even beheld the stars of heaven; for years I had not heard one gentle tone—one cheering, kindly word.

I went to the Golden State, and in time amassed a competence. I returned to my native place; strange faces filled every familiar window; no one knew me. I sought for my wife; she had been dead years. I wound my way with heavy footsteps to the village graveyard. I followed slowly behind the old silver-haired church sexton as he led the way and pointed out the graves of those I once had known; some of them had been my schoolboy companions. In one corner he pointed out two sunken graves; not even a slab or board noted their names.

"There," he said, "are the graves of the wife and daughter of ———, a convict."

Little did that old man imagine I was the one whose real name he had uttered.

"There," said he again, pointing to another mound near, "lies his mother."

I sank down upon the ground, and with the silent inner voice of agony called upon the mountains to fall down and crush me, and upon the earth to gape and take me in. The constellations were glimmering in the distance before I left that spot—that sacred spot of the earth's ground, but why should I linger upon these scenes?

One child, a small frail girl when I saw her last, was still alive. I searched for her, far and near, quietly and perseveringly; I met you, and—

"O'er the bitter, bitter past
You flung a garland sweet."

In time we were married. Need I tell you now, Margaret, that Edith Mason is my daughter. Yes, I am he who was once James Mason; the Legislature of California upon reasonable grounds changed my name to Richard Kempler. Need I tell you now those things you found in my private desk are what I used to identify that same Edith Mason—your old friend and companion—as my daughter.

No one is more thoroughly ignorant of all these facts than herself, and to no one have I ever told this story but you, Margaret Kempler. My task is now done; after this frank confession, if you deem me unworthy to be your husband you can in time procure a divorce upon the grounds of a wilful desertion, and in that case, I shall settle all of my property equally upon you, Edith Mason, and our little Margery. You can address at the Occidental Hotel, San Francisco,

I am as ever, truly yours,
Richard Kempler.

One dark and desponding morning of our late national trials, the country was startled by an electric flash from the Pacific shores—"California sends one hundred thousand dollars in gold to relieve the wounded loyal soldiers of the old Union." This was before the era of Sanitary Fairs; that message sent a thrill of joy throughout the land, and carried relief to the hearts of thousands. Another message went over the wires that same day carrying joy to one heart in that land of gold. It read as follows:

Mr. Richard Kempler,
Occidental House,
San Francisco, Cal.

Forgive and forget. Come home immediately. Our Edith will be married at our house. She knows all. Margaret Kempler.

THE OLD PROVINCE HOUSE.

On page 157 is a sketch representing the conflagration of the old Province House at Boston, Mass., on the evening of Oct. 25th. The building has been occupied for a long time past as a negro minstrel opera house by Messrs. Morris Brothers, Pell & Trowbridge. It was built in 1679 by Peter Sargeant, Esq., one of the wealthiest and most influential citizens of his day in New England. At that time, and for many years afterwards, it rejoiced in the most commodious and elegant surroundings. It stood upon a large lot of land, and was approached by a high flight of massive stone steps and through a magnificent doorway. The history of the estate, though brief, is eventful. It first passed out of the possession of Mr. Sargeant into that of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, and during the continuance of the Provincial Government it was used as a residence by various successive Governors. When the Revolution came, in 1775, and Washington had expelled from Boston the British forces under Gen. Gage, it was used for the transaction of business by the local town officers. As late as 1616 it was granted to the Trustees of the Massachusetts General Hospital, by whom it was subsequently leased to D. S. Greenough, Esq., for a term of 99 years. Since then the house has been used for a variety of purposes.

In the course of years it had lost the elegance of its surroundings, and only retained a dim and lessening flavor of antiquity. New and lofty buildings surrounding it on all sides kept it hidden from public view. The approach to it was through a narrow archway, opening on the north side of Washington street, and leading into a small courtyard in front of the building. From this courtyard another archway opened into a secluded street behind the house. Our sketch, of course, presents the modern aspect of the building, it having been changed somewhat and remodelled as to the interior, in 1851. The curious reader will find an excellent description of its old-time magnificence in Cooper's novel of "Lionel Lincoln; or, the Siege of Boston." In Hawthorne's "Twice Told Tales," also, will be found several interesting legends of the old house, together with a description of it, from which we extract the following passages:

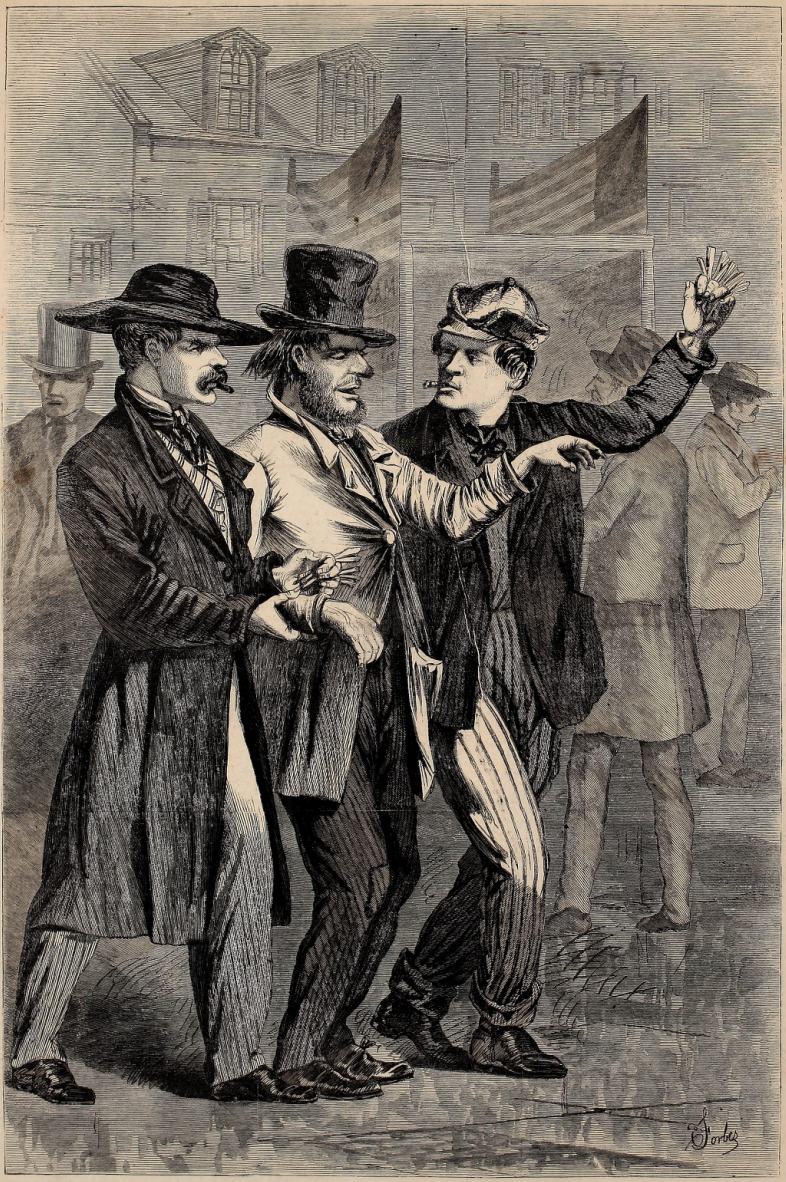
"One afternoon last summer, while walking along Washington street, my eye was attracted by a signboard protruding over a narrow archway, nearly opposite the old South Church. The sign represented the front of a stately edifice, which was designated as the "Old Province House, kept by Thomas Waite." I was glad to be thus reminded of a purpose, long entertained, of visiting and rambling over the mansion of the old royal Governors of Massachusetts; and entering the arched passage, which penetrated through the middle of a brick row of shops, a few steps transported me from the busy heart of modern Boston into a small and secluded courtyard. One side of this space was occupied by the square front of the Province House, three storeys high, and surmounted by a cupola, on the top of which a gilded Indian was discernible, with his bow bent and his arrow on the string, as if aiming at the weathercock on the spire of the old South. The figure has kept this attitude for seventy years or more, ever since good Deacon Drowne, a cunning carver of wood, first stationed him on his long sentinel's watch over the city.

"The Province House is constructed of brick, which seems recently to have been overlaid with a coat of light colored paint. A flight of red freestone steps, fenced in by a balustrade of curiously wrought iron, ascends from the courtyard to the spacious porch, over which is a balcony, with an iron balustrade of similar pattern and workmanship to that beneath. Those letters and figures—16 P. S. 79—are wrought into the ironwork of the balcony, and probably express the date of the edifice, with the initials of its founder's name. A wide door, with double leaves, admitted me into the hall or entry, on the right of which is the entrance to the bar-room.

"It was in this apartment, I presume, that the ancient Governors held their levees, with vice-regal pomp, surrounded by the military men, the councillors, the judges and other officers of the crown, while all the loyalty of the province thronged to do them honor. But the room, in its present condition, cannot boast even of faded magnificence. The panelled wainscot is covered with dingy paint, and acquires a duskier hue from the deep shadow into which the Province House is thrown by the brick block that shuts it in from Washington street. A ray of sunshine never visits this apartment any more than the glare of the festal torches, which have been extinguished from the era of the Revolution. The most venerable and ornamental object is a chimney-piece set round with Dutch tiles of blue-figured China, representing scenes from Scripture; and, for aught I know, the lady of Pownall or Bernard may have sat beside this fireplace and told her children the story of each blue tile. . . . . . . To confess the truth, I was forced to draw strenuously upon my imagination, in order to find aught that was interesting in a house which, without its historic associations, would have seemed merely such a tavern as is usually favored by the custom of decent city boarders and old-fashioned country-gentlemen. The chambers, which were probably spacious in former times, are now cut up by partitions, and subdivided into little nooks, each affording scanty room for the narrow bed, and chair, and dressing-table of a single lodger. The great staircase, however, may be termed, without much hyperbole, a feature of grandeur and magnificence. It winds through the midst of the house by flights of broad steps, each flight terminating in a square landing-place, whence the ascent is continued towards the cupola. A carved balustrade, freshly painted in the lower storeys, but growing dingier as we ascend, borders the staircase with its quaintly twisted and intertwined pillars, from top to bottom. Up these stairs the military boots, or perchance the gouty shoes, of many a Governor have trodden, as the wearers mounted to the cupola, which afforded them so wide a view over their metropolis and the surrounding country. The cupola is an octagon, with several windows, and a door opening upon the roof. From this station, as I pleased myself with imagining, Gage may have beheld his disastrous victory on Bunker Hill (unless one of the tri-mountains intervened), and Howe have marked the approaches of Washington's besieging army; although the buildings, since erected in the vicinity, have shut out almost every object, save the steeple of the old South, which seems almost within arm's length. Descending from the cupola, I paused in the garret to observe the ponderous white oak framework, so much more massive than the frames of modern houses, and thereby resembling an antique skeleton. The brick walls, the materials of which were imported from Holland, and the timbers of the mansion are still as sound as ever; but the floors and other interior parts being greatly decayed, it is contemplated to gut the whole and build a new house within the ancient frame and brick work. Among other inconveniences of the present edifice, mine host mentioned that any jar or motion was apt to shake down the dust of ages out of the ceiling of one chamber upon the floor of that beneath it."

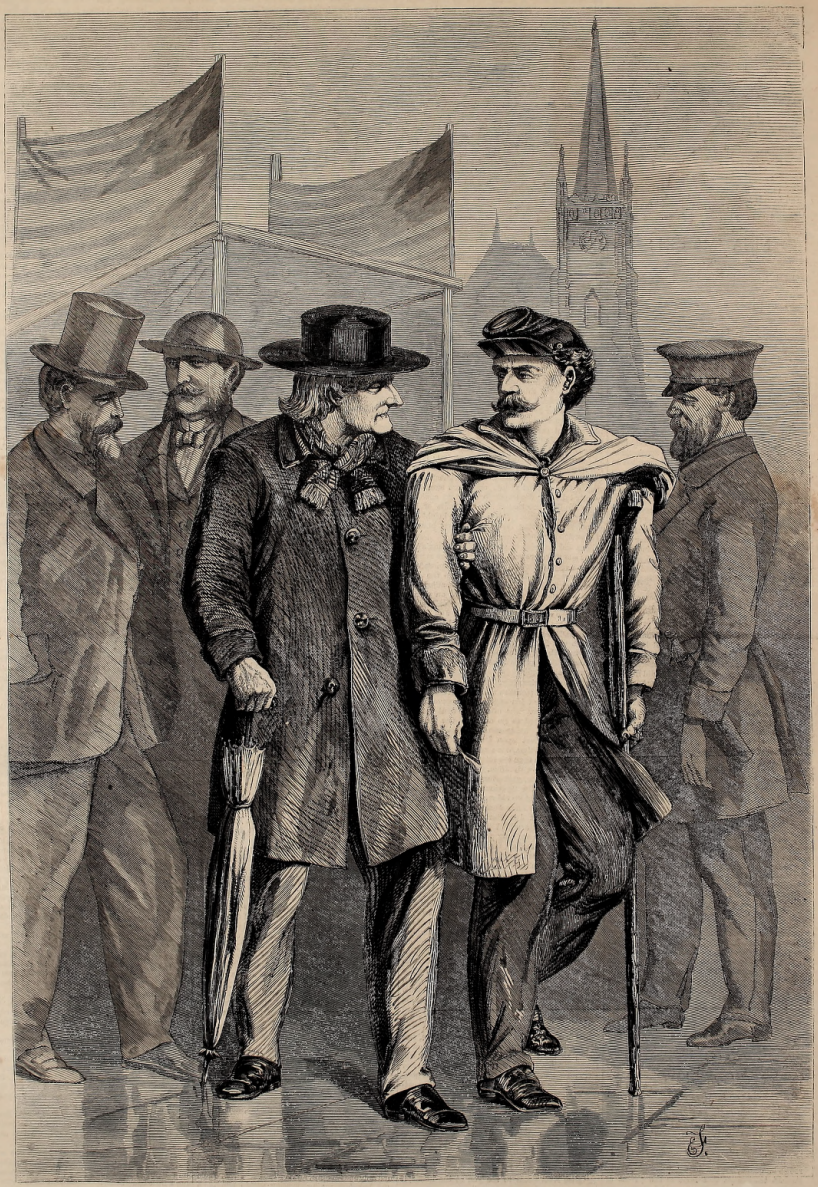
SCENE AT DUTCH GAP CANAL.

A sketch on our first page illustrates the somewhat animating circumstances under which our laborers are prosecuting their work on the Dutch Gap Canal. Last week we gave a picture of the canal and of Howlett's battery, on the north shore of the James river, whence the rebels throw shells, to annoy and impede our workmen. In our present sketch is seen the advent of one of these hostile messengers, and the consequent rapid prudence of our men, who are taking refuge in caves dug in the earth. Many lives are saved by this means. Whenever a shell is seen hurtling through the air, our men take to cover in their caves, and wait there till the shell has fallen and exploded, and the danger is past.



THE PRIZE STEAMER WANDO.

A sketch of this celebrated blockade-runner appears on page 145, furnished by our Special Artist at Boston, in the harbor of which city the Wando is now anchored. She is better known as the Let-Her-Rip. She was engaged in the regular business of running the blockade at Wilmington, N. C., and conveying cotton to Nassau, whence she procured and brought back supplies to the rebels. She left Wilmington for her last voyage as a blockade-runner, on the evening of the 20th of Oct., having on board a cargo of 600 bales of cotton, bound for Nassau. At the very outset, she was discovered, and attacked by the entire blockading fleet on that station. It was a very dark night, however, and favored by the darkness and by her great speed, she ran the gauntlet and got safely to sea. Thereupon the U. S. steamer Fort Jackson, Capt. B. F. Sands, was headed South by East, and kept running all night under a full head of steam. At daybreak, on October 21st, the Wando was discovered, off the port beam, about five miles away, when the Fort Jackson immediately gave chase. The pursuit lasted for several hours, until at length, about eight o'clock, A. M., the Fort Jackson opened fire upon the flying rebel, at long range, with a 100 pounder rifle gun, and a forward 30-pounder. The firing continued until half-past ten A. M., when the Wando surrendered, in Lat. 33 deg. 05 min. N., and Lon. 76 deg. 49 min. W. Ninety-eight shells were thrown, in all. The prize is an ironclad, of about 600 tons, painted white, and is a swift sailer. Her value, including cargo, is estimated at $500,000. On being captured, she was taken to Fortress Monroe, and thence to Boston.



The following is a list of the officers in charge of the prize: Acting-Ensign Smith K. Hopkins, Truro, Mass.; Boatswain P. Alexander Chasen, Baltimore; Acting Master's Mate H. St. C. Eytinge, New York; Acting 1st Assistant Engineer John A. Hill, East Boston; Acting 3d Assistant Engineer W. M. Prentise, Fall River.

Her captor, the Fort Jackson, is a 2,000 ton ship, carrying a heavy armament, and reputed to be the swiftest sailer in the U. S. Navy, excepting, perhaps, the Vanderbilt.

Mention is made of a German metaphysical student who tried to read the works of John Stuart Mill, but gave up in disgust, because the English philosopher proved too clear for him.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION OF 1864—SCENE AT THE POLLS IN N. Y.—A VOTER IN THE HANDS OF THE PHILISTINES.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION OF 1864—SCENE AT THE POLLS IN N. Y.—THE VETERANS OF 1812 AND 1864.

THE OLD FOLKS.

I NEVER shall tell the old folks were,
'Tis a warning of time and breath
To give you the names of the humble pair,
Who have passed through the courts of death;
But the cot on the hill on the top of the dale,
Near the spot where I just have cried,
Tho the lot where the old folks toiled and toil'd;
And the cot where the old folks died
Is dearer far to my weary heart
Than the dearest cot of earth;
For that was the cot on the lot on the hill
Where the old folks gave me birth.

There's a child was near the cot on the lot on the hill,
That will tell to the traveller there
When the old folks had passed through the gates of death,
And the names of the humble pair.
When I tire of the toils and the cares of life,
Oh, then at the spot where I cried,
Near the cot let me sleep on the top of the hill,
Nestled down by the old folks' side.

NINA MARSH;

OR,

THE SECRET OF THE MANOR.

CHAPTER XXVII.—THE ROVE RETURNS TO HER NEST.

A FORTNIGHT passed quietly at Beechwood. A species of solemn tranquility reigned in the house. Mr. Marsh was ill once, spoke little to any one, and never to Nina, unless it were to answer the morning and evening greetings she made at her bed-side. Mrs. Marsh, who was of a most sanguine, unimpressionable nature, had thrown off her melancholy without an effort, and was so placed in the public, as to permit it in her bearing, as she had ever been. We cannot describe Madeleine's feelings, simply because she had none. Her nature was incapable. She was not one-fifteen of her own defects; few of us are; but if she had been gifted with the power to see herself as others saw her, she was not such an apathetic to have profited by the knowledge. She worked on at her roses and lilies, blending fire and snow on her canvas with a practised hand, and she did not see them, or realize afterwards, that she had been toying at the mouth of a volcano.

But the two who really suffered bravely and silently, just terribly, were Nina Marsh and Captain Marsh. Nina had a restless, vivid color in her cheeks, and a dazzling brightness in her eyes which grew more feverish daily, instead of prostrating her energies. She saw no hope, and yet she hoped, clinging existedly to a frail reed of consolation that would break in her hand the directly she put its efficiency to the test. She counted the hours mournfully as they passed. She kept awake at night in order that she might get up and rush through every minute of freedom left to her. Even when she slumbered from pure exhaustion it was only fitfully. She would start and scream at the slightest sound, and her faculties were never so obscured by sleep that she could not begin her sufferings anew the instant she awoke. She never blamed Cyril, nor did he blame her. They met quietly, talked together on different subjects with burning hearts, and kept up valiantly the farce of indifference, which each knew it to be such a miserable lie. It was hard to say which was the calmer of the two. Cyril's calmness was the calmness of despair, Nina's of desperation. Captain Marsh knew the worst of his fate, and was suffering as much as he believed he could ever have to suffer. But Nina's greater sorrow was of that nature which stimulates rather than deadens, for it united anticipation to realization; so that the old wound, instead of being left to heal, or even to mortify, was kept open and raw, besides being threatened every minute with a deeper stab.

Now she had Cyril with her—Cyril, who was more precious to her than her life; but in dark future days she would be infinitely worse than alone. She felt in her heart's core the degrading degradation. To live as the wife of a man she despised and mistrusted, what could be more demoralizing, more hopeless, more terrible?

But in the midst of her own trouble—and this should buy her pardon for some errors—Nina never forgot that she was also in trouble. Mrs. Oldum was nearly mad with his grief at Rose Woodman's sudden fall. The poor girl had been entangled in a cruel snare by her unscrupulous fellow-conspirator, and even her lover, longing to doubt her guilt, could find no reasonable excuse. He might have been more easily compelled if she had given him an honest rival in an honest way. He could have pardoned recklessness, and humbly acknowledged that Rose's beauty gave her a natural right to entertain a better home than he could offer her; but to forsake him and his true, tender love for a licentious despot who had nothing to recommend him but his cutcromit, this was what Ben could not forgive or forget.

He took to the Red Lion convivially like a desperate man, ate his new lay sheep, and he had to drink deep to drown it. But his potations neither sharpened nor deadened his faculties, only hardened them, from a mild, plastic state, of silent nature and strong affections, Ben became a stubborn, loquacious cynic, and a taproom orator of a most humorous kind. He would have given all his fame for a little happiness. But we all know Marmontel's apothegm—Quand on n'a pas ce que l'on aime, il faut aimer ce que l'on a. This advice naturally occurs to most of us. We may put it in rough language, but the theory is the same. Some nations console us that hope is the parent of reality, and therefore, if we cannot find it in one direction we must seek it in another, and make ourselves satisfied with the result, even if it should be but a very mean portion of our desires. This principle of substitution is very congenial to our natures, and to do it justice, it cures many evils which the most resolute stoicism could never touch.

Not that Ben's malady was cured by any such means. It might have been later, but only at the expense of right feeling, disrespect and want of integrity, as the alternative he had chosen was of a doubtful character. To take real pleasure in his bacolic residence he must have been at a dearer price. But he was fast degenerating. Every day he lost some of his old sensitiveness and scrupulosity. He grew keen as a bargain, by force of caring to have her he frightened the old dame into a promise that she would board and lodge him for a certain sum weekly, the sum being so small that it barely covered his share of the household expenses, and left the rest entirely to her own devices. She submitted silently to his exactions, because she hoped every day to regain her influence over him. But every day he became more reckless and desperate, more sullenly determined to have his own way. The same grow disgusted. This was by no means the consummation she had plotted and planned. Her picture had been of a Ben subdued by suffering, penitent and docile, very grateful to her for her services, and unconditionally liberal with his wages. But the reverse of the medal was hardly to be borne. She became annoying, discontented, and harsh, stinting her in order to enrich mine host of the Red Lion, and so bitter and irritable that she would have driven Ben to leave the opinion of her own. The dame began to think that Rose's mild, benignant sovereignty had been more advantageous to her than she had ever supposed, when she was under the rule of the day. She would have liked to recall Rose, and welcome her back to her old kingdom; but it was too late. She had scorned, but now could not mend. The confession she must make to her son before she could satisfy him of Rose's innocence would prevent him having any more dealings with the new state of things. Ben had grown a dangerous character since his disappointment, and was not to be defied. She had only to look in his eyes at times which had made even her quail. She was not easily frightened, but somehow she did tremble before Ben's gloomy displeasure. She ought to get rid of him as she had once longed to keep him. She had a certain capital; it was not money, and yet it was better than money, for it was a perpetual dividend. She determined to realise this, convert it into one large sum, and quietly take her departure to a distant country, there to live in comfort on the fruits of her cruelty and cunning. But the dame's bright day of power was waning fast, and the dark hour of retribution drew nigh.

Nina did not wish to go near Mrs. Oldum's cottage; she therefore sent for Ben up to the manor-house. Her messenger was the gardener's boy, Will, a mere dame, and referred to the Red Lion for further intelligence. He adjourned there immediately, nothing loth, for Ben was a liberal customer, and generally appreciated by young men of a sociable turn—and Jim Stokes was sociable, too much so, as Eliza Wells often found.

"She was fond of society herself," she said, "but then she never forgot her decent limits. If Jim went out with her, she could stop at home the next contentedly."

But then unfortunately, Jim was so constituted that the natural pleasure of eating, drinking, and being met whetted his appetite, and gave him a longing for more. The oftener he went out the oftener he wanted to go out. All the persons he associated with encouraged him. Eliza had to offer had no effect upon him now. They had swayed him for a time, but a relapse soon followed, and he went out more than ever. Then Eliza fell off, and fell out with Eliza. Eliza called Jim a drunkard, and Jim, gathering all insults into one, stung to the heart by Eliza's cold and unpardonable epithet of "a dried-up old maid."

At this juncture Eliza went into hysterics, as in duty bound, and a fine scene ensued, in which Jim openly, fully determined that his commission should carry him not only past but into the Red Lion. When, therefore, Will, the gardener's boy, had assembling acknowledged to Ben's presence in the ale-house parlor, Jim felt personally indebted to him for legitimising his intentions, and paid down the price of a pint of ale.

He found Ben in all the excitement of a fiery debate. He was advocating the rights of the people; he was denouncing the aristocracy; in the sense way that you would crush a venomous reptile obstructing your path. He was cursing the ministers and the government for sending out the parsons to perdition: abolishing capital punishment; cutting up the rich man's parks, to make them into potato grounds for the poor; taxing high and low to one level, both in purse and person; and altogether instituting such reforms, and such revolutions, as would have made the old auditors looked upon him as a man destined to make a great noise in the world, as well as the taproom.

Jim came in for the fag-end of his oration, and sat down very patiently to await until the flow of words should subside. Presently Ben paused, moistened his throat with a draught of amber ale, and listened for a discontent voice. But none came; so he wiped his heated brow on his coat sleeve with a complacent air, and just then happening to catch Jim's eye, he nodded to him, with a smile that almost expressed his thought, "Am I not a fine fellow for a people's patriot and orator?" Jim did not feel quite inclined to acknowledge this superiority, and as Ben's eye still dwelt on him inquiringly, he made his way to the upper end of the room, and delivered his message in an audible aside.

"Miss Nina wants to see you at the house, if it's convenient to you to come."

Ben paused in his decision. Here was the time to make a grand effect, and practise the doctrine he had preached. Miss Marsh, the squire's daughter, was, in the eyes of all present, a member of the bloated aristocracy he had just been crying down with a vengeance. By sending her an insolent answer he would show the consistency of his principles, and make a lasting impression on his auditors. But then he thought of Nina's sad, sweet face, and beautiful eyes, and all the rough chivalry in Ben's nature was aroused.

"You can tell Miss Nina I'm coming, if you get there before me. I'll be in a trot, assured you."

and he marched straight out, unheeding the sneers of his enemies and the reproaches of his friends.

When he reached the manor-house he was conducted to Mrs. Treut's room. The stately housekeeper, who was accustomed to the loftiest tone, was a more formidable person by far than her young mistress. Ben suffered agonies of diffidence. He turned his hat round and round; he examined the lining with peculiar earnestness, then he stared into vacancy with troubled eyes. Mrs. Treut exerted herself to put him at his ease. But there was something so dignified in the very folds of her black silk dress, so much serious thought in her massive brow, that Ben felt he thought himself in the presence of a duchess if he had not known better. Still he could not get over the awe which the air of the room inevitably inspired him, and he was truly relieved when she got up from her seat, saying she heard Miss Nina coming, and would go to another room till they had finished their business together.

She was almost immediately replaced by Nina herself. Nina came towards Ben with a gentle, kind smile on her face, and he made him rescat himself, kindly. Ben dropped into his seat with a gigantic "plop," which made the china on the mantel-piece ring with resonance.

"You needn't look so startled, Ben," said Nina, drawing her chair nearer to the fire; "I have nothing but kind words for you."

Ben shook his head incredulously.

"If I were to tell you that poor Rose was most innocent and unhappy, you wouldn't you be able to believe me without proofs?"

"I should know, miss, you didn't tell a lie knowingly," said Ben.

"You would be sure that I had made a mistake?"

"I should, miss."

"I am grateful to have it in my power to clear Rose's character, and show it now, as it always was, without a stain."

And then she told him all—unbared that iniquitous plot between Lord Gillingham and Dame Oldum, which had proved so fatal to the happiness of two innocent people. She showed skilfully all through, but when she had finished he sprang off his seat, threw his cap into the air three times, and regarded the ceiling as if his ecstacies were too voice. Then, having given his feelings vent, he sat down again, looking confused at his own transports, and apologising very humbly.

"Never mind, Ben," she kindly answered. "I expected something of the sort, and I should have been ill-satisfied if your politeness had been stronger than your feelings at such a time as this."

But Ben had cooled a little now, and had room for a fresh burst.

"He mightn't have been lying, miss, might he? I know his lordship ain't in no wise particular about a bit of truth, but he wanted it to carry favor with you, and thought it would be as well to get Rose off his mind. Bachilus as he, being no gentleman, would be for a trick, but you're sure his lordship would be clever at his wicked ness, and find some learning to help him."

"No, I am positive that Rose spoke the truth, and that Lord Gillingham lied the truth. He would have kept it from me if he could; but when he found that I suspected him, and could not be deceived any longer, he confessed, unwillingly, his horrible plot against poor Rose, and tried to brave it out. But, if you feel any doubt upon the point, you may as well go to Lord Gillingham's. He can have no motive for deception now."

"No, I couldn't treat myself with him," said Ben, firmly. "I should mail him to death, I know I should."

"Then, perhaps, you had better hear what your mistress has to say, and then I believe she will confess, mind; but still, by taking her unawares, you may get enough out of her to satisfy you as to the truth of the matter."

"I won't that I doubt your word, miss—"

"I know you don't, Ben; but it is difficult for you to realise your own position. You have been a friend to me, and I will see your mother, and if you hear nothing from her that is satisfactory come back to me, and I will try to get you the proofs you require. But I would rather not to mention my name at all in the business. Dame Oldum will certainly guess that it was I who told you all this if you do, and perhaps it is better to say nothing, and the best return you can make me is to refuse to answer any questions Dame Oldum may ask concerning me. Will you also to make poor little Rose happy as your wife?"

"I'll cut my tongue out before she shall know you've been speaking."

"She must know, on account of Stokes having been to the house to ask for you; but I would not provoke her needlessly, nor must you."

Ben could not cross her with my whole heart, though she's the mother that gave me birth. But I won't, Miss Nina—I promise you, I won't."

Nina held out her hand to him, smiling, as she moved towards the door.

"If she's all you say, miss, I take my solemn oath she shall never have a saucy I make."

And Ben went away, and never remembered until weeks afterwards that he had not thanked Nina for her gracious services. But just now he had only one thought, and that possessed his whole soul, burning, raging, beating within him like a tumultuous tempest. That was his cause, not about a bloated aristocracy, the rights of the people, the duties of the great? The world was to him one great garden blushing with fruits, blossoming with flowers, brilliant with sunshine. He saw no snake in the grass, no trace of venom in the brown fertile soil. There was no wrong or oppression in his flowery Eden, no sound of wailing, none of those bitter cries that are won from the wan lips of the starving. All was bright, beautiful and blooming, for poor Ben's honest heart was blessed with the renewed gift of love and hope.

He strode up the hill, dewy and thick with mist, and crossed the threshold of his own door with an air of triumph. The barrenness and desolation of the little room as he entered it struck him with a sudden chill. All the china ornaments from the parlor mantel-piece were there, as well as a gay fire beside where his mother's armchair used to stand, all the pictures had disappeared from the walls, and the whole place was deserted and cheerless—in fact, the whole aspect of the place was at once solemn and forlorn, dreary and chill.

He was wondering over all this in a vague, obtuse way, when the inner door opened, and Dame Oldum suddenly confronted him.

She started back with a tone of repressed astonishment, "what brings you home so early to-night?"

But he fixed on her such a fierce, stern eye, that she paused and quailed.

"I come for a bit of news," he answered, noting her fear with savage joy. "You've made a beast and a brute of me with your plotting and your schemes, but, perhaps, you'll have the goodness to mend my manners by telling me what you and my lord have done with Rose."

"Rose, my lord! Ben!" began the dame, scornfully, but she soon faltered and was silent.

Ben did not look much as if he meant to be foiled, and he stood there so grim in his manner that he knew almost as much as she could tell him. A full confession would not harm her. She was implicated in the whole affair, by Ben, and was already deep in her preparations for departure. It did not signify to her who lived with Ben, since she could not remain to see him. She grudged Rose her triumph—grudged it with all her heart, but she stood between two unpleasant alternatives, and had to choose the least disagreeable. Rose was a little more afraid of Ben, in his present dark mood, than she was jealous of Rose. So she told the whole tale, Ben standing over her, and looking as if he could have throttled the words out of her cozy lips she paused to take breath. When it was concluded, he kept grim silence for a minute or two. Then he said, slowly:

"It's hard work, harder work than you think, to keep from cursing you right out. But I'll set you down as a fool, and let you off with that. You say you are going away the day after to-morrow. Well, live here peaceable till then; I won't disturb you for that. And as to Rose, I'll find her, mind, I'll never call you mother again. If you were starving, I don't mean to say I'd turn you from my door; only there's a deal of hard work in sin for many a long year to come, and I'm not sure I'm going, as it seems we shan't meet again in this world. Here's my hand, and good-bye to you. May God turn your heart—and mine!"

He went out, his eyes moist, his lip tears, and walked straight down to Woodman's cottage. The dame had told him that he could get Rose's address from her father, and he found the old man ready enough to afford him the information he required.

The poor sickly mother came hobbling to the door to wish him God speed, and to tell him how earnestly and faithfully Rose had loved him all through.

"I wouldn't have told you if it hadn't been all right between you now, Ben," she said; "but it is as near killed her as could be. Often and often has she said to me, 'If it wasn't for you, mother, I should lay down and die. There doesn't seem anything worth living for, now Ben and me's parted.' And the poor child used to nothing but poor girl! Only when the neighbors came in, and wanted to say a word about you, speaking harsh to us. How would Rose get up, and declare it wasn't your fault; for if you heard cruel tales, you wasn't to be expected not to believe 'em. And she went on taking your part, and telling us how good you was here. And as she rode off in the miller's light cart to the station, I could see her looking up at your cottage window, as we could not see it. But as to the very name of that frock the dame gave her, she couldn't abide it any more than she could abide pisen, and wanted to tear it up, if Thatch't hadn't prevented her."

"Then the dame really did give it to her?" said Ben, tremulously.

"I should think she did, in my very room, and before my eyes; and then we told her of it afterwards, she declared to us that Rose was a liar to accuse from Lord Gillingham, which was as false a story as ever was."

"And who got her the place?" said Ben, determined to make up everything at once, in order that he might never have to recur to the subject again.

"Well, my sister is housekeeper in a high house, and when I—being a good scholard, as Rose is too —wrote and told her about matters, she said, if Rose liked to come to her she would get her a good situation. And so she did, I'm sure, for many's the shilling Rose has sent me since her master spoke a word to her, and I s'pose you'll bring her home again?"

"Please God, mother, please God," said Ben, reverently, and he walked back down the road, turning every now and then to bid her a last and a last mute farewell.

Ben had a good fifty miles' walk before him ere he could reach Rose's new abode. But he marched on valiantly, now mounting a high hill, now crossing a little cozy beck, now disappearing in a green hollow, and he never thought to be tired; his heart was too full of other things. The silent stars bore him company, and the night, if chilly, was clear and calm. But could he be cold, or hungry, or fatigued, who was about to take his innocent Rose to his yearning bosom again, and call her his own—his own now until death? When the dawn broke, and soft ripples of amber and sapphire light pierced through the gray east, Ben went in to a wayside inn to refresh himself, and came out feeling within him renewed energy and life.

But why describe this quiet, uneventful journey? Ben found his Rose—a thin, hollow-eyed girl whom he could hardly feel in his arms, when he caught her to him with an eager, passionate gripe. She had so wasted, so pined with sorrow, that his own heart almost gave a bound, and the tears sprang into his eyes as he looked at her.

"Don't cry, Ben," said Rose, stroking his cheek with her quivering fingers. "I will soon get well now. It wasn't pain that was killing me; it was only being parted from you."

"And we shall not be parted again now, my little Rose."

"Never," she whispered, pressing closer to him. "We are sure never, Ben, for the next time I should not linger, but die outright."

CHAPTER XXVIII.—THE STORM BURSTS.

NINA had performed a good action, had remembered the sorrowful others in the midst of her own sorrows, and she felt more at peace with herself than she had done for a long time. She crept back into the room where they were all assembled, her eyes cast downward, unconsciously directly she entered, and lingering on him so long and so wistfully, that she never even noticed Gabrielle's presence until she clasped him in her arms.

"Now," said Gabrielle, breathless from the quick kisses she dropped upon Nina's cheeks and lips, "say you're glad to see me, or I'll pinch you."

"You know I must be glad, Gabrielle."

"Oh, no, you're not obliged, only you must say so. I like polite humbug better than rough truth."

"Nonsense!"

"I do, and I always did. I'm not obliged to be deceived by humbug just because I enjoy it. If you call me a humbug to my face, and deceive me behind my back I've turned my back, I don't know that you've reversed your decree so hastily, and walk away complaisant and happy. Mind, I am certain all the time that you don't feel quite all you assert; but then, as I said before, I like humbug; it's so smooth and light, that you can swallow a good deal of it at a sitting, and not suffer from indigestion; and, being a Frenchwoman, I prefer light dishes."

"I grant you credit for more solidity of taste than you will acknowledge," said Cyril, taking up the conversation in order to ease Nina.

Gabrielle turned him a sudden bright glance of interrogation, then turned away haughtily.

"You don't know anything about me at all, Captain Marsh, nor should you! You haven't heard the news?" she suddenly added, turning to Nina.

"No."

"Well, mamma has turned out to be a woman of fortune after all. There has been a cruel and persistent fraud somewhere, but all that I have to do is to explain it now. As any rate, mamma will now have a clear thousand pounds a year, and will go back to her beloved Paris, and live credibably to our name."

And Gabrielle paused, sighed very deeply, and then went on with sudden dash and fire:

"I am to be a duchess, at the least, so she says, and 'madame la princesse' would sound well, if it only prove attainable. But, as I tell mamma, I'm a different thing wishing for the moon and getting it."

"Do you compare a prince to the moon?"

"No, for a prince is a star of the first magnitude—that is to say, in mama's opinion. I—let me see, what do I think?—I think it is nicer to be Gabrielle de Tonnay, and live at Beechwood, and have Nina very often; but then Nina is going away, and will marry a big monster of a man, who, I fancy, wants just a wife, and nothing more; so I shall cast out here, I am fain to follow mama to Paris, and help her angle for the dear prince who is the object of her ambition."

"Then Baron de Pène has already left?"

"Yes, for town; but she returns in a couple of days to fetch me, and in the meantime she has billeted me on Nina, Mark—or, rather I have billeted myself, being a great little fool, and afraid to sleep alone."

"Why, Mrs. mademoiselle, I always thought you were so brave."

"So I am with ows, and spiders, and earwigs, and all such things. I live in mighty horror of finding a robber concealed beneath my bed. Mama looks under it for me every night, and into all the closets; then I generally scold her, stamp my patent leather boots or treble my door to make say one think I'm a man, after this black and-bolt everything there is so jolly and still, just a good hot bath ready for any one to tumble over if he came, and rush into bed, where I lie trembling until I fall asleep. But then I don't sleep for long, for very soon after, when we really thought that the long-expected robbers had come at last, I spontaneously threw myself into the arms of a myriad of John of Horse propensities with confidence, and grew so eloquent in my description of his natural ferocity and blackguardism, that, I believe, I made a very strong impression upon William Dart's gray mare which had strayed from the common and was standing a fresh nibble on our grassplot. At any rate, it neighed."

"Who neighed—the gray mare?"

"Naturally; it could not have been the robber, who never came; nor John the footman, who was a myth; nor mama, who was fainting in her bed; nor Mary Anne, who was down on her knees rushing over her prayers and saying grace before meat—evidently thinking that anything would do if it were only in the right sort—and I, am I in the habit of neighing, pray?"

"I never heard you," answered Cyril, gravely. "They've spoilt you hers," said Nina, shrugging her shoulders and laughing; "you used not to be so disagreeable when you first came."

The laugh was still on her lips, and Nina and Captain Marsh were each smiling, though faintly, when she repressed and the latter came in. It was rather unusual for him to enter the drawing-room of an evening without being summoned, Mr. Marsh never entering it before after dinner, and liked to be left with his family and to read his Times in peace, without being disturbed by the presence of others. He looked up at the man's flushed, sorrowful face, and then, as he saw Nina very often in the morning, and the increased pain of parting threshold. Then there was all her vague fear and horror of the secret of Nina's which had driven the police to her father's house, and between these mingled sensations Gabrielle was almost beside herself. She could not believe that such a deadly crime lay, dropped a kiss and a tear on it to-gether, and flew past him out of the room.

Then Cyril returned to Nina. But she refused the wine.

"Give it to mama," she said; "don't you see how badly she needs some restorative?"

"No, Nina, your mother would accuse me justly of cruelty if I brought her to her senses now. Let her remain as she is so long as possible. She will wake soon enough, my poor Nina."

"And you will not forsake me, Cyril?"

"Did I not promise Rose, Nina?"

"You will be so dull—so terribly tried. Can you guess what they are fetching me for?"

"No; but I should be to!?. It will come to me better from you, and, besides, I shall then be prepared."

"Murder."

She gave the word faintly, her eyes searching his eyes, as if to read his soul. He shrank from her a minute, but it was only a minute.

"You are falsely accused, Nina," he said, and, taking up her white tremulous hand, he kissed it passionately. "Be of good cheer, my child, and cheerful!"

"But, Cyril, I—I murdered my child."

"Then you were mad, quite mad, weren't you?"

His agony was almost equal to hers. His lips worked convulsively, the veins in his forehead stood out like cords, and he held his gripe on her hand tightened like the grips of a drowning man.

"When you were mad, quite mad, weren't you?"

He repeated his question, but she could not answer it then. At last she said "No," slowly but decidedly.

"But you have some explanation to give, Nina; you can tell me something I may believe."

"Upon my honor and soul, I committed this murder, Cyril, but you can exonerate me one way. I never meant to do it—I never dreamt of such a thing in my wildest moments. Only an hour before I was accused Sr. George had behaved to me, I loved his child. You know we were married, and after his desertion I returned home. In a few months I was again, on the pretence of another visit to Miss Mervyn; but, instead of going to Westmoreland, where she then was, I went to a quaint little village in Yorkshire, where my child was born. It was puny and delicate as its birth; but I swear that I loved it, and would have saved it if I could. I had written for me to return home. I had received no letters from any of my family. I had begged them not to write, save were travelling abroad, and was glad to be saved the trouble. But I knew that their trip to the seaside must be nearly over, and that I must take my child to Mervyn Court to get my father, and, finding everything, and flinging myself on his mercy. I wrote and announced my intention of returning to Beechwood, and waited for their answer in London. I had been away from home several days. They appointed the following Thursday for my arrival, and on the evening of that day I got out to a little station some short distance distant from here, and came on by a carrier to within an easy walk of the house. It was growing dusk when I got to the village, and I waited in the darkness of the churchyard, which overhung and covered the face of my child. It lay on my arm, with eyes distended and lips apart, and when I put its head on my shoulder, still, and dull, and heavy from lack of life—at least so I thought. I solemnly swear that I believed it dead. I sat down and wept over it, but I had no idea of its actual death. I have found rest. Then I went to the edge of the hill on which I had been sitting, and cast its body into the sea, which flowed at the bottom with a low, deep moan beneath. 'As well here as under the sod,' I thought, 'since it is lost to me and I cannot call it back again. God will smile on its ocean grave, and His cool waves are as soft to its form as the brown earth. So sleep, my beloved, until we meet again.' I turned, with my eyes flooded with tears, and came face to face with Dame Oldam.

"What have you been doing there? she said, in a tone of mingled authority.

"I cowered, but did not speak.

"'You've been murdering your own little one, I know.'

"It was dead—I swear it was dead! I answered, trembling in every limb.

"'Dead or alive, you've got rid of it. Have you the dead cry out?' she screamed.

"'It never cried,' I said. 'How could it? I tell you it was dead.'

"I saw she had something in your arms—I stood and watched you," she went on. 'You crept along the ridge of the hill, I crept along after you: you sat down, and I saw you bury your bonnet and cast it into the sea. I was so near you then that I let almost on you to look down, and I saw the child dash itself against the rocks at its cruel youder, and open its mouth and cry—it's no use saying it didn't—I heard the cry, I saw the child, and I'll be the say and I'll swear it. You carried it up from it out of your arms, and that it suffered in dying, for it died in sharp pain. You killed it, and you meant to kill it, to save yourself from shame.

"'Oh, Cyril, I was agonised! Less at detection, less from the conviction that benefited I was at an end, than at the hand, cruel, creature, than at the terrible thought that I had murdered my own child. She made a bargain with me I should be spared in consequence I do everything. I gave her money, all I could scrape together: I sold my jewels to satisfy her rapacious claims, and I lose step-mother's confidence, and with exposure and darkened every hour of my life. I went into mourning for my little one, as much from remorse as grief, and I was in deep distress on account for one in my position, and was always afraid of being questioned. I thought, then, black would hide my poverty and my heart at the same time. I suffered so terribly in different ways! I suffered through fear, through sin, through humiliation, through love, and now my cup is full to overflowing—the one last bitter drop has been added, and I am as one without hope."

She covered her eyes with her hand, and for a minute she was very gray. Presently she looked up again, and spoke:

"This is Lord Gillingham's revenge."

But she suddenly paused, listened attentively for a second or two, and then flung herself into Cyril's arms in an agony of terror.

"They are coming! they are coming! don't you hear them? Oh, Cyril, to die that death!"

"Hush, Nina; be brave!" he answered, straining her to his almost convulsively. "You are innocent in God's eyes; and I, having heard your miserable story, absolve you completely. No jury would convict you on the evidence of such a woman as Dame Oldam. Come, Nina, have courage. Nay, you must be very powerful herself, and take the air of an innocent person; your looks will be watched and your words studied. They are just at the door; take my arm, lift your head, look at them steadily as they enter, and remember, whatever may happen, you have a true friend in Cyril Marsh."

"Thank you for that, Cyril. Now I am brave."

And she smiled—smiled in the very teeth of the man who had come to tear her from her father's hearth. And they were surprised to find her very calm and confident. She thanked the superintendent quietly when he said that they had determined to remove her until the morning, and that Mrs. Trout might remain with her during the night, if she would prefer not to pass it with them alone.

Nina was truly grateful for these concessions. She did not know until afterwards that Mr. Marsh had used his influence with the coroner there for her, and had only succeeded after a most solemn assertion that she should not be allowed to escape. It would have distressed her to know that her father would do even this much for her. Still she had one consolation in Cyril's presence. Leaning on his arm, she had been able to listen firmly whilst the superintendent read out the warrant in a sonorous voice, which awoke Madeleine, scared, from her sleep in the kitchen. When it finished, she could answer without a tremor in the voice, or a tear in the eye:

"I will not make use as you will, for I am innocent before God."

Then came the parting, which was more terrible than the agony of death. Nina went up to her room with Mrs. Trout, and Cyril, at her request, kept her cold lips and cheeks with passionate kisses; then she drew towards Madeleine. The latter, who was still kneeling, still seemed to be at her reproachfully a second, and turned away her head. Thus Nina's tender, humble kiss never reached her mother's, but fell amongst the ashes. She came to Captain Marsh next, and last. He took her to his arms as if it were his right, being of her kind, and he said aloud:

"Courage, dear Nina; all will be well. The law is mighty because it is so just. You are innocent, and you will not harm you. You will return to us again."

"God grant it!" answered Nina, sadly; and she made out of the room, and down the three stairs, guarded and escorted by the three men.

Mrs. Trent's room had been chosen for their night quarters, and there the long hours dragged away. The policeman went out one by one, and one by one they slept and snored. Meanwhile, Nina lay on Mrs. Trent's bosom. She did not sleep, but she did not get the rest that her companion's deep breathing seemed to promise. Her once enjoyed became a necessity. She cried and prayed softly until dawn broke. At about eight o'clock she was taken from the house to the fatal carriage; but Mrs. Trent was still permitted to remain with her, and begged herself that she might be allowed to accompany the poor girl to the gates of the county jail. The constables were rough men, accustomed to sorrowful scenes, but they loved Nina—every one did—and they consented.

Cyril, at the head of the weeping household, stood in the hall to bid her a last good-bye. She took every one she touched on to kneel by, and looked at these faithful creatures thankfully through her tears. Then she crossed the threshold of Beechwood Manor for the last time, and was taken through the village. When they reached the top of the hill, she saw Cyril still standing on the doorstep, and waving her a final adieu.

A STRIKING CONTRAST.

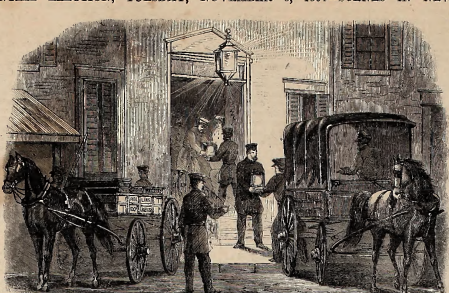
Our double page, this week, is occupied by two scenes, in which character and the extremes of contrast perhaps have been never more vividly and significantly illustrated. The time is election day—Tuesday, the 8th of November. The persons are voters, and the place, the one and the other. Everywhere by legion is being hailed, half carried, to the polls, by their workers and delegated like-minded, types of the gathering politicians with whom our city is cursed. These men have plied their victim with drink, till he is almost stupefied, in which condition he is about to exercise the greatest privilege of freemen—the elective franchise. On the other side we have in true proportionatives of our country's spirit and dignity and heroic purpose, the veteran soldiers of 1812 and of 1864. They, too, are proceeding to the polls, but in a far different mood. In one scene we note the hideousness alike of physical, moral, and political depravity. In the other we admire manhood in its noblest form, the integrity that ennobles life and supplies the enduring basis of a great nation.

SHERIDAN'S TROPHIES OF VICTORY.

THE trophies of Maj.-Gen. Sheridan's victory at Middletown, on the 19th of October—which he most illustriously won, on the 22d—are represented as depicted in a sketch, on page 168, made by our Special Artist, subsequent to the battle. The wagons and ambulances, to the number upwards of 50 were captured, including 24 or our own pieces, taken by the rebels in the previous battles—are represented in our sketch. Also they appeared when collected in front of Gen Sheridan's headquarters, at Cedar Creek. The time is sunset. The battle, it will be remembered, began about 1 o'clock. The last grand charge, which swept the rebels off of the field, and sent them in full retreat, routed the enemy. Gen. Sheridan went forward and resumed the occupation of his original headquarters, at Cedar Creek, and there received the trophies that had since been driven in the morning. Here the spoils of victory were assembled. Gen. Custer's memorable words in reference to them will not soon be forgotten: "By my soul," he said, as he hugged Gen. Sheridan, "we've cleaned 'em out and got the guns."

THE late Archbishop Whateley, who was fond of his joke, said that his rule ought not to be followed to cultivate gardens, because they might "grow mutton."

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1864—SCENES IN NEW YORK CITY.



THE GREAT PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

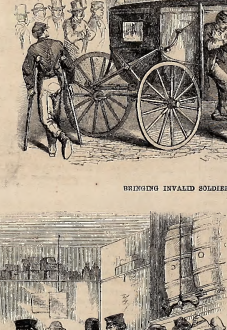
Of the 8th of November, 1864.

It is not too much to say that the election which has just passed over in such significant and remarkable quiet was one of the most momentous that ever challenged public attention; for it was not alone of the interests of our own Republic that trembled in the balance, but those of the whole world. How completely our Republican institutions have justified themselves and passed triumphantly through the fiery ordeal, even our monarchical enemies must acknowledge.

Despite the confidence which all felt in the law abiding disposition of the American character, there was a certain amount of misgiving, which was rather increased when it became known that Mr. Secretary Seward had telegraphed to Mayor Gunther that the Government had received intelligence of an intended attempt by Southern rebels, or their sympathisers, to take advantage of the excitement and confusion always attendant on a Presidential election, to act fire to some of our large cities. This feeling of uneasiness was also increased or diminished, just as the political bias of the parties swayed them, by the report that Gen. Butler had been sent up to supersede Gen. Dix, and to assume military command of the State. Alarmists even went so far as to say that he had come to proclaim martial law. Many, however, considered that the presence of "the great pacificator of New Orleans" would strike terror into the unruly, and that "Order would reign in Warsaw."

The morning dawned in clouds, reminding all of the opening words of Addison's "Cato:"

REMOVING BALLOT BOXES TO THE POLLS—SCENE AT THE FIFTH PRECINCT POLICE STATION—THE REMOVAL SUPERINTENDED BY CAPT. PETTY.



"The morning dawns, and heavily with clouds Comes on the day big with the fate of Cato and of Rome."

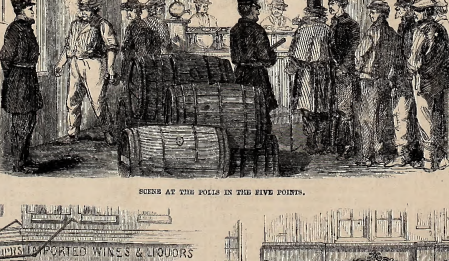
Soon after the voting commenced, the clouds resolved to rain, and acted upon the resolution with considerable pertinacity. It seemed as though, since the police had stopped the supply of liquor, there should be no want of water; and, as temperance men, we are glad to say there wasn't any want of either, since the dealers in Bacchus kept the word of promise to the ear of authority, and broke it to their hope, by putting up their shutters and leaving the door open, with the decanters on the counters.

It is curious to observe how entirely the spirit of partisanship destroys that freedom of thought which is supposed to be the peculiar property of an American freeman in general, and of a New York voter in particular. To such an extent did this prevail on the present occasion that, while every McClellan man said Butler's presence would create a riot, and we, at all events, an insult to the Empire State, every Lincolnite declared that Butler's jovial person was worth an army, and that his half-closed eye would shed peace and security on the city. It must, however, be allowed that there was considerable moderation of language and demeanor in the political discussions going on, whether in a corner, round a corner, or even in the unrestricted precincts of the Fewter Mag, saying nothing at all of the more aristocratic regions of Delmonico's. It was, above all, easy to see that the good sense of the people had determined upon a quiet election, and that the only excesses would be those of a few industrious persons who would "vote early and vote often," voting, as Shakespeare says, "not wisely but too well."

TICKET BOOTHS—VOTERS PROCURING TICKETS.

BRINGING INVALID SOLDIERS TO THE POLLS.



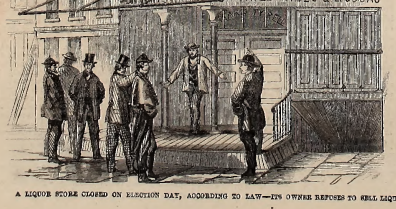
These instances were, however, but few, and we question if there ever was an election in which there were so few fraudulent votes. One man, upon being challenged, said: "That he thought he had a right to vote twice, because he had not voted last election!" While another argued that he had a perfect right to two votes, since he had a store as well as a private house! In fact, that he considered himself a double man. Another maintained that he had been married twice, and thought he had a good right to vote twice.

Elections in this country are so common that every man, woman and child is conversant with the machinery and processes, and therefore our sketches require no particular description; but, after all, with all brevity, things will go on which we have been familiar from our cradle, there is something very curious and ingenious in the method by which the silent resolve of a great nation is put into motion, and made practical in its bearing upon the government of the world. Jove, according to that blind old vagabond, Homer—we are speaking now as a respectable man—governed the world from the top of Mount Olympus, his modus operandi being thus expressed by Pope:

"Shakes his ambrosial locks and gives the nod,
The stamp of fate and symbol of the God."

Uncle Sam, who does not pay so much attention to his tonsorial duties, does not put his tresses into paper, but his votes and, charged with the lightning of his resolve, he displaces the official and puts another in his stead with the greatest coolness and determination.

Our Artists, who were really almost omnipresent last Tuesday, have, in their graphic sketches, given a perfect picture of some of the most interesting scenes. That they are not more exciting every time Americans will rejoice, for never has any election passed over with such perfect quiet. An English gentleman, an admirer of our Universal Suffrage, observed to us that there was more fighting and riot in one parochial election in any part of Great Britain, saying nothing of Ireland, than in the entire election last Tuesday in New York.



SCENES AT THE POLLS IN THE FIVE POINTS.

The Five Points.

Among the most startling changes in New York is that which has occurred over the quarter of the Five Points. Twenty—nay, even fifteen—years ago it was not safe to venture into its purlieus. The new system of police and the labors of a few good men have wrought a magical change, so that it is now as quiet as Bleecker street. On Tuesday morning, the memorable 8th of November, there was as much order in this once lawless region as in the 5th Avenue, and we have not heard of a single case of violence.

The Ballot Boxes.

The ballot-boxes now used are hollow globes of glass, fixed in an iron frame, seven of these are placed on a table, and into them every voter deposits his ballot. Before, however, he is allowed to do this, he gives his name and address to the Inspector, who turns to see if he is registered; if correct, he ticks off the name, and the ballot is put into the box. When the sun sets, these are counted by persons appointed by both parties, to prevent the possibility of fraud. Our readers will recollect that when there was so much excitement on the subject of glass ballot-boxes—which were, by the way, the invention of the well-known music-seller, S. C. Jollie — we published an illustration of one, with full particulars, at the time they were adopted some seven years ago.

A LIQUOR STORE CLOSED ON ELECTION DAY, ACCORDING TO LAW—ITS OWNER REFUSES TO SELL LIQUOR.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1864—SCENES IN NEW-YORK CITY.

THE PROCESS OF VOTING—VOTERS AWAITING THEIR TURNS AT THE POLLS.

Night Scene at the Herald Office.

The enlargeie of our Press was well illustrated at the Herald office, where the returns were displayed to an anxious and agitated crowd by means of a calcium light. We have not space to give a tithe of the amusing disogues heard membra dijecti. The confusion of Babel is a faint type of the multitudinous gabble ot the surrounding crowd. It was, however, clear that "Little Mac" was the undoubted favorite, although many a remark about gunboats was heard, and that he was more of a naval than a military hero.

Government Precautions.

We can all sympathise with the man, who, when shipwrecked on what appeared to be a desolate, cannibal, looking place, suddenly came upon a gallows. We can enter also into the heartiness of his joy when, overcome by the sight, he fell upon his knees and thanked God that he was thrown upon a civilised land—and indeed, in all soberness, we may say there is no civilization without the gallows or a wholesome severity. At the recent election the Government evidently thought so, for Butler's machinery was very perfect. The engine-houses were open, and everything was in readiness to put down any attempt at arson, and it is remarkable that not a single alarm of fire was indulged in on this eventful day. We have heard that every ward was under the surveillance of an officer who had seen service, and who had been granted a short furlough for this very purpose. These were all in citizens' clothes, the better to accomplish their object, and to avoid the appearance of that military despotism which the disaffected so loudly braved about. Every hour these officers telegraphed to Butler's headquarters the state of public feeling. Should any necessity have arisen, there was a disciplined force of over 16,000 men ready to bear upon any given point.

THE MAN WHO VOTED "EARLY AND OFTEN."

WOMEN VOTING IN NEW JERSEY

Towards the Close of the Last Century.

We publish, on page 149, a curious sketch, representing a custom, now happily obsolete, with the existence of which we fancy that few persons, except members of the Historical Society, are acquainted. That custom was the exercise of the privilege of elective franchise by women in New Jersey. It existed there within the memory of individuals now living. To this day women in England who, in their own names, hold property, and are unmarried, are entitled to vote for parochial officers, such as churchwardens, overseers, and sextons; but they have never, in that country, meddled with politics. Not so with us. In a very singular pamphlet, published in Trenton, 1799, called "Remonss, a Collection of Papers on the Errors and Omissions of the Constitution of New Jersey," the writer is very severe upon the fact that women were allowed to exercise the same right as the sterner sex—observing, in a note, on page 30, that "Nothing can be a greater mockery of this invaluable and sacred right, than to suffer it to be exercised by persons who do not pretend to any judgment on the subject." On another page he says: "To my mind (without going into an historical or philosophical deduction of particulars on the subject), it is evident that women, generally, are neither by habit, nor education, nor by their necessary condition in society, fitted to perform this duty with either credit to themselves or advantage to the public. The great practical mischief, however, resulting from their admission under our present form of Government, is, that the towns and populous villages gain an unfair advantage over the country, by the greater facility they enjoy over the latter in drawing out their women to the election.

THE OLD PROVINCE HOUSE, AT BOSTON, MASS., BUILT IN 1679, DESTROYED BY FIRE OCT. 26TH.

NIGHT SCENE AT THE N. Y. HERALD OFFICE—DISPLAYING ELECTION RETURNS BY MEANS OF A CALCIUM LIGHT.

"Many important election contests have been terminated at last by these auxiliaries in favor of candidates supported by town interest."

In these days of progress, when women make stump speeches, and are applauded therefor, there are not wanting advocates of the expediency of allowing women to vote—such philosophers being unsatisfied with the incalculable influence already exerted over public affairs by the unseen but not less powerful influence of her intellect and her feminine charms.

A WAG suggests, in view of the numerous political organizations in all parts of the country, that "clubs are trumps."

GREAT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION

OF

Gold Watches, Diamond Rings, Elegant Jewelry and Fancy Goods,

Worth $500,000!

T. BENTON & CO. Jewellers, 599 Broadway, N. Y.

CERTIFICATES, naming each article of our stock, and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be delivered at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of 20 cents; the article named on such certificate will be sent to any address for ONE DOLLAR, or it may be exchanged for any other article on our list of the same value.

NO BLANKS!

You MAY get a WATCH or DIAMOND RING for ONE DOLLAR, which you do not pay until you know what you have drawn.

You MUST get the VALUE of your money.

Entire satisfaction guaranteed in all cases.

Six Certificates for $1; thirteen for $2.

AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamp for a Circular. All letters should be addressed

T. BENTON & CO., Box 5567, P. O., New York.

Songs for Soldiers and Their Friends.

The Trumpet of Freedom. Containing, Soldier's Chorus; Viva la America; Mother, when the War is over; Mount Boys, Mount; Picket Guard; Not a Star from our Flag; Volunteer's Wife; Red, White and Blue; To Canaan; Do they Pray for me at Home; How do you like it, Jefferson D.; Battle Hymn of the Republic; Glory Hallelujah; Garibaldi Hymn, and other popular Songs, Duets, &c., will be sent postpaid for 40 cents. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE.

FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE has fully established the superiority of

Redding's Russia Salve

Over all other Healing Preparations.

It cures all kinds of Sores, Cuts, Scalds, Burns, Boils, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Sties, Piles, Corns, Sore Lips, Sore Eyes, etc., etc., Removing the Pain at Once, and reducing the most angry looking Swellings and Inflammation as if by Magic. Only 25 cents a Box; by Mail 37 cents. For Sale by J. P. DINSMORE, No. 491 Broadway, N. Y., and by all Druggists. 474-84aw

---

GOLD, $8—SILVER, $1 50.

1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 14th, 18th, 20th, 23d

ARMY CORPS,

Showing each Division.

BY THE SINGLE ONE, 100 or 1,000.

Send for Circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE, Manufac'g Jewellers, 208 Broadway, N.Y.

G. L. & J. B. KELTY, WINDOW SHADE MANUFACTURERS, 359 BROADWAY.

New York.

New Styles, 1864.

Importers of

LACE CURTAINS

and all other

Curtain Materials.

Also, Piano and Table Covers.

CENTRAL UNION RECRUITING

AND

SUBSTITUTE OFFICE,

No. 9 Bleecker St. (a few doors from the Bowery), N. Y.

This old and well established Office can supply Alien and Veteran Substitutes in advance of the draft, at the most reasonable rates. Having several Veteran Soldiers on hand, who are desirous of returning to the Army as Substitutes, we would bespeak for them good principals, who may desire to be well represented in the Army by reliable men instead of by bounty jumpers.

Any communications to us, either personally or by letter or telegraph, will receive immediate attention.

Exemption papers properly secured without inconvenience to the principal. Please call on or address

MOSHER & CO. (as above.)

CHASE'S CHEMICAL COMPOUND,

For the Beard. One bottle will force a vigorous growth of hair upon the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks. Testimonials of thousands given. Circulars mailed free. Warranted as represented or money returned. Price $1, or four bottles for $3. Sent sealed and postpaid. Address S. S. CHASE, P. O. Drawer 359, Cohoes, N. Y. 478-90

NEW YORK

AND

LIVERPOOL PETROLEUM COMPANY.

Capital $1,000,000

IN

100,000 SHARES

AT $10 EACH.

Subscription Price Five Dollars per Share.

OFFICE:

EMPIRE BUILDING,

No. 71 Broadway, New York City.

Room No. 24.

TRUSTEES:

Hon. Daniel S. Dickinson, J. H. Anger, L. W. Myers, Wm. McK. Chapman, Wm. T. Phipps, Wm. F. Newton, W. M. Jennings, James H. Barclay, Wm. H. Hallock.

OFFICERS:

HON. DANIEL S. DICKINSON, President.
WM. T. PHIPPS, Vice-President.
ROBERT BASSETT, Secretary.

The New York and Liverpool Petroleum Company has been organized under the laws of the State of New York, for the purpose of mining for petroleum, and other minerals, and dealing in the same. It has located its principal business office in New York City, the largest transit and shipping market for petroleum in the world, and has taken measures to establish a connection with Liverpool, the most extensive receiving market for that oil, outside of this country. The managers and stockholders of the Company include among their number gentlemen largely interested in the petroleum business, and who have gained both wealth and experience in it: facts which justify the confident expectation of careful, intelligent and profitable management. It is believed that by a judicious investment of the funds of the company, dividends of from two to five per cent. a month on the capital stock can be made.

The property to be conveyed to the Company consists of the lands and property enumerated in the following list. Their extent can be greatly enlarged if desirable, and their present development completed, as funds shall come in from subscriptions.

LIST OF LANDS AND PROPERTY.

1st.—One-tenth of the working interest in Lot No. 1, on the upper McElheuny Farm, containing ten acres. There are three wells on this lot, two of which are now producing about fifty barrels a day each, the third about ten barrels. A new well is also now in process of drilling, and will soon be completed. On this property are three good engines, tankage for over eleven hundred barrels, tubing, tools, office, &c.

There is room on this lease for several more wells, and all wells put down on or near this territory have been productive. The character of the McElhenny Farm is too well known to need further comment.

2d.—One-fourth of the working interest in lot No. 8, on the lower McElheuny Farm, containing one acre, and known as the Hatch lease, being the lease next below and adjoining the well known Empire well, which is now producing one hundred barrels a day. On this lot is one well flowing twenty barrels a day, and another well which has been flowing eighty barrels a day, and which is expected to yield again, as soon as a "Blower" or air-pump can be put in, which is now nearly prepared. A third well is down and just ready to be tested. A fourth is down about four hundred feet, and is confidently expected to be a good well. There are three good engines, tankage, tubing, and an office on this lease.

3d.—One-fourth of the working interest of two lots adjoining, on the late Widow McClintock's Farm, containing half an acre each. On this property there is one well, known as the Freeman Well, now pumping twenty barrels a day—and another down two hundred feet, which is expected to yield a good supply of oil, being within a few feet of a well on the adjoining property which is producing one hundred and fifty barrels, and but a short distance from the celebrated "Hammond Well," yielding three hundred barrels a day. A third well will be sunk immediately on this lease. Two good engines and all the necessary appurtenances are on this property.

4th.—A lot of oil land, in fee simple, on the Caldwell Branch of Oil Creek, containing about one hundred acres, being the south half of that part of lot No. 103, on the east side of Caldwell Creek, about five miles above Titusville. The Briggs Oil Company own the land on the opposite side of the creek, on which a well is now about to be put down. The surface show of oil on all this land indicates a very rich territory for boring purposes. The above named property of this Company will be immediately put under development.

5th.—A lot of oil-land, in fee simple, containing seventy acres, situated on French Creek, about four miles from the Alleghany River. All the land in this vicinity is good, and excellent lubricating oil is produced from wells in the neighborhood.

6th.—A lot, in fee simple, of oil land on Cherry Run, containing about seventy-five acres, situated about three miles above Plumer, and only two miles from the celebrated "Noble Well." All the land on Cherry Run has been purchased, and all the wells put down have been productive. One well is down five hundred feet, with a good show of oil, on the adjoining lot.

7th.—Two-thirds of the working interest in the "Wheeler Well," on the John McClintock Farm, containing one acre more or less. One well is now producing 70 barrels a day, and steadily increasing, and there is ample room for two more wells on the lot. There is an engine and all the necessary apparatus on the property, which is directly opposite the celebrated Hammond Well, now producing 300 barrels a day.

8th.—One thirty-second of the interest in a lease of three acres on the Foster Farm, near the Porter, Crocker, Sherman, and Noble and Delamater Wells.

9th.—One-twelfth of the interest in one acre of the G. W. McClintock Farm, adjoining the Mowbray Well; with a good engine, 1,000 feet of tubing, &c., &c. On this land are two wells, both of which have flowed, and will again produce oil if worked.

10th.—One-half of the interest in two acres of oil lands on Cherry Run. This locality is now producing a great excitement in the oil market, large streams of oil having been struck there within a month.

11th.—Fifty acres of land on Oil Creek, five miles above Titusville, having a frontage on the creek of 100 rods.

12th.—The Ridgway Farm, so called, comprising 85 acres of land near Titusville, having a front on Oil Creek of 115 rods, and having already upon one well which promises to be one of the very best on Oil Creek.

13th.—Two hundred acres of land, three miles above Titusville, with a front of 300 rods on Oil Creek, known as the Newtown Farm. This land is undeveloped, and is by experts considered good property.

[N. B.—The three tracts last mentioned are not only valuable as oil land, but also for the lumber; being heavily timbered, and containing water-power and mills now established, which at their utmost capacity are unable to satisfy the demand for their sawed lumber at $25 per 1,000 feet at the mill.]

14th.—One-half of the interest in two acres on the John McClintock Farm, known as the Buttonwood Lease. This tract fronts for thirty rods on Oil Creek, and contains two wells. Of these No. 1 is now producing ten barrels a day, and No. 2 will produce twenty-five or thirty barrels a day as soon as the proper machinery can be set up.

15th.—One-sixteenth of the interest in two acres on the McElhenny or Funk Farm, near the Empire, Olmstead and Dinsmore wells. On this land one well is already down, and producing six barrels of oil per day.

16th.—One hundred and sixty-eight acres of land in fee, on Bull Creek, in the oil region of West Virginia.

17th.—One hundred and eighty-five acres on Cow Creek, West Virginia.

[N. B.—The two last named parcels of land border the two creeks mentioned, and are immediately adjoining oil territory of the best character, and which is now producing as much as on any Oil Creek.]

18th.—Seventy-five acres in fee, near Franklin, Venango county, Pa., with a front of eighty rods on the river. This tract is now yielding twenty-five barrels of a day, having upon it three wells already producing, and four ready for tubing, with the necessary engines and fixtures.

19th.—The Fulmer Farm, so called, being one hundred and sixteen acres in fee, three miles from Titusville, extending for a hundred rods along both sides of Oil Creek and being good oil land for its whole extent.

20th.—Seventy-one acres in fee, on Little Oil Creek and Thompson Creek, four miles from Titusville.

21st.—One-sixth of the working interest, being one-twelfth of all the oil produced on a lease situated on the west side of Oil Creek, on the Lower McElhenny Farm, and known as Lot No. 3. One well is already down on this land, the tubing and sucker rods on the ground and paid for, and a good eight-horse power engine ordered.

With this extensive estate already secured to the Company, and with its advantages of membership and management, the prospects it holds out are inferior to none now offered in the market. Indeed, notwithstanding the large number of Oil Companies now organized, the Petroleum business is, in fact, just at its beginning, as a brief statement will show:

"Seneca Oil," as it is sometimes called even now in drug shops, used to be collected by the Seneca and other Indians from the surface of Oil Creek and springs in that region. The first organized effort to obtain oil in the field of the present Petroleum business was not until 1854. The first well was bored at Titusville in 1857, and in August, 1858, at seventy-one feet, the drill fell into a cavity, and the well began to yield one thousand gallons a day. The business immediately received a monstrous impulse, and the supply of oil being quickly recognised as practically permanent, an enormous capital and a still greater speculative interest was at once attracted.

The oil lands are found in western Pennsylvania, north-eastern and south-eastern Ohio, north-eastern Kentucky and Western Virginia, not to mention other new fields from time to time found. Throughout these regions, for the last six years, lands have constantly been taken up, wells dug, companies formed, and immense fortunes made. The commercial uses of Petroleum have increased quite as rapidly as the supply, and the market absorbs at once all that is furnished. The speed with which investments are being pushed into the business may be imagined from the facts, that in New York, Philadelphia and Pittsburg alone two hundred and fifty Petroleum companies are in operation and quoted in market reports, and that Petroleum raised during the past year in western Pennsylvania alone has been sold crude at the wells for twenty-five million dollars.

In such enterprises to be early in the field is indispensable. Large as the number of companies may seem, it is not so striking as the vast extent of the part already proved of these unknown subterranean treasures of oil. In a few years more, perhaps, some working limit to the business will be reached. Now, however, the New York and Liverpool Petroleum Company stands substantially as one of the early enterprises, and offers inducements only exceeded by those very few companies whose stock is practically out of market and inaccessible. With a view to provide for the future advantage of early subscribers, from this reasonable start in business, only a limited portion of the stock of the Company is offered at the present rates.

As one evidence of the opinion of experts about the quality of the property of the New York and Liverpool Petroleum Company, we copy the following paragraphs from a letter of Mr. Mowbray, an operative chemist of reputation, established at Titusville, and prominent in the oil business from its very beginning:

"TITUSVILLE, PA., Oct. 10, 1864.

"W. T. PHIPPS, Esq., Vice-President, etc.:

"Dear Sir—

* * * * *

"I have observed that, without fail, the best wells have been reached in what was formerly the old bed of Oil Creek. The Drake well, the Sherman well, the Noble well, and the Story Farm wells are instances of this. Your lands here are mainly the Old Creek bottom. It (the creek) is now diverted south of them, and in the summer the evolution of gas has been so offensive to the grassmowers, that they have left them during mid-day for another part of the field. The Union Company's well, not down to the third sandstone, in the same formation, gives a first-rate show of oil.

"If these are not the indications of oil territory, then only until after a series of wells has been actually sunk on the land can any opinion be formed. What the value of the land will then be you can judge, but the price will be beyond any present purchaser's means I am satisfied. I can only add that I have not the interest of one cent in these lands, but say what I really think for your guidance.

* * * *

"Yours very respectfully,
GEO. M. MOWBRAY."

All communications should be addressed to the Company, "New York City P. O., Box 5,368."

Beautiful False Moustaches, 50 cents and $1 a pair. Imperials, 50 cents. Goatees, 50 cents and $1. Send stamp for Circulars of 20 articles that every man wants. Address

C. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Nose Maker for the Face. No cutting or operation. Address T. M. BRUNSWICK, Artist, care of D. Lockwood, Chatham Square P. O., N. Y.

LOVE AND HATRED

CONTROLLED BY

DR. NAPIER'S GREAT DISCOVERY.

Send stamp and get Circular containing full particulars to D. A. H. NAPIER, No. 5712 New York Post Office.

Soldiers and Everybody! A Great Book for You. Over 2,000 Things worth Knowing. Mailed free for 25 cents. Soldiers' edition, 30 cents. Address UNION BOOK ASSOCIATION, Syracuse, N. Y.

$100 A MONTH made by intelligent Agents, in and out of the Army, selling the most valuable work now published. Particulars in Circular. Mailed free. J. L. G. PIERPONT, No. 37 & 39 Nassau St., N. Y. 473-81

$7 WATCH

Our Whole Stock of Imported Watches are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale rates.

AN ELEGANT WATCH in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases Richly Engraved, Turned Centre, Carved Balance Bridge, English Full Plate Jewelled Movements, adjusted Regulator, Spring Bolt, Spade Hands and Fine Enameled White Dial, a serviceable article in running order, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and a Gent's Handsome Vest Chain and beautiful Miniature Gold Locket to match, with Double Cases, Box and Glass for Two Likenesses. Sent Free by mail to any address for only $10.

A NEAT SILVER WATCH in Heavy Double Cases, Small Size, same as the above, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and Gent's Vest Chain, Engraved Double Case Locket, etc. Sent Free by mail to any address for only $7.

The Imperial Watch,

Containing a Rare and Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Effects, combining within its cases and attached to its machinery a beautiful and correct working THERMOMETER, an accurately adjusted Mariner's Compass in miniature, sunk in Dial, and a Reliable Calendar, indicating day of month, week, etc., in Case, rendering this Watch a perfect STORM, HEAT and TIME INDICATOR. The beautiful machinery of this valuable Watch is encased in Finely Finished DOUBLE HUNTING, Magic Spring 19 Line Cases (the outer cases being of fine 18 Carat Gold, inner cases of Solid Gold Composite), Richly Engraved top and bottom, with Panel for Name, Turned Nerl, movable Pendant Bow, and Fancy Push Spring. Genuine English Improved Jewelled Action, M. J. Tobias movements, Polished Cap and Down Self-acting Click, Equal Balance, Independent Actions, Fine White Dials, Polished Steel Cut Hands, and is an Exact Imitation of a $100 watch, and used by the ROYAL ENGINEERS and Officers of THE BRITISH ARMY. None Genuine unless bearing our private trade mark. Price per single one all complete by mail, $20.

CATELY BROTHERS, Sole Importers,
102 Nassau St., N. Y. Established 1855.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION!

250,000

Watches, Chains, Diamond Rings, Etc.

WORTH OVER

One Million Dollars!

All to be Sold for One Dollar Each!!

WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE! NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO RECEIVE!

Splendid List of Articles! All to be Sold for $1 each!

		EACH.
250	Gents' Gold Hunting-case Watches	$50 to $150
250	Ladies' Gold and Enameled-case Watches	35 " 70
500	Gents' Hunting-case Silver Watches	35 " 70
200	Diamond Rings	50 " 100
2,000	Gold Vest and Neck Chains	15 " 30
3,000	" " " "	4 " 6
3,000	Gold Oval Band Bracelets	4 " 8
5,000	Chased Gold Bracelets	5 " 10
2,000	Chatelaine Chains & Guard Chains	5 " 20
7,000	Solitaire and Gold Brooches	4 " 10
2,000	Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 " 6
5,000	Coral, Opal and Emerald Brooches	4 " 8
5,000	Mosaic, Jet, Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 " 8
7,500	Coral, Opal & Emerald Ear Drops	4 " 6
4,000	California Diamond Breast Pins	2 50 " 10
3,000	Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys	2 50 " 8
4,000	Fob and Vest Ribbon Slides	3 " 10
5,000	Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, etc.	3 " 8
3,000	Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc.	4 " 7
10,000	Miniature Lockets	2 50 " 8
4,000	" " Magic Spring	3 " 20
3,000	Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc.	2 " 8
5,000	Plain Gold Rings	4 " 11
5,000	Chased Gold Rings	4 " 11
10,000	Stone Set and Signet Rings	2 50 " 10
10,000	California Diamond Rings	2 " 10
7,500	Sets Ladies' Jewellery—Jet & Gold	5 " 15
6,000	Sets Ladies' Jewellery — Cameo, Pearl, etc.	4 " 15
10,000	Gold Pens, Silver Extension-holders and Pencils	4 " 10
10,000	Gold Pens and Gold Mounted Holders	3 " 8
5,000	Gold Pens and Gold Extension Holders	6 " 10
5,000	Silver Goblets and Drinking Cups	5 " 50
3,000	Silver Castors	15 " 50
2,000	Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets	20 " 50
		PER DOZEN.
5,000	Dozen Silver Tea Spoons	$10 " 20
5,000	" " Table Spoons & Forks	20 " 40

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, through the war having cut off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of Valuable Jewellery, originally intended for the English market, has been sent off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT ANY SACRIFICE!

Under these circumstances, ARRANDALE & CO., acting as Agents for the principal European Manufacturers, have resolved upon a Great Gift Distribution, subject to the following regulations:

CERTIFICATES, naming each article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

ALL ARTICLES SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE!!

On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewellery on our list for ONE DOLLAR, and in no case can they get less than One Dollar's worth, as there are no blanks. The price of Certificates is as follows:

One for	25 cents.
Five for	$1
Eleven for	2
Thirty for	5
Sixty-five for	10
One hundred for	15

AGENTS will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to One Dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage Stamps. ARRANDALE & CO., 167 Broadway, New York.

TWENTY-FOUR

CARTES DE VISITE

OF

FRENCH GRISETTES,

In different attitudes of art.

Enclose $1 25 and four red stamps.

477-80 CHAS. MANY, 34 Nassau St., N. Y.

NEW SONG AND CHORUS.

It was my Mother's Voice. Price 35 cts. Just Before the Battle, Mother. Just After the Battle. Vacant Chair. Sunlight within my Heart. Soldier's Happy Return Mazourka. Each 30 cents, mailed. FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, &c.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be sold for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Grand Combination Gift Set and full particulars, and terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
069 FIELDE BISSON, 37 Ann st., N. Y.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, illustrated. Treating on "Phrenology," plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry whoever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps.
469-78 E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1575, Portland, Me.

Beauty.—Hunt's White Liquid Enamel, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Hair Dresser. Enamels in a few minutes, when permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparting a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is the only remedy to remove Liver Spots, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, $1 per bottle. Address
HUNT & CO., Perfumers,
153 South Seventh Street, and 67 South Eighth
600 Street, Philadelphia.

Old Eyes Made New!

A pamphlet directing how to speedily restore sight and prevent spectacles, without aid of doctor or medicine. Sent by mail, free, on receipt of 10 cents. Address
E. B. FOOTE, M. D.,
465eow 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by SAIL, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 15 White Street, New York.

REMINGTON'S

ARMY AND NAVY REVOLVER!

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
455-78 Ilion, N. Y.

$1 WHISKERS! $1

For $1 I will send sealed, postpaid, the GRECIAN COMPOUND, highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of hair upon the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Entire satisfaction given or money refunded. Descriptive pamphlet mailed free. Address
E. L. SANFORD,
471-93 Lansingburgh, N. Y.

New Map of Richmond,

Showing all of the Fortifications Surrounding the Rebel Capital, together with a description of the City and of all the Forts, etc. Price only 10 cents per copy; Wholesale 40 cents per doz., or $2 per 100.

NEW MAP OF MOBILE. A Splendid Map. Price, 20 cents; Wholesale, $1 50 per dozen.

MAP OF PETERSBURG, a very desirable Map. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, $1 per dozen.

NEW MAP OF ATLANTA. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, 40 cents per dozen, or $2 per 100.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS of Gens. Grant, Meade, Sherman, Rosecrans, etc. 10 cents each; Wholesale, $6 per 100.

NEW POCKET ALBUMS, holding 16 Cards—Very Desirable. Price only 75 cents. Goods sent Postpaid. Agents Wanted.

G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Arthur's Magazine deservedly enjoys the reputation of being one of the best literary magazines published in America.—Quincy Sentinel, G. W.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE.

EDITED BY T. S. ARTHUR AND VIRGINIA F. TOWNSEND.

The HOME MAGAZINE for 1865 will be enlarged and improved in its table and variety of the original plan, and favor with which it has been received. Its character as a REFINED, PURE, AND MORAL PERIODICAL, claiming public favor on the ground of real merit, will be carefully maintained. It will be varied, interesting, instructive, and all the attractions of literature and art essential to a true HOME MAGAZINE the publishers will aim to make SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS.

A new story by T. S. ARTHUR will be commenced in the January number.

YEARLY IN ADVANCE.—One copy, $2 50; three copies, $6; five copies, and one to getter-up of club, $10; nine copies, and one to getter-up of club, $15.

☞ A beautiful PREMIUM PLATE, entitled "THE INFANT'S FIRST SORROW," will be mailed to each person who sends us a club of subscribers. It will also be mailed to each single subscriber from whom we receive $2 50.

Sig For $4 50 we will send one copy each of HOME MAGAZINE and GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK for a year.

Address T. S. ARTHUR & CO.,
477-8 323 Walnut st., Philadelphia.

Whiskers! Mustachios!

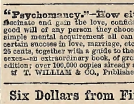
Send a three cent stamp for Descriptive Circular of Dr. DE PAS, (of London, England), Hungary Fluid, which will force a perfect growth of Whiskers on the smoothest face in six weeks. Send stamps from the London Times in Circular. Send it. Address
Dr. LAMIRAUDE DE PUREMY,
Troy, New York.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direct poisons, under the name of invigorating liquors, and when cosmetic compounds purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "surprising remedies." that the public should fully understand the facts. It is known that, that while all the different stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonic containing alkali are manufactured with a key acting containing sugar or fusel oil, a special poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS are free from all of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of the vegetable kingdom, with the most valuable medicinal properties of wholesome and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for general debility, all diseases of the stomach, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. It is the only one of the numerous compounds of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which accompany it, that has ever been analyzed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and wall of life. Beware of counterfeits and imitations.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,



PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 59 CEDAR STREET.

"Psychonancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, free, together with a certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a Guide for the married of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition, over 200,000 copies already sold. Address
T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Six Dollars from Fifty Cents.

Agents come and examine Invention, or Samples sent free for 50 cents. Retails for $6 easily. R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York. 478-82

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by ordering it. Also, according to the quality desired. Address
HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Mustache in Six Weeks. It is the smoothest Pomade without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Ointment will find it not as represented by the forming one of the fact, can have their money returned in such an easy manner. Sent free by mail on receipt of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address
A. C. CLARK,
458-86 P. O. Drawer 18, Albany, N. Y.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Samples and Catalogue sent free. Send stamp in an envelope with your own name and address.
H. DEMPSEY, 581 Liberty St., N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED.

Ladies' "Hemmer and Shield" for Hand Sewing. "Bird-work Holder" for the Needle, and 15 more Novelties. Unsold and Saleable. Sample 30 cents. For Catalogue and Terms, address stamp.
C. HOE & CO., Manufacturers, 97 Park Row, N. Y.

SELPHO'S PATENT LEG AND ARM,
215 BROADWAY.

The most perfect substitutes for lost limbs ever invented. Reference to 22 YEARS. Send for Pamphlet. SOLDIERS SUPPLIED FREE by order of the SURGEON-GENERAL. 47

DISTILLED DEW

Imparts to the Skin a natural Whiteness and Clearness, and Youthful Delicacy and Softness unattainable by any other means. Sold by all Druggists. 47

STOP! STOP! STOP!

Full instructions by which any person can master the curious Art of Ventriloquism in a few hours and make a million of dollars. Sent by mail for 50 cents. Address
DR. FRANKLIN, Calhoun, Ill.

$8 ARMY WATCH. $15

A handsome Engine-Turned or Plain Sterling Silver Double Hunter-plated Watch, Double-case, English Movements, fancy Steel or Gold-cut Sweep Hands, Enamaled Dial, now style of Index, Chain Action, Polished Cap, Reliable Timers, and reliable Timekeeper. Especially adapted for Army use. Price $8.

A genuine Gold Hunting Case, Engraved, Plain or Engine-Turned Heavy Cases, European Movements, Jewelled Lepine, Detached Lever, Spade-cut Hands, English Combination Action, finely finished in every respect, Hunting Dial, and particularly recommended for Clearness and Reliability. Price, sent on a Morocco Watch Case, $15.

Our Stock comprises over 40 different styles of European and American Watches of the latest and most saleable styles for the Army and Home Trade, consisting of Anchor and Lever, Silver and Gold Hunting, English Gouth Levers, Hunting Silver and Glass Combination Watches (somewhat new), Thermometer Watches, American Army Watches, Magic Watches, Ladies' Watches, Gentlemen's Watches, Independent Timpiet Watches, Officers' Watches, Photographic Watches, Compass Watches, Gold Lever, Gold Chronometers, and various other styles. Some Watches as low as $4. Those wishing to buy watches, Wholesale or dealing in them, should send a stamp for our Descriptive Circular, just got to establish Agents in every Town and Regiment in the Country, and offer great inducements.

KELLEY & ALLEN, Importers,
No. 203 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. Send a different Stamp for a Catalogue.
069 VICTOR DELAPO, 69 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Great Money-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
669 E. H. MARTIN, Rinedale, N. H.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks. Warranted (or Money Refunded) without injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of price.
E. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most desirable Cards ever published—including the Army and Navy Series; Words for Sporting with Love; Retiring; Bombarding Charleston; Sinking the 290, etc., etc. Sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of 15 cents each.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, next published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Nervous Prostration; Wasting of Muscle and Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Fatal Consumption, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

Sig Fail not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address
DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 16 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 462-74

Beauty.—Hunt's Bloom of Roses,

A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the Cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and cannot be detected. Price $1. 16 cents by mail, securely packed from observation. HUNT & CO., Perfumers,
069 153 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

C. S. Sea, M. D., Baltimore, 36 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. His Celebrated Treatise for Females sent free on return stamp.
Sample for $1 in part for a package.

P. L. F.—Roman Ink Powders.—One Cent of Ist black Ink for only 50 cents. Everybody uses it. Soldiers need it. All over wanted. Samples and particulars, postpaid, for 25 cents. Address HUNTER & CO., Rinedale, N. H. 478-9

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New. Patent Pin Cushion, Universal Needle-Threader, Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Tablet, Pocket Match Safe, Tobacco Box, Gent's Vest Pocket Match Safe, Silver-plated. Send stamp for Circular.
W. SIER & CO.,
069 36 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Married or Single Ladies

May receive important Information worth hundreds of dollars, by enclosing 10 cents to MRS. DR. MORGAN, Hoboken, New Jersey. 471-8

JUST PUBLISHED.

UNIFORM FOR OFFICERS OF UNITED STATES NAVY,

As prescribed in the present regulations of the U. S. Navy (corrected to 1864). Price $2. Will be sent by mail, prepaid, to any address in the United States on receipt of price.
TOMES, MELVAIN & CO.,
Dealers in Arms, Military Goods &c., &c.,
7 Maiden Lane, New York.

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS

BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDES-MAIDS' SETS, GOTHICK FEATHERS AND PARIS FLOWERS.

At TUCKER'S, 769 Broadway.

Dr Talbot's Concentrated Medical PINEAPPLE CIDER, is a PREVENTIVE OF SICKNESS. The experience that Dr. Talbot has had for the last Twenty years as a physician has fitted it in the public had an article offered that will prevent sickness. The article offered by Talbot's Medicated Pineapple Cider, designed for all classes old and young. It is the never to be beaten in its sanitary new to the public. One quart bottle will last a well person one year. This is a new mode of doctoring; nevertheless it will save millions from being sick. Let it be kept by your family a year or keep from being sick, than to pay ten or twenty dollars in doctor's bills, and as many days lost from work and the inconveniences of being sick? To prevent sickness, take one wineglass full of Medicated Pineapple Cider to a number of cold water, and drink the first thing in the morning for one month, and the same before you retire at night. It will increase the strength of the system, and will be found the best tonic. A Boston New York merchant, who has made a thorough test of the Pineapple Cider, says that it has saved him ten times the price of it in one month at the first trial. He says that anyone who uses it can have the same beneficial says it has proved an entire preventive to sickness in his case. Also, another well-known gentleman in New York has used the Medicated Cider one-half the year, and has not been sick one day during that time.

Price of a new bottle full quart. Sent to any one, Sent free by Express on receipt of price, $5. Address should be addressed to

D. T. BABBITT, Sole Agent,
69, 64, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., N. Y.
471-5eow

"Now "Its Done!" or, the Secret Out. Gambling Exposed. "Marked Cards"—Forms of Villainy! "Hell on Earth!" Secrets of Wall st. 40 days—100 Great Secrets—New Book. No humbug. Circulars guaranteed. Gobbled at Every Sight. Address HUNTER & CO., Rinedale, N. H.
477-80

PLAYING CARDS!

The American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards, National Emblems.

They are the prettiest cards made, and suit the poorest purse. The seats are Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags; the Court Cards are of King, Goddess of Liberty, Page, and Major for Jack.

All the pictures are played as readily as with any bearing foreign emblems. Each pack is put up in an elegant Morocco case, and is the Dozen Boxes for the Trade.

In order that ALL dealers may have an opportunity to sell these cards, a sample box of twelve packs will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of $2. Address
AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
473-5 No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

DR. BRIGG'S GOLDEN O'DOR

Will force Whiskers or Moustaches to grow thick and beautiful in five weeks.

Sig And no Humbug. Sig

TESTIMONIALS OF THOUSANDS.

Donot be humbugged by worthless Nostrums; Worthless trash called "Cognent."

CAUTION.—Beware of parties copying this advertisement. I send my Golden O'dor by mail, sealed and postpaid, for $1. Address

Dr. C. BRIGGS, Chicago, Ill., Drawer 5926.

TESTIMONIAL.

Indianapolis, Sept. 14, 1864.

Dr. C. BRIGGS.—Dear Sir—My whiskers are growing very fast. Have had whiskers twenty pair in about three weeks. Yours respectfully, 471-9 JOHN D. ABBETT, Indianapolis, Ind.

Shults' Curlique, for curling the hair. Price 50 cents. Sent sealed, postpaid. Address
471-83 C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

The Brazilian Hair Curler. One application warranted to curl the most straight, stubborn hair perfectly for two months or longer. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address
S. S. CHASE,
471-83 Cohoes, N. Y.

"The Most Laughable Thing on Earth."

A Game that can be played by any number of persons; is named CHARADE, or DRAMATIC CHARADES. Characters of WIT AND HUMOR, and invariably produces roars of laughter, often making the sides ache and a face equal to its length, causing WAITERS AND BUSY AND DEPENDENT to forget for the time being in CARE AND HOSPITAL: for OLD TOOTHING YOUNG FOKS and YOUNG FOLKS BEYOND PARENTS. It is the Best Cure Cure for Home Sickness and De Blues. Mailed postpaid, for 25 cents. Address BOX 464, Boston, Mass.

TRANSPARENT PLAYING CARDS.

THE BEST THING OUT!

Can be used the same as any other Cards, and combine

5 in 1

BEAUTIFUL SCENES.

Finches $1 50 and three cents for postage; Pack cards, $1 64 per gross, twenty per cent. off. $12 per dozen.

T. ALLEN,
471-83 24 Nassau street, New York.

Or, "The Secret Out," "Gambling Exposed." Secret Cards and all other "Tricks" explained. "Fortune-Telling." "The Book of Numbers," "Hell on Earth!" "Secrets of Wall st." "Secrets of the Secret of Montezuma and Whiskers in 40 days." How to make money rapidly and honestly. Any book sent. Discovery never before published. A New Song, handsomely printed and bound. Price only 25 cents, or $1. Circulars for stamp. Agents wanted. Mailed free and satisfaction guaranteed. Address
HUNTER & CO., Publishers,
47 Rinedale, N. H.

ATTENTION!

100 Photographs of Female Beauties, for 50 cents. Rich and Rare. 100 Photographs of Beauties, for 50 cents. Send for circular to
G. CLEVELAND, Chicago, Ill.
479-99 P. O. Drawer 5926.

The Best Literature

BY THE

BEST AMERICAN WRITERS

IS FOUND IN THE

Atlantic Monthly

The new volume begins with the January number, and contains

FEATURES OF A PECULIAR INTEREST.

Send for a Circular and a specimen number, which will be sent on receipt of 25 cents, by the publishers,

TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.

SOMETHING NEW.

The Patent Army Pocket Pipe and Cigar Holder combined, is decidedly the best Smoking Pipe ever introduced. It imparts a rich mellowing flavor to the tobacco; is of elegant appearance and finish; with fine colored Amber Mouthpiece and Cigar Holder. It is easy to carry, easy to clean, and is always ready for a good smoke. Sample dozen sent free on receipt of $9.00. Address

RICHARDS & CO.,
97 William Street, New York.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT

For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.

Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth, Purifying and Sweetening the Breath; the most convenient, efficacious and wonderful article for the Teeth the world has ever used.

Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—75 cents per bottle.

HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors,
218 Greenwich St., N. Y.

405-780

KENDALL'S MANOLINE FOR THE HAIR

IS composed of extracts from Flowers, Roots and Herbs for the Beauty and permanency of the Hair. For years it has been falling out or turning gray, matchless dandruff, and is a delightful and pleasant dressing.

Also effecting a cure for worst diseases incident to the scalp.

A trial will prove our assertion.

For sale by all Druggists.
Price $1 per case.

WARING & CO.,
Proprietors,
35 Dey Street, N. Y.

488-800

SHERWOOD'S ANTI-DIPHTHERION

CURES DIPHTHERIA AND ALL DISEASES OF THE THROAT.

Address F. B. SHERWOOD,
116 Fourth Avenue, New York.
Sold by all Druggists.

THE UNIVERSAL PAPER COLLAR

TAINTER & JACKSON'S
Patent August 2, 1864.

The Trade supplied at No. 625 Pearl Street, New York.

WARDS SHIRTS

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free every where.

French Flannel Overshirts.

Cut 36 inches long, $4.75 and $5 each. Sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 25 cents postage each shirt.

STEEL COLLARS

Enameled White, having all the comforts of linen collars. Washed and dried in a moment. A sample Collar mailed free on receipt of 25 cents. Cuffs $1 00 per pair. Ladies' Linen Cuffs same price.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every part of the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

oct

POLLAK & SON,

MEERSCHAUM MANUFACTURERS,
692 Broadway, Near 4th Street, N. Y.,
Wholesale and Retail. Pipes made to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $8 to $100 each.

ERNST'S PATENT Self-Fastening Steel Collars,

PATENTED AUGUST 30, 1864,

Requires no Pins, no Studs, no Elastic Loops, nor any other of the troublesome and apt to get lost or broken appendages of other Metallic Collars, but are adapted solely self-fastening by means of button-holes so arranged as to firmly clasp the buttons of a shirt while putting the Collar on or off at pleasure. Sample mailed free on receipt of 75 cents. Address the Patentee, OTTO ERNST, 42 Beverly, New York.

Friends.—Send a stamp for information and my Circulars. Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.
0478-87

SHERMAN.

the large Portrait, just Published, drawn from a recent Photograph, and certified as being correct. Agents wanted in the Army and elsewhere. Send 50 cents for sample and Letter of Agency.

JONES & CLARK,
83 Nassau Street, N. Y.

THE PENNY REVOLUTION ON THE N. Y. CITY RAILROADS—AFFECTING INCIDENT.

CONDUCTOR—"I don't—e pennie, ma'am."
STRONG-MINDED FEMALE (with emphasis)—"Shan't pay it!"
CONDUCTOR—"Then I shall have to put you out."
S. M. F.—"You put me out—I should like to see you begin to do it."

MANUFACTURER'S STOCK OF

Watches, Lockets, Chains, Rings, Pins, Bracelets, Gold Pens and Cases,

And a full assortment of fine Jewellery, to be disposed of by distribution for the next 60 days.

Certificates of all the various articles are put in envelopes, sealed and mixed, and sent without regard to choice. One certificate telling you what you can have for $1 will be sent for 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $3; thirty for $5. After seeing what you can have, it will be at your option to send the said certificate or not, and after seeing the article, if it does not give perfect satisfaction, you can return it and get the money. We also manufacture pure Silver and Gold Badges for every Secret and Literary in the Army. Also Navy, Artillery and Infantry, Engineer and Pontonier, Masonic, Red Skull and Society Badges of every kind. We will send a Sample Badge (pure Silver), for any Department and a Sample Badge (pure Silver), for any Department in the Army, with your Name, Regiment and Company handsomely Engraved thereon, on receipt of $1 50. Liberal discount to Agents. Agents wanted everywhere. Circulars and terms sent free.

S. M. WARD & CO.,
293 Broadway, N. Y.

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S PIANOFORTES.

99 & 101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. 473-840

Martel's Great Picture OF GENTRAL PARK,

Now on exhibition and for sale at MESSRS. BALL, BLACK & CO'S, DUPPAS & CO., SPAULDING & CO., WILLIAMS SCRANTON, WILLIAMS & STEWENS, ANDREW RESTEAUX & CO., TIFFANY, Broadway, Bell & Co., and at the Artist's, the world on receipt of price ($30), or by express, C. O. D. Address CENTRAL PARK PUBLISHING CO., 289 Broadway, New York.

Tilo (First-Class Local Agents wanted everywhere.)

HOTEL AND FAMILY MANGLES,

from $20 to $120.
No. 9 and 10 Liberty Pl.,
New York.
J. G. WEST.

IVORY AND PEARL BROOCHES, Bar-Rings and Cuff Buttons,

Latest Styles, $2 & $5 per Set.
Gilt Bar Buckles, $3.

Sent free on receipt of price.

WM. G. WELLING,
571 Broadway. (Sign of Golden Elephant)

THE MEDICAL SPECIALIST.

Table of Contents:

To Our Readers—Dr. Duncan Eyre—The Sense of Hearing—Deafness Not a Disease—Catarrhal Deafness—Nasal Catarrh—Medical Hydrotomy—Inhalation, and Diseases—Solvent—The Use of Pain—Health and Disease—Glycon Iiboid—Extract from a Lecture by Dr. S. Gleeson Pratt, upon the Causes and Consequences of Nasal Catarrh, and its Treatment by Medical Hydrotomy.

The Medical Specialist is mailed to any address on receipt of the price, 25 cents.

S. GLEESON PRATT, M. D.,
No. 76 Broadway, New York.

47-640

A WATCH FREE

And $15 or $20 per Day made Easy. A New Sensation. Our Great Novelty, the WONDERFUL PRIZE PACKAGE. Read and start creating an immense sensation and Demand, closely Demand throughout the Army and Country; there is nothing like them. Sales ENORMOUS; profits immense. Each Portfolio, Extra Large Size, clip by clip, contains an innumerable quantity of useful and saleable goods. Prizes, etc., worth Several Dollars, and sells for only 25 cents. Articles that Soldier or Family can purchase of another. Thousands Sold Every Day. Soldiers can clear a Month's Pay in a Single Day. Agents Wanted in Every Camp and Village. A Beautiful Gold or Silver Watch Presented free to Persistent Every Agent. This is the Greatest money-making Business of the Day. We Guarantee many agents $15 per Day. Premiums sent with Goods sent by the dozen. Enlargement sent by mail Free. Address RICHARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y., Sole Manufacturers.

5,000 DOZEN SELF-ADJUSTING STEEL SHIRT COLLARS, Enamelled White, Fit any size and "size" of 20 Specimens mailed on receipt of prices and "size" of 20 cents, 40 cents, 50 cents; Cheap Waite, 60 cents, 75 cents, 90 cents, $1; Linen Stitched Linen, 75 cents, 90 cents, $1; Linen Stitched Linen, Finished and corrugated, $1 25; Saltish Pet, $1; Gents' Cuffs, $2 50; Ladies', $1 50; Collar, $2. None reliable unless patented as "above."

JEANNERET, Sole Inventor, Patentee and Manufacturer, 79 Nassau St., N. Y.

Sold by fancy goods business throughout every part of the Civilized World.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Terms of different powers for $1. Address

F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.
0065

GOLD PENS.

If you want the best Pen ever used send to Johnson for Circular giving cuts and prices. Pens from $1 to $5, to suit every hand and pocket. Pens Repointed, by mail, for 50 cents.

E. S. JOHNSON,
Manufacturer and Dealer,
15 Maiden Lane, New York.
0478-90

The West Indian Hair Curler, warranted to curl the most straight and soft hair, on the most fashionable and becoming principles now in use for curling and crimping. Sent to any address on receipt of $1. Address

WARD GILBERT 1860,
Box 6261, New York Post Office.

FOR A FORTUNE

Address FRANKLIN S. M. CO., Box 329, Boston, Mass

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER

Is the latest improvement in Fire-Arms, combining great power and effectiveness with compactness, durability and simplicity. It is the best Revolver in the world.

Is loaded with or removing the cylinder, with CENTRAL FIRE WATERPROOF COPPER SHELL CARTRIDGES, a cartridge in any part of the country. Cannot get out of order. The cylinder never foul. Can, the shell easily ejected after firing. Is accurate. Weight, Is but 7 inches a strong stock. 32-100th ball, six shot and weighs but 14 ounces. For sale by the trade.

GEO. A. HICKOX, 54 CHURCH STREET, NEW YORK.

CERTIFICATE.

I have thoroughly tested the new "National Revolver," and find it an effective weapon, of sure fire and convenient size. At fifty yards I found I could hit with the pistol hill at every shot. I take pleasure in recommending it as a weapon in every way desirable. In company with Captain Burbank, Provost-Marshal, and other officers, I fired the pistol a large number of times, and not one cartridge failed to explode.

(Signed) JOHN CHARLESTON, Chief of Police, Cairo, Ill.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, White Enamelled Dial, Gut Hands, "Stephen Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, with an accurate "Miniature Calendar," indicating the Day of the Week, Month, &c., in back case. A single one sent free, by mail, to any address, in neat case, WITH A Beautiful Vest Chain, for only $10.

A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with the Miniature Calendar, specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.

Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers,
38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

STAMMERING

Cured by Bates's Appliances. For descriptive pamphlet address H. C. BATES & CO., 277 W. 23d St., N. Y.

"Cultivate the Beautiful—The Useful will take care of itself."

THE PRETTIEST PRESENT FOR A FRIEND IS A

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUM.

A Splendid Album holding 50 Pictures, bound in French Morocco, full gilt, with new design, spring back, and a perfect book in every respect will be forwarded by mail, postpaid, to any address on receipt of $4 50. Same Album holding 40 Pictures will be sent on receipt of $3 75.

Pocket Albums, French Morocco, holding 24 Pictures, will be sent on receipt of $1 50.

Pocket Albums, French Morocco, holding 16 Pictures, will be sent on receipt of $1.

Above prices for the goods described are lower than ever before offered.

Agents wanted. Address

J. H. HAWLEY & CO.,
Cincinnati, Ohio,
And 176 Water St., New York.
166 William St., New York.

Would You Recover the Remains of Friends lost in the Army? Address DRS. BROWN & ALLEN, Surgeons of Regiments, Washington, D. C., Norfolk or Bermuda Hundreds, Va. 478-90

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both sexes—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent to sealed letter envelopes, Free of charge. Address DR. J. SELLON, Physician to the Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

JEWELLERY GIVEN AWAY

SOLDIERS AND CITIZENS can obtain GRATIS a great Illustrated Newspaper and full particulars by which you can procure EVERY VARIETY of JEWELLERY and ALL SORTS OF SILVER WARE. Address CHARLES K. MACKEY, 81 Nassau street, New York.
478-85

LADIES' LETTER.

FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS

Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.

Address Box 4623, New York Post Office.

GREAT CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY!

By selling our Great NOVELTY AND NATIONAL PRIZE PACKAGE, containing Jewellery, Stationery, &c. Each package contains over $1 worth of valuable articles. Wonderful success. Sell first order only 10 cents. Also Splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and Portraits. Agents wanted. Send stamp for Circular. Photographic Gift Enterprise, worth $100. We pay postage on everything. Address, SMITH & FOULDS, 217 GOLD AND SILVER WATCH given to our Agents. 17 GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES given to our Agents. 17 Gold Lockets and a fine Silver Watch. Thousands of these Presents sold in each city every Village and sands of these Presents sold in each city every Village and county. Agents can make profitable and pleasant business. Or one smart man in each place. Send for Circulars, with our small retail price list.

C. G. HARDING & CO.,
26 Beekman Street, N. Y.

GOLD PENS.

We will send to any address one of our Large Size, fine quality, Warranted Gold Pens (pointed) GOLD Pens and Silver-plated Extension Holders, or Silver Pens and Holders, and Morocco Case, for $1 50; or one of our Large Engraving Bank (Warranted) Pens and Silver Pens and Holders and Case for $2 50. Send a stamp for our Circular of Engravings of all our new styles, and a price stamp sized sized prices. Pens Repointed for 50 cents.

AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO.,
209 Broadway, N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Aquedeck Bridge, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Fort Royal, and all other places, should be sent at Baltimore, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 23 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates. 0000

Shults' Unguent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address

C. J. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.
152-830

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 479—Vol. XIX.] NEW YORK, DECEMBER 3, 1864. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY 15 WEEKS $1 00

An English Inside View of Richmond—A Dismal Picture.

THE Richmond correspondent of the London Times has been guilty of a great imprudence. He must have forgotten, for a time, that he was in Richmond. In his letter to the "Thunderer" of the 8th October he thunders too much, we apprehend, for his personal comfort in the rebel capital. He shows to the world that Gen Lee is at the mercy of Gen. Grant, and can only be rescued by a stroke of good fortune equivalent to a miracle.

When a zealous rebel-sympathising John Bull writes to his favorite London newspaper, from Richmond, that "Lee is like a skilful one-armed prizefighter, who is fighting a big bully with two arms—stronger, taller, more active and keener sighted than himself;" that, from his great numerical inferiority, "he is tethered down, and cannot afford to lose even 20 lives in a tentative operation;' that "from the configuration of the ground, it is almost impossible for Lee to cut Grant's extended lines in any vital place," that the confederates, in danger at all points, all the time, "have been fighting on the rack without intermission for more than five months," and that they are nearly exhausted, he tells a story which cannot operate very favorably upon the rebel cotton loan among the stock gamblers of London. But when this English friend of the "Confederacy" further says that the salvation of Richmond for even a few months longer depends upon a decisive victory by Hood over Sherman in the southwest; and that "if, on the other hand, Sherman is able to extricate himself, there will be reason for apprehension about Richmond during the coming winter, the like of which has never existed before," he simply warns all English holders of "Confederate scrip," in any shape, that the inevitable collapse of the bubble may now be expected at any moment.

Such is our interpretation of this dismal view of Lee's position on the 8th October by the Richmond correspondent of the London Times, whose interest in rebel securities is perhaps greater than his interest in the rebel cause. Let he labors diligently to reason out a hopeful prospect of success to Hood in Georgia; but it is manifest upon the demand that "the disparity between the armies of Sherman and Hood is by no means considerable." What is the truth upon this point? Hood has moved his whole army by a circuitous route, to avoid a battle, up to the Tennessee border, in Alabama, under the belief that he would thus withdraw from Georgia the whole army of Sherman. But the results of this adventure promise to be somewhat different from this expectation. Gen. Sherman, leaving on the Tennessee border, under Gen. Thomas, a sufficient detachment of the forces to take care of Hood, is leaving now to be on the road from Atlanta with the main body of his army, en route, either for Macon, the Georgia State capital, where he will cut the last link of communication between Georgia and Richmond, and that he designs moving thence for the reinforcement of his army by the rescue of the 50,000 Union soldiers held as prisoners at Andersonville; or that he is moving directly for the great "Confederate" military magazines, factories and foundries at Augusta, whence he will proceed down the river to Savannah or across the country to Charleston. There is no impediment in his way in either direction. He has, too, the advantages of a region before him, south or east, teeming with subsistence for his army, the region from which Lee is mainly supplied at Richmond.

SCENE AT DELMONICO'S RESTAURANT, BROADWAY—DEPOSITING COOKED POULTRY IN CELLAR PREVIOUS TO SHIPPING.

PRINCIPAL RECEIVING AND DISBURSING DEPOT, NO. 24 TRINITY PLACE—RECEIVING CONTRIBUTIONS FOR SOLDIERS' THANKSGIVING DINNER.

The weight of the facts and the arguments, therefore, are so overwhelmingly against the calculations of relief to Lee by the defeat of Sherman, that we may reasonably expect that the present movements of our army in Georgia will be the closing disaster to Lee, and to Davis and his Confederacy.

Now Ready, Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

THIS annual contains a greater amount of useful and ornamental information than any publication of the kind ever issued. It is indeed the only Illustrated Lady's Almanac published. It is embellished with over 70 beautiful engravings, by the finest Artists of the day, executed in the highest style of art. It contains directions for the parlor, bell-room, boudoir, storeroom, kitchen, garden, nursery and sick-room — in a word, it is the matron's mute monitor, as well as the young lady's companion. It should be found in every household. In addition to general illustrations, it contains splendid portraits of Mrs. Lincoln and Mrs. McClellan, exquisitely engraved on steel, with a graphic Bathing Scene at Long Branch, printed on fine paper. This complete Lady's Manual—which contains more reading matter than an octavo volume—costs only 50 cents. It will be sent, postage free, on receipt of the price, either in currency or postage stamps. Address

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This valuable work is far superior to its prototype, the London Almanac, and is not less than half its price. It contains the most valuable information, National, Historical, Political, Astronomical and Useful, ever gathered together in one volume; besides containing beautiful illustrations by the best European and American Artists, engraved in the highest style of art. It is also embellished with four splendid Lithographic Portraits, printed on fine paper of Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Admiral Farragut, from recent photographs. Price 50 cents.

Second Edition. Frank Leslie's Illustrated Comic Almanac for 1865.

This is a most charming Almanac ever published, being full of comic cuts, adapted to knowledge made easy, side-splitting jokes and other facetiæ. The illustrations are by every celebrated Comic Designer and Artists of both wricks, Rollin, Newman, McLenan, John Gilbert, Darley, Howard, Keene, etc., etc. FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED COMIC ALMANAC contains 32 pages, printed on fine Illustrated Comical paper, and upwards of 60 humorous engravings. Price only 25 cents.

☞ Either of the above ALMANACS sent, Postage Free, on receipt of the price.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and Gazette of Fashion. Terms for 1865.

The following are our terms for 1865, which, considering the superior style of the Magazine and the superior excellence of its Fashion Department, will be found far below those of any other periodical published in the country:

One Copy.....$3 50
Four Copies to one Post Office.....14 00

with the additional advantage of one Extra Copy, gratis, to the person sending that number.

One Copy of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER and One Copy of FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE, to one Post Office.....$7 00

DUKE SWEET, though a clergyman, was accustomed to give way to his wit, sometimes at the expense of his veneration. On one occasion, a tailor who had laid aside his shears and preached for the Sick and the Blide, sought to confute the Dean's views upon some passage of Scripture which he cited. The Dean yielded peacefully, but said there was another passage which had occasioned him great embarrassment. Said he to the tailor, "I have been reading in Revelations that an angel came down and stood one foot on the sea and the other on dry land; now is Hes within your line to tell how many yards of cloth it would take to make him a pair of breeches?"

Barnum's American Museum.

IMMENSE ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Giants, Diminutive Dwarfs, Albino Children, Japanese Hog, Sucking Colt, Wax Figures, Aquaria, etc., etc. DIAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under ten, 15 cents.

From the Lebanon Star.

Dr. Scott, the proprietor and editor of the Lebanon Star, is a postmaster, physician and State legislator.

"Perry Davis's Pain Killer, the old and well-known remedy, has acquired a world-wide success for the cure of sudden colds, coughs, etc., weak stomach, general debility, nursing sore mouth, cankered mouth or sore throat, dysentery, diarrhœa, cholera infantum, cramp or pain in the stomach, bowel complaint, painters' colic, sciatic cholera, diarrhœa and dysentery. As an external it has no equal for rheumatism; and continues to occupy a prominent position in every family medicine chest."

A Good Petroleum Company.

We call attention once more to the advertisement in another column, of the New Republic Petroleum Company. Its shares are already rapidly selling at 10 cents per foot and less. Its President, HON. DANIEL S. DICKINSON, alone, is a tower of strength. Its validity is legal. Its character sound; its prospects excellent. Invest in it.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
ALBUMEN AND PLAIN PAPER,
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

In addition to our main business of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we are Publishers of STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS, Importers of STEREOSCOPES & STEREOSCOPIC CAMERAS, and Manufacturers of ALBUMS and LOCKET and CARD PHOTOGRAPH FRAMES, etc. Also, Receiving Stereoscopes, for public or private reception. Stereoscopic Cameras, which in any address on receipt of Stamp.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS.

We are the Largest Manufacturers of Albums in the United States, and are therefore the largest manufacturers in great variety, ranging in price from 25 cents to $100. We call especial attention to our Albums, as being equally superior in beauty and durability to any in the market. They are unsurpassed.

☞ FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER. ☜

CARTES DE VISITE.

Our Catalogue now embraces over FIVE THOUSAND Different Subjects, to which we are constantly adding. Among the Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., in stock, are

100 Major-Generals, 100 Lieut. Colonels, 400 Statesmen,
100 Rear-Admirals, 100 Other Officers, 100 Actresses,
200 Colonels, 72 Navy Officers, 1st Authors,
40 Artists, And Other Works of Art.

Including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, etc., making a very useful Library of Reference. An order for One Dozen Portraits from our Catalogue will be filled on the receipt of $1.00, and so on in proportion.

Photographers and Dealers will find it to their interest to send for our Catalogue, as we can fill their orders with their order.

☞ The prices are such that every one can afford to purchase. Soldiers' Pocket Albums for 18 pictures, 75 cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 3, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

TERMS FOR
Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months.....$1 00
One copy, six months.....2 00
One copy, one year.....4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper.....7 00
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper.....15 00
Five copies, one year.....20 00
(With an extra copy gratis to the person sending such number.)
One copy of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper and one copy of Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine (Frank Leslie's Lady's Book published) for one year.....7 00

Address
FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Important to Subscribers.

In renewing Subscriptions, Subscribers are particularly requested to name the number with which the New Subscription should commence; they will thus avoid receiving duplicates or missing any number. It is desirable that a remittance should be received a week before the expiration of the former subscription, in order that our books may be kept properly adjusted. Attention to this will obviate mistakes of the errors which annoy both publishers and subscribers.

To Correspondents.

☞ Will the author of "The Vulture of the Mind" please send her address to this office?

The Rebel President's Message.

The rebel Congress assembled in Richmond at noon on Monday, the 7th of Nov., and received the annual Message of Jeff. Davis, their President. It is a very remarkable document, both for its admissions and announcements. He criticised the Union Generals, and proclaimed Sherman, Buell and Rosecrans great failures. He declared that neither Atlanta nor Richmond were points of vital importance, adding that while a white Southern man lived there was the Confederacy. He seems to have forgotten the last ditch. No peace without recognition of Southern independence was another of his declarations. He candidly avowed that he had no hope of foreign recognition, nor did he care about it. The public rebel debt was $1,147,970,208 and some odd cents, exclusive of the foreign and army debt. With regard to arming the slaves, he was not prepared to adopt such a hazardous step while there was one white man left; but he was willing to enroll and drill 40,000 negroes as laborers, these to be armed only in the last stage of emergency; he would also only free such negroes as might be called upon to fight. The Richmond press had not received this very favorably. The Richmond Enquirer postpones its remarks. The Richmond Examiner says: "The writer of the Message intended to be cautious, but has in several parts written an indiscreet paper." The editor is particularly angry at Davis's even mentioning the "accusational idea" of arming the negroes, adding:

"The existence of a negro soldier is totally inconsistent with our political aim, and with our social as well as political system. We surrender our position wherever we introduce the negro as a unit. If a negro is fit to be a soldier, he is not fit to be a slave; and if any large portion of the race is fit for free labor—fit to live and to be useful under free institutions—the line of action on the whole race is fit for it. The employment of negroes as soldiers, or with soldiers, or with the promise of their prospective emancipation, would be the first step, but a step which would involve all the rest, to universal abolition."

The Richmond Sentinel thinks the discussion injudicious and decidedly premature; while the Richmond Whig says that "two propositions are plainly inferable from Mr. Davis's Message which we cannot assent to—these are that freedom ought to be held out as a reward to the slave, which will, of course, make him disconnected with his condition of servitude, and secondly, that Congress has the right to take slaves from their masters."

The Administration—Rumored Changes in the Cabinet.

VARIOUS rumors are afloat of impending changes in the Cabinet. Among them, it is given out that Mr. Fessenden is about to be promoted to the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and that Gen. Butler is to take his place in the War Department. Next, it is thought probable that Gen. Banks may relieve Mr. Welles of the cares of the Navy Department, and that on account of the feeble health of Mr. Fessenden, he may desist upon the duties of the Treasury, in which event we may look for the speedy retirement of the Hon. Robert J. Walker to fill that important position, if he will accept it. That, if opposed to accepting, he would fill it to the satisfaction of the country, we have a sufficient guarantee in his able management of the national finances through the Mexican war, under Mr. Polk's Administration. Nor can we doubt that the selection of Gens. Butler and Banks for the places indicated would be generally regarded as good appointments; but as these gentlemen are both from the same State, we presume that the appointment of either is transferred to the Cabinet, the other will remain in the army.

We dare say that in the necessary housecleaning for the important business matters of Mr. Lincoln's second term, we shall have a reconstruction of his Cabinet. Leading Republican journals say that it is a duty devolving upon Mr. Lincoln, in the acceptance of the Baltimore platform; while Gen. Cameron, of Pennsylvania (who may be supposed to speak by authority), promised substantially in one of his late stump speeches, that after Mr. Lincoln's re-election there would be a new Cabinet. We presume, however, that things will remain pretty much as they are until the meeting of Congress, nearly in order that the head of each Executive Department may "finish up" his budget for the year, and submit his report to the two Houses, so that his successor if there is to be one—may begin with a new chapter and a clean set of books.

The leading members of the present Cabinet have not luxuriated upon a bed of roses. They have had to sustain the trials of constant and heavy labors, responsibilities and the incessant unfavorable criticisms of a vigilant opposition party. All things considered, we may say they have done "as well as could be expected;" but if ever there was a case that "a new broom sweeps clean," we think that a careful reorganization by Mr. Lincoln of his Cabinet for his second term would meet, not only the approval of his own party, but the wishes and expectations of the country at large.

The Rebel President's Message.

The rebel Congress assembled in Richmond at noon on Monday, the 7th of Nov., and received the annual Message of Jeff. Davis, their President. It is a very remarkable document, both for its admissions and announcements. He criticised the Union Generals, and proclaimed Sherman, Buell and Rosecrans great failures. He declared that neither Atlanta nor Richmond were points of vital importance, adding that while a white Southern man lived there was the Confederacy. He seems to have forgotten the last ditch. No peace without recognition of Southern independence was another of his declarations. He candidly avowed that he had no hope of foreign recognition, nor did he care about it. The public rebel debt was $1,147,970,208 and some odd cents, exclusive of the foreign and army debt. With regard to arming the slaves, he was not prepared to adopt such a hazardous step while there was one white man left; but he was willing to enroll and drill 40,000 negroes as laborers, these to be armed only in the last stage of emergency; he would also only free such negroes as might be called upon to fight. The Richmond press had not received this very favorably. The Richmond Enquirer postpones its remarks. The Richmond Examiner says: "The writer of the Message intended to be cautious, but has in several parts written an indiscreet paper." The editor is particularly angry at Davis's even mentioning the "accusational idea" of arming the negroes, adding:

"The existence of a negro soldier is totally inconsistent with our political aim, and with our social as well as political system. We surrender our position wherever we introduce the negro as a unit. If a negro is fit to be a soldier, he is not fit to be a slave; and if any large portion of the race is fit for free labor—fit to live and to be useful under free institutions—the line of action on the whole race is fit for it. The employment of negroes as soldiers, or with soldiers, or with the promise of their prospective emancipation, would be the first step, but a step which would involve all the rest, to universal abolition."

The Richmond Sentinel thinks the discussion injudicious and decidedly premature; while the Richmond Whig says that "two propositions are plainly inferable from Mr. Davis's Message which we cannot assent to—these are that freedom ought to be held out as a reward to the slave, which will, of course, make him disconnected with his condition of servitude, and secondly, that Congress has the right to take slaves from their masters."

The Administration—Rumored Changes in the Cabinet.

VARIOUS rumors are afloat of impending changes in the Cabinet. Among them, it is given out that Mr. Fessenden is about to be promoted to the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and that Gen. Butler is to take his place in the War Department. Next, it is thought probable that Gen. Banks may relieve Mr. Welles of the cares of the Navy Department, and that on account of the feeble health of Mr. Fessenden, he may desist upon the duties of the Treasury, in which event we may look for the speedy retirement of the Hon. Robert J. Walker to fill that important position, if he will accept it. That, if opposed to accepting, he would fill it to the satisfaction of the country, we have a sufficient guarantee in his able management of the national finances through the Mexican war, under Mr. Polk's Administration. Nor can we doubt that the selection of Gens. Butler and Banks for the places indicated would be generally regarded as good appointments; but as these gentlemen are both from the same State, we presume that the appointment of either is transferred to the Cabinet, the other will remain in the army.

We dare say that in the necessary housecleaning for the important business matters of Mr. Lincoln's second term, we shall have a reconstruction of his Cabinet. Leading Republican journals say that it is a duty devolving upon Mr. Lincoln, in the acceptance of the Baltimore platform; while Gen. Cameron, of Pennsylvania (who may be supposed to speak by authority), promised substantially in one of his late stump speeches, that after Mr. Lincoln's re-election there would be a new Cabinet. We presume, however, that things will remain pretty much as they are until the meeting of Congress, nearly in order that the head of each Executive Department may "finish up" his budget for the year, and submit his report to the two Houses, so that his successor if there is to be one—may begin with a new chapter and a clean set of books.

The leading members of the present Cabinet have not luxuriated upon a bed of roses. They have had to sustain the trials of constant and heavy labors, responsibilities and the incessant unfavorable criticisms of a vigilant opposition party. All things considered, we may say they have done "as well as could be expected;" but if ever there was a case that "a new broom sweeps clean," we think that a careful reorganization by Mr. Lincoln of his Cabinet for his second term would meet, not only the approval of his own party, but the wishes and expectations of the country at large.

The Case of the Rebel Crisier Florida.

THE London journals in the interest of Jeff Davis, in the absence of the sinking cause of its Confederacy, permit their zeal to outrun their discretion. They take up the case of the rebel cruiser Florida, lately captured within the waters of a Brazilian port by the United States ship Wachusett, as a case of violation of a neutral sanctuary, which, if not immediately and fully atoned for, ought to bring the most prompt and summary measures of all the maritime Powers of Europe. We presume, however, that if a satisfactory settlement of this affair can be brought about between the United States and Brazil, there will be no ground of complaint remaining to other nations. Nor have we any doubt, from the very friendly relations that have always existed, and which still exist, between our Government and that of Brazil, that we shall have a quiet and satisfactory adjustment of this affair. In the meantime, we congratulate our fellow-citizens, whose business ventures are upon the high seas, that the rebel pirates and pap the Florida is in limbo, and that her mission henceforth will be to protect rather than destroy American commerce. It is an old maxim that "possession is nine points of the law," and having this advantage on our side, we think that the question of the violation of neutral rights involved will be leisurely discussed and adjusted. There need be no hurry in the matter.

Peace Rumors—The Decline in Gold.

BETWEEN Monday morning and Thursday evening of last week there was a decline in gold of some 26 per cent., a most alarming run down to the bull operators of Wall street, causing them to evidently succeed to work up a little panic among them. What could it be? was the question. Some knowing ones among the outsiders whispered that astonishing news, by the rebel underground railroad, had been heard from Gen. Sherman; some positively knew that the Administration was about to detail a special peace embassy to Richmond, headed by Gen. Butler, and in which every prospect of complete success; others, again, were satisfied that the gold gamblers were frightened by certain preparations by Secretary Fessenden for the grand finale movement to head them off; while others argued that it was only a healthy reaction at work "on change," from the violent efforts of unscrupulous gold jobbers to make something out of the late national election.

We dare say that all the above have been operating among the worshippers of the golden calf, and that a substantial reaction has commenced against them, which, allowing for temporary fluctuations, will continue to run until we shall have reached the genuine value of the national currency and credit as compared with gold.

Summary of the Week.

TEXAS AND LOUISIANA.

By the steamship Morning Star, which sailed from New Orleans on the 12th Nov., we learn that the French troops have evacuated Matamoras and Brownsville, opposite to them at Brownsville, on the opposite side of the Rio Grande, was expecting an attack from a Union force, which, it was said, would be under the command of Gen. Banks. The recent Treasury orders declaring New Orleans to be an insurrectionary district had been rescinded, and trade had recommenced. Gen. Canby's wound is so serious that he will not be able to mount a horse for many months. The only item of interest is the capture by the Union troops, under Col. Dwight, of Shreveport, of Vidalia, La., of a large herd of cattle which the rebels were making efforts to get across the Mississippi river, for the use of Hood's army.

THE SHENANDOAH.

Early's army had been withdrawn from Sheridan's front, and had fallen back before Staunton, where reinforcements stole the rebel army during the winter quarters. It is considered, however, probable, that they have been ordered to reinforce Lee, who will have to send part of his troops to oppose Sherman.

VIRGINIA.

The utmost quiet reigns in the armies before Richmond and Petersburg. The rebels have commenced building an earthwork near the center caused by the mine explosion of the rebel battery in September, but they progress very cautiously.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The rebel steamer Advance on the report that the Union troops had reoccupied Washington, N. C., and that the rebels, after evacuating Plymouth, had fallen back on the line of the Roanoke river, where they were watching the movements of our troops.

GENERAL.

All that is certainly known of Gen. Sherman's new campaign is that on the 12th Nov. he burned all the buildings in Atlanta that were likely to be of use to the rebels, and with a large corps of his army, numbering about 60,000 men, advanced into the enemy's country, in a south-easterly direction, destroying railroads, cotton, and were in the highest spirits. In his address to his troops he said that they were advancing into a region which had hitherto been untrodden by the armies of either side, and that the supplies were abundant. As part of Sherman's campaign, Gen. Corse had burned all that was calculated to be of any use to the rebels, and had captured Rome.

EAST TENNESSEE.

The rebel papers publish a dispatch from Gen. Lee, stating that Gen. Breckinridge had defeated and driven Gen. Gillem, on the 9th inst., at Jeffy Gap, with the loss of 400 men and six guns.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—A correspondent of the Boston Journal writes from Atlanta that the damage in carrying was hit by our missiles 200 times during the siege, and that it is by no means the most damaged house in the city.

—An interesting old building in Reading, Penn., called "The Old Blue House," has been demolished. It is locally remarkable as having served in almost every capacity possible to buildings.

—The public debt was $2,601,026,815.76 on the 31st of Oct. The annual interest is a little over $85,000,000.

—No Democratic Presidential tickets was run in Kansas.

—A bedplate, requiring 22 tons of iron, was recently cast at Hartford, Conn., in 65 seconds, for one of our Government engines.

—The warehouse of Gen. Wells is in Boston. He has not been driven by battles in the Shenandoah valley since April last. Gen. Wells, it will be remembered, was killed in the battle of Cedar Creek.

—A competent authority states, that Sheridan has captured, in the Shenandoah valley, a mile and thirty-two yards in length, or an average of two pieces a day since he took command.

—St. Albans, Vt., the scene of the present rebel raid from Canada, voted 600 for Lincoln, and 292 for McClellan. All the border towns gave strong Lincoln majorities.

—A private letter from New Orleans, received in Newport, R. I., states that the immense quantity of cotton stowed in the interior of Texas, which Banks failed to capture last spring, is being rapidly sent over the border into Mexico, where it is bought up by Mexican and European speculators, at comparatively small cost.

—Mr. Gen. McClellan's resignation of his military position in the U. S. Army was sent to Washington on election day, the 8th of November, and was accepted. He has now only a country gentleman's and no retired officer's honorable private left. Let not political rancour bring his fellow-citizens to deny to anyone's ear a soldier's and his integrity and worth as a gentleman and a Christian.

—The British Minister at Washington, in consequence of the escape of the pirate steamer Florida, has protested against the departure of the ship of war built here by Mr. Westervelt for the Japanese Government.

—We have now three famous female American sculptors, Miss Hosmer, Miss Stebbins and Mrs. Freeman—the latter a new artist.

—A man fell off the forward platform of one of the 7th Avenue cars, the other night, in such a way that both his legs were crushed beneath the wheels. The unfortunate conductor should rigidly enforce the rule forbidding passengers to ride on the forward platform of the cars.

—A number of counterfeiters have lately been trapped in the West, and lodged in the old Capitol prison at Washington. They have succeeded in obtaining about a great deal of bogus currency.

—Samuel Sutliff, keeper of the Philadelphia Hotel, has been arrested charged with having last year robbed and destroyed a part of the hotel, and thus sold him as a soldier. It is a disgrace to the military authorities of that city and land that one was not acquired who at the time, since the victim then informed them of the outrage, was serving for a year as a soldier got a furlough last week, and has come here to see his sister-in-law.

—The Tulip gunboat, that recently exploded and killed over 30 of its crew, was the vessel which was anchored in the mouth last year, during the time of the raids.

—There is a strange coincidence in the peace articles as uttered by the Washington organs of the Administration and the Chicago Platform. On Sunday, 9th Avenue Hotel, on the 14th November. There seems a very remarkable coincidence that his proposition was the avant courier of Mr. Lincoln.

—Fat ducks and partridges abound in Wisconsin. The sharpshooters of the State are already in search of other game—the rebels that war against their own countrymen.

—A bill to regulate railroads will be introduced at the next session of Congress. It is much needed. Many road accidents are alarmingly frequent. Eight of them have occurred since July.

—The 75th birthday of the poet Bryant was duly celebrated on November 3, at the rooms of the Century Club, in this city.

—Pennsylvania has 2,340 miles of railway, which cost $141,417,000. Ohio has 1,961 miles in length, costing $8,811,702. The real and personal estate, in 1860, amounted to $1,256,586,386. The State debt, Nov. 30, 1863, was $40,586,000, showing a decrease from the preceding year of $815,637.

—A deaf and dumb arab musician had been engaged in the hopeless task of attempting to bribe one of the Judges of the State of Illinois. He wrote: "To the musician whom it may concern." It frantically calls upon the Judge, and discipline of Arabs to receive his corrupt greenbacks. It appears he first tried the effect of his promissory note, which was equally ineffective.

—The Journal of Commerce, one of the most vehement of the Chicago platform, has accepted the position of the recent election with great patience, and has announced its intention of devoting its columns exclusively to commerce and family affairs. The good temper with which the defeated party receive Mr. Lincoln's re-election is of especial admiration.

—A man weighing 151 pounds is on exhibition in Auburn, N. Y. The Skowhegan, Maine, Clarion, meanwhile, informs us that Armagh over a cabbage head weighing 15 pounds and a half.

—Count de Gurgi, the Austrian Minister at Washington, who was recalled on account of his intimacy with Secretary Seward, has been appointed Governor of Venice, and will soon leave, very suddenly, on the 8th Nov. He was in his place at the Court ball, last night, writing and speaking seven languages with purity and fluency.

—The Hon. Nathaniel P. Talmadge died at Battle Creek, Mich., on the 25th inst. He was a young man, a prominent New York politician, was United States Senator, and recently Judge-Governor of Wisconsin. He emigrated to the West some years ago. He was a spiritualist.

—Commander Napoleon Collins, of the Wachusett, whose recent capture of the Florida shows more daring than diplomacy, is a Pennsylvanian, by birth, and was appointed Midshipman, Jan. 2, 1834. He was educated in the Naval School at Philadelphia. In 1862 he was promoted to his present rank, as full commander. He is about 50 years of age, and has been over 31 years on the sea.

—A great banquet was given on the 18th Nov. at Boston, to Capt. Winslow of the Kearsarge, the destroyer of the Alabama. Mr. Everett delivered an oration, to which Gen. Butler and Mr. Thornton replied in stirring terms.

—A correspondent writing from Johnsonville, Tenn., says that eight steamboats loaded with Government stores were burned there to prevent them from falling into the hands of the rebels.

—A most interesting incident occurred on the day of the election in the village of Phillips, of Hartford, Mass., who is 104 years four months and nine days old, appeared at the town hall and deposited his ballot. His son, Col. Phillips, the oldest man in the town, being 80 years old, personally assisted the veteran. Deacon Phillips had fought in the war of Independence and he was in the war of 1812.

—Hon. John P. Hale, one of the Electors at Large for Connecticut, died suddenly on the 19th Nov. and suddenly on the 10th, at Waterbury. He was a most respected citizen.

—The American Geographical and Statistical Society held its first meeting for the year on the 16th Nov. at Clinton Hall. Prof. Bache presided and called to the chair the late Capt. Speke.

—Mr. Francis Scarlett, secretary of physical culture in West 15th street continues his successful career, and her light and warm calisthenic exercises become a part of all first-class education. Parents need not be reminded of the great value of physical strength, and of the unequalled bearing on the part of their children, these are securing by such study perfect health.

Foreign.—The Danish and German war can thus be summed up: Denmark cedes the three duchies of Schleswig, Holstein and Lauenburg to the victors, and gave to the duchies 8,000,000 of rigsdalers for their claims to the common property of the Danish monarchy. Schleswig and Holstein will be held by the Germans until the Germanic Confederation has decided between the rival claims of the Prince of Augustenburg and the Grand Duke of Oldenburg. Denmark is also to pay for the shipping captured by her fleet. It will be seen that the war has cost the conquerors no little treasure. It may not be profitable to the Prince of Augustenburg, who commanded it.

—It is not often that an official inquiry is made into the conduct of the gods, but the Chinese have proposed it. It is in the report from the Chinese Government on the attention of the rebellion, and is worded in these words: "It is, therefore, most needful that thanks be offered to the gods for their assistance, wherefore the Board of Rites is directed to examine into the services rendered by the different gods, and to report to us."

—The vintage this season in France and Spain is reported to be very rich. Consumers of wine will be sorry to hear it.

—The London Morning Post announces that the Warrior, the famous iron-plated war ship of England, is to be dismantled, it being deemed inefficient for war purposes.

—The London Times editorially notices the inhospitable reception given on several recent occasions to royal personages, in connection with the hostility shown by the Swedish royal family to the Prince of Wales.

—The Supreme Court of Justice, in Naples, has declared the property of the late Queen Amelia, and the late Prince of Capua to be legal. The decree having decided from the Court of Appeal, which the wider decree from this tardy recognition of her rights is the testimony of Europe.

—The London correspondent of the Daily News says that this year the genius of London have burnt a human effigy on the 5th of the Pope of Rome as a Guy Fawkes of the day.

—The English Board of Trade returns of railway accidents for 1863 show that in that year 33 passengers were killed and 1,049 injured in the United Kingdom by accidents to trains or other causes.

—An American shoe is now in full bloom in Edinburgh, Scotland.

—It is reported that a mountain of iron has been discovered on the Canada side of Lake Superior, 45 miles from the Sault.

—Alexandre Dumas's latest novel, now in course of publication in the Opinion Nationale, is "Isaac."

—The missionary ship John Williams, the first ever built for exploration in the South Seas, arrived in Loch Fleet in the Pacific. She went down in 20 fathoms of water, but was afterwards raised.

—It is stated that upwards of 700,000 persons enter London every morning on business days, and leave it in the evening over 600,000, a great part of it overcrowded.

—Madame Rehaper, daughter of John Shield, Sir Hawk's representative in Paris, has commenced her initiation of getting up a bazaar, in the French capital, for the benefit of Southern rebel soldiers, wounded in battle.

—The Persian Gulf telegraph cable has been regained. The Persian Government has opened up Beherun, and messages have come through to Bombay in London.

—Rat-catching has become a fine art in Paris. One professor has, in one year, killed 15,000 in 3 months. Their skins are used to make "kid" gloves.

—The first lighthouse ever erected within the dominions of the Sultan of Turkey was lighted for the first time, on the 16th of Oct. It is at Cape Spartel. The tower is 90 feet high, and the light can be seen 20 miles at sea.

—The Thanksgiving proclamations were generally issued by the Papal police at Rome; but the intelligent superintendents of a police station to which they were brought for issuance of them, declined to issue it as it is an unlucky number.

—There are now 3 horse railroads at Copenhagen and at the Hague. The latter is connected with Scheveningen by a horse railroad, which passes through what is called "a tunnel of green trees."

—Late services from St. Petersburg notice a scarcity of money there, and the rouble is at a high rate of exchange.

—Mr. Rogers, the American sculptor, residing at Rome, has finished a model of a colossal bronze statue for the Academy of Fine Arts, Philadelphia. The figure represents Israel, in the United States uniform, in the act of challenging Goliath, who is represented as Rebellion. Israel is equal in attack, and the head following the motion of his eye, his eyes are fixed upon the head of the giant, if into obscurity, and the whole figure saying as plainly as action can say, "You goes there?" It is a bold, bright, graphic work of art.

—Another American artist at Rome—Mr. Rebinson—has finished a statue of Cleopatra, which, as a statue and paraphernalia, is a constructed religion."

PICTURES.

A silver thread among the hills,
Gleaming down the hollows;
A fishing-line by lazy hands,
In sunny pools and shallows:
A broad stream flowing through the plain,
In the North and West:
A river rolling to the main,
Bearing navies on its breast:
And the great broad sea with its thousand shores,

An infant, with a tinkling toy,
In his nurse's kindly lap;
A chubby, bright-eyed, radiant boy,
On his father's proud knee dandled;
A youth in long's eager pursuit,
While Truth's broad scroll's unfurled:
A man with anxious, careworn face,
Bent with the load of the world:
And Death's great sea with its silent shores.

PINK RENNIE.

She taught school, and he made money. He will not describe their first meeting, or how he appeared at the house of her father, as a boarder, and during the winter of constant attention on Miss Fanny, talked sometimes with the shy little creature. He will not describe how the shyness of nineteen, a polite mamma had given her, in vain expectation of a legacy from the aunt from whom she took it.

Fanny Bondrair, who was always making fun of her cousin, called her by the long syllables, and was pleased at the show of sensitiveness, as her cousin, with a flush, or coldness, withdrew from all to chime, but could not become hardened.

The Bondrairs were kind-hearted people; their principles were respectable, they went to church, gave liberally in charity, but didn't they make up for every concession to Christianity at home!

Mr. Bondrair insisted on variety and elegance of dress in wife and daughter, gave entertainments, lived expensively, and had a running tread with the butcher, baker, and the rest. His wife and daughter would be in an uproar. Miss Fanny banged doors, talked as loudly as her father, and told him her opinions without the least euphemism. Mrs. Bondrair always took to her room, and had an illness. Pink supposed there would be no more parties or operas, no more fine velvet coats and new sets of jewellery. But a day of calm would come, the carriage would arrive loaded with brown paper parcels. The dressmaker would appear, even the awful paterfamilias he called in for his opinion on the newly-finished robe, at which time he was precisely blind and complimentary, and the world would go on until the quarterly period of disturbance. Mrs. Bondrair was a better. Her darling was small, fine-voiced, unceasing. She never reached a grand climax like her husband, but was constantly approaching one. Fanny was handsome, determined and rowdy—forgive the slang—what else can I say? for that word exactly describes her.

Into this family Pink Rennie was admitted. She was the child of Mr. Bondrair's only sister, poor, or she would not have been there. She had much to temper, and was very grateful, unreasoning, loving. Such a gentle, downy thing as a man of high intellect often marries for that very reason. Pink would never have dared to teach, although she had often cried and longed to do something, had not Fanny herself proposed it herself, and was by no money without "such horrid noisy quarrels with pa."

On Pink's eagerly expressed desire, Miss Bondrair had consented to be taught her, and kept her word. She installed her cousin in one of the fashionable city schools, and fought the necessary battle for eighteen months. At the end of that time Pink never forgot Fanny's kindness at this time. Fanny, who was engaged to marry that grandlooking Mr. Randall, and could do so much for Pink, when Pink's great fit of self-sacrifice came. It's kind of bliss. This grand Mr. Randall had once been a clerk in the house of Bondrair. An old man, the partner of Bondrair, died within a few years, at the head of a concern of his own. He became "good mate!" With all his stature and dignity, he was a simple, quiet man, one you would expect to be awkward on occasions, but who was continually surprising you by his self-possession and tact. He was a widower, was at first before him. She had accepted him without bestowing a bestation. Their courtship was a fashionable affair, and accompanied by presents. Pink, we thought, till one fine day Miss Fanny broke her troth, and married in three weeks from date Aiden Court Van Court, who was living on the interest of her money and her fine manners. Mr. Randall took it all comfortably, made the bride a rich present, and came to the Bondrairs to spend an evening and tell them.

He felt very sorry for poor little Pink. Had a brotherly kind of way that won from the girl her first grateful look. Then by degrees he made her brim everything that had ever happened to her, and all she had ever felt besides. Her little griefs, her great sorrows, her poverty, her pride. He made her sweet, dreary face to flush and brighten at his coming. He took her to ride, gave her advice, lent her books, and told the little ignoramus of the wonderful world of London. When he went away on short journeys he always felt like writing to her, and he did so. She became the confidante of his love affairs, and he often asked her advice about the color of his clothes, or the merits of rival styles of hat or collar. He never uttered one word of unmanly sentimentality. Fanny, married and living over the way, began to berate the girl because no engagement came of this intimacy of over two years. Pink, in order to be the pearl, or goose, or else tell him not to come here any more. It has gone on long enough." She examined her to us the particular phrases he had addressed to her.

"How did he begin his letters? Let me see one."

Pink could not.

"Goodness! how particular we are! Go, got the letters. There's no love in 'em, you say. What's the use of love now?" for the poor hunted thing began to cry.

Mr. Bondrair found her alone in the sitting-room one day, and as his wife could not be with her "a regular set down," whatever that may be, Pink sobbed and trembled as she couldn't after a passionate scene with Fanny—a fool, she had threatened to call Randall to account, and then went off well pleased with himself. He loved to see a timid creature under his sarcasm, to note the hot grievous drops as they fell. A victory over that half-interpreted thing—a woman's nature—was delightful to him. Tactless before, he became suddenly brilliant, quoted school scraps of poetry, made puns and laughed at them.

The idea of being married to Mr. Randall almost took away the girl's breath. What did the Bondrairs mean? Had she always been kind to her? he had made no professions; he had never told her he liked her even; it was only a fatherly interest he felt in her. She was contented.

Pink was not the first who had seen the graces of youth, or its sweet words and honey glances, would not at first be likely to ensnare a girl of seventeen, yet the gentle and loving nature of seventeen not yet crushed out. She tried to be as kindly and calm as usual to her good friend. Strangely to say, nothing of the domestic scenes came to Randall's ears. Once only Fanny Court Van Court told him he was keeping lovers from her. He only smiled, and said in his little manner—

"Who is it I am keeping away?" he demanded smilingly.

She knew no young men, she answered.

"Well, when you don't wish to see me any more tell me to go; you know the most distant hint will answer you."

So matters went on in the ebb and flow of daily life till the outbreak of the rebellion.

Mr. Randall did not go to Washington at first, he helped to fill office, but held no open purse; but by-and-bye he seemed to become educated to that point. Pink, who had heard his talk day after day, and watched its current, with the changing expression of his face, had seen the coming decision.

There was company at the Court Van Courts, a dinner to some officers, and he found a chance to say good-by.

"I am so hurried just now that I find it difficult to command a few leisure moments when you, dear, are unoccupied. What hour to-morrow can you walk with me?"

Five o'clock will be best," said she.

"Very well, at five then," and he turned away to talk with others. He was always easy.

Pink was ready at the appointed hour, and came down in a flush. As he saw her approach him, looking so small and girlish in the midst of the weakness of womankind, their faints and hysterics, and determined to tell her there.

"Comfortable me," said he, taking forward, and holding out his hand; "I am a colonel."

She did not speak, but gave him a smile, and a warm hand pressure. Then he told her what his duties would be, and promised to bring a book on cavalry tactics for her to look at; and after a while he said—

"Can you get ready to be married before I go, Minnie?"

An answer was not ready, nor did he seem to expect one.

"I did not wish to be so sudden, but I go so unexpectedly at last. It is out of the question to leave you here unprotected. I may be home soon back. It is better to have a quiet wedding, for I know you wish you to be beholden to the Bondrairs for any fine show or wedding breakfast."

Here he stopped, for he perceived she was trembling and very pale.

"Come out with me, Minnie; you can think better in the fresh air."

He opened the door, and they went out into the fine child-colored twilight. Pink could not be said during the early part of the walk, not until Pink began to recover her color did her lover talk much. Colonel Randall, under their parents together he told her about his property, and gave her an idea of what she would have to do during his absence. He had taken a house and easy.

"Perry is my man of business, a good, honest, sensible fellow. I have proved, and you may trust him. He will explain everything, and help you to furnish. Choose any house in the new part of school?" indicating a large brick edifice with closed blinds.

"Yes, Madame Gras lives here."

"Have you any objections to taking me in to see her?"

Pink had decided objections, being bashful; but she said she would call with him. Madame Gras was very much astonished at the object of Mr. Randall's visit, but she adapted herself to the good friendliness of his manner. It was impossible to be unflattered by his visit, or now to patronize Pink, who received the kind and sensible congratulations very prettily. Madame hoped she would witness the ceremony. Mr. Randall said he would send a carriage for her, if she would honor them so far. Then Pink, with a sweet look full of fearlessness and bliss, heard she was to be married the next afternoon. Then Randall took her home and left her upstairs to pack her trunks, while he told the Bondrairs. The next day he came in for a few moments to say all the arrangements were made, and found Pink quite ready. At five o'clock the carriages came, and took them all to church. Pink wore a gray silk, and little gray hat, with a white wing of a dove in it. There was a proper service at St. Mark's, which Mr. Randall heard through, Pink saying her prayers by his side. As the congregation rose to depart, he turned to the altar where the priest waited. It was over in a few moments. Mrs. Randall stepped into her own carriage, the bridegroom and Mr. Bondrairs went home with them to a family dinner. The house was splendid. Fanny prowled all over it in the course of the evening, making Pink go with her.

"It is perfect," she said, "and it says he has been over it all to you. I wish I had a baby like Pink mine. None of us supposed he was so rich. Why didn't you let me into your confidence, you sly thing? It is engaged at last long, and has he married at five minutes' notice, and startle everybody?"

Pink did not tell that she was startled as any one.

In the course of the evening the lawyer came, and in the presence of the Bondrairs those matters were settled which concerned Pink's accession of a fortune, and for ever entitled to their respect. Uncle Benerair, in a white waistcoat, and benevolent manner, distributed his wedding presents:

"Had no idea Randall was such a mighty smart chap."

At last her hero went, and all the fashionable world rolled up in carriages to see the bride. They tried in vain to make her gay that winter. Since parties a few weeks in the house of Colonel Randall, but when the army moved on came back to her quiet life. He came back to her once in April, when the war began to grow, and was wounded. Then for the first time they were really together. Mrs. Court Van Court said one day:

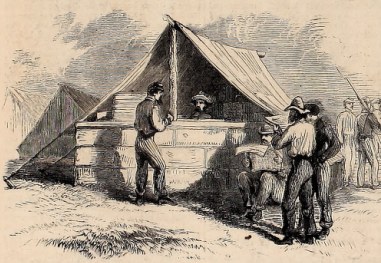
"How happy you two look. I believe she is glad you are wounded, Randall."

"I am a very crazy," answered he, with a smile, "The fact is, Fanny, I'm in love with my wife."

Pink blushed beautifully, as she met his eyes. Fanny laughed, declaring she never heard anything so ridiculous in her whole life. But she sighed as she went downstairs to her own grim chosen lord, and snubbed him unmercifully that evening.

The Boston Transcript says that the New York Herald has now been in the field for seven years during the last fortnight, and brought Mr. Stanton to the point of death four times within 10 days.

SCENES IN CAMP LIFE.



WE devote a large portion of our space this week to illustrations of the life of our soldiers in camp. These glimpses of adventurous and hardy experience are, we judge, interesting to numerous readers, and especially so to those whose friends are serving the country in her brave armies. Living in peace and comfort at home, all true Americans are mindful of the gallant soldiers who are protecting the nation from the hideous fangs of rebellion. We like to see how they live; and the sketches on this and other pages of the present paper bring home distinctly to our minds the realities of camp life. Looking upon these pictures, the parents, wives and sweethearts of our absent defenders can follow their loved ones on the war trail, and note how they beguile the tedium of camp life, when not engaged in active service. Our scenes in camp before Petersburg are spiritedly drawn from real life, by our special Artist, and they tell their own story. The first represents the soldiers playing at tenpins. Their method is a peculiar one, invented, we believe, by a Western officer, and introduced into the army of the Potomac by the officers brought thither by Gen. Grant. In the absence of a smooth bowling-alley, such as we have at home, the soldiers erect a couple of poles, with a cross-piece, to which is attached a rope with a cannon-ball at the end. The player takes aim at the pins with this ball, and swings it towards the mark.

The next scene represents a tent, wherefrom newspapers are dispensed to eager buyers. We are sorry to hear, by the way, that our soldiers are not thoroughly well supplied with reading. The next scene, representing the process of sorting letters in camp, scarcely requires a comment. We can easily imagine the anxiety, the mingled pleasure and pain, with which our soldiers receive their letters from home. The next sketch depicts the camp well, from which the soldiers are drawing water by means of the old-fashioned well-sweep, so common in country places, and so suggestive of Wadsworth's familiar and much cherished song of "The Old Oaken Bucket." Following this is a representation of the 5th Corps Guard House, near the Weldon railroad, which is used as a lockup for rebel prisoners. Around it are seen the tents of our men, and sentinels on duty. A sketch of several sharpshooters, Pennsylvania Bucktails, comes next in order, in which these skilful and courageous soldiers are advancing to their place in the dangerous picket line. A picture of the interior of a bombproof in Fort Duchane completes the series. Fort Duchane is one of our defences on the line of the Weldon railroad, and in this bombproof our soldiers may smoke, lie at ease, or, as Shakespeare has it, "sleep in spite of thunder." No bomb can penetrate this firm structure of logs and earth.

CAMP AMUSEMENTS—SOLDIERS PLAYING AT TENPINS.

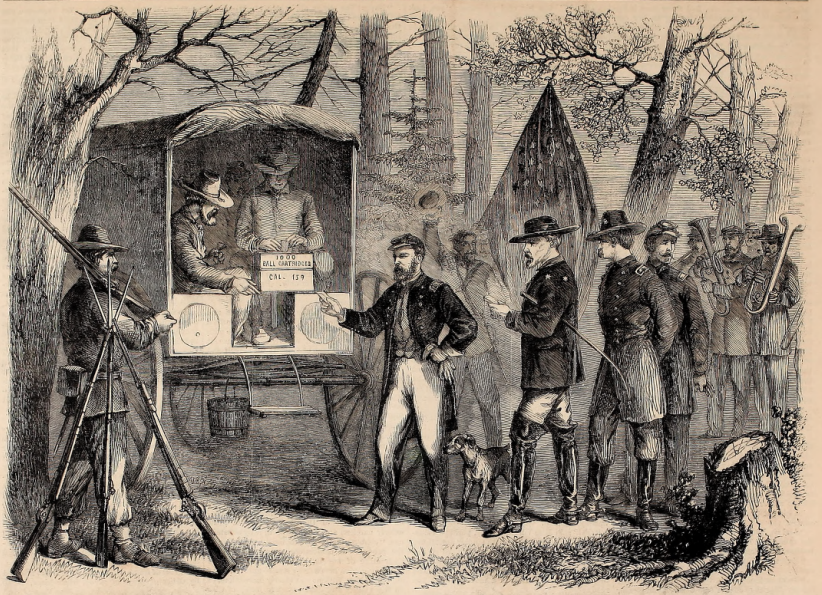
TOBACCO.—That a great deal of smoking is done in this world may be inferred from such facts as these. A Brazilian mail-packet lately landed in England 6,000,000 cigars, while an American steamer landed 2,000 bales of unmanufactured tobacco.

A NEWS DEPOT—SOLDIERS BUYING NEWSPAPERS.

SORTING THE MAIL IN CAMP—SOLDIERS RECEIVING THEIR LETTERS.

THE CAMP WELL—SOLDIERS DRAWING WATER

FIFTH CORPS GUARDHOUSE—PLACE OF CONFINEMENT FOR REBEL PRISONERS.



SHARPSHOOTERS GOING ON PICKET DUTY.

INTERIOR OF A BOMBPROOF IN FORT DUCHANE, ON LINE OF WELDON RAILROAD.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC—SCENES IN CAMP BEFORE PETERSBURG, VA.—FROM SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, JOSEPH BECKER.

ELECTION DAY IN THE ARMY OF THE SHENANDOAH—SCENE AT THE POLLS—GEN. SHERIDAN, GEN. CROOK, AND OTHER OFFICERS CASTING THEIR VOTES.

MIST AT MORN.

BY HUGH W. GRIFFITH.

Belts of woodland circling around,
Luxuriant masses of green,
Zone after zone of rolling mist
Wavering up between.

Zephyrs dancing down through its depths,
While the sweep of their dresses whirl
The rolling mist in a thousand
Eddies of graceful curl.

Like him who dipt in the Lydian stream,
The morning beams bathe in the mist,
Like him, turning to molten gold
The vapory amethyst.

Marshalled in many columns, the mist
Resists the attack of the sun;
Down he comes with his golden lances,
Driving them one by one;

Backward they glide, upward they roll—
Dissolve in the ambient air;
The sun is victor—holds the world—
His beams are everywhere.

Only belts of woodland circling round,
Luxuriant masses of green,
Gone are the zones of rolling mist
That wavered up between.

"OFF THE STAGE."

BY LESLIE WALTER.

The Assembly Hall of the town of Riveredge was fitted up as a theatre "for this occasion only," and crowds of the Riveredgians were resorting thither, sure of an evening's entertainment in beholding "talents of no common order," as the playbills assured them. By some extraordinary good fortune for them—and for himself, as it afterwards proved—an important member of Mr. Barry's theatrical corps had been taken so seriously ill, in passing through, that it was deemed advisable for the whole troupe to remain over night with their suffering comrade, instead of proceeding to fulfil their engagement in the city of L——. The enterprising manager first telegraphed to that place, and then set himself to turn the enforced delay to advantage. A little German theatre, long since exploded, had left behind it a quantity of scenery, a few footlights and a big drum, and with these and the local band Mr. Barry fitted up the townhall, and had his company rehearsing "Faust" before noon on the day of their detention.

MEPHISTOPHELES AND MARTHA IN THE GARDEN.

HOLIDAY IN THE COUNTRY.

"Mr. Meacham" (a thin, red-headed young man), "in the absence of our poor Mr. Arnold—Faust," exclaimed the autocrat; "Mrs. Maclean, Marguerite; Mr. Treverton" (a new recruit), "Mephistopheles; Madame Martha, Miss Vincent. Mr. Maclean will drill the band and arrange the Witches' Sabbath. Afterpiece, "Family Jars;" Liddy, Miss Johnson; Diggory, Mr. Jones—you'll find the rest of the 'cast' on this table. No remonstrance, ladies and gentlemen, if you please—there really is not scenery for anything else," and the "eminent manager" stalked away satisfied, to the discussion of a capital dinner at the Riveredge Hotel, and left his dismayed subalterns to their task.

Mr. Treverton, the new recruit, twisted his moustache carelessly, as his part was handed him by the indefatigable prompter, in pursuance of these orders, and looked indifferently after the retiring figure of the worthy manager and sympathisingly round upon his companions. Mr. Meacham, a meek young person, long since crushed and submissive, was already conning his role with both hand desperately clenched in his hair. Mrs.

Maclean, a pretty blonde, had flung hers indignantly aside, and was animadverting on her employer's conduct in the severest terms; her energetic husband was sorting a pile of miscellaneous properties and distributing them among a few reluctant assistants. Beyond all this confusion, the dark-blue eyes of Mephistopheles—very handsome eyes they were—turned with an expression of pitying interest to a slender young girl, who sat apart from the rest; her head leaning upon her hand in a weary, drooping way; the nerveless fingers, on her lap, loosely closed upon her part; her thin sallow face shaded by her bonnet, the curtain of thick long lashes hiding her eyes.

As Treverton approached, gently, but with a steady marching step peculiar to him, she looked up, startled, and resumed her natural position and expression. Her gray eyes opened, clear and bright and wide, the light and life came back into her dull features; she smiled, showing a row of pretty glistening teeth, and lifting her graceful head, welcomed him with a ladylike ease of manner, a sparkling animation, widely contrasting with her sad and languid mien a few moments before.

"Do I frighten you already?" he inquired, bending his handsome head towards her. "Is there anything diabolic in my appearance? Do I breathe blue flames, or smell of sulphur?"

"Not yet," retorted Miss Vincent, composedly settling her dress, but glancing up half archly, half frowningly, as he took a seat by her side—a look changed into involuntary admiration at a nearer view of his clear-cut features and Spanish complexion. She remembered to have seen few finer faces, but she also remembered that to see such was not her business; and Emily Vincent, as the playbills called her, was of those who ride their own spirit, and resolved to steer clear of the rocks in her perilous profession, maintained her self-respect, and that of others, with a strong will, a steady and determined purpose. "Your vicinage might be dangerous without them," she thought, and rose.

Her little black-rosetted slipper fell off as she moved; the foot it was made for had shrunk and altered, sharing the thinness that marred the outlines of her figure, worn with overwork. Treverton pounced upon the pretty toy, and stood up to return it, but apparently changing his mind retained it a moment, twirling it upon his fingers, loth to render it back.

"I wish you would give this to me," he slowly said.

"And go, like Goody Two-shoes, with a boot on the other foot? Oh, no! Mr. Treverton! shoe leather is too dear. Give me back my slipper."

"But why does it drop off?" he asked, uneasily.

"To show that I have a pretty foot, of course; it is an old trick of coquettes. Come, if you please, my shoe!"

"You are no coquette," he said, abruptly; "you are wasting away to a shadow, killing yourself with overwork. They have no mercy on you here, and you will have none on yourself, Emdy," he continued, stooping to replace the slipper; "will you let me give you rest?"

Her face flushed hotly in a moment. She turned her haughty little head, like an offended princess, and scathed him with a flash from those gray eyes, compounded of anger and mockery.

"Mr. Treverton, you are doing stage business by daylight, which is in bad taste. Save your raptures for rehearsal, and let me study my part."

She walked away like a queen, and the actor rose, unwearying, unabashed, anxious only and eager to spare her tasks her feeble strength was unequal to perform. Under pretence of assisting the worried Mr. Maclean and his indolent wife, he engaged rooms for them at the hotel, sent up their luggage, bribed a waiter to attend them carefully, and would have given Emily his arm, but for her obstinate refusal, as they walked towards it.

A hasty dinner, a hurried change of dress, all intervening moments being devoted to intense study of a half-forgotten part, a prolonged and exhausting rehearsal; then the play, which all the country flocked to see—and Miss Vincent had lost her indignation in weariness long before it was over.

It was a beautiful moonlit May evening, and the temporary theatre being set up in a large building, containing a set of schoolrooms devoted to the select instruction of young ladies, had also appropriate grounds behind it where the said young ladies were accustomed to disport themselves during the hours of recreation.

The back doors of the assembly-room stood wide open for air, beyond the stage, and Mephistopheles and Madame Martha wandering down the painted arcades of an imaginary garden, to leave Faust and Marguerite tête-à-tête, suddenly disappeared from the sight of the crowded audience, leaving the heat, the dust, the noise, the flaring lights behind them, to emerge in a moment among the cool green shades of the real one, lying serene in moonlight splendor.

Mr. Treverton found for his fair companion a seat on a rustic bench at the foot of a great tree, and taking a cigar stood near her, smoking out into the clear air, and benignantly watching her as she rested, like a good genius, far more than the evil one he represented. There was a witchery in the hour and the scene that held her mocking tongue dumb, and smoothed the vexed lines of her little thin face, sad and pale under all its bright disguise of paint and powder. None felt the contrast of these false charms more sharply than she, brought suddenly into contact with the calm beauty of Nature, impressed with its grand simplicity, awed by its solemn calm; and none would so gladly have exchanged the gaudy artificial life for the simple, real and true. The shifting light of her eyes, the fervent change of her mobile features told Treverton all she felt, and thought, and hoped in that brief time.

"Good!" was his cool comment; "you look only your age now."

She turned upon him instantly, all her old haughty self again, watchful and austere.

"What do you say, sir? What is my age?"

"You are two-and-twenty."

"Martha has told you. But that is no reason——"

"She has told me nothing. I read it in your face."

"And you dare to say I look older?"

"Much elder—there are lines there that never ought to have come till you were a grave woman of forty—wrinkles of care and pain and trouble, sad to see in one so young. Your life has been a hard one, I fear."

"It has," she half sobbed; "heaven knows it has, yet we have done our best, Martha and I, and done no harm to ourselves or to others, but the world will barely let us live. Why are people so cruel and unjust, Mr. Treverton, why is everything so wrong, and why do you bring me out here in the moonlight, which always makes a baby of me, to tell you this? Thank you, you needn't mind," changing her tone from passionate to pettish, as he drew her shawl tenderly about her, and retained for a moment the slight fingers in which he left the floating ends. She put up a slender hand to wipe away the tears that hung on her dark eyelashes, and turned to him again a different creature.

"This is romantic, indeed," she cried, recovering her old mocking tone and sarcastic manner, "and good practice for us who counterfeit romance. Can't you strike an attitude, and go through the garden scene in Romeo? there will be just time before the curtain falls. Listen! how they are applauding! Martha must have done it well. Poor girl, fancy her saying to that little Meacham, 'He loves me—he loves me not—he loves me!' over a turnip blossom! It must require extraordinary energy to support the imagination through that scene!"

"They should have cast it with you for Marguerite—your sister is too languid."

"No, it is best as it is. The character would not suit me, I never play such parts. And Martha is so pretty, she looks so lovely with her rippling flaxen hair!"

"True, the character would not suit you, I should hardly like to see you in it, and Mrs. Maclean is pretty as you say, while you——"

"Am plain, I suppose—don't hesitate to own it."

"Are more than beautiful, sometimes," he warmly rejoined.

"Oh!" said Miss Vincent, coolly, perhaps accustomed to be made love to, with similar assertions, by her fellow-actors. "Then suppose we go in? This scene is superb certainly—better than our stage moon, isn't it? but also a little cold. The prompter's bell will ring in a moment. Are you ready?"

"Let me tell you first——"

"No, no, tell me nothing—let me respect you a little while longer, at least, which I have rather a fancy for doing. Besides, you don't know how tired I got of this sort of thing; all Mr. Barry's jeunes gens annoy me in that way at first; pray spare me—save your energies for the boards. Don't fancy," she added, as she rose, and looked half-kindly, half-archly into his downcast countenance, "that you are falling in love with me, Mr. Treverton; or worse, don't do it—and worse still, don't try to persuade me of it. It is all folly, believe me!"

She smiled up in his face, holding out her hand—her magnificent auburn hair had fallen in curling and rippling masses on her fair shoulders, half hidden beneath the stiff muslin of Dame Martha's correct pinner, her eyes glittered, wistfully bright, her lips smiled with a dangerous sweetness, her delicate expressive features glowed vividly in the pale light. It was not difficult to find her beautiful, as Treverton had averred she was, and though his lips were condemned to silence, his eyes confessed it again as he took her hand.

"Let us be friends," said she, frankly, laughing, "and talk of such nonsense no more. You have been very kind to me, Mr. Treverton, since you have been with us; I own I should not like to lose you."

"I had a selfish reason," he responded.

"Very well," she answered, quickly reddening. "Then let us hear no more of it—and now, sir, if you have done with my hand——"

"But I have not," he returned, bending to kiss it. "I wish it were my wife's, then no other man could touch it so, but I."

"Exactly; you would like to play the rôle of the 'Jealous Husband,' and sue Mr. Barry for damages every time a fictitious nobleman brushed the paint from my cheek with his bedraggled plume, or some wretched 'star' pretended to inflict me with a stage embrace! Go! before I learn to laugh at you!"

"That imbecile Morris, who plays the lover——"

"Do you think he ever dared come so near my hand as you have done? Listen! the curtain is rising, will you go?"

So Mephistopheles went back to tempt Faust to his ruin, and Miss Emily Vincent, retiring to her dressing-room, emerged from the relics of Dame Martha a flushed and laughing peasant girl, her auburn ringlets wreathed with roses, her fair arms bare, her bright eyes wide with wonder, as she dawned upon the scene, serene in rustic innocence. Mr. Treverton, for once allowed to be her lover, played his part con amore, and having to bear her off in his arms when the curtain dropped, paused only to wrap a shawl about her as he deposited her in the carriage that waited at the side entrance, with Mrs. Maclean on the front seat, asleep.

"That new Mr. Treverton is an acquisition," pronounced she, yawning fearfully, as soon as they were shut in together and driving off. "It would have been dreadful to walk all this way again."

"What do you mean, Martha? Did not Mr. Barry——"

"Never! the stingy old creature! When was he known to care how we got home? No, this is the doing of that dear Mephistopheles—I told him to call to-morrow that we might thank him."

And she had praised the manager's thoughtfulness, as the real doer of the kind deed had gently put her in. He had not said a word in answer, she recollected. No wonder! he must have thought her wilfully blind! Miss Vincent had not been too much used to kindness that its novelty should pall upon her mind. Her life had been spent in the service of selfish people, whose exactions had grown familiar; the considerate generosity of her new friend was a novel experience, and affected her with unaccustomed emotions. What care she had hitherto received had been that bestowed upon a useful machine by proprietors who do not wish to risk its loss—the theatrical managers, to whom she hired her time and talent, spared her so many evenings per month, so many months per year, because it was found that beyond a certain tension her powers utterly gave way, and entailed a greater loss than that of a brief vacation. When therefore her languor and fatigue had reached a certain climax, she always expected Mr. Barry's business-like proposal, of a few days' rest and respite, and accepted it with the same cool indifference with which it was offered, went away and returned at the appointed time, and resumed her duties with mechanical fidelity. But tender care, gentle consideration, thoughtful kindness, she had never known.

In the same way, the usual triumphs and trophies of her profession seemed to her but an empty mockery, and as such were put aside with cold disdain. She had entered it because it seemed the sole means of support for herself and her sister that offered at the time, and because the latter bore down all opposition with her superior age and authority, and forced the younger girl to follow the path she was resolved to tread. She had attained in it a certain position, were a certain distinction, and had no ambition for more. She did not desire to make her fortune by marriage, like so many theatrical "stars," and rejected all matrimonial offers with the same good-natured contempt that marked her refusal of the attentions, the vows, the jewellery and billet-doux lavished upon every pleasing actress in the height of her career; for she did not value the passion inspired by stage illusion, or believe in love that sprang from no deeper motive than the desire to win what other men admired.

Perhaps, too, those whose business it is to deal in the language of the grande passion grow utterly careless and indifferent to it by constant use, "contemptuous" by familiarity, according to the proverb—as confectioners are sickened by their store of sweets, and bank-tellers tire of counting golden heaps from sun to sun. Be that as it may, Miss Vincent was utterly incredulous to all the violent and demonstrative forms of that sentiment which she had been accustomed to see, and believed it to be her fate to stand for ever like a wayside statue, cold and unresponsive to her worshippers and their tributes, rather than to be taken, loved and cherished, as the household idol of some good man's home. She did not feel unworthy of such a happy fortune, but she had decided that it was not for her, and disdained all meaner forms of affection—so lonely and chill on her high pedestal, she was more easily moved, perhaps, than we—who are but mortal and dependent always on some fallible human love—by the gentle offices of real devotion. She fell asleep that night with a warmer color glowing on her fading cheeks, and tears hanging half dried upon the heavy lashes that drooped in deadly weariness.

Treverton's attendance at church, like all his actions, was subject to one controlling influence, and on the following morning—being Sunday—he hovered about the Macleans' lodgings, resisting the invitations of half-a-dozen dissentient bells, till a slender little figure that he knew came out alone, and passed quietly down the street. Long practice enabled him to casually join her, at exactly the right time, as she reached a neighboring corner, and with a half apology, keep his station at her side. There was nothing of the tawdry finery of the actress in her costume, everything was simple, fresh and pure, from the little shoe to the neatly fitting gloves, the ladylike dress, the quiet, tasteful bonnet. She held a small prayerbook in her hand, and there was a look of Sabbath peace and rest upon her pale face, pleasant to see, instead of the harassed, weary look it usually wore. But Treverton saw with tender pity how languid was her step, how colorless were her lips, how lifeless was the smile that lit her mouth and eyes with such animating light and sweetness, when she would. He walked silently on beside her, wrapt in deep reflection, and unconscious that those beautiful sad eyes were reviewing him keenly during his soldier-like march, noting with secret satisfaction the calm, gentlemanly elegance of his appearance, so different from her experience of his usually careless and slovenly class: ashamed to wonder, at a time devoted to more serious thoughts, what scorching climate burnt his clear cheek so brown, what earlier profession gave that military grace to his handsome figure.

They knelt side by side during the service, and read from the same book, but when the communion prayers were over, and one by one the occupants of neighboring seats arose and glided forward to the altar, Emily drew apart with bowed head and drooping form, her whole frame shaken by acute distress. With the delicate instinct of affection her companion felt the cause of her sorrow, and realised that, fresh from the garish scenes of the evening before, she felt herself unfit to approach the table from which so many—perhaps less worthy—were coming satisfied away. A kind hand touched her gently, holding beneath her bent face, over which tears were slowly stealing, the lesson for the day, the parable of the Publican and Pharisee, simple words that touched her heart with a sweet assurance of comfort, for which she thanked the generous giver. Yet Treverton was not a good man, judged by a rigid standard, nor particularly a wise one, not over-accomplished, nor ultra-refined, never remarkable for sentiment or sensibility, but possessing a secret charm that tuned his mind and heart to sympathy with those of this sensitive, suffering woman in that rare feeling—a devoted and unselfish attachment, a true and tender love.

By Monday the brisk manager had received an answer to his dispatch, from the lessee of the theatre in L——; there was no need of their presence for more than a week to come. The painters and decorators had been unavoidably delayed, and some days would yet elapse before it was fit for occupation. Mr. Barry, therefore, proposed to spend the interval in giving the Riveredge population a taste of the moral drama, as performed by his unrivalled troupe, and with this view had re-engaged the townhall and the German band, and issued a legion of posters in many colors, which announced these facts to all concerned, together with the performance for the coming evening. At its conclusion, overtaxed and overworn, and obliged to play a difficult part, which Mrs. Maclean had positively refused to undertake, Emdy Vincent quietly fainted away in the greenroom, wholly unnoticed by her brother and sister, who were taking a congratulatory glass of wine with the manager, and was found there looking like a pallid ghost in the moonlight, half an hour later, by the anxious Treverton.

He took her home. There was something like a grateful look in her little cynical pale face when they parted, and seeing her safe and comfortable in her sister's charge, returned to a private interview with the landlord and manager, in which I know not what powerful bribes were used, what secret influences at work, but only that he had galloped miles on a hired horse before the sisters rose next morning, and was applying for admission at Mr. Maclean's door before his wife had finished her late breakfast.

Their little parlor was already made neat by Martha's nursery-maid, and Emily Vincent lay smiling from her sofa at her baby niece. She looked sallow and sickly, and pale and plain, her eyes were dull and heavy, her cheeks thin and hollow, there was nothing, it seemed, of brilliancy or beauty left to win a lover's heart. But Treverton read a cruel resolute patience in her face, that flushed his own with deep and warm emotion, and filled his eyes with tears. Disregarding the hour of rehearsal now fast approaching, he invited the ladies to accompany him for a short drive, and Mr. Maclean feebly explained to his wife how the manager had given them a week's holiday without forfeiture of salary, which they were to spend in the country if they pleased.

A glass of fragrant flowers, pure white, relieved by delicate sprays of green, white lilacs, white violets, white roses, stood near Miss Vincent, and her fingers wandered caressingly over the perfumed petals, while she thanked Treverton rather coldly and languidly for his invitation.

"You love flowers?" he inquired, stiffly seating himself.

"She ought," cried Mrs. Maclean, across the room, "she gets these beautiful bouquets every day, and has for more than a year past, from some mysterious admirer; I don't think he has missed a morning. Always white and so prettily arranged, of materials varying with the season. Has he not exquisite taste?"

"I confess to you that I don't know," he indifferently answered. "I suppose the florists understand those things; for myself I have little experience; I am glad, however, that they please your sister."

But Emdy's large eyes lifted to his face had caught his first guilty glance and flush at the sudden question, and interpreted its meaning. She rose quickly, coloring a little, and went thoughtfully and quietly about her preparations for the trip, not seeming to realise that she was to have a holiday—holidays had been hitherto but empty observances to her. It was not until they had driven several miles that the sweet May wind fanned a faint glow into her face, kindled a brighter lustre in her eyes. Her companion was kind and attentive, but he did not disturb the reverie or stupor into which she had fallen, till her own morbid fancies found expression in speech.

They were passing the western boundary of a pretty suburban village, a green graveyard sloping to the banks of a clear little river that hurried swiftly by. Tall trees of an old and noble growth shaded the whole, weeping willows embraced the higher monuments, the humbler mounds were gay with groups of flowers. It was a beautiful, quiet place, suggesting thoughts as sad and sweet if less elaborate than Gray's. On an arch above the great gates was the inscription;

> "'Yea,' saith the Spirit, 'for they rest from their labors.'"

Emdy pointed to it with a sigh. "See!" said she, "they rest."

"No doubt they had their trials and troubles in their day," he answered.

"But they did not burn in such consuming fires as those in which we waste away. Avarice and ambition, the poor pride in the world's applause, the ignoble fear of its forgetfulness or indifference; the sordid strife for daily bread to satisfy the body, while the mind and heart starve ungratified for what is nearly as essential to living; discontent and weariness, and rebellion, and deadly self-contempt for life so spent; surely the dwellers in that peaceful place, looking forward to such a goal as this, could have found and needed no oblivion so sweet as ours would be beneath those trees!"

"My dear Miss Vincent," said Treverton, cheerfully, "you are falling into a common mistake, and making an Arcadia of this little country place, whose inhabitants, I doubt, are no better than we. Sons of Adam, daughters of Eve, how should they be exempt from the struggle and suffering that form the common lot of humanity? Believe me, we are wrong in overvaluing the merits of their simple existence and depreciating our own richer and fuller ones, for which we should be content to pay the forfeiture. What does Mrs. Browning say?

'For my large joy of sight and touch,
Beyond what others count as such,
I am content to suffer much.'

"And I think many of our pains and penalties are self-incurred, like some of our privations."

His look, full of meaning, dwelt upon her, but Emily would not meet it.

"I am glad you quote English at least," said she sarcastically—"if you must be poetical. Mr. Morris stuns me with Virgil and Homer."

"Latin is not my forte, and English very much my mother-tongue. What! because I preserved the integrity of my aspirates, and forbore to sneer at your peculiar insitutions, you thought my nationality was the same as your own? 'But I love my ain, ain countree best,' though my tastes and ideas have grown cosmopolitan in the course of a long exile knocking about the globe, yet even in this noble New World of yours I miss her beauties and her defects. I miss her fogs and her follies, her titles and her taxes, her suicidal November, her London May. I miss the stately homes of England as I remember them, and as I wish I could describe them to you. Groves more green, trees more vast, more spreading and more shadowy; parks of rich herbage, cropped by deer with spotted fawns kneeling beside them; the woods of many centuries' growth; rich pastures, where the bonny brown cows feed knee-deep in blossoming clover; lawns of living vivid emerald, of three-piled velvet, dotted with clumps of luxuriant shrubbery on a cushion of turf such as our humid soil, our shaded skies alone could nurse and rear; trim fields kept like gardens, and tidy hedgerows bordered with short sweet grass, and gay with a hundred wild flowers. In the midst of such a landscape as this, imagine the antique mansion house, its heavy gables and tall chimney-stacks peeping from among ancestral oaks; its windows deep sunken in the stone; its battlemented roofs, its doors bound and barred with iron, old relics all of a warlike time gone by. Such a home as this was my earliest recollection—and I hope will be my last—it forms, as you may suppose, my dream of Arcadia in suitable society, but I despair of describing it to you, and here we are arrived. This will be yours, I hope, for a week at least—may it be a happy one!"

The different incidents of the day had somewhat affected Miss Vincent's usual manner of cold composure to her fellow-actor, and she thanked him with a brilliant blush, a yet more brilliant smile, as she eagerly sprang out of the carriage to join the Maclean party, who were proceeding up the gravel walk, with many expressions of surprise and delight. A kind matronly woman met them at the door, and invited them to a table spread with hospitable profusion, while she welcomed them to her pleasant home. An afternoon and evening of quiet holiday happiness followed, and Emily laid her weary head upon the homely pillow with tears of deep thankfulness and emotion.

I speak next of ten days later, the last on which the party lingered in the Eden they had found. To describe this is to describe all, except for its decisive ending.

The scene was pretty, as most rural scenes are apt to be in summer, their season of bloom and grace. The old house—every inch of its gray walls contended for by a wilderness of luxuriant creepers—rose, honeysuckle, woodbine, and virgin's bower, that climbed to the very chimneys, and forced off the warped shingles with the closeness of their tight embrace—stood back from the road in an orchard of fine old apple trees, now in blossom, whose base was green velvet turf, and gay with white and red clover. The air was further perfumed by an avenue of tall lilacs which lined the pathway, and nodded their purple clusters slowly in the sweet May wind. An old-fashioned kitchen garden, a red barn, its roof tenanted by a flock of cooing doves, and twittering martins; a towering well-sweep, swinging with a lazy croaking to and fro, a hayfield and a thick green hedge bounded their view, and filled their narrow horizon. Above all these objects, animate and inanimate, reigned a soft repose, a blissful calm, a quiet sense of rest and gladness, inexpressibly soothing to weary brains and aching nerves, that gave all care to the idle breeze, and were cheered and brightened by the warm spring sunshine. To such the rustic farmhouse became a haven of happiness, a paradise of peace.

Mr. Treverton was leaning against the sturdy brown trunk of an orchard tree, his coat powdered with the pink petals it showered down at every motion of his tall figure, and his black curls crowned by the circlet of pale blossoms among which they rested. His brows were unbent, his dark features irradiated with a genial glow, his blue eyes laughing, as he watched the frolics of Martha's petted two-year old baby, that tumbled on the turf at his feet; he seemed to breathe an atmosphere of content and happiness, as he leisurely smoked his cigar. At a little distance, Emily Vincent, in a dark French calico morning dress and deep white sunbonnet, enthroned on the grassy knoll formed by the roots of a companion tree, was regarding her infant charge with more anxiety and less satisfaction. Mrs. Maclean's temper was proverbially uncertain, no one could prophecy whether she would be delighted with her darling's improved health and spirits, or if she would scold its temporary guardian for the staining and soiling of the white dress, or the freckles already visible on the fair round arms. The young aunt was a little troubled by these reflections; she glanced wistfully at Treverton, whose hearty mirth and sympathy were encouraging the infant revel. Surely, no novice standing on the threshold of a difficult profession ever had as free and careless a mind, so easy a confidence, before! It was not like her own experience, she thought, and sighed.

Treverton's eyes, chancing to turn upon her, as was often the case with them now, met this look, and half interpreted it. It was time to speak. A week of absolute repose and rest had done much towards filling the wasted outlines of her form, and restoring the lost youth of her face—if ever Emily Vincent possessed a claim to the epithet pretty, it was now. A brief taste of happiness such as other girls of her age hold as their birthright and claim as their heritage and portion, had smoothed the lines of pain and weariness from her forehead charmed away the anxious careworn look from her beautiful eyes. Sweet peace descended upon her heart, gentle influences hovered about her steps, not for years had she known such a season of perfect and permitted idleness—always in those intervals they called recreation, and devoted to the duty of recruiting, the nominal seeking after health, there was some pressure of anxiety, the ceaseless prompting of ambition or necessity to study—care for the present, the burden of the future, the thought of the past, upon her mind, that left it never free.

Now, it was wholly unembarrassed and happy; life flowed on like a gentle river, bright, but quiet; she would have been contented thus to linger, thus to dream, for ever. The struggles, the ambitions, the poor rewards, the harassing toil of her profession, ceased to be remembered; they had slipped from heart and brain like fetters from the limbs of a prisoner, leaving indeed the rust and scar of the chains behind, but in those very tokens a sweet assurance of freedom. She woke now in the morning to hear the little birds singing above her head, gaily and joyfully—could almost have joined them in the fulness of her heart—woke early, that she might not lose a moment of the brief delightful day; watched with wonder the rosy streaks brighten in the east; the gradual awakening of nature; the light veil of vapor rising below; the gilded procession of clouds hurrying above, to join the glorious pageant of the sunrise. Restless as a spirit, she was up and away before the dew was dried, haunting the garden, the field, the wood, the unromantic precincts of the barn; gathering eggs among the hay; breathing the breath of the cows; trying in vain to coax the milk from the ruminating matrons with those statuesque hands that were the delight of her admirers; picking wet flowers, and trampling over high grass; coming into the early breakfast with her hair uncurled; her dress in damp confusion, and an appetite that shocked the dainty Martha, and would have shocked the said fastidious admirers, but with a life in her eyes, a color in her face, that met a brotherly look of interest and approbation from Mr. Treverton, who often shared the rambles, and always encouraged the appetite. Walks, rides and drives, in the same genial and gentle companionship, intervals of undisturbed rest, or free and friendly conversation, in which all professional topics were adroitly avoided, occupied the day and evening; and the young actress could hardly believe that ten such had passed since the weary night she had fainted from fatigue during the performance in R—, or that the full life of heart and mind in which she so rejoiced had lasted no longer.

Surrounded by such sweet influences, she had forgotten the heavy task to which she must soon return, and the first remembrance of it revived in the look and sigh with which she turned to her companion.

Treverton smiled as he met her wistful glance.

"This is surely Eden," said he, throwing away his half-smoked cigar, "and I have a mind to believe it also Paradise. How should I do for Adam, or the serpent?"

Miss Vincent laughed; she had learned to laugh in those ten days; the languor was gone from her eyes; the nervous quiver of pain from her lip; she looked up at him frankly, the deep cambric bonnet falling back from her sun-brightened hair.

"I dare say you would do very well, but I have no fancy for such primitive banquets as Eve's must have been, in spite of Milton's praises of her cookery. I feel more faith in Mrs. Maple's dinners, and can acquiesce in the fall, if so we get broiled chickens."

"Gourmand!" said Treverton, looking at her fond and proud satisfaction; "you are growing positively gluttonous; no wonder your cheeks are redder. I hope you will admit that my experiment is successful?"

"Only too successful," sighed Emily, giving her little niece to the nursery-maid who came to seek her. "I have learned to be idle and selfish, and I fear it will be hard to forget it. I believe my mind does not belong to the class that can receive happiness healthfully; what only elevates and cheers others enervates and unnerves mine, and unfits it for the tasks and duties to which it must return. I am like Bessie, who struggles and rebels, in her small way, against the fate that compels her to leave this pleasant spot, and is borne off contending, in the victorious arms of a stronger than herself."

"You do your mind injustice," returned Treverton; "it has been too long depressed, and cannot easily rally. You have had but a brief experience of this quiet place. A month more and you would weary of its monotonous peace and sigh for your lost excitements and enforced occupations."

"I do not think so," she replied, "and I believed that you understood my character better. The profession I follow was never my own choice; I have found in it more pain than pleasure. Were I sure of the greatest triumphs it can offer, I would say the same. What can compensate to a woman for the publicity it gives, the criticism it insures, the sacred sanctity of private life of which it robs her?"

"You wish, then, for a home?"

"I wish for it? Yes—'the desire of the moth for the star;' but I shall never have one—have never had one since I was thirteen. I envy those pretty ladylike women we meet in our drives and walks, going happily about their household affairs, and occupied in care for others. I might have been such had my poor father lived. I have done my best not to be unworthy of him, yet I know he would rather have had me like them, a quiet girl at home, than the most successful actress on the stage, and he would be right."

"You would hide your beauty and genius, and exchange with the commonplace matrons who come to the Riveredge Theatre, leaning on their husbands' arms? I thought you were fond of self-sacrifice, but hardly to this extent."

"I cannot believe that you are laughing at me, and yet I know I have neither. Surely you do not think I estimate our petty triumphs or ephemeral homage so fully? I was taught in childhood, when our minds are most apt to receive impressions, to care for other and far better things. To try to 'do my duty in that station of life to which it has pleased God to call me' is my chief care and effort now."

Mr. Treverton had drawn nearer, his countenance and manner grown more grave and serious, his very voice was changed, and sweeter when he spoke:

"Let me offer you this home and fortune."

Miss Vincent stiffened instantly.

"You misunderstand me, sir," she haughtily began, and rose, as if about to pass him.

He waved her back with a gesture that commanded silence, and she instinctively obeyed him and returned to her seat, seeing in his resolute face that the moment was come when he must be heard for good or evil. Her heart was soft with gratitude for all his kindness, but her determination was not the less stern. A married "star," plodding the dull round of her profession, like poor Martha, she would never be; her life was devoted to higher aims and objects.

"Ella—I must call you Ella—I know your real name, and I cannot endure to use that by which you are known to so many."

"I don't see that this is much better," Miss Vincent interrupted, bitterly; "I told Martha it would soon be no longer my secret if she persisted in calling me by it."

"I did not learn this from your sister," he answered, "I heard it as part of a heroic history, the story of a young girl born to wealth and refinement, but left, through the fault of others, orphaned and penniless, when little more than a child. Compelled, by the determined example and advice of an elder sister, to follow a distasteful profession, she so dignified and honored it that her stainless reputation, sustaining both, passed through the fiery ordeal of public criticism unscathed, while all the earnings her modest triumphs won were devoted to clearing her father's name from reproach, by paying the debts he left, her sister, encumbered with a family, not being able to assist in this noble undertaking."

Treverton stopped and looked earnestly at Emily. Her eyes were darkened and brightened by tears that she would not permit to fall, but her head was drooped, and her face still averted from him. Changing once more both his tone and his attitude, he went on, hurriedly:

"I have now to tell you of another person, very different from the last, a reckless roving young Englishman, who wandered to this country, after visiting many others, two years ago, with little faith in men or women, especially of your profession, of which he had seen something. At the first theatre he entered he saw the lady of whom I spoke, and being interested and attracted by her, was more than glad to gather this little history from one who had cause to know her well and deeply, a poor creditor of her deceased father, whom she had repaid. Having had the misfortune to be of good birth, in a position that exposed him to temptations, which his education and character had not fitted him to resist, this Englishman had been, like many others, a spendthrift and a vagabond, wasted his substance in riotous living, went into the army, fought more or less in India and the Crimea, sold out his commission on the return of peace, and travelled, not expensively, on the proceeds, waiting till a distant relative, who enjoyed an entailed estate, should die and put him in possession. Under these circumstances he could do little for the lady, and that he did. I think she has never lacked a white bouquet—it was his fancy to offer her only such, and that they became her; roses, camellias, daisies, there was always something in bloom—every day in those two years. This was silly, sentimental, you will say, and of no great use to her. Neither was buying a hatfull of tickets at her benefit—a common, boyish folly—for that is but another name for a manager's profits, or the securing her new engagements and better terms—for those her merits should have received in any event; but what he did do"—said Treverton, turning his blue eyes on Emily Vincent, and blushing scarlet, "and when you hear me repeat his claims to her interest, trivial as they are, of which I am ashamed, like a special pleader, you will know that the case is desperate—what he did do was to turn lawyer, at which the blood of the Baynes (for he like you he had a sort of pride in concealing his name in some associations) greatly revolted. He hunted up some Western lands in which the lady's father had sunk money twenty years before, and afterwards abandoned them as valueless, and persuaded the chief and last creditor, a regular Shylock, to take them as full payment for his claim. The lands are rising now, so that nobody is hurt. And all this, which I say again, I am ashamed to recapitulate," cried Treverton, with burning cheeks and thrilling voice, "is only to prove his interest in her, and does not indebt her to him in the least. To drop all metaphor, I am John Treverton Bayne, my uncle has died at last, and I am master of Bayne Oaks, not a large estate, but a place we might be very happy in, and I ask you, Ella Warren, to let it be your home."

"You ask me what?" said Emily, looking in his honest eyes.

"To be my wife and my love, to make my home your own and make it happy," he promptly answered, not without trepidation.

Miss Vincent had probably seen too much fictitious love-making to enjoy the real, or bad, perhaps, simulated the passion so often that she despised its usual forms. She only stretched a pretty hand to her lover, which he hastily and gratefully took.

"I trust you," she quietly said, "and I will try to thank you."

But the hand trembled and the voice shook, and no actress "well up in her part" would have deemed herself justified in displaying such unbecoming emotion as that which rained in heavy drops from her beautiful eyes, quivered on the small firm mouth, and flashed in and out with quick impulsive blushes on her pale cheeks. But she had withdrawn into the depths of the great white sunbonnet, and, unaware of the pantomime going on within, Treverton was obliged to be contented with the gracious token of approval vouchsafed him so coolly without, and expressed himself satisfied.

"You consent, then," said he, modestly and honestly exultant, "to go with me to England, and leave this life and all its associations behind. I have been a sad scamp, but I will be a better husband and try not to let you regret it; I hope the home and heart you accept may be all you deserve. Whenever you are ready we will sail, and as soon as you will permit me I will tell the manager that your holiday is but begun, and that you have left his company and are for ever 'off the stage.'"

To his surprise, she stooped and kissed his hand.

AN EXPLICIT LUNATIC.

A VISITOR to an English lunatic asylum thus describes an interview with one of its inmates:

As the doctor spoke, the man advanced towards us with an insolent, defiant look, but without a trace of insanity. When he was sufficiently close to speak, he asked me if I was in the magistracy, and I informed him I was not.

"Are you connected with Government, sir?"

"No, not in any way."

"Are you acquainted with any one that is? If you are, pray stand my friend, for I am treated here in the most infamous manner. I am no more mad, sir, than you are, and yet the doctor, for his own profit, keeps me here."

"But you know," says the doctor, "that you are a prisoner, and I have no voice in the matter. The Government sent you here, and without their orders you know perfectly well I cannot release you."

"But you know," said the man, "that if you only told the truth, and said I was not mad, I should be allowed to go at once."

"Not at all; you would only be sent to some prison. Besides, you have applied to the Commissioners, and they refuse to interfere in your behalf."

"Because they go snacks with you, I believe," said the convict.

"Well, then, this gentleman," said the doctor, "is a stranger to me, and is connected with the law, and can doubtless bring forward your case if he thinks proper."

"It would be a charity if you would, sir, for you may imagine what a terrible thing it is for a sane man to pass his life with the horrible madmen you see here."

"Tell the gentleman your own case," said the doctor, "and then he can judge for himself."

"I will tell you everything, sir," he said, "and as true as the Gospel; for I am not at all afraid of letting my case be known. I was formerly a respectable tradesman in the north of England. One day a taxgatherer called on me and said he had a claim against me for 12s. I asked him what for. He said I had been keeping a dog which I had made no return of, and for the matter of that it was perfectly true.

"'Well, then,' said he, 'you must pay the tax for it.'

"'I shall do nothing of the kind; no man ought to pay a tax for keeping a dog.'

"'Now, be reasonable,' he said, 'and pay it, for you can; if you don't I must summon you, and I do not want to do that to you or any man.'

"'Take my advice,' said I, 'and don't try it.'

"'I must,' said he, and he left me.

A few days afterwards he called with the summons, and I took up a knife and killed him."

"You did a very infamous action, then," I answered, astonished at the fellow's recital. "A short time since a man was hung for killing a broker who seized his goods for rent, and I do not see much difference between his case and yours."

"And he really deserved it," said the maniac; "but my summons was for a dog."

"No matter; you are bound to pay the tax for a dog as well as a house," I replied, totally forgetting I was reasoning with a maniac.

"Is that really your opinion?" he said, getting greatly excited.

"Certainly!"

"Very well, I shall know you whenever I see you again, and if ever I get from here I will rip you up as I did the taxgatherer."

I devoutly hoped, as I turned from him, that it would be some time before he left the asylum.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

FAT Mr. Banting, whose pamphlet on the art of reducing corpulency has been so widely circulated, is said to be a walking paradox, because he has achieved greatness by growing less.

THE lap of luxury is typified by a cat enjoying her milk.

WHAT THE LOYAL NORTH CAROLINIANS PRAY FOR.—Their Vance and our advance.

A EUROPEAN paper, describing the ascent of Nadar's balloon, said that a hundred thousand hearts were beating as they witnessed it; a hundred thousand eyes were watching the movements of the balloon! What a curious coincidence, says a critical joker, that there should have been so many one-eyed people present at once!

AN able physiologist has written that one-fifth of the human body is composed of phosphorus. Punch remarks that this most likely accounts for the number of matches made.

AN Irish savant claims originality for his country, and spells it O'Riginality.

"FAST" AND "SLOW" WRITERS.—Swift and Crabbe.

A DUTCHMAN lately attended Court in New York, to get excused from the jury-box.

"I can't understhand goot Englese," he said.

"What did he say?" asked the judge.

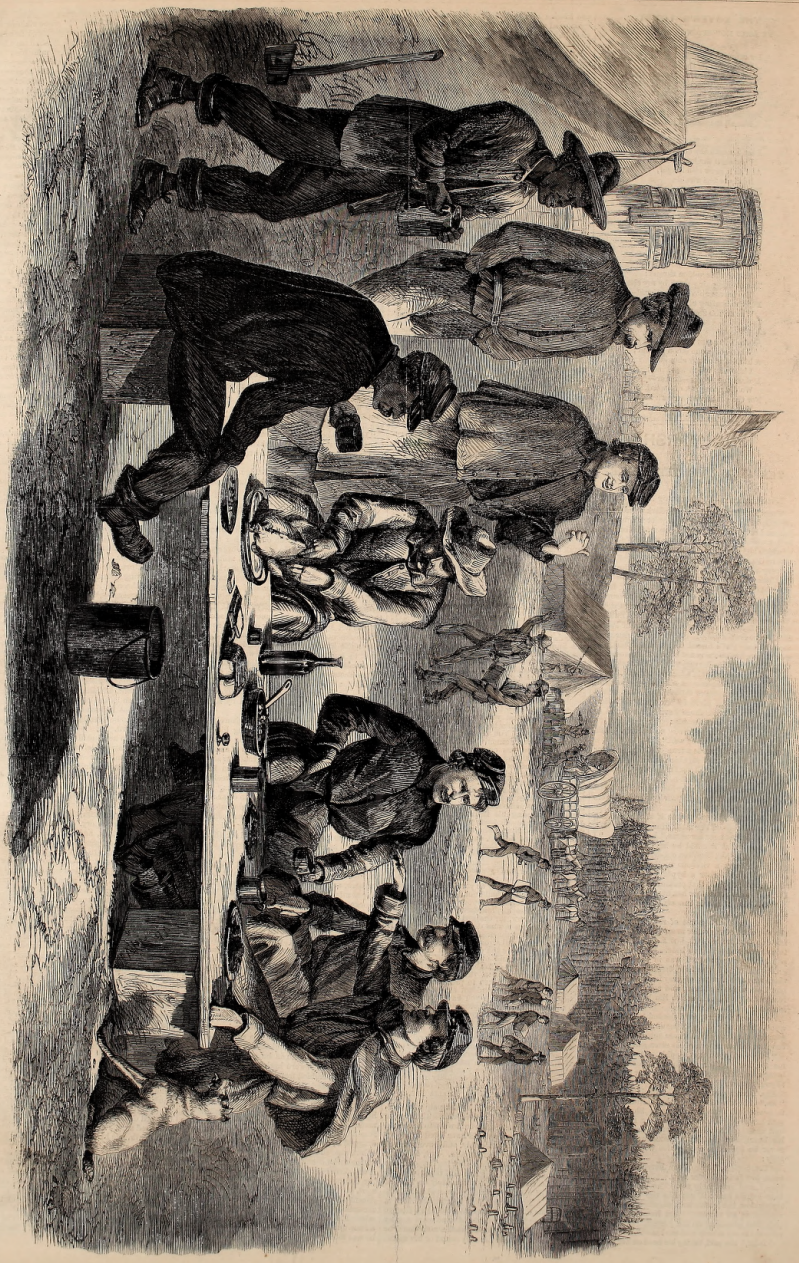
"I can't understhand goot Engleee," repeated the Dutchman.

"Take your seat," cried the judge, "that's no excuse; you need not be alarmed, as you are not likely to hear any."

A HUSBAND telegraphed to his wife: "What have you for breakfast, and how is the baby?" The answer was, "Buckwheat cakes and the measles!"

FEW people are aware how difficult it is to speak with either precision or grammar. Thus the New York Herald, on a recent occasion, announces the arrest of a woman, in the streets of Boston, and adds: "Nothing was found on her person but a letter and the photograph of a young man." Such a costume is certainly more appropriate to Paradise than to the Hub of the Universe.

SCENE AT BAKER'S BAKERY, BATTERY BARRACKS, N. Y.—PREPARING POULTRY TO BE COOKED FOR SOLDIERS' THANKSGIVING DINNER.



THE GRAND THANKSGIVING DINNER

To our Sailors and Soldiers.

It was a happy thought that has prompted this and other communities, at this Thanksgiving season, to testify, by substantial bounty, its kindly remembrance of our sailors in the navy and our soldiers in the field. The credit of originating the scheme rests, we believe, with Mr. George W. Blunt, a gentleman of sterling and tireless patriotism and public-spirited activity. It was first proposed at the Union League Club, in this city, a committee of which association then made an appeal to the public for contributions of cooked poultry and other suitable meats, as well as fruit and mince-pies, to furnish our gallant soldiers and sailors with a good Thanksgiving Dinner. That appeal has been responded to, in every direction, with the most bountiful liberality. Turkeys, geese and chickens have been sent in by thousands. Many persons and corporations have contributed money. The banks of New York have given $7,150. The contributions from private individuals largely exceed this amount. The money thus obtained has been employed, under the direction of Mr. Theodore Roosvelt, in the purchase of poultry and other food. In this manner a splendid banquet has been insured to our defenders on shipboard and in camp. Upwards of 35,000 turkeys, from this city alone, constitute a single item in their magnificent feast. We can fancy with what delight they will welcome this startling variety in diet, their customary food being salt pork and hard tack, alternating with hard tack and salt pork, now and then relieved by a little fresh beef. A large sketch, on page 169, represents a party of our soldiers at their Thanksgiving Dinner. Our Artist has happily preserved the tone of mingled sentiment and jollity that naturally characterises such an occasion. One fancies how memories of home will mingle, in every soldier's mind, with a sense of present pleasure in the gift of kind and thoughtful friends. As he sits down to his Thanksgiving Dinner he will be grateful, most of all, that he is truly remembered in our peaceful homes, in the familiar places that he loves, and to which it is possible that he may never return. Our other sketches relative to this subject illustrate the progress of the movement which has wrought such pleasant results. All the contributions of uncooked poultry have been cooked, in the best manner, by volunteer bakers. One thousand turkeys and geese were baked by the Messrs. Delmonico. A sketch on our first page represents the process of packing these cooked fowls in a cool cellar, at their famous restaurant on the corner of Broadway and Chambers street, preparatory to shipping them to their destination. The sketch immediately beneath this represents the principal receiving and distributing depot, at No. 34 Trinity place, in this city, superintended by Mr. G. W. Blunt. The scene at this place was extremely lively for several days. Contributions of all sorts were received here, and for many hours each day the street was thronged with drays, carts, express wagons, wheelbarrows and messengers with baskets, all laden with fowls and meats and other agreeable viands. On page 168 we present two sketches, showing how the turkeys were cooked. The upper one depicts a scene at Mr. S. O. Baker's bakery, at the Battery Barracks. Here all the poultry was prepared for cooking, and here it was finally packed and marked for its voyage to the sailors and soldiers. Upwards of 1,500 turkeys also were baked in this establishment. The whole work was superintended by Capt. Hicks, Commandant of the Fort, who appears in our sketch, standing nearest to the workmen. The fat gentleman next to him is Mr. S. O. Baker, the proprietor of the Bakery. The sketch immediately beneath depicts a kindred scene at the Bakery of Mr. Steele, No. 111 Cherry street. Here upwards of 2,000 turkeys were baked. Great credit is due to all who have participated in this kindly scheme. It was promptedby warm friendship for those who are bearing our flag on land and sea, and it has been executed in a spirit of genuine patriotic enterprise. With its gift the country sends a hearty greeting to the Army and the Navy, thanking the Great Master of all for the blessings it enjoys, in the peace and plenty that prevail at home and in the victory which he has vouchsafed to the victorious arms of the Republic.

SCENE AT STEELE'S BAKERY, NO. 111 CHERRY STREET, N. Y.—PROCESS OF COOKING 2,000 TURKEYS FOR SOLDIERS' THANKSGIVING DINNER.

THE SOLDIERS' THANKSGIVING DINNER IN CAMP.

THE LOVER'S TRYST.

BY LORD HOUGHTON (R. M. MILNES).

I.

I wandered by the brookside,
  I wandered by the mill;
I could not hear the brook flow,
  The noisy wheel was still;
There was no burr of grasshopper,
  No chirp of any bird,
But the beating of my own heart
  Was all the sound I heard.

II.

I sat beneath the elm tree,
  I watched the long, long shade,
And as it grew still longer,
  I did not feel afraid;
For I listened for a footfall,
  I listened for a word—
But the beating of my own heart
  Was all the sound I heard.

III.

He came not—no, he came not—
  The night came on alone;
The little stars sat one by one,
  Each on his golden throne;
The evening air passed by my cheek,
  The leaves above were stirred—
But the beating of my own heart
  Was all the sound I heard.

IV.

Fast silent tears were flowing,
  When some one stood behind;
A hand was on my shoulder,
  I knew its touch was kind;
It drew me nearer—nearer—
  We did not speak one word,
For the beating of our own hearts
  Was all the sound we heard.

NINA MARSH;

OR,

THE SECRET OF THE MANOR.

CHAPTER XXIX.—A CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

When Mrs. Trent had seen the dark prison gates close upon Nina she went to a quiet inn near the jail, and ordered pen, ink and paper to be brought to her whilst they were preparing the refreshment of which she stood sadly in need. Her first letter was to Captain Marsh, giving full details of their journey and Nina's state of feeling all through. She believed it would comfort Cyril to know that she had displayed the utmost calmness and fortitude ever since parting from him. How sorely she wept, in her weakness, when the huge doorway of the prison was barred behind her, shutting her away from the outer world and all she loved, Mrs. Trent did not know. She might have guessed that the poor girl's forced composure would give way at last, but she was not bound to express this thought to Captain Marsh, whom she could picture holding the letter in a tremulous hand, whilst Mrs. Marsh, her eager eyes blinded by tears, unable to root the name of this child who has sinned from the warmest place in her mother's heart, creeps near to read those hurried lines, and to drink in Cyril's earnest words:

"Aunt, you must not sorrow so bitterly. Nina is innocent, and all will be well."

Mrs. Trent's picture is a true one, for her letter brings a pale gleam of sunshine into the desolate household. Mrs. Marsh ventures to approach her husband to tell him the last news.

"Nina was quite calm when Mrs. Trent left her," she says, letting her poor quivering fingers fall pleadingly on his.

Mr. Marsh turns quickly, as if she had stung him, and shakes off her meek grasp.

"Don't let me hear her name," he mutters. "I never knew that it could be held to any man's shame that he had begotten children on the earth, and given them a virtuous mother, until I was called upon to harbor a hypocrite and father a murderess. Sophia, that creature is dead to me; I will not even remember her name."

"Oh, John, if she is innocent! and, any way, she is our own!"

"Is not that the worst of my sorrow? Were she the child of any other man, I should pity him from the bottom of heart, but I should not have this shame and agony to bear. Look at me, Sophia! Three days ago I was in the prime of a green old age; I was hale, hearty, upright, and there was not a seam of gray in my hair. And now I am white, and bent, and aged, and the last remnant of youth and active life has fled before her sins."

He paused a minute, and seemed to choke down a sob. Presently he spoke again, in the tone and manner of a strong man whose spirit is broken—a desolate Samson shorn of his strength.

"I have only you now, Sophia. Do not desert me for her! After all, these sufferings must bring us closer together. Have I ever been harsh to you, my love?"

Mrs. Marsh murmured a stifled but earnest "No." She was more pained by this humble mood than she had been by his anger. She saw, even with her little penetration, that the recent blow had shattered Mr. Marsh's pride, had wounded his heart, and that from henceforth he would never be the same again. He went on mournfully:

"Yes, Sophia, I have been harsh to you sometime, but it is all over now. You are stronger than I, and must help me. The blow was more than I could bear; it was like the terrible blast laying low the stout tree which had hitherto mocked at all storms. I am humbled now, Sophia, and grovelling on the ground. Do not forsake me in my misery and weakness."

"John," she said, taking his head on her bosom, and kissing him passionately on brow and lips, "you need not fear—I will be true and staunch to you; but can I forget that God made me a mother?"

"You were a wife first," said Mr. Marsh, with something of his past sternness.

"Yes," said the poor woman, all her pent-up feelings bursting forth, "I might have saved her all this sorrow, perhaps, if I had now and then put you a little aside in order to bring my children nearer. She once reproached me that I belonged so entirely to you, and it was true. I have been nothing but a wife, John; I forsook them for you, and now I am too old to learn the novel lesson of forsaking you for them. Oh, John, I am almost afraid that we have not done rightly by our girls."

Her manner was brave and outspoken for the first time since she became a wife. The anxious repression of years seemed to be forgotten now in her self-reproach, her searching pain, lest she had not been a good mother to the poor lamb which had gone astray. Oh if she could but feel her conscience quiet in this time of terrible trial! —if she could only be certain that she had never carried her obedience to her husband so far that she had sacrificed her children to him! The cry she had once heard pass Nina's lips—a cry which merely prefaced the passionate accusation: "You belong to papa, and not to me!"—rang in Mrs. Marsh's ears, and seemed to echo through her heart, stinging her with its painful repetition. For the first time in her life she doubted herself, she doubted her husband, she doubted everything and everybody but God, and never had He appeared such a sure anchor as in this hour of darkness and pain.

It was so strange to have him—the great strong man, her husband—dependent on her cares, expecting so much from her; but Mrs. Marsh was too troubled to realise the responsibility devolving so tardily on her, and, in her self absorption, sank without a scruple or a qualm into her place of trust.

And so we may leave them for awhile, and return to Mrs. Trent.

When she had written that comforting letter to Captain Marsh, she stirred her ink to blacken it, she mended her quill with a face of resolution and stern pride, which made her look a haughty Medea brooding over her wrongs and coming vengeance; then she began to trace her hurried, ebon words:

"Colonel St. George—I never thought to put your name upon paper again, or to have any compassion to spare for others—I who have suffered through every nerve and fibre of my being, and drunk with burning disgust the cup of ignominy and shame. Not that I write because I have pardoned you, and am sufficiently credulous to believe that you would be the easier for my forgiveness. No; you know that my creed is never to injure others, and never to forgive any one who has injured me. And you stabbed me in a vital part—you uncovered my heart and planted your dagger deep, laughing when the red blood poured out, and my white lips gnawed the passionate cries which pressed between them. God knows I had bitter days and dark nights in those times of agony and humiliation which you bought for me. I thankfully lost sight of you for a while, but, like a serpent who traces his path in venom, I came on your track again, and learnt from the delirium of a poor despairing girl that you had not been idle the years since we had met. Then we came face to face again, and, as a lordly recognition of my stupidity and harmlessness, you graciously confided to me the fact that Nina Marsh was really your wife. Not that you meant to acknowledge her, or even allow her the comfort of feeling herself free from sin. You were too learned in the art of torturing your victims to give that poor child one consolation you could deny. She suffered most horrible shame and misery, and in the brain fever brought on by grief I heard her secrets. She had married you unknown to her parents, and became the mother of a child. She raved about this child, morning, noon and night, until even Mr. Marsh, who often heard her, began almost to believe there was some truth in her mania. I succeeded in quieting his fears, but I never could destroy the vague distrust with which he afterwards regarded Nina. She would declare she had murdered it, and ask us, shuddering, if we could not hear it scream. 'Can't you see it floating on the water?' she would sometimes say, in an anxious, piercing tone of inquiry, and then she would strain her wild eyes seaward, and burst into racking sobs. Her anguish must have moved even you, cold and stony as your heart has always been. I believed—I could not help it—that, when you so cruelly repudiated your wife, she, in her madness and despair, murdered her child. I do not think this now, for the girl tells me that she could have sworn it was dead when she cast it into the sea. But the chain of circumstantial evidence is so clear and strong that I fear she cannot escape, especially as she was seen in the very act of throwing her child over the cliff, and Dame Oldum will take her oath that it was alive at the time. I have just seen the poor unfortunate creature, your wife, taken to prison, and I write at once to bid you hurry down and stand by her in her trials, all of which you have caused. You will come, otherwise I will proclaim you before the world as a bigamist and forger. My own miserable secret shall be exposed, great as will be the agony of opening an unhealed wound to the bleak air. You shall be known in your true character. Mind, I never swerve from my word. If by the day after to-morrow you are not at Durston, I will take care that Nina Marsh's wrongs and mine are amply avenged. And now do as you like; my duty is performed. All future responsibility rests with you, and you must do my bidding, or take the consequences. Amelia Trent."

It is hard to express with what pain and difficulty this letter had been written. There were some things Mrs. Trent would wish to have said she had not said; she would have liked to represent Nina's case more forcibly, and have referred to his feelings as well as his fear. But, although she realised the feebleness of her appeal, she could not mend it. A great deal must be left to Colonel St. George, and unfortunately he was not the sort of man who could be trusted to his own impulses. Mrs. Trent felt thoroughly sick at heart. She did not doubt that Colonel St. George would come; but when she reflected what a poor consolation the presence of such a man would be to a wife who loathed the very sound of his name, she almost doubted if she had done well to call him to Nina's side.

"Ah, if he had only been Captain Marsh!" was her involuntary thought as she dropped the two letters together into the box, and went back to the inn.

Colonel St. George was very cheerful this morning. He looked wonderfully young and fresh, and his dressing-gown would have satified the most fastidious member of the great "dandiacal body." It was pleasant to him to feel that without any extra care he was still so presentable of a morning, a time most trying to those who have passed the bloom of youth. He sat breaking an egg, with a smile playing under his ebon moustache that had evidently no connection with the edible under his spoon. He was still absorbed in this occupation when his valet entered, bearing two letters and the Times on a silver salver, Colonel St. George motioned him to deposit them on a little table close by, and went on with his breakfast. He had no fear, or even the vaguest presentiment, that the post would bring him ill news; but it was a principle with him never to open anything, down to a trade circular, until he fortified himself against all contingencies by a substantial meal. But warmed and strengthened internally by a liberal dose of rich Mocha, Colonel St. George felt in a condition to defy fate and battle with his bills. He had finished his eggs and ham, and filled up a vacant corner with some foreign preserve to which he was partial, and then he stretched out his hand languidly, and drew both the letters near his plate. His breath quickened, his eyes clouded, when he read the address of one, and quickly his hand broke the seal and tore the paper out of the envelope. When he had read it deliberately from beginning to end, he went to the door and called his valet.

"Jenkyns," he said, lowering his voice, "I know you are always willing and ready. If you will have all my things and yours packed, in preparation for a long journey, in two hours, I will give you five pounds."

"It shall be done, sir," answered Jenkyns, whose admirable training enabled him to receive this astonishing order without even a movement of surprise.

"I must leave London Bridge by the one o'clock train, in order to catch the Dover boat, which goes at half-past four."

"Very well, sir; I will be ready."

Meanwhile Colonel St. George collected all his papers, summoned the landlady, paid her a month's rent, in lieu of a month's notice, and shook the dust of his feet outside her door one hour from that time. He reached Dover without either accident or incident. He had still half an hour to spare before the boat would start, and, as he was one of those unhappy people who have a constitutional objection to the smell of a steamer, he put off going on board until the last minute, and strayed up and down the quay, waiting until the twin funnels should display some signs of active life. He was not so philosophically disposed as usual, for he resented the necessity of leaving London, where the life suited him beyond any he could hope to lead elsewhere. He was tapping the pavement with his cane, keeping up an unconscious accompaniment to his moody thoughts, when some one in passing him brushed his arm. Colonel St. George looked up quickly, and was startled to find himself confronted by Lord Gillingham.

"Well," said the earl, taking a leisurely survey of his habiliments, and then fixing his bleared eyes full on the other's face, "going on a trip to the Continent? You're such a deuce of an economical fellow, that I'll bet it's an excursion affair—so much there and back, and a week in Paris for sight-seeing. If it is more than a week, you'd better not go, in case I should want you. There's that little affair of the certificate to clear up; and I hear that Mrs. St. George—that delicate damsel from the Beechwood preserves—has been carried off to prison for poaching—hang it! I mean murder; so that you may be asked for there too. You see it wouldn't do, really, for you to be out of the way long."

Colonel St. George struggled with his rage and pain for a minute, then he pushed past Lord Gillingham, and strode towards the boat. The earl limped after him as fast as he could. When St. George reached the pier they were already removing the steps from the deck of the Victoria, and laying them on the quay. But seeing his predicament, the captain called out to him to cross a narrow plank, which was stretched from the paddle-box to the pavement, and had just been used by one of the land porters leaving the boat. Eagerly, but firmly, Colonel St. George placed his foot on the fatal bridge, and was nearly across when he heard a cry behind him:

"Stop him—stop him! he is flying from justice!"

He turned back to look at his pursuer, and at this moment the boat gave a sudden lurch and he lost his balance and fell into the sea. The green waters opened eagerly and sucked him in, closing remorselessly over him as he sank, never to rise again. The tides were high and strong, and the waves still trembled from the last night's storm. It was supposed that the unfortunate man was drawn under the bottom of the boat by the motion of the paddle-wheels, and that subsequently his body drifted out to sea. Every effort was made to save him, but, as we have said, he never rose to the surface again; and although they dragged the water as far as they could, no trace of him was found. A week later a body was thrown on the rocks, some miles above the town, but as it was denuded of all clothing, and the face terribly decomposed, Captain Marsh, who was on the spot, and had been most indefatigable to procure decent burial for his cousin's husband, could barely recognise the handsome, hard-hearted, worldly-minded Maurice St. George. They buried him in a little quiet cemetery close by the village where he was found, with a stone at his head, and the solemn moan of the sea sweeping his grave. How little record he left, save the name staining the marble of his tomb, may be gathered from the fact that not even those whose life had once been nearly connected with his could weep for him. And so it is that the wicked die and are forgotten, whilst the good and great live in the memory of their fellow-men from generation to generation.

When Captain Marsh had seen the last sad office performed over Maurice St. George, he returned to Beechwood, and from there wrote to Mrs. St. George, telling her as gently and gradually as he could of her son's death. But to do Mrs. St. George justice, she received the tidings with great stoicism. When tender-hearted Miss Mervyn came all the way from her place in Westmoreland to console the motherless widow she found her mentally convalescent, and already inquiring when it would be decorous for her to recommence her evening allowance at whist; and once, when Miss Mervyn had spent the whole afternoon crying silently over the unhappy destiny of the two young creatures whom she, in her ill-regulated sympathies, had helped to ruin, she looked up suddenly to find Mrs. St. George playing patience with great satisfaction. So that, finding her post of comforter a complete sinecure, Miss Mervyn retreated to her own home, where she nursed her sorrow in solitude, fully persuaded that the utmost she could do for Nina now was to spend a certain number of hours bewailing her miserable fate.

It was about a fortnight after Nina's incarceration, when her trial was expected to come off in a few days, that Captain and Mrs. Marsh, returning from a visit to her in prison, were met, as they neared home, by the clergyman of the parish. Cyril stopped the horses, as he saw by Mr. Douglas's manner that he wished to speak to them, and on hearing that he had important news to communicate, he ordered the groom to take the carriage home, whilst he and Mrs. Marsh followed on foot. When the man was out of sight, Mr. Douglas told them the good tidings he was on his way to Beechwood to communicate.

"I have just come from Dame Oldum's," he said. "Of course you have heard of her accident?"

"No," answered Cyril and Mrs. Marsh simultaneously.

"True, you were already gone when it occurred. But about twelve o'clock this morning, leaning over the hill to note something that interested her in the village below, she was seized with sudden giddiness and fell over. Her fall was broken, when half-way down, by an elm-tree, to which she clung frantically, until perceived by Rose Woodman, who sent some men to her aid. They succeeded in rescuing her, but she was badly hurt, one leg being fractured, an arm broken, and some internal injury having been sustained besides. When her limbs had been set, and everything done for her that was necessary, to the surprise of all present she expressed a strong desire to see me. On my arrival she informed me that she had a confession to make, which she would wish heard by two witnesses, and that I might write it down if I liked and get them to sign it. I called in the doctor and her son, and took down her deposition, which I now hand to you, Captain Marsh, to be used for your cousin's benefit. Madam," he added, turning to Mrs. Marsh with real feeling, "your daughter is innocent, and she will return to you again."

Mrs. Marsh looked up at him with wistful eyes. She could not believe these tidings; they were too blessed to be credible. She sent a glance of appeal at Cyril.

"Read it to her," said Mr. Douglas, gently, as he walked away and left them alone.

Dame Oldum, believing herself at the point of death, had made a full confession of her sins. She swore that Nina's child had been quite dead when she sepulchred it in the sea. She had seen the young mother sit down on the crag, open her shawl and gaze lovingly into the face of her child, then suddenly scream, lift it aloft and almost shake it to hear it cry. But no; the little one was cold and stark, and its wide-open eyes, distended and glassy, gazed full into the girl-mother's face, moving her to strange horror and fear. Dame Oldum saw it all—saw how the poor creature still strained the little one close to her bosom, when it could no longer profit by the warmth or gather any nourishment from her; and then, when all hope was gone—when her anxious ear, bent close to the little heart, found it so still—she rose wearily, and came with her lifeless burden to cast into the sea. The dame was close to her now, and could see the gray infant face and the look of sweet dead peace on the tiny features; and she noted the passionate grief of the mother, parting, amidst tears and kisses, from her child, and trusting it to the deep ocean for a grave. The dame could remember the prayer which formed her simple service over the dead, and the sobs which shook her frame as she turned away. Her false accusation against Nina was more shortly explained, and must be too fully understood by our readers to need repeating. But she made the earnest avowal that she had been bribed to her present cruel, false charge against the poor girl by Lord Gillingham, who had offered her a thousand pounds to come forward as a witness and accuse Nina. She had consented with sufficient willingness, perhaps, and was to have left for Durston some days before, in order to be ready for the trial, but had been detained at Beechwood by Lord Gillingham's tardiness in forwarding the promised sum. And now, knowing herself to be near death, she had been afraid to approach the last struggle with such a terrible lie on her conscience, and had sent for Mr. Douglas in order that she might right Nina and taste some peace. She hoped that she might be pardoned all her misdeeds, and, in full repentance, she flung herself on the mercy of God.

Cyril's heart was so full of deep, solemn thankfulness as he read that he hardly noticed how weak and spent Mrs. Marsh appeared. The great and sudden joy was too much for her. She smiled feebly at Cyril, as if in depreciation of her pallor, and said, in a low, moving voice:

"I can't help being faint, Cyril, but I am very happy. God be praised for his boundless goodness to me and mine!"

THANKSGIVING.

NOVEMBER 24, 1864.

I.

Hushed be the battle-roar, to-day,
By riflepit and parapet:
Ring out a joyful roundelay,
Ye silver bells, for music set!
To-day no whistling bolts shall fly,
No cannon-voice the welkin shake;
But orisons upon the sky
In myriad strains of joy shall break.

For, on the land, and on the sea,
O! this a day of grace shall be,
O! gloria in excelsis Deo!
Praise the Lord!

II.

A sound of joy goes whispering,
To-day, the army tents among;
And through the ship-cords it will sing,
A birdlike note of tender song.
And lightly every soldier lad,
And lightly every sailor boy,
Responsive to the home-song glad,
Will lift his grateful heart with joy.

For, on the land, and on the sea,
O! this a day of grace shall be,
O! gloria in excelsis Deo!
Praise the Lord!

MISS HULDAH'S THANKSGIVING.

BY HORATIO ALGER, Jr.

Thanksgiving Day dawned clear and cold. There was no snow upon the ground, but the earth was frozen stiff and the road was rough with little ridges. A brisk November wind was blowing outside, which lent additional cheer to the glowing fires within.

Huldah Greene stepped briskly about the large old-fashioned room, which served at once as kitchen and dining-room. A tall woman, with energy and decision stamped plainly enough on a countenance which had never had any pretensions to beauty. There had been two sisters, Huldah and Susan; the latter had married, and now lived in a town ten miles away, surrounded by a family of children; Huldah had remained unappropriated. Perhaps she had too much else to think of. For ten years she had served as housekeeper in a large country tavern, where she developed into a notable housekeeper, and became famed through all the country round about for the excellence of her puddings and pies and the superiority of her dinners. But this was a wearing life, and told even upon the iron frame of Miss Huldah. So, when the death of an aunt placed her in possession of a comfortable property, she returned to the old homestead, where she kept house by herself.

To-day she was not to be alone. She had invited her sister's family to celebrate Thanksgiving with her. She was determined to receive them in a style which should do credit to her housekeeping, and to this end had for a day or two been engaged in making elaborate preparations for the Thanksgiving feast. This result was a supply of dainties which would have sufficed for three times the number she expected.

"You won't catch Huldah Greene stinting anybody," she said to herself. "The children shall have all they can eat, and if it does make 'em a little grain uncomfortable, why it's only once a-year."

Thanksgiving morning had come, the best room had been swept and dusted, the blinds had been thrown open, and the unwonted sunshine fell on the hard flat sofa and the straightbacked chairs ranged like grenadiers against the sides of the apartment. But the kitchen was the more cheerful place of the two. Visible through the half-open closet-door was a long row of pies—apple, mince and pumpkin—rich, and flaky, and appetizing. The turkey was roasting in the tin kitchen before the fireplace, under the vigilant care of Miss Huldah, who had already arrayed herself in a high-necked dress of black bombazine, which had served her for best longer than I can remember.

So the morning wore away. Eleven o'clock came and still Miss Huldah's company had not arrived. As they lived but ten miles off this was somewhat surprising.

"I expect it takes a sight of time to get such a parcel of children washed and dressed and ready to set out," said Miss Huldah to herself, a little uneasily. "I'm glad I aint troubled with a family. Still, I should think sister Susan might have got here by this time; at any rate, I might as well be setting the table, so I can be at leisure when she comes."

Half an hour passed, the old kitchen clock pointed to half-past eleven, the table was set, and the turkey almost done. Miss Huldah went to the door and looked up the road anxiously.

In the distance she detected the rumbling sound of wheels, though the wagon was concealed behind a turn of the road.

"I guess that's Susan," she said, with an air of relief.

But Miss Huldah was doomed to disappointment. It proved to be a neighbor riding home from the village. He slackened his horse's speed as he approached the farmhouse, and fumbling in his coat-pocket, said:

"I've got a letter for you somewhere, Miss Huldah. I was down to the village this morning, and the postmaster give it to me. I expect, from the postmark, it's from your sister."

"From sister Susan!" ejaculated Miss Huldah, in dismay. "Then she can't be coming. I hope she aint going to disappoint me after all."

She tore open the letter hastily, and found that it was indeed as she had feared. Unforeseen circumstances would oblige her sister to remain at home. The letter, which had been written two days previous, contained an invitation to Miss Huldah to spend the day with her sister. Of course it was now too late.

"I'd ought to have got this letter yesterday," she said in a tone of disappointment, as she went back into the house. "It would have saved my cooking up such a stock of things, with nobody to eat 'em."

There stood the table spread for eight. The turkey was nearly done to a turn. Already it was diffusing a delicious odor about the apartment. There was a large plumpudding, and the closet was full of pies.

"Well," sighed Miss Huldah, "it's a shame that there should be nobody to eat all these good things. I shall feel like a fool sitting down to this big table alone. If anybody should come I really believe that they'd think I was gone crazy. I declare, I feel so disappointed, that I don't believe I could worry down a mite."

All at once Miss Huldah was indebted to her good angel for a suggestion, which illuminated her face with new cheerfulness. Perhaps she might find guests after all. She remembered how, when a certain man sent out invitations to a feast and they that were bidden did not come, he went out into the highways and byeways and gathered in the poor and the outcasts, and made them welcome to the feast which he had prepared.

"I declare," said Miss Huldah to herself, "I don't believe Mrs. Nelson is able to get a Thanksgiving dinner for her children. Why can't I invite them here? I've got plenty if there were twice as many of them. I'll do it!" she concluded energetically.

With resolute Miss Huldah, to resolve was to act. She put on her cloak and hood, and calling the cat out of doors lest the temptations by which she was surrounded should prove too great for her to resist, bent her steps towards a small unpainted house—it was little more than a shanty—where Mrs. Nelson and her six children found an humble shelter.

We will precede her.

Mrs. Nelson, herself a worthy woman, had had the misfortune to marry a drunken husband, whose habits had increased upon him until one morning he was found frozen stiff in a snowdrift, where he had fallen in a state of intoxication on his way home from the tavern. How she had since managed to live she herself scarcely knew. Her children were too young to afford her much assistance. Notwithstanding the occasional help she received from the neighbors there was many a day when her children, after eating all she was able to provide for them, were obliged to rise from the table hungry. It will be easily seen that it was quite beyond her power to celebrate Thanksgiving day with the bountiful dinner which is usually associated with it.

"What are we going to have for dinner, mother?" asked Jimmy, the oldest boy.

"There isn't anything in the house but a little salt pork and some potatoes," said Mrs. Nelson, sadly.

"Ain't it Thanksgiving Day, mother?" asked Fanny, who was nine years old.

"Yes, my child," said her mother with a sigh.

"I saw such a jolly row of pies at Miss Greene's," said Jimmy, "this morning when I went in there. Didn't they smell good, though? Just baked, I guess. It's so long since I've eaten a piece of pie that I don't know as I remember how it tastes."

"Why don't you make pies, mother?" asked little Fred, who was too young to understand fully the hard lessons which poverty is not slow in teaching.

"I wish I could, my child," said Mrs. Nelson. "But lard is so expensive. It seems to me as if everything was expensive now. We shall be lucky if we can get enough of the plainest food to eat."

"Wouldn't it be jolly if we could have a roast turkey, mother?" asked Jimmy, who, poor fellow, could not help still thinking about what there seemed so little chance of his tasting. Did you ever have any for Thanksgiving?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Nelson, "we always used to have them at father's. That was before I was married. Afterwards, too, before your poor father got into a bad way we had a regular Thanksgiving dinner."

"Well," said Jimmy, "I should like to try it once, just to see how it seems."

"So should I," chimed in Fanny.

Meanwhile Mrs. Nelson had spread her table, placing thereon a few potatoes and some fried pork.

"You may come up to the table, children," she said. "Dinner's ready."

They were about to commence their frugal repast, when a loud knock was heard at the door.

"I wonder who it can be," thought the widow, as she went to the door.

"Won't you come in, Miss Huldah?" she asked in a tone of surprise.

"No, I can't stop a minute," answered her visitor, her keen eyes taking in at a glance the frugal dinner-table visible through the half-open door. I only came on an errand. Have you had dinner?"

Mrs. Nelson blushed, though, poor woman, she had little cause to do so. Her poverty was no fault of hers.

"I see you haven't," said Miss Huldah without waiting for a reply. "I am glad of it, for I want you to dine with me."

"Dine with you?"

"Yes. I expected sister Susan and her young folks, but I've just got a letter saying they can't come, and I don't feel like eating alone. So I should be obliged to you if you'd come over and keep me company."

Jimmy's eyes sparkled, for it was he that had seen the long row of pies which made a part of Miss Huldah's Thanksgiving preparations. There was a glad light, too, in the faces of his brothers and sisters as they heard the invitation.

"I'm very much obliged to you," said the widow, gratefully. "It'll be a real treat to the children. But I'm afraid they don't look fit to be seen in your house."

"Never mind, bring them over just as they are. The dinner's all ready to take up, and it won't wait. So, children, put on your things and come right along."

Ten minutes afterwards the children, half abashed, entered Miss Huldah's comfortable house. An ample table, covered with a snow-white cloth, soon groaned beneath a goodly weight of generous cheer.

"Now, every one of you, get a chair and sit right up to the table," said Miss Huldah, cheerfully. "Mrs. Nelson, you must sit opposite me and help take care of those little ones. I ain't used to looking out for so many. Now, Jimmy, pass your plate, and we'll see what we can do for you."

It is needless to tell how these poor children, unused to plenty, enjoyed Miss Huldah's dinner, nor how much brighter the world seemed to the poor widow who, with thankful heart, beheld her children cheered with a plentiful meal. Miss Huldah was in her element, and seemed bent on filling her little guests to suffocation. But at last the dinner was over. Then the dining-table was cleared away, and the children had many a merry game in the great kitchen. They were to stay to supper, so Miss Huldah insisted, though, sooth to say, they did not need much urging. When at length they were ready to go home, a large basket was packed full, which Jimmy and Fred carried between them.

"I declare," said Miss Huldah to herself, as she sat before the crackling logs in the evening, "I believe I've enjoyed this Thanksgiving better than any I've ever passed. On the whole I'm glad Susan didn't come."

The reader will be glad to learn that this was not the last time that Miss Huldah entertained her poor neighbors, and that a week rarely passed during which a basket filled with specimens of her excellent cookery did not find its way to the humble home of the Nelsons. To them that was indeed a day of Thanksgiving, which opened the heart of Miss Huldah to their necessities.

APART.

BY J. J. PIATT.

At sea are tossing ships;
On shore are dreaming shells,
And the waiting hearts and the loving lips,
Blossoms and bridal-bells.

At sea are sails agleam;
On shore are longing eyes,
And the far horizon's haunting dream
Of ships that sail the skies.

At sea are masts that rise
Like spectres from the deep;
On shore are the ghosts of drowning cries,
That cross the waves of sleep.

At sea are wrecks a-strand;
On shore are shells that moan,
Old anchors buried in barren sand,
Sea mist and dreams alone.

TOWN GOSSIP.

The sensation of the week—Gen. Butler—is gone, leaving behind him a speech of wonderful sagacity and power, and general orders, courteously thanking all those who aided and assisted him in drawing the cordon of defence around New York while she was passing through what many suppose the dangerous ordeal of the election. That she has been so used while all other parts of the country have been left to themselves is a matter at which New York has no right to growl. She lost her character for peace and quietness a year ago last July, and there need be no complaint now if a suspicion attaches even though without just grounds.

And now that he is gone it will not be uninteresting to New Yorkers, as well as all the rest of mankind, to just narrate how the matter was arranged, so that if naughty Gotham had become unruly she was to be punished.

Gen. Butler received an order on the 3d of this month directing him to report to Gen. Dix and take command of such troops as would be placed at his disposal. Within two days a full corps of over 8,000 men was transferred from the army of the James, with horse, foot and dragoons to match, to this city or its immediate neighborhood. There was no sign, no straggling soldiers upon our streets, no tramp of armed men in our midst, but quietly these thousands were placed upon Staten Island, Fort Hamilton, or such other places as were chosen to make them of easy distance from the city. The next step was for the commanding General to call about him such officers for temporary service within the bounds of the city as he could depend on. An order calling upon all such as were upon furloughs or unassigned brought together the material, and from them was selected such as were wanted for secret and special duty. Councils were held, a system of correspondence by telegraph and watchfulness was organised, and every part of the city districted and placed under charge of a commissioned officer, who was to act in concert with the police and report direct to Gen. Butler by telegraph.

With all this it was necessary that no suspicion should go forth that New York was surrounded by soldiers, to give the disaffected a chance to cry out against a fancied interference with the ballot box, and consequently, though the military power was everywhere, not an armed man was to be seen or an officer in uniform. Eight thousand men were ready at a moment's notice, with horses saddled and guns limbered, to swarm through our streets, and crush with one bloody blow any attempt at a repetition of the mob violence that disgraced us last year: and yet no sign was seen.

Until Friday last they maintained their positions, and then, like shadows, back they flitted to the James, leaving behind them only the suspicion of their visit, and the reality of a quiet city, and thus ended the act of the Government in administering an ounce of prevention.

With the exit of Gen. Butler, New York will be looking anxiously about for her next sensation in the way of man-worship, and we presume the object will be Alexandre Dumas, who will, within a few weeks, be with us: it may be he is even now on his way. He will come among us in his usual dramatic style, and it is already announced that he will make his advent with two translators and a private secretary, and honor us by writing a book, which will be published at the same time in Paris, London and New York. Dumas is about 60, and though a full mulatto, is declared an exceedingly handsome man. He is recklessly prodigal, making money by thousands with a stroke of his pen, and spending it with fearful extravagance. He is unmarried, and speaks no English, but is a universal lover of the fairer sex, and a citizen of the world in the broadest acceptation. There can be no question but Dumas is to be our next man sensation.

First ice! The announcement is one that will send a thrill of pleasure through thousands of hearts, and conjure up visions of moonlight, music, love and skating. Year after year the passion has grown stronger upon the people, and now not to know some skating is almost to argue oneself unknown. Within a few weeks, perhaps a few days, all New York will be giving way to the frenzy of the skating carnival. The opera will be voted a bore and theatres suffer, while Central Park, the 5th Avenue pond, and every sheet of frozen water within the bills of mortality will be the reigning toast, skates will be trumps, and no man, woman or child will be considered worth a passing notice unless they are good skaters. Let us pray for a rapid rising of the ball!

Among the very foolish things growing out of this election, and out of every election, is the practice of making absurd bets, the loser pledging himself to trundle a barrel of apples, or something else, to some given point, to sweep the street, to saw a load of wood, or to do something equally out of his daily avocation. As long as these stupid things are done in private, and the public are not called on by advertisement to witness men make fools of themselves, it is nobody's business but the actor's; but when, by placard and newspaper notice, all the world is called on to assist the long-eared betters, we think it is full time they were all served as one of the gentry was served last week, on his attempting to sweep Essex street, amid the hoots and yells of a mob of idlers, who fairly blocked the street and disturbed the peace of the neighborhood. The man had scarce began when a tap was administered to his shoulder, and he was politely informed that he was wanted, and between two policemen marched to the police-court, where he was put under bonds to keep the peace and cease to obstruct the street—a just punishment for acting like a fool.

While upon the subject of fools, we are reminded of those two who went out some five months ago in a little cockboat, which they called the Vision, to cross the Atlantic, and who have undoubtedly paid the forfeit with their lives, as the Vision has not been heard of since she sailed, and the two men and a dog—we sympathise with the dog—are no doubt long since slumbering at the bottom of the sea. In any country but this these two insane men, thirsting after a little unhealthy notoriety, would have been prevented sacrificing their lives and that of an innocent dog; but we are always too busy to attend to so small an affair as a human life or two.

As a bit of gossip from over the water, we chronicle the marriage of a celebrated New York belle and beauty, Miss Mary Lee, at Paris, on the 26th of Oct., to the Prince of Schleswig-Holstein, a wealthy and accomplished man, though rather in the sere of life, being 65, while the bride is not yet fairly out of the twenties. The prince, being of royal blood, could only contract a morganatic marriage, and, consequently, dropping his title as Prince, he married as the Duke de Noer, to which rank he is entitled by virtue of his Austrian estates, and under which he could marry Miss Lee in the regular way. Apropos of this marriage, it reminds us that New York is most excellently represented in the titled families of Europe, our belles seeming to have peculiar powers of attraction for a coronet, and an amiability to adapt their republican tastes to aristocratic union.

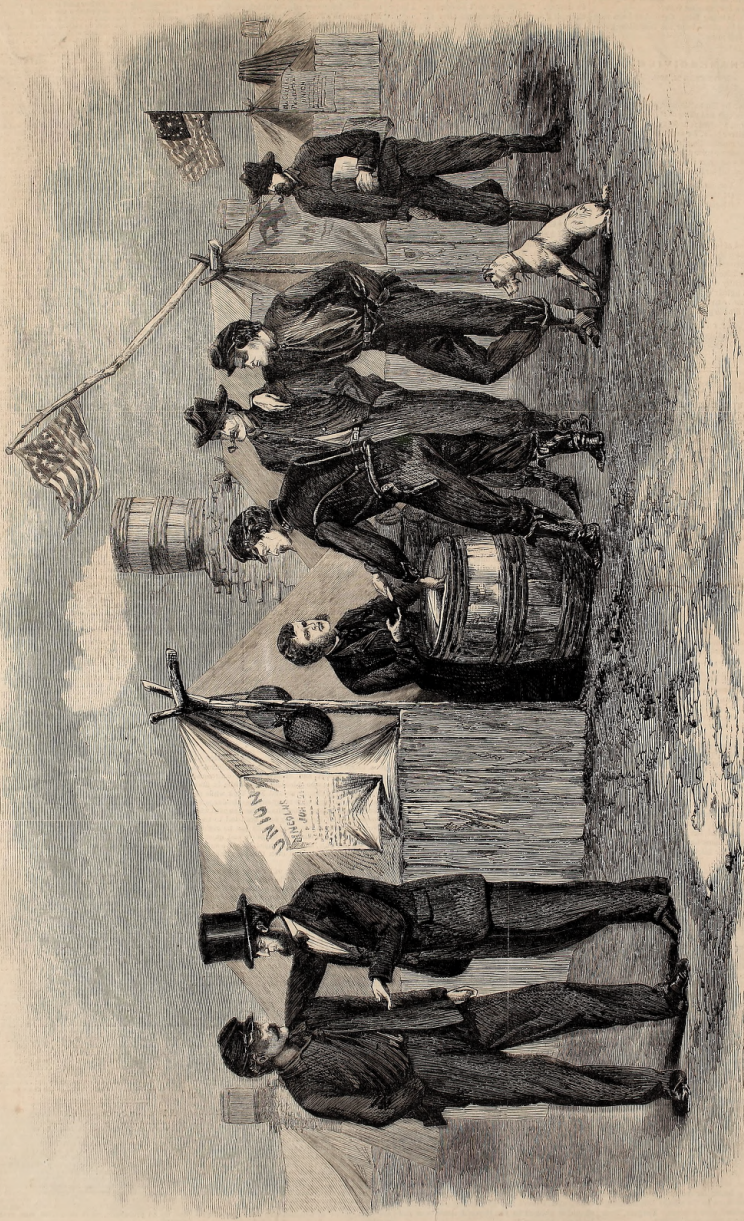
Once more gold is down, having closed with the week at 222, a fall of nearly 20 within five days. To the outside world this is really of slight importance, though fortunes are lost and won upon a turn of the cards, and it only assumes an importance from being supposed an index of the financial state of the country. This might have once been the case, but it is no longer so. The rise and fall of gold is merely the result of a feverish speculation.

Wall street is just now somewhat excited in an outside way with fancy stock, such as gold and silver mining, and the last stream of wealth, petroleum. The market is flooded with the last named, and, if brokers are to be believed, every inch of the country, from Maine to Louisiana, is to be bored for oil, and in less than a year our rivers will flow with it, and we shall eat, drink and wear petroleum; while the whales in the Northern seas can wag their tails in safety, and Cincinnati pigs congratulate themselves that it will no longer pay to manufacture their obesity into lard, oil or candles.

Our Amusements.

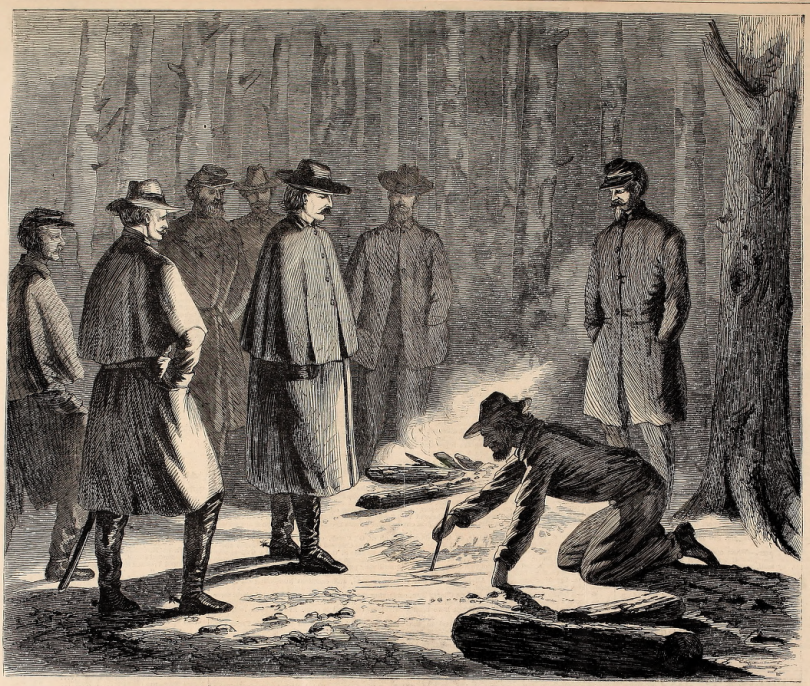
There is little, very little, to chronicle that is new. Don Sebastian has not yet shown his kingly figure upon the Academy boards, and through the week we have been obliged to be content with "Lucrezia" and more "Faust," and Miss Kellogg in her great rôle of Margherita. We shall save ourselves for Don Sebastian.

Strange to say, in the very flush tide of success, with houses jammed in every part, Maggie Mitchell withdraws from New York without having given us a chance to test her quality in anything but "Fanchon." Whether this withdrawal proceeds from engagements in other cities, or from the fact of Niblo's being pre-engaged, is a mystery into which we have not been initiated, but certain it is that her three weeks here have made a decided impression on New York audiences, and they will be always ready to receive her with open arms.



Wallack, as a great waking up, has produced "The School of Reform," which, of course, as everything has in this house, no matter how stereotyped, had a great success. Mr. Mark Smith gave us a Bob Tyke that may possibly have suited the taste of Wallackian audiences, but was not a rendering of the author's meaning. The character of Bob Tyke is not a low and brutal villain, ready alike for pitch and toss or murder; he is simply a common country lad, cunning, stupid and with all the instinct of petty crime, but not brutality, half rogue, half fool. Mr. Mark Smith mistakes the author's design.

Owens is still looking for that "b'r-rl of apple sass" at the Broadway, with just as many anxious people to assist him in the search, and at the Winter Garden Clarke is dropping in every night as "Paul Pry," promising that with this week he will withdraw his countenance and allow us to see Edwin Booth.



Barnum is still in the dog and "ingen" line. We are told, on most reliable authority, that one of those Barnum dogs is nothing more nor less than a Seneca Indian, who was coaxed out of his skin by the manager, and has, consequently, been obliged to make his appearance in his present guise. One thing we feel sure of, which is that the doggish dance is not to be beaten even by a Seneca Indian.

It is a good piece of news to give the little ones that Van Amburgh has arrived, bringing with him all the beasts, and the most beautiful collection of gay plumaged birds that perhaps has ever been gathered together in the world. It is the best exhibition of the kind that has ever been offered to the New York public, and the management deserves praise for keeping the price at so low a rate as to be within the reach of all.

A Bowl of Punch.—The Gentleman's Magazine contains an account of a remarkable bowl of punch that was made in England, in 1644. It was made in a fountain, in a garden, in the middle of four walks, covered overhead with orange and lemon trees, and in every walk was a table, the whole length of it, covered with cold collations, etc. In the fountain were the following ingredients: 4 hogsheads brandy, 25,000 lemons, 20 gallons lime juice, 1,300 weight of fine white Lisbon sugar, 51 pounds grated nutmegs, 300 toasted biscuits, and 1 pipe of dry mountain Malaga. Over the fountain was a large canopy to keep off the rain, and there was built on purpose a little boat, wherein was a boy, who rowed round the fountain and filled the cups of the company, and, in all probability, more than 6,000 men drank thereof.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION, NOV. 8—SCENE AT THE POLLS IN THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC—SOLDIERS VOTING.—Sketched by our Artist, Joseph Becker.

A REBEL PRISONER EXPLAINING TO MAJOR-GEN. WARREN THE POSITION AND MOVEMENTS OF THE REBEL FORCES, ON THURSDAY, OCT. 27.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, JOSEPH BECKER.

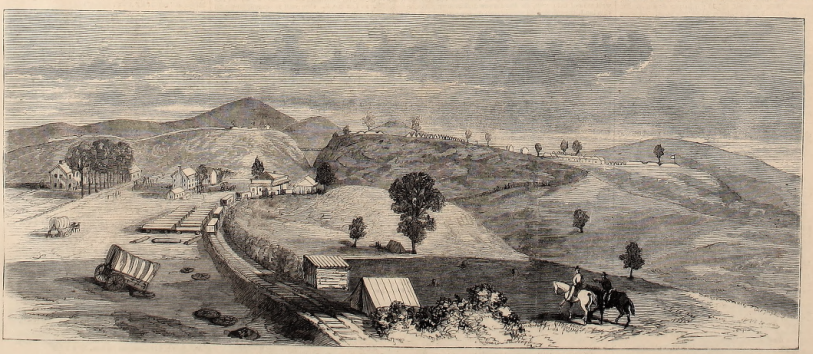
OUR SOLDIERS VOTING IN THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

THE duty of our soldiers of late has been divided between fighting and voting, and in both capacities they have displayed a kindred energy and decision. A spirited sketch on page 172 represents a scene at the polls in the Army of the Potomac, on the occasion of the Presidential election. The particular location thus illustrated is near Fort Wadsworth, on the Weldon road. The polls were evidently of the most primitive construction. A tent for the shelter of the inspector of votes and an old pork barrel for the reception of ballots, the whole surmounted by the American flag, on a rather dilapidated pole—these are the elements of the scene. Our soldiers are thronging around this rude ballot-box, which, rude though it be, is the eloquent utterance of the will of freemen, who do not fear to peril everything for he sake of their beloved country.

BATTLE OF ALLATOONA.

ALLATOONA is a post town of Cass county, Georgia, and is between Dalton and Atlanta, from which latter place it is distant about 30 miles. On the 4th Oct. a rebel force of about 7,000 captured a little place on the railroad called Big Shanty, and then advanced upon Allatoona, some five miles north of that place. Flushed with their easy capture of Big Shanty, they attacked, on the 5th Oct., the Union force under Gen. John M. Corse, who had been sent from Rome with reinforcements by Gen. Sherman, who had anticipated the movement. After a desperate conflict of some hours the rebels were repulsed at all points, with the loss of 200 dead, left on the field, and over 1,000 in wounded and prisoners. Our loss amounted to about 400 in all. The enemy, after this defeat, retreated in the direction of Dallas.

Our Artist has represented the battlefield, with the rebel line of advance upon the Union forces. The commander of the rebel army was Gen. S. G. French.



REBEL PRISONER EXPLAINING TO MAJOR-GEN. WARREN

The Position of the Rebel Forces.

As a general thing the rebel prisoners know very little of the position and strength of their armies, and if they did, it would be very unsafe to trust their reports. One of them, captured on the 27th of Oct., near Hatcher's Run, however, volunteered to communicate all he knew to Maj.-Gen. Warren, of their position and numbers. Our Artist was present on the occasion, and has given a graphic sketch of the scene. The correspondent of a daily paper says that his information was to be relied on, as he had a personal grievance against his superior officer.

ELECTION DAY IN THE ARMY OF THE SHENANDOAH.

Our illustrations of life in camp this week are ample, graphic and interesting. On page 168 we present a sketch illustrative of Election Day in the Army of the Shenandoah. The prominent incident delineated is the voting of Gen. Sheridan and Gen. Crook. The scene must have been at once romantic and solemnly impressive. The weather, on the occasion, was dim and drizzly; but the woods were their beautiful autumnal foliage, and cast abroad the sombre spell of their shadows and their silence. The polls, constructed of an ambulance wagon and an old cartridge-box, are seen to occupy a commodious position among the trees.

VIEW AT ALLATOONA, GA.—SCENE OF THE BATTLE ON THE 5TH OF OCTOBER.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

In the wagon are the authorized inspectors of ballots. The place of voting was that appointed for the 34th Ohio regiment, belonging to the 8th Corps, which is commanded by Gen. Crook. The officer nearest the ballot-box, and in the act of depositing his vote, is Gen. Sheridan. Next to him is Gen. Crook. The farmer is attended by his dog—an especial favorite. The latter is represented in his customary dress, and carrying a rifle-trap under his arm, according to his constant habits. These particulars are sketched from life, and thus the picture gives a truthful idea of the personal peculiarities of these gallant and admired officers. The height of Gen. Crook is 5 feet 11 inches; while Gen. Sheridan is about three inches shorter. Both rival the Republican leader, their men, meanwhile, cheering around the flag of the Republic and the presidential hero playing the enemies of Sir Walter Scott's ringing old song of welcome, "Hail to the Chief who in Triumph advances."

HISSING.—Hissing to show disapprobation is of great antiquity. Though Shakespeare makes very few allusions to the practice, he quite agrees with plainly of it in the "Merry Wives of Windsor:" "If I do not act it, hiss me." It was used against gallant speakers some 19 centuries ago, as appears from the following passage in Cicero's letters: "It is worthy of observation, that Hortensius reached his end again without once incurring the disgrace of being hissed."

JUST PUBLISHED.

UNIFORM FOR OFFICERS OF

UNITED STATES NAVY,

As prescribed in the general regulations of the U. S. Navy Department, duly illustrated. Price 25 cts. Will be sent by mail, prepaid, to any address in the United States on receipt of price.

TOMES, MELVAIN & CO.,

Dealers in Arms, Military Goods, &c., &c.,

6 Maiden Lane, New York.

67 Sent Everywhere by Mail, Postpaid. 67

Extension Silver-Mounted Holders,

WITH COMPOSITE

GOLD PENS,

DRYDEN LEAD PENCILS,

In cases of one, two, and three sizes; the boxes are finely finished and cloth lined, so that the contents can sustain no injury in transportation. The Holders are of the most handsome and durable construction; are hard-rubber, finished with an extension ring and ferrule. All are engraved, chased or enamelled, and for beauty and durability surpassed by any others. Our prices for the holders and pens sold in cases only, are as follows:

Size One.—When open, 5½ inches in length; closed (or shut), 3 inches in length. Pens 1½ inches in length. Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $10 25; retails at $2 each.

Size Two.—When open, 6 inches in length; closed for the pocket, 3½ inches in length. Pens per dozen by mail, postpaid, $12; retails at $2 each.

Size Three.—When open, 6½ inches in length; closed, 3¾ inches in length. Pens per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $19 25; retails at $5 and upwards.

Size Four.—When open, 7½ inches in length; closed, 4 inches in length. Pens per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $30; retails at $6 and upwards.

Size Five.—When open, 8 inches in length; closed for the pocket, 4½ inches in length. Pens per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $38 50; retails at $10 and upwards.

Samples.—Comprising one dozen of each size, making five dozen—for the whole, by mail, postpaid, $180; retails at $40 and upwards.

Also WATCHES AND JEWELLERY in Great Variety at low prices. Catalogues free by mail. Registered letters at our risk. Address

T. & H. ARNOLDS, Manufacturers,

116 Broadway, N. Y.

PERRY'S MOTH

AND

FRECKLE LOTION.

CHLOASMA, or MOTH PATCHES, LENTIGO, or FRECKLES, Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion, as the discolored spots on the skin show more strongly on a fair than on brunette skin, but they are liable greatly to marring the beauty of either; and anything that will remove them without injuring the skin in texture or color, would be considered a great achievement in medical science. DR. B. C. PERRY, who devotes all his time to diseases of the skin, has discovered a sure remedy for the removal of Moth, Freckles and other discolorations, without injury to the skin or texture. Prepared only by DR. B. C. PERRY, Dermatologist, 49 Bond St., New York. WEEKS & POTTER, Sole Agents, Boston, Mass. Wholesale Agents for New England. Sold by all Druggists. Price Perry's Moth and Freckle Lotion, $1 per bottle.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents, 75 cents, $1 or $2 per bottle. 475-81

Gayest of the Gay.—Transparent Playing Cards, used same as common cards (67 French Pictures), bicycle shape, $1 25; 50 per dozen packs. Also marked Cards, 46 kinds, $1 50 per pack. Address D. HUMMITT, 58 Liberty Street, N. Y.

$125 A MONTH!

WANTED, Various Manufacturing Agents to Advertise Everywhere, to introduce the new Shaw & Clark Family Sewing Machine. The only low price machine in the country which is licensed by Grover & Baker, Wheeler & Wilson, Howe, Singer & Co., and Buckeye. Easy and expensive, or large commissions allowed. All other Machines are infringements. Less than $30 each put in market, and the seller and user liable. Illustrated Circulars sent free. Address SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine. 479-491

$70 A MONTH! I want Agents everywhere. $70 a month, expenses paid, to sell Fifteen Articles. Sample and terms sent free. Full particulars free.—Address OTIS Y. GAREY, Biddeford, Maine. 472-491

CROQUET. This beautiful and delightful game to order. Price $36. Address CHARLES GAY, Hartford, Conn.

New Map of Richmond,

Showing all of the Fortifications surrounding the Rebel Capital, together with a Description of the City and of all the Forts, &c. Price only 10 cents per copy; or $5 per 100.

NEW MAP OF MOBILE. A Splendid Map. Price, 20 cents; Wholesale, $12 50 per dozen.

MAP OF PETERSBURG, a very desirable Map. Price, 15 cents; Wholesale, $1 per dozen.

NEW MAP OF ATLANTA. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, 60 cents per dozen, or $3 per 100.

SHERIDAN'S CAMPAIGNS. Grant, Meade, Sherman, Sheridan, Butler, Foster, Hooker, Hancock, Howard, Gillmore, Sherman, Lincoln, McClellan, etc. Price 10 cents each; Wholesale, $5 per 100.

NEW CAMPAIGNS, bound in Cards—Very Desirable. Price only 75 cents. Goods sent Postpaid. Agents Wanted. Catalogue free.

G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,

221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

NEW YORK AND LIVERPOOL

PETROLEUM COMPANY.

CAPITAL $1,000,000.

IN 100,000 SHARES AT $10 EACH.

Subscription Price Five Dollars Per Share.

OFFICE:

EMPIRE BUILDING, 71 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY.

Room No. 24.

TRUSTEES:

Hon. Daniel S. Dickinson. Wm. T. Phipps. J. H. Anger.
Wm. R. Newton. L. W. Myers. Wm. M. Jennings.
Wm. Mck. Chapman. Robert T. Barclay. Wm. H. Hallock.

OFFICERS:

HON. DANIEL S. DICKINSON, President. WM. T. PHIPPS, Vice-President.
ROBERT BASSETT, Secretary.

The New York and Liverpool Petroleum Company has been organized under the laws of the State of New York, for the purpose of purchasing, selling, refining and exporting Petroleum, and dealing in the same. It has located its principal business office in New York City, the largest transit and shipping market for petroleum in the world; and has taken measures to establish a connection with Liverpool, the most extensive receiving market for that oil, outside of this country. The managers and stockholders of the Company include among their number gentlemen largely interested in the production of petroleum, and whose wells and experience in the business which justify the confident expectation of careful, intelligent and profitable management. It is believed that by a judicious investment of the funds of the company, dividends of from two to five per cent. a month on the capital stock can be made.

The property to be conveyed to the Company consists of the lands and property enumerated in the following list. These extent can be greatly enlarged if desirable, and their present development completed, as funds shall come in from subscriptions.

LIST OF LANDS AND PROPERTY.

81.—One-tenth of the working interest in Lot No. 1, on the upper McElhenny Farm, containing ten acres. There are three wells on the lot, two of which are now producing about fifty barrels a day, the third waiting on barrels. A new well is also now in process of drilling, and will soon be completed. On this property are three powerful steam engines and engine-rooms, with boilers, tubing, belting, &c., &c.

There is room on this lease for several more wells, and all wells put down on or near this territory have been found productive. The character of McElhenny Farm is that of a very superior oil-producing territory.

82.—One-fourth of the working interest in lot No. 6, on the lower McElhenny Farm, containing one acre, and known as the Hatch lease, being the lease and well adjoining the Wolverton & Emery Empire well, which is now producing one hundred barrels a day. On this lot is one well flowing twenty barrels a day, and another well which has been drawing eighty barrels a day, and which is known as the "Blowing" or slumping can be put in, which is now nearly prepared. A third well is down and just ready to be tested. A fourth is drilling, and will be put down and completed by a good well. There are on this property three good engines, tankage, tubing, and an office on this lease.

83.—One-fourth of the working interest in the new slumping, on the late Wilcox McClintock's Farm, containing half an acre each. On this property there is one well, known as the Freeman Well, now pumping twenty barrels per hour, and another lease is now ready for a second well and a good supply of oil is expected within a few feet of a well on the adjoining property which is producing one hundred and fifty barrels, and which has been producing that amount for the past two months. The engine, boiler, tubing, &c., for this well will be sunk immediately on this lease. Two good engines and all the necessary appurtenances are on this property.

84.—A lot of oil land, in fee simple, on the Caldwell Branch of Oil Creek, containing about one hundred acres, being the south half of the west part of lot No. 70, on the east side of Caldwell Creek, about five miles from Titusville. The Irving Oil Company own the land on the opposite side of the creek, on which a well is now being put down. This property is considered one of the most valuable pieces of property for boring, &c., in the region. The above named property of this company will be immediately put under development.

85.—Forty acres of oil land, in fee simple, on Cherry Run, about two miles from Oil Creek, about four miles from the Allegany River. All the land in this vicinity is good, and excellent fabricating oil is produced from wells now in process of boring.

86.—A lot, in fee simple, of oil land on Cherry Run, containing about seventy-five acres, situated about three miles above Tarrytown, and about four miles from Titusville, on the road leading from Oil Creek to Cherry Run. Seven wells have been put down on this property, and all the wells put down have been productive. One well is down five hundred feet, with a good show of oil, on the adjoining lot.

87.—Two thirds of the working interest in the "Wheeler Well," on the John McClintock Farm, containing one acre and a half. This well is now producing 70 barrels a day, and steadily increasing, and there is ample room for two more wells on the lot. There is also a well now pumping twenty barrels per day, within a few feet of the celebrated Hammond Well, now producing 300 barrels a day.

88.—One-third interest in the Wolverton & Emery Well, on the late Farrow, now Potter, Farm, on the south side of Caldwell's Creek.

89.—One-sixth of the interest in one well on the property of the G. W. McClintock Farm, adjoining the Mowbrey Well; with a good engine, boiler, tubing, &c., &c. On this land are two wells, both of which have flowed, and will again produce oil in a few days.

90.—One-fourth of the interest in two acres of oil lands on Cherry Run. This locality is now producing a great deal of oil, and the adjoining large properties of all leases are now being developed.

91.—Ninety acres of land on Oil Creek, five miles above Titusville, having a frontage on the creek of 100 rods.

92.—The Caldwell Farm, of thirty-four acres, on Oil Creek, about one mile from Titusville, and a mile and a half from the Oil Creek and Titusville Railroad. This property has a frontage on the creek of 18 rods, and having already upon it one well which promises to be one of the very best on Oil Creek.

93.—One hundred and eighty-eight acres of land on Oil Creek, about two miles from Titusville, and one mile from the Newtown Farm. This land is undeveloped, and is by experts considered good property.

94.—Two thirds of the working interest in two acres of land on the Farrow Farm, now the lumber; being heavy timbered, and containing water power and mills now established, which at their present capacity are manufacturing lumber directly opposite on the Oil Creek Railroad.

95.—One-half of the interest in two acres on the John McClintock Farm, known as the Buttonwood Lease. This property is now producing one hundred barrels a day. Two engines, 30 and 40 horse power, one hundred barrels a day, and No. 2 will produce twenty-five or thirty barrels a day as soon as the proper machinery can be put on.

96.—One-sixteenth of the interest in two acres on the McElhenny or Funk Farm, near the Empire Oil-stand and Lumber Company's Mills, on Oil Creek, about two miles from Titusville, and a mile south of the village of Oil City. This property is now producing 70 barrels a day.

97.—One hundred and sixty-eight acres of land in fee, on Bull Creek, in the oil region of West Virginia.

98.—One hundred and eighty-five acres on Cross Creek, West Virginia.

[N. B.—The two last named parcels of land border the two creeks mentioned, and are immediately adjoining and between the Wilkinson Oil Company's lands, and are known as any on Oil Creek.]

99.—Seventy-five acres in fee, near Franklin, Venango county, Pa., with a front or eighty rods on the river. There is upon it a large frame house, and a barn, and a large orchard of apple trees already producing, and four ready for tapping, with the necessary engines and tankage.

100.—Two Fifteen Hundredths of the interest in one well and sixteen acres in fee, three miles from Titusville, extending for a hundred rods along both sides of Oil Creek and being good oil land for its whole extent.

101.—Seventy-five acres of land on Oil Creek, about two miles from Titusville.

21st.—One-sixth of the working interest, being one-tenth of all the oil produced on a lease situated on the west side of Oil Creek, about two miles from Titusville, and a mile and a half from the Oil Creek and Titusville Railroad, the tubing and sucker rods on the ground and paid for, and a good eight-horse power engine ordered.

With this extensive estate already secured to the Company, and with its advantages of membership and management, the gentlemen who have the control of the affairs of the New York and Liverpool Petroleum Company, standing the large number of Oil Companies now organized, the Petroleum business is, in fact, just at its commencement. The following extract from a Series Oil," as it is sometimes called even now in dry shops, need to be collected by the Seneca and other Indians of the region, and sold to the whites at the rate of a gallon for a blanket or a dollar, is a fair index to the field of the present Petroleum business was not until 1854. The first well was bored at Titusville in 1859, and in 1860 the yield was 500,000 gallons. In 1861 it had risen to 2,000,000 gallons, and in 1862 to 3,000,000 gallons a day. The business immediately received a monstrous impulse, and the supply of oil being already enormous, the production for 1863 was estimated at 10,000,000 gallons, and for 1864 at 20,000,000 gallons. At one attracted.

Rich oil fields are found in western Pennsylvania, north-eastern and south-eastern Ohio, north-eastern Kentucky and Western Virginia, not to mention other new fields from time to time found. Throughout these regions, for the last six years, operations have been carried on with a continuously increasing, and sometimes fortunes made. The commercial uses of Petroleum have increased quite as rapidly as the supply, and the market available is now almost unlimited. The purposes to which it is applicable are so many and various, the business may be imagined from the fact, that in New York, Philadelphia and Pittsburg alone two hundred and fifty refineries are in operation, and the export trade of the United States is already a large one. The prices raised during the past year in western Pennsylvania alone has been sold crude at the wells for twenty-five cents a gallon.

In such enterprises to be early in the field is indispensable. Large as the number of companies may seem, it is not so situated as to control more than a small portion of the unknown subterranean reservoirs of oil. In a few years more, perhaps, some working fault in the business will be reached. Now, however, the New York and Liverpool Petroleum Company enters with every advantage of the field and experience, and their investments only exceeded by those very few companies whose stock is practically out of market and inaccessible. With a view to prevent the formation of such monopolies, the Company will at once commence operations, only a limited portion of the stock of the Company is offered at the present rates.

In the evidence of the reports about the quality of the property of the New York and Liverpool Petroleum Company, we copy the following paragraphs from a letter of Mr. Mowbray, an operative chemist of reputation, established at Titusville, and prominent in the oil business from its very beginning:

"W. T. PHIPPS, Esq., Vice-President, etc.:

"DEAR SIR:

"I have observed that, without fail, the best wells have been reached in what was formerly the old bed of Oil Creek. The Drake well, the Sherman well, the Noble well, and the Story Farm wells are instances of this. New fields have not usually the Old Creek bottom. If the creek is now diverted south of them, and in the manner the evolution of gas has been so offensive to the granulometrist, that they have left them during midday for shelter part of the field. The Dolon Company's well, not down to the third sandstone, in the same formation, gives a first-class show of oil.

"If there are no indications of oil territory, then only until after a series of wells has been actually sunk on the land can any opinion be arrived. What the value of the land will then be you can judge, but the price will be beyond any present purchaser's means I am satisfied. I can only add that I have not the interest of one cent in the lands, but say what I really think for your guidance.

"Yours very respectfully,

GEO. M. MOWBRAY."

All communications should be addressed to the Company, "New York City P. O. Box 5,066."

$6 OFFICERS' $8

WATCH.

Our Whole Stock of Imported Watches are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale rates. An ELEGANT WATCH in Fine Gold Plated Double Case Dandy Pattern, Turned Centre, Curved Dome Bridge, English Full Plate Jewelled Movements, adjusted. Equalled by few, excelled by none. Sent Free Engraved White Dial, a serviceable article in running order, with Key, Guard, complete, and a Gent's Handsome Vest Chain and bearing to match, with Double Cases, Box and Glass for Two Likenesses. Sent by mail to any address for only $8.

MINIATURE GOLD LOCKET

A Nice Assortment Watches, Single and to Carry in pair, in Heavy Double Cases, Small Size, same as the above, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and Gent's Fine Vest Chain, Engraved Double Case Locket to match, for only $12 each.

The Imperial Watch,

Containing a Rare and Wonderful Combination of Horological Skill, something attainable in reasoned mischief to the machinery a beautiful and correct working Timekeeping. An invaluable addition to Armies and Companies in miniature, sunk in Dial, and a Reliable Calendar, indicating day of month, etc., in Case, rendering this Watch a perfect Sphinx, Hour and Time Indicator. The beautiful machinery of this valuable Watch is encased in Finely Finished DOUBLE HUNTING, Right Hand Lever Case (the outer case being of fine 18 Carat Gold, inner cases of Solid Gold Composition, finely Engraved top and bottom, Pearl for Name, Turned Set, movable Pendant ; ow, and Fancy Push Spring. Genuine English Jewelled Lever Movement, M. J. Tobin movements, Polished Cap or Dome Sapphire Cloth Bevel Edge, Independent Second, Fine White Enamelled Steel Cut Hands, and is an Exact Imitation of a $100 watch, and has all the Exactness and Ojjices of the Dearest Make. None Genuine unless Stamped with our Name. Sent by mail, Free, packed in Morocco Case, with Key, &c, all complete by mail, $20.

CATELY BROTHERS, Sole Importers,

102 Nassau St., N. Y. Established 1858.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION!

250,000

Watches, Chains, Diamond Rings, Etc.

WORTH OVER

One Million Dollars!

All to be Sold for One Dollar Each!!

WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE! NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO RECEIVE!

Splendid List of Articles! All to be Sold for $1 each!

	EACH.
250 Gents' Gold Hunting-case Watches	$20 to $150
250 Ladies' Gold and Enamelled-case Watches	35 " 70
500 Gents' Hunting-case Silver Watches	35 " 70
1,000 Patent Lever Watches	60 " 100
2,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains	12 " 30
3,000 " " Lockets	8 " 20
3,000 Gold Oval Band Bracelets	4 " 8
3,000 Gold Gipsy Band Bracelets	4 " 8
4,000 Initial-case Chains & Guard Chains	5 " 10
4,000 Gold Band Brooches	4 " 10
5,000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 " 6
5,000 Coral, Opal and Turquoise Sets	5 " 10
6,000 Marine Set, Lava and Florentine Sets	4 " 8
7,500 Coral, Opal & Emerald Ear Drops	4 " 6
7,500 California Diamond Ear Drops	4 " 6
10,000 Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys	2 50 " 8
10,000 Fob and Pocket Slides	2 50 " 8
10,000 Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, etc.	3 " 8
8,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc	3 " 7
4,000 " Spectacles	2 50 " 7
4,000 " Magic Spring	3 " 20
5,000 Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc	3 " 6
6,000 Plain Gold Rings	4 " 11
6,000 Chased Gold Rings	4 " 11
10,000 Stone Set and Signet Rings	2 50 " 10
10,000 Sets Ladies' Jewellery—Jet Gold	3 " 15
7,500 Sets Ladies' Jewellery—Jet Gold Pearl, etc	3 " 15
10,000 Gents' Silver Extension Solitaire and Pencils	4 " 10
10,000 Gents' Gold Mounted Holders	4 " 10
8,000 Ladies' Gold Mounted Holders	3 " 8
8,000 Gold Extension Holders	6 " 10
8,000 Silver Cases Dividing Cups	10 " 20
8,000 Silver Cutters	15 " 30
2,000 Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets	20 " 50
2,000 Dozen Silver Tea Spoons	$12 to $36
2,000 " Table Spoons & Forks	20 " 10

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the Manufacturing districts of England, there will be very having cut off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of Manufactured Goods, originally intended for the English market, has been sent off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD REGARDLESS OF SACRIFICE.

Under these circumstances, ARRANDALE & CO., acting as agents on behalf of the Manufacturers, have been enabled to purchase the whole of the above Stock at a very low price, and are thereby enabled to offer the same to the public at the following ridiculously low prices:

ALL ARTICLES SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE!

On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your option to send One Dollar and have the article sent, or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any other article worth from $5 to $50 for $1, and in no case can they get less than One Dollar's worth, as there are no blanks. The price of Certificates is as follows:

One for	25 cents.
Five for	$1.
Eleven for	2.
Thirty for	5.
Sixty-five for	10.
One hundred for	15.

Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to One Dollar or more. All goods will be sent free of expense, and must be sent to us, either in cash or postage Stamps.

ARRANDALE & CO.,

167 Broadway, New York.

TWENTY-FOUR

CARTES DE VISITE

OF

FRENCH GRISETTES,

In different attitudes and costumes.

Enclose $1 25 and four red stamps.

477-80 CHAS. MANN, 34 Nassau St., N. Y.

Six Dollars from Fifty Cents.

Agents, come and examine Inventions, or Samples sent free by mail for 50 cents. Address H. L. & Co., WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York. 477-84

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, Illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy," plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry whoever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps. Address

469-75 E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1525, Portland, Me

AMERICAN BADGE CO.

REGULATION BADGES for 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 18th, 19th, 20th and 23d

ARMY CORPS,

With Name, Company and Regiment engraved Solid Silver, $1 50; Gold, $8; White Metal, by the dozen or gross. New Artillery and Cavalry Badges, Silver, $1 50; Gold, $8.

All styles constantly on hand, and for sale wholesale or retail.

Illustrated Circulars sent free. Address

R. KEITH & CO.,
15 John Street, New York.

Manufacturers and Dealers in Jewellery, Watches, Gold Pens, &c.

The Arm Telegraph. Pamphlet or Chart, 10 cts. each. Mailed by J. G. KONVALINKA, Astoria, L. I. [New York.] Invaluable to Military Men. Agents wanted.

WOODWARD'S

PATENT SELF-ADJUSTING

COAL OIL LANTERN,

Just out.

Sample, including the Savage & Co. Celebrated

No Chimney Burner,

sent by express on receipt of $2 50. Send for Circular and Price List.

SAVAGE & CO.,
Sole Manufacturers,
286 Greenwich St.,
New York.

481

GREAT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION

OF

Gold Watches, Diamond Rings, Elegant Jewelry and Fancy Goods,

Worth $500,000!

T. BENTON & CO Jewellers, 599 Broadway, N. Y.

CERTIFICATES, naming each Article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, and well mixed. One of these Envelopes, containing the Certificate or Order for a Watch, Set of Jewellery, or some Article worth over $1 will be delivered at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of 25 cents; the Article named on such certificate will be sent to any address for ONE DOLLAR, or it may be exchanged for any other Article on our list of the same value.

NO BLANKS!

You MAY get a WATCH or DIAMOND RING for ONE DOLLAR, which you do not pay until you know what you have drawn.

You MUST get the VALUE of your money.

Entire satisfaction guaranteed in all cases.

Six Certificates for $1; thirteen for $2.

AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamp for a Circular. All letters should be addressed

T. BENTON & CO., Box 5567, P. O., New York.

LOVE AND HATRED

Controlled and Completely Mastered by

DR. NAPIER'S GREAT DISCOVERY.

No person should be without it; it is invaluable. It will be sent to any address on receipt of $1.

DR. A. H. NAPIER,
Box 5712 New York Post Office.

GOLD, $8—SILVER, $1 50.

1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 14th, 18th, 20th, 23d

ARMY CORPS,

Showing each Division.

BY THE SINGLE ONE, 100 or 1,000.
Send for Circular.
Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufac'g Jewellers,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

IT WAS

My Mother's Voice.

Oh, mother dear, I had a dream
So sad and yet so bright,
When wounded on the battle plain,
I lay at dead of night;
A gentle strain fell on my ear,
That made my heart rejoice—
So soft and sweet, it seemed to me
It was my mother's voice!

CHORUS—My mother's voice! my mother's voice!
How blessed still it seems,
When far away from friends and home,
To hear it in my dreams!

Song and chorus, with piano accompaniment. Price 35 cents.

New Songs—"Sunlight within my Heart," "Just before the Battle, Mother," "My Love is on the Battle-field," "Young Eph's Lament," "Just after the Battle," "The Vacant Chair," "I Love that dear Old Flag the Best," "Soldier's Happy Return," "Mazourkas." Each 30 cents.

Any music, or Books, free of postage on receipt of price. Address

FREDERICK BLUME, Publisher,
208 Bowery, N. Y.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusel oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, anti-bilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY

HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 59 CEDAR STREET.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address

tf T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing $2 50 or $3, according to the quality desired. Address

HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Onguent and finding it not as represented (by informing me of the fact), can have their money returned to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address

A. C. CLARK,
458-83 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED.

Ladies' "Hemmer and Shield" for Hand Sewing, "Bird-work Holder" for the Lap, and 15 more Novelties. Useful and Saleable. Sample 30 cents. For Catalogue and terms, enclose stamp.

o RICE & CO., Manufacturers, 37 Park Row, N. Y.

DISTILLED DEW

Imparts to the Skin a natural Whiteness and Clearness and Youthful Delicacy and Softness unattainable by any other means. Sold by all Druggists, tf

$7 ARMY WATCH. $9

A handsome Engine-Turned or Plain Sterling Silver Double Electro-plated Watch, Double-cases, English Movements, fancy Steel or Gold-cut Sweep Hands, Enameled Dial, new style of Index, Chain Action, Self-acting Balance, Polished Cap. Especially adapted for Army use. A reliable Timekeeper. Price $7.

A fine 18 Carat Electro Gold-plated Watch, in Double Cases, same as above, in perfect Running Order, and a Reliable Timekeeper, sent free in a neat case for $9.

American Army Watch,

Imported by us expressly for the American Trade. In Solid Oreide Gold Composite Hunting Cases (Sandos pattern); superbly engraved or massive plain cases being 18 Carat Gold, and the inner one Solid Gold Composite; the two combinations being known as Oreide Metal, the imitation being so faultless that it can scarcely be detected from Solid Gold; and is beautifully engraved, and finished equal to a fine Gold Watch. It is particularly recommended not only for beauty but durability. It has the genuine European Jewelled Movements (M. J. Tobias, Liverpool), improved Ruby Action, Independent Balance, Sunk Seconds, plain or fancy Enameled Dial, Steel Spade-cut Hands, fancy Push-pin, Lever Cap, and is warranted for one year. A single one sent free, in a Turkey Morocco Case, with a fine French Curb Vest Chain, for $15.

Our Stock comprises over 40 different styles of European and American Watches, of the latest and most saleable styles, for Army and Home Trade, consisting of American Levers in various styled Cases, English Chain Levers, Hunting Silver and Glass Combination Watches (something new).

Thermometer Watches, Magic Watches, Ladies' Petite Watches, Enameled Watches, Imperial Duplex Watches, Officers' Watches, Photographic Watches, Composite Watches, Gold Levers, Gold Chronometers, and various other styles—some as low as $6. Those wishing to buy single Watches, or dealing in them, should send a stamp for our Descriptive Circular. Address

KELLEY & ALLEN,
No. 200 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.

000 VICTOR DELAPO, 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Great Money-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address

000 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.

R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most desirable Cards ever published—including the French Dancing Girl; Venus Sporting with Love; Bedtime; Bombarding Charleston; Sinking the 290, etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 15 choice cards.

G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Fail not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 462-74

Beauty.—Hunt's Bloom of Roses, A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and cannot be detected. Price $1. 18 cents by mail, securely packed from observation. HUNT & CO., PERFUMERS,

000 133 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

C. S. Sea, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. His Celebrated "BLISSES" for $5. Programme for return stamp. Sample for $1 in part for a package.

R. I. P.—Roman Ink Powder.—One Quart of jet black Ink for only 25 cents. Everybody uses it. Soldiers need it. Agents wanted. Samples and particulars, postpaid, for 25 cents. Address HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

476-9

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New. Patent Pin Cushion, Universal Needle-Threader, Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, Piston Pipe, Magic Tobacco Box, Gent's Vest Pocket Match Safe, Silver-plated. Send stamp for Circular. S. W. RICE & CO.,

tf 83 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Married or Single Ladies

May receive important information worth hundreds of dollars, by enclosing 10 cents to MRS. DR. McNAIR, Hoboken, New Jersey. 477-8

$100 A MONTH made by intelligent Agents, in and out of the Army, selling the most valuable work now published. Particulars in Circular. Mailed free. J. L. G. PIERPONT, No. 37 & 39 Nassau St., N. Y. 478-81

CHASE'S CHEMICAL COMPOUND,

For the Beard. One bottle will force a vigorous growth of hair upon the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks. Testimonials of thousands given. Circulars mailed free. Warranted as represented or money returned. Price $1, or four bottles for $3. Sent sealed and postpaid. Address S. S. CHASE, P. O. Drawer 359, Cohoes, N. Y. 478-90

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS

BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDESMAIDS' SETS, OSTRICH FEATHERS AND PARIS FLOWERS,

At TUCKER'S, 759 Broadway.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.

000 PIERRE BIBON, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

Dr. Talbot's Concentrated Medical

PINEAPPLE CIDER,

is a PREVENTIVE of SICKNESS. The experience that Dr. Talbot has had for the last Twenty-five years convinces him that it is time the public had an article offered that will prevent sickness. The article offered is Dr. Talbot's Medicated Pineapple Cider, designed for all classes, old and young. It is not new to the Doctor, but is entirely new to the public. One quart bottle will last a well person one year. This is rather a new mode of doctoring; nevertheless it will save millions from being sick. Is it not better to pay three dollars a year to keep from being sick, than to pay ten or twenty dollars in doctor's bills, and as much more for the loss of time and the inconvenience of being sick? To prevent sickness, use as follows: Add one teaspoonful of Medicated Pineapple Cider to a tumbler of cold water, and drink the first thing after you rise in the morning, and the same before you retire at night. It will increase the strength and give vigor and action to the system. A celebrated New York merchant, who has made a thorough trial of the Pineapple Cider, assures Dr. Talbot that he gained ten pounds of flesh in one month at the first trial. He continues its use as above directed, and finds it very beneficial; says it has proved an entire preventive to sickness in his case. Also, another well-known gentleman in New York has used the Medicated Cider contantly for ten years, and has not been sick one day during that time.

Price $3 per bottle (full quart). For sale everywhere. Sent free by Express on receipt of price, $3. All orders should be addressed to

B. T. BABBITT, Solo Agent,
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., N. Y
474-499

"How 'Tis Done;" or, the Secret Out. Gambling Exposed. "Marked Cards"—"Fortune Telling"—"The Book of Wonders"—Whiskers in 42 days—100 Great Secrets—New Book. No humbug. Satisfaction guaranteed. Mailed free for 25 cents. Address HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

477-80

PLAYING CARDS!

The American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards, National Emblems.

They are the prettiest cards made, and suit the popular idea. The suits are Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags; Colonel in place of King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack.

All the games can be played as readily as with cards bearing foreign emblems. Each pack is put up in an elegant cardcase, and then in Dozen Boxes for the Trade.

In order that ALL dealers may have an opportunity to sell these cards, a sample box of twelve packs will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of $5. Address,

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
472-5 No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

Shults' Curlique, for curling the hair. Price 50 cents. Sent sealed, postpaid. Address

471-83 C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

The Brazilian Hair Curler. One application warranted to curl the most straight, stubborn hair into wavy ringlets or heavy massive curls. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address

S. S. CHASE,
471-83 Cohoes, N. Y.

"The Most Laughable Thing on Earth."

A Game that can be played by any number of persons; is susceptible of 50,000 CHANGES, ENDLESS TRANSFORMATIONS OF WIT AND HUMOR, and invariably produces ROARS OF LAUGHTER, often making the breadth of one's face equal to its length, causing WAISTBANDS to BURST and BUTTONS to FLY. Just the thing for SOLDIERS in CAMP and HOSPITAL; for OLD FOLKS and YOUNG FOLKS at HOME; for EVENING PARTIES and DULL DAYS. A Sure Cure for Home Sickness and the Blues. Mailed, postpaid, for 25 cents. Address Box 456, Boston, Mass.

THE BEST THING OUT!

Can be used the same as any other Cards, and contains

52

BEAUTIFUL SCENES.

Enclose $1 25 and three red stamps for sample pack. $144 per gross, twenty per cent. off. $12 per dozen.

T. ALLEN,
477-80 34 Nassau street, New York.

ATTENTION!

100 Photographs of Female Beauties, for 50 cents. Rich and Rare. 100 Photographs of Generals, for 50 cents. Send all orders to

C. DRIGGS, Chicago, Ill.,
476-9 P. O. Drawer 6308.

If you want to Know, &c., read

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

A curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. Price $1 50. To be had at all News Depots. Contents tables mailed free. Address

DR. E. B. FOOTE,
465cow No. 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 White Street, New York.

$1 WHISKERS! $1

For $1 I will send sealed, postpaid, the GRECIAN COMPOUND, highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of hair upon the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Entire satisfaction given or money refunded. Descriptive circular mailed free. Address

E. L. SANFORD,
471-83 Lansingburgh, N. Y.

Beauty.—Hunt's White Liquid Enamel, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enameler. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address

HUNT & CO., PERFUMERS,
133 South Seventh Street, and 41 South Eighth
000 Street, Philadelphia,

BEGIN WITH THE NEW YEAR
TO READ THAT REPOSITORY OF
Interesting and Instructive Miscellany,
THE
Atlantic Monthly
The prospectus for 1865 is now ready, and will be sent to any address upon application. The new volume will contain
SEVERAL REMARKABLE FEATURES.
Now is the time to subscribe. Terms $4 a year, or 35 cents a number.
Address the Publishers,
TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.
o

SOMETHING NEW.
The Patent Army Pocket Pipe and Cigar Holder combined, is decidedly the best Smoking Pipe ever created. It imparts a rich soothing flavor to the Tobacco; is of elegant appearance and finish; with fine carved Horn Mouthpiece and Cigar Holder. It is easy to carry, easy to clean, and is always ready for a good smoke. Sample dozen sent free on receipt of $2 50. Address
RICHARDS & CO.,
o 97 William Street, New York.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT
For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.
Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth, Purifying and Sweetening the Breath; its cool and refined, efficacious and beneficial article for the Teeth the world has ever seen.
Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—75 cents per bottle.
HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors,
466-1Sp 218 Greenwich St., N. Y.

KENDALL'S

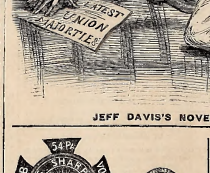
is composed of extract of vitrox from Flowers, Roots and Herbs for the Beauty and permanency of the Hair. It prevents hair falling out or turning gray, eradicates dandruff, and is a delightful and pleasant dressing.
Also effecting a cure for diseases incident to the scalp.
A trial will prove our assertion.
For sale by all Druggists.
Price $1 per case.
WARNER & CO.,
Proprietors,
o 39 Dey Street, N. Y.
466-80o

THE UNIVERSAL PAPER COLLAR
TAINTER & JACKSON'S
Patent August 2nd 1864.
The Trade supplied at No. 536 Pearl Street, New York.
47

WARDS SHIRTS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars send free everywhere.
French Flannel Overshirts.
Cut 36 inches long, $4 75 and $5 each. Sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 25 cents postage each shirt.

STEEL COLLARS
Enameled White, having all the comforts of linen collars. Washed and dried in a moment. A sample Collar mailed free on receipt of 10 cents. Cuffs $1 00 per pair. Ladies' Collars and Cuffs same price.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD,
otf No. 367 Broadway, New York.

POLLAK & SON,
MICROSCOPIUM MANUFACTORERS,
673 Broadway, Near 4th Street, N. Y.,
Wholesale and Retail. Pipes sent by mail on receipt of order and registered. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $8 to $100 each.
o



BERNST'S PATENT
Self-Fastening Steel Collars,
PATENTED AUGUST 30, 1864.
Require no Pins, no Studs, no Elastic Loops, nor any other appliances, and put on and set to get but or broken extra fastenings of other Metallic Collars, but are absolutely self-fastening in the course of buttons into as arranged as to firmly clasp the buttons of a shirt while putting the Collar in the position. Samples mailed free on receipt of 25 cents. Address the Patentee, OTTO BERNST, o 22 Bowery, New York.

GOLD PENS.
We will send, to any address on receipt of the following prices one of our First Quality 14 Caret Warranted (2-Jeweled) Pointed Gold Pens and Silver Mounted Pencil Holder and Morocco Case, or Silver-plated Extension Case:
No. 3. Large Pen and Holder - - $ 1 50
" 4. Commercial " - - 2 00
" 5. Engraving Barb Pen and Holder - - 3 50
" 6. Mammoth Pen and Holder - - 5 00
Send a stamp for our Circular of Engravings of all our new styles, and giving exact sizes and prices. Pens Repointed for 50 cents. Address
AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO.,
o 209 Broadway, N. Y.

Musician's Omnibus, complete, 1,500 pieces of Music, 50 Sets Quadrilles, 200 Contra and Fancy Dances, with Calls, 200 Reels, 200 Scotch and Irish Airs, Polkas, Waltzes, Quicksteps, &c., for Violin, Flute, Fife, Cornet, &c. Price $3. Sent by mail. ELIAS HOWE, 198 Court Street, Boston, Mass.

JEFF DAVIS'S NOVEMBER NIGHTMARE.

MANUFACTURER'S STOCK
OF
Watches, Lockets, Chains, Rings, Pins, Bracelets, Gold Pens and Cases,
And a full assortment of fine Jewellery, to be disposed of by distribution for the next 60 days.
Certificates of all the various articles are put in envelopes, sealed and mixed, and sent without regard to choice. One certificate telling you what you can have for $1 will be sent for 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5. After seeing what you can have, it will be at your option to send or not for the article, or not, and after seeing the article, if it does not give perfect satisfaction, you can return it and get the money. We also manufacture pure Silver and Gold Badges for every Corps and Division in the Army. Also Infantry Artillery and Battery, Engineer and Pontonier, Masonic, Rear Rail and Society Badges of every kind. We will send a Sample Badge (pure Silver), for any Department in the Army, with your Name, Regiment or Company handsomely Engraved thereon, on receipt of $1 50.
Agents wanted everywhere, to whom great inducements are offered.
o S. M. WARD & CO.,
298 Broadway, N. Y.

THE MEDICAL SPECIALIST.
Table of Contents:
To Our Readers—The Human Eye—The Sense of Hearing—Deafness Not a Disease—Catarrhal Deafness—Nasal Catarrh—Medical Hydrokinesi—Dilatation, who he advocates are—The Use of Pain—Health and Disease—Noble Manhood—Exhausted Vitality—Dr. Hall's Chemical Fruit, upon the Causes and Consequences of Nasal Catarrh and its Scientific & Medical Hydrokinesi.
The Medical Specialist is mailed to any address on receipt of the price, 25 cents.
S. CLEMSON PRATT, M. D.,
476-90 No. 769 Broadway, New York.

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S PIANOFORTES.
99 & 101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. 479-84o

Martel's Great Picture
OF
CENTRAL PARK,
Now on exhibition and for sale at Messrs. Ball, Black & Co's, Tiffany & Co's, Appleton & Co's, William Schaus, William & Peabody, Arthur Bispham & Wilmurt's, Broadway, the city, sent to any part of the world on receipt of Express charges. Price $5 00. Address CENTRAL PARK PUBLISHING CO., 720 Broadway, New York.
o (First-Class Local Agents wanted everywhere.)

IVORY AND PEARL BROOCHES,
Ear-Rings and Cuff Buttons,
Latest Styles, $2 & $5 per Set.
Gilt Belt Buckles, $3.
Sent free on receipt of price.
o 571 Broadway. (Sign of Golden Elephant.)

Friends.—Send a Stamp for information and my Circulars. Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass. o478-87

DIAMOND PARLOR MATCHES.
These Matches are the BEST IN THE WORLD. BRIMSTONE WITHOUT SULPHUR, NO UNPLEASANT ODOR SMELL, and a luxury and comfort to smokers and people with weak lungs. For sale wholesale and retail by
THE LODI MANUFACTURING CO.,
o 476-82o No. 66 Cortlandt Street, New York.

A WATCH FREE
And $15 or $20 per Day made Easy. A New Sensation. Our Great Novelty, the Wonderful Puzzle Pocket Pistol. Fast out and creating an immense sensation and Extraordinary Demand throughout the Army and Country; there is nothing like them. Sales Enormous; profits immense. Each Portfolio, Fancy Large Size, 6 by 10, contains an immense quantity of useful and valuable goods, Prizes, etc., worth Several Dollars, and sells for only 25 cents. Articles that Soldier or Family can possibly do without. Thousands testify to their Value. Soldiers can clear a Month's Pay in a Single Day. Agents Wanted in Every Camp and Village. A Beautiful Gold or Silver Watch Given Free as a Premium to Every Agent. This is the Greatest money-making Business of the Day. We Guarantee at least $15 per Day. Persons not with Goods name day the order is received. Coin comes containing Prize. Premium Redeemed Sent by mail free. S. G. RUCKARDE & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y., Sole Manufacturers.
o

The Inventors, Patentees and Manufacturers have at an immense outlay of "capital" completed their "Complex Machinery" necessary to meet the "Universal Demand" for their "Invincible Novelties in Steel."

5,000 DOZEN SELF-ADJUSTING Enameled White, from $4 to $9 per Dozen. Samples at 50 cents, 75 cents, $1, $1 25; Snow White, Linen Finished, Illusion Bibbed and Corsets, $1 25; Invisible Ties, $1.
Gents' Steel Cuffs, $2 50; Ladies', $1 50; Collar, $3. Mailed on receipt of Measure or Size.
JEANNERET, Agent for the Patentees, 78 Nassau St., New York.
"Sutlers and Agents" are realizing a "Golden Harvest," "Immense Sales and "Large Profits."

GOLD PENS.
If you want the best Pen ever used send to Johnson for Circular giving exact size and prices. Pens from $1 up $5, to suit every hand and pocket. Pens Repointed, by mail, for 50 cents.
E. S. JOHNSON,
Manufactory and Office,
o 15 Maiden Lane, New York.
0478-90

The West Indian Hair Curler, warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair in the first application, into short ringlets or waving massive curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1. Address
WAUD GILBERT LYON,
o Box 5231, New York Post Office.

Shults' Onguent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address
o 498-80o C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER.

Is the latest improvement in Fire-Arms, combining great power and effectiveness with compactness, durability, and convenience, both for carrying and shooting. Is the most effective Pocket Revolver in the world.
Is loaded, without removing the cylinder, with CENTRAL FIRE WATERPROOF COPPER SHELL CARTRIDGES. The Cartridge is sure fire, the shell cannot collect after firing. The spindle never gets out. Is not 7 inches extreme length. 32-inch ball, six shot and weighs but 18 ounces. For sale by the trade.
GEO. A. HIOKOOX, 54 Cliff Street, New York.

CERTIFICATE.
I have thoroughly tested the new "National Revolver" and find it an effective weapon, of sure fire and convenient size. At fifty yards I find I can hit a mark with it as well as any I have been in the habit of using.
(Signed) JOHN CHARLESTON, Chief of Police, Cairo, Ill.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10
A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Cut, Small Size, White Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Time keeper, with a complete "Pointers Calendar," indicating the Day of the Week, Month, &c., in back case. A single one sent free, by mail, to any address, in neat case, with a Beautiful Vest Chain, for only $10.
A neat SILVER WATCH, same style, Movements with the Miniature Calendar, &c., specially adapted to the Army. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.
Address OHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers, o 38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

STAMMERING
Cured by Bates's Appliances. For descriptive pamphlet address H. C. L. MEARS & CO., 277 W. 23d st., N. Y. o

Would You Recover the Remains of Private lost in the Army? Address DIX, BROWN & ALEXANDER, Embalmers of the Dead, Washington, D. C., Norfolk or Bermuda Hundreds, Va. 478-90

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
GOLD MEDAL
Grand and Square
PIANOS,
BALTIMORE, Md.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Richardson, G. Satter, and other distinguished artists. Every Instrument warranted for five years.
Price Sats promptly sent on application.
WM. KNABE & CO.
A full assortment of the above celebrated instruments at J. BAUER & CO.'s Warerooms,
477-83 844 Broadway, N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both sexes—new and reliable treatment by experts of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letters, free of charge. Address Dr. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. o

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!
All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Hilton Head, Fort Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by ALEXANDER'S EXPRESS, No. 62 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 603o

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,
Magnifying 300 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Chests of different powers for $1. Address
o000 F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Do not purchase a STEREOSCOPE until you have seen the BELLSCOPE, the latest Stereoscope. For sale by dealers generally, and, if not supplied, for $3 50 with 12 views (sent by mail), by HENRY CRAIG, 130 Centre Street, New York, who will also sell, privately, the celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE for $2 50, with beautiful mounted objects for $5; or $4 with objects, $1 50. The Novelty Microscope for examining Bank Bills, Seeds, Insects, Flowers, Minerals, &c., 18 cents for $1, or with 12 objects $3 50. 479-81o

GREAT CHANCE
TO MAKE MONEY!
AND OBTAIN A WATCH FREE, by selling our celebrated PATENT PENCILS and SILVER METAL ENGRAVINGS. Circulars, with full particulars of great inducements, mailed free.
S. HASKINS & CO.,
o 56 Maiden Street, N. Y.

LADIES' LETTER.
FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS
Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.
Address Box 4324, New York Post Office.

N. Y. S. VOLUNTEER INSTITUTE.
$50,000 Worth of Real Estate.
50,000 Fully Stocked Shares of the Real Estate of the President of the United States, Lieut.-Gen. Grant, Gen. McClellan and the Corps Commanders and Army will be distributed among the subscribers to the N. Y. S. Volunteer Institute, for the education and support of the orphan children of our volunteers, on Washington's birthday, Feb. 22d, 1865. Every person sending $1 by mail, addressed to DAPT. H. R. RANDALL, Treasurer, Post-Office Box No. 4302, New York City, will receive any one of these engravings and a certificate of subscription, which will entitle the holder to one share in the property, which will be distributed as stated. For more particulars, send for Circular.
COL. W. H. YOUNG, Prest.
C. A. THOMPSON, Sec. Capt. H. R. RANDALL, Treas. o

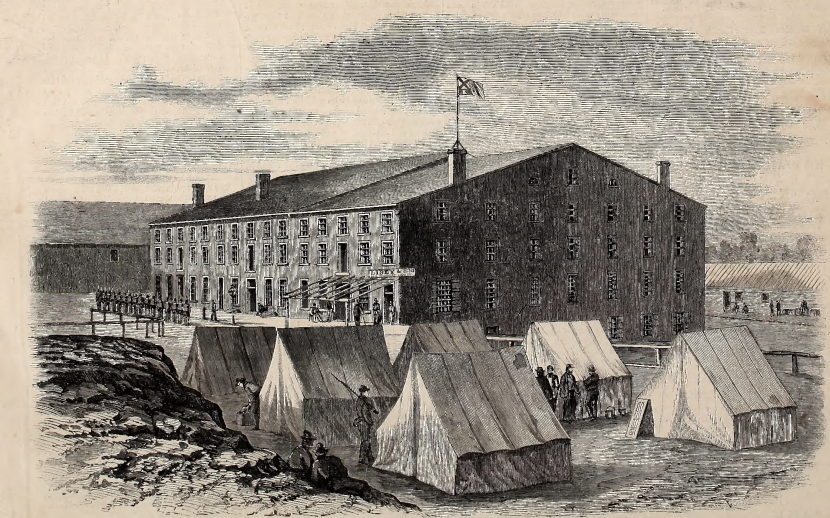
FOR A FORTUNE
Address FRANKLIN S. M. CO., Box 302, Boston, Mass.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 480—Vol. XIX.] NEW YORK, DECEMBER 10, 1864. [Price 10 Cents. $4 50 Yearly, 10 Weeks $1 00.

Gen. Sherman's Expedition.



Gen. Sherman, in casting loose from his base of supplies and in striking boldly, with a numerous army, from the heart of Georgia for the Atlantic seaboard, depending mainly upon the intervening country for his subsistence, plunged into one of those delicate and difficult enterprises which often baffle the wisest calculations.

But notwithstanding the long journey before him, and the obstructions which the enemy and the elements may place in his path, there has been, from the outset, a remarkable degree of confidence in the public mind of the North that his expedition will be crowned with complete success. He has been heretofore tried in such expeditions, and has proved his capacity to meet their requirements. Last autumn, in crossing with his veteran army corps from the Mississippi river, some hundreds of miles across a comparatively destitute country, to Chattanooga, and last spring, in his expedition across the State of Mississippi, he showed how, through hostile regions, swarming with vigilant enemies, large bodies of men may be moved without a base of supplies. In this present movement, his general orders, preparatory to setting out from Kingston, Georgia, exhibit a rare degree of foresight in preparing for all the possible contingencies before his army.

As we write these observations with no other information before us than stinted rebel confessions that Sherman's advanced cavalry have reached the suburbs of Augusta, we cannot dilate upon the successe he has already achieved. We guess, however, that before this paper passes into the hands of our readers they will have some news from Sherman that will stagger again the gold-jobbers of Wall street. The audacity of this fearless Yankee in this daring adventure has already created something like the confusion of Babel in the rebel capital, if we may judge from the debates of the rebel Congress and the commentaries of the Richmond journals. They have reason for something more than an ordinary sensation. Jeff Davis, it is now apparent, committed a dreadful blunder in ordering the army of Hood three hundred miles to the north-westward from Atlanta to threaten Nashville, Memphis and Paducah, in the belief that by this stroke of strategy Georgia would be relieved of Sherman's entire army. What has followed? Leaving that capable, skilful and vigilant soldier, Gen. Thomas, with a sufficient force of his veteran troops, to take care of Hood, Sherman wheels about with some forty, fifty or sixty thousand men as the case may be, and when Hood next hears of him this indefatigable Western Yankee here is three hundred miles away, moving towards the Atlantic seacoast, and with nothing but a few squads of raw militia left behind in all the State of Georgia to dispute his passage.

WINTER SCENE IN CAMP—SOLDIERS IN WINTER QUARTERS.

LIBBY PRISON, RICHMOND, VA.—PLACE OF CONFINEMENT FOR U. S. SOLDIERS CAPTURED BY THE REBELS.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.

Thus the rash expedient adopted by Jeff Davis to "relieve Georgia of the Northern vandals" has placed the State absolutely in the possession of Sherman, and has opened for him a passage through it, in any direction he may choose to go, with even so small a force as ten thousand men.

We anticipate from this bold and masterly enterprise of Gen. Sherman a success which, in destroying all the railway communications along the lines of march, will as effectively divide "the Confederacy" by the line of the Savannah river for military purposes, as it is divided by the Mississippi. We expect, in the next place, that this march of Sherman as a flank movement will be decisive, not only against Savannah and Charleston, but against Richmond and Lee's army. That army is now largely subsisted from the region which covers the lines of Sherman's march. He is thus assured of abundant subsistence; but what will be Lee's condition, when detached from Hood and the corn belt of Georgia, in addition to Sheridan's havoc among the supplies of the Shenandoah valley? This question, too, we expect will soon be settled.

Now Ready, Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This annual contains a greater amount of useful and entertaining information than any publication of its kind ever issued. It is justly the only Lady's Illustrated Almanac published. It is embellished with over 70 beautiful engravings, by the best Artists of the day, executed in the highest style of art. It contains directions for the parlor, hall-room, boudoir, storeroom, kitchen, garden, nursery and sick-room. In a word, it is the matron's vade mecum, as well as the young lady's companion, and it should be found in every household. In addition to general illustrations, it contains splendid portraits of Mrs. Lincoln and Mrs. McClellan, exquisitely engraved on steel, and a Colored Bathing Scene at Long Branch, printed on fine paper. This complete Lady's Manual, which contains more reading matter than an octavo volume—costs only 50 cents. It will be sent, postage free, on receipt of the price, either in currency or postage stamps. Address

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This valuable work is far superior to the prototype, the London Illustrated Almanac, and much cheaper; it contains valuable information, National, Historical, Political, Statistical, Astronomical and Useful, besides upwards of 60 beautiful Illustrations by the first Engravers, on American Artists, engraved in the highest style of art. It is also embellished with splendid Lithographic Portraits, printed on fine paper, of Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Admiral Farragut, from recent photographs. Price 50 cents.

Second Edition. Frank Leslie's Illustrated Comic Almanac for 1865.

This amusing Almanac is full of comic cuts, astronomical knowledge and history, side-splitting jokes and other facetiæ. The illustrations contain like at every page, by the best artists of the day, such as Bellew, Newman, McLenan, John Leech, Tenniel, Fiske, Howard, Fredericks, etc. FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED COMIC ALMANAC contains 32 pages, comprising an Illustrated Calendar for every month, and upwards of 60 humorous engravings. Price only 10 cents.

☞ Either of the above Almanacs sent, Postage Free, on receipt of the price.

Now Ready, THE JANUARY NUMBER OF The Great Comic AND SATIRICAL PAPER OF THE AGE, BEING No. 83 OF FRANK LESLIE'S BUDGET OF FUN!

Containing a Pictorial History of the Month, etc.

THE GRAND UNION BALL; OR, Butler's Wedding Garments.

ALSO,

UNCLE SAM Walking off with the Florida.

ALSO,

THE GREAT SNOWSTORM OF NOVEMBER, 1864.

And the Showing up of Poor Jeff Davis.

Besides numerous other Sketches, Humorous, Satirical etc., by the first Artists of the day; Bellew, Newman, Mullen, Rosenberg, Howard, Fiske, John Leech, Forbes, etc., etc.

Price 10 Cents.

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

Barnum's American Museum.

IMMENSE ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Gems, diminutive Dwarfs, Albino Children, Japanese Hop, Skating Bear, Wax Figures, Aquaria, etc., etc. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under ten, 15 cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 10, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

To Correspondents.

First-class stories will be read promptly, and if found worthy of acceptance, liberally compensated.

The manuscript should be legibly written, on one side of the paper only, and be accompanied with the address of the author. Manuscripts written on both sides of the paper will be declined without examination. Poems of a high order and moderate length will meet with attention.

By the decision of the authorities at Washington, ARTICLES FOR NEWSPAPERS and Magazines cannot be sent by mail at the rates of printed matter. It will be mail, letter postage must be paid. Packages over four ounces should be sent by express.

When parties wish MSS. returned by mail, postage stamps must be enclosed for the amount. Contributors or short articles, poems, etc., will do well to keep a copy, as the cheapest course.

Important to Subscribers.

In renewing Subscriptions, Subscribers are particularly requested to name the number with which the New Subscription should commence; this to avoid receiving duplicates or missing any number. It is desirable that a renewal should be made at least a week before the expiration of the former subscription, in order that our books may be kept properly adjusted. Attention to this will obviate complaints as to the errors which annoy both publishers and subscribers.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and Gazette of Fashion. Terms for 1865.

The following are our terms for this Magazine, containing the literary value of our Magazine and the superior excellence of its Fashion Department, are, we think, peculiarly commended to subscribers:

One Copy.....$3 00
Four Copies to one Post Office.....11 00

with the additional advantage of one Extra Copy, gratis, to the person sending the amount.

One Copy of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER and One Copy of FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE, to one Post Office.....$7 00

To the Public.

The approaching commencement of a new year presents a fitting opportunity for subscribing to FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, which is not only the oldest but the best, as well as the most enterprising Illustrated Paper on this continent, for excelling the London Illustrated News in its enterprise and general attractions. Without referring to its most triumphs, we shall merely allude to the present rebellion, which has been, and is, now historically and pictorially illustrated at every step by our Artists and Correspondents. Not content, as other illustrated papers have been, to rely upon volunteer aid for sketches and news, we have had a trained corps of the first artists, both foreign and American, to accompany our armies and navies, and furnish new with sketches, taken on the spot, of every interesting event.

It is not too much to say that no important expedition, during the last four years, either by sea or land, has left for the scene of action without FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER being represented in it by an Artist of acknowledged ability and experience. Incredible as it may sound, we have had, since the commencement of the present war, over 80 Artists engaged in making sketches for our paper, and have published nearly 3,000 pictures of battles, sieges, bombardments, stormings and other scenes, incidental to war.

NOR IS FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER less attractive in its other features. It is the only Illustrated Paper in America whose contents are purely original, the stories we act copied from foreign periodicals, but are written expressly for it, by the ablest authors of the day. Every number contains an original poem, beautifully illustrated; an original story, with two fine illustrations; besides shorter original stories, sketches and adventures; with a complete digest of the week's news, as well as a spirited description of the current scenes depicted in our pages; making, in point of fact, every number of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER not only the most entertaining periodical offered to the public, but a complete pictorial history of the week. In addition to these general attractions, it contains a continued story, by an eminent author, the last novel alone costing the Proprietor of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER $5,000 being twice the amount ever paid for a similar work.

We have also to remark, that FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER has never been the organ of a Party, but has always advocated the great cause for which we are fighting, THE RESTORATION OF THE UNION, on which our integrity as a nation depends. This has been the sole aim and object of our editorials, carefully avoiding those sectional views and personal prejudices which are distasteful to all true Americans.

At the present juncture, when so many important movements are in progress, it is especially essential that the public should be correctly informed; and to accomplish this object, FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER has Special Artists with Grant, Butler, Sherman, Sheridan, Porter and Farragut, as well as with all other armies now in the field.

TERMS FOR

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months	$1 00
One copy, six months	2 00
One copy, one year	4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	7 00
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	13 00
Five copies, one year	20 00

(With an extra copy gratis to the person sending a club of five.)

One copy of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper and one copy of Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine (the most complete Lady's Book published) for one year.....7 00

Address
FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Our Soldiers' and Sailors' Thanksgiving.

THANKSGIVING DAY of the memorable year of our Lord 1864 will be cherished as long as they live, as one of the proudest days in the calendar to our soldiers and sailors within striking distance of New York and New England. On our brave boys of the land and water service on the James, in front of Richmond and Petersburg, at Norfolk and Old Point Comfort, and down in North Carolina, and up the Shenandoah valley, and upon Arlington Heights, and at every army and naval station and hospital within reach of the monstrous supplies of the Empire City, what a glorious day our brave boys of the Thanksgiving appointment! What happy associations, what bright and cheering thoughts of home, what a sense of pride in their "home guards," must have filled the hearts of our "gallant boys in blue," as they regaled their stomachs with the roast turkeys, the chickens, the oysters, the mince and pumpkin pies, and "the doughnuts and apple-pie," with which they were supplied by shiploads.

This is another new feature introduced by "the Yankees" in the art of war, in addition to those abundant provisions for the soldiers' and sailors' benefit, our Sanitary and Christian Commissions and Metropolitan Fairs. The great Napoleon thought it a "big thing" if, after a victory, which overthrew a powerful hostile nation, he could give his veterans each a special glass of wine. Napoleon the Third, when providing for his coup d'état, it is said, won over the National Guard of Paris by a treat of Bologna sausages. The English ladies, in their philanthropy when they sent that patriotic and truly benevolent French cook, Soyer, to the Crimea, to make soup for their soldiers in front of Sebastopol, would otherwise have been wasted. These things were each and all very good in their way, but they appeal shabby—positively shabby—from the contrast with our Grand Union Soldiers' Thanksgiving dinner. Truly may it be said that when the soldiers, sailors and people, fathers, mothers, sons and daughters, wives and sweethearts, widows and orphans, of "the great Republic" are all thus bound together in their country's cause, they may smile at the impotent rage of this Southern rebellion, and defy the world in arms against them.

How Much Longer?

In a recent debate in the so-called "Confederate States Congress" at Richmond, on a proposition to call upon the several States concerned for their white men capable of bearing arms, but who had been exempt from military service by State authority, it was reported from the Committee on the subject, that the numbers of these exempts were as follows:

In Virginia	1,600
" North Carolina	14,600
" South Carolina	1,000
" Alabama	1,074
" Mississippi	1,110
" Georgia	15,000
Total	32,384

This exhibit of less than forty thousand able-bodied white exempts in "the Confederacy" shows that the Secession game will explain the agitation of the schemes at Richmond for a draft upon the negro cabins of "Confederate" slaveholders, to fill up the ranks of the rebel armies. The white material for the fighting, or rather parts of States still within the control of Davis, is exhausted. We have been furnished, in the debate referred to, some other statistics which are really startling as a demonstration of this fact. For instance, a Mr. Leach, of North Carolina, in defending the exempts of his State, said, "North Carolina has already furnished to the Confederate armies with one hundred and eighteen thousand men, one-third of whom he under the sod of Virginia." Now it is only necessary to say that, by the census of 1860, the white population of North Carolina was 631,000, to give the reader a convincing idea of the exhaustion of the fighting white element of the State, saving those fifteen thousand exempts needed for other purposes than fighting by the community and by the rebel army itself. Had our Government drawn upon the white population of the loyal States in the proportion to which North Carolina has been depleted for ranks, the State of New York would have been drained in this time of over six hundred thousand of her able-bodied men. It is sheer exhaustion of their white population, and, this necessity, therefore, that have compelled the rebel leaders to agitate the desperate scheme of arming their black slaves. It is apparent, however, from the fierce hostility manifested by the slaveholders concerned against this proposition, that it will not be tried. Adopted or rejected, the end draws nigh.

Bungling Incendiaries.

THE unsuspecting citizens of our commercial metropolis were treated to a new sensation on Friday night, the 25th November. Evacuated by the New York thus becomes associated with a dreadful incendiary plot, which will rank in history with that of Guy Fawkes. That the design was a "fire in the rear" in support of Jeff Davis was apparent with the discovery of its authors' existence. Some two months ago, one of the leading rebel journals at Richmond, the Whig, boldly advocated the employment by the rebel Government of a special corps of rebel incendiaries to fire the great cities of the North. The suggestion, it was said, competent and ready for the work, were already on the ground; and that a million of dollars devoted to the delectable enterprise would be money well invested. With the near approach of the Presidential election, the State Department at Washington became possessed of evidence of the existence of a treasonable conspiracy of this character, to suggest the issue of a general warning throughout the North to be on guard against incendiary conflagrations and demonstrations. It was in consequence of this information that New York city on election day was placed under the special military care of Gen. Butler, and the trusty troops brought with him from the "front." These and other precautions then adopted had, no doubt, much to do with the remarkable manifestations of law and order which marked the national election day in all our great cities, and throughout the country.

In this late diabolical attempt to set the city of New York in flames, the guilty parties, doubtless, acted upon the principle that, with the public sense of danger on this matter having passed away, the opportunity had come for fulfilling one of their dark designs. But if these deluded miscreants were not stopped by the rebel junta at Richmond, or its emissaries here, they made a miserable selection of their instruments. A more bungling experiment than theirs at firing a great city was certainly never made; and yet it seems providential that not one of the numerous buildings fired with their quick combustibles was destroyed. We trust that this horrid business will be sifted to the bottom, and that meantime the warning thus given will lead to universal vigilance against rebel emissaries and incendiaries.

Summary of the War.

TENNESSEE.

The rebel army under Hood, which has for some time remained near Florence, Ala., has moved northward into Tennessee, and occupied Waynesboro, the county town of Wayne, on the Tennessee River. It is about fifty miles directly north of Florence. A Union force is near Pulaski, Giles county, forty miles south-east of Waynesboro.

MISSOURI.

The news is somewhat vague; but it would seem as though Gen. Sterling Price has fled, with his broken columns, into Arkansas. The fact that Missouri voted for Lincoln shows how little real power the rebels have in that State.

VIRGINIA.

The armies before Petersburg and Richmond remain perfectly quiet, while the slight exception of an occasional exchange of a few artillery shots. Although some of the officers are considering holidays, it is said there is no intention at present of going into what is called winter quarters.

LOUISIANA.

On the 18th a Union expedition into the Lafourche district of Louisiana was attacked and defeated a rebel force, destroying their camp, baggage and a number of boats. It is reported that the rebel governor of Louisiana has organized, at Shreveport, ten regiments of negroes. Gen. Canby is rapidly recovering from his wounds.

SHENANDOAH VALLEY.

Gen. Early has retired to Fisher's Hill, where, it is said, he will remain during the winter, watching Gen. Sheridan. Many of his troops have been sent to reinforce Lee, in Richmond.

Mosby, the guerilla chief, has hanged seven of our men, in retaliation for Sheridan hanging an equal number of Mosby's robbers, who now, it is said, make no distinction between rebels and Union farmers, stealing and murdering with remarkable impartiality.

GEORGIA.

All we know of Sherman's progress is from rebel papers, and consequently not very reliable.

The Savannah Courier says that Milledgeville and Gordon were captured by the Union forces on the 23d inst.

The Augusta Constitutional says that the Oconee Bridge, five miles above Gordon, were burned at that point on the same day by the Union cavalry, who were repulsed, which, no doubt, means they retired after they had accomplished their object.

The Augusta Chronicle says Hardee's corps, from Savannah, on the 25th Nov., reports that the exchange of prisoners had stopped, as Sherman had cut off the railroad leading to Savannah. There was also a report that he had released 20,000 of our prisoners, whom he found at Millen. This is by no means certainly a rumor.

So great is the panic occasioned by Sherman's expedition that the Governors of South Carolina and Georgia called out the citizens of their respective States en masse.

TOWN COSSIP.

The great event of the week, the event that has come the nearest home to every New Yorker, is the firing of the new Fort.

It seems wonderful that we who sleep in such quiet and security, in such real and seeming fast ones that found in a great city, should be disturbed with pistol, musket and cannon, and yet, at this present writing, it seems wonderfully like it.

New York city, which feels the war afar off, and has never yet realized the strength of it, and cannot conceive anything that comes home to her, was aroused early on Friday night with the ringing of bells and the hurrying of men from a sense of public to answer the cry of "Fire!"

The alarm proved to proceed from almost every hotel in the city, and fire in its direst form was the cause. Simultaneously the flames broke forth from almost every fourth hotel and from Barnum's Museum, and for the moment all was terror and confusion. In a few hours all was quiet, and a fire smouldering and smoking seems only worthy to the struggle of the night before. The investigations of the police brought something to light, and we have a probable or absolute estimate of a concerted plot to fire the city, proved by the finding, in a dozen different hotels, of sundry bottles that had contained turpentine, turpentine, and other inflammables, as well as sundry leathern bags, hit by the incendiaries in the scamper they had enjoyed.

For the wreckage of hundreds of innocent lives, as well as the saving of great wealth, we have to be thankful that this horrible plot did not succeed, but for the future it is likely to do in arousing the people from the false security in which they are dwelling we have to be equally thankful.

Here, so far as we can see, is a band of 20 or 30 men, apparently organized, and fairly starting on a career of loss for murder and plunder into the very heart of one of the greatest cities of the world. What the great results could have been is one of those things that we shall why only be known on the last reckoning day, but the reasonable supposition is that pillage would follow. With the hatreds that certain Southern people have always held in reference to the wealth of Northern cities, this would not be the slightest difficulty in getting together there any gang of thieves of the Roger A. Pryor school, who would be willing to go to the bar a share of that same plunder. These men we have to look for in all wars and in any shape. Sometimes they will appear in the present form, sometimes as Confederate raiders, and sometimes in our common police reports as thieves, pickpockets and the like, but in every case we say the same men, and deserve the punishment due to their offence in its proportion.

We hope and believe that the fear of such wholesale mischief as this, when our loyal Northern people can look upon gangs of murderers and robbers, and identify them with the Southern people. Certainly it reckons the great mass of them may have become, but we can never be induced to believe that there is the lightened portion of that people whom we once looked upon as Christian, can be so utterly lost to all the instincts of humanity as to encourage an act like that which has just startled our whole.

Viewing it in this light, we think a great mistake is made in giving the perpetrators of such incendiarism even the benefit of believing that they are actuated by political motives. We should, in every case, look at every act, look upon them only as desperate villains, who without any redeeming feature have sought to live only for destruction's sake or for the sake of what they could get in the world not, as in times past, where there were riches, in the form of pirates and marauders, but coming into our borders, and seeking the construction of prisoners of war, or turn them over to military tribunals for trying them as the Southern school of criminals we would put them into the hands of the civil authorities, and let them be dealt with according to the measurable of the crime.

With regard to the future we cannot believe that so many as were concerned in it can all escape. Some of them must be known, and, if so, we trust that Uncle Dick's order of trial by court-martial and immediate execution will be carried out. Our State law makes their crime a capital one. Hanging is the penalty, and hanging by the neck is better, perhaps, than military law. Do not let us be shy any act identify these men with the Southern struggle. The struggle is degrading to humanity and must be left to history, but the struggle with this band of thieves is a present punishment, but the future we will leave to the care of the Almighty and the recorder of the acts of people.

Another event of the week has been the visit of Gen. Grant. With the known proclivities of our people to honor any one who may be finally successful in war, the man who has been near upon the longest of the people for the last year has any other, suddenly popular. There was no heralding of the fact, no raising of cheers, no parading and excitement, but he came like a shadow, and so departed. For a few moments a gathering, but only for a few moments, and no the same thing. Not a few remember, with the kind of speechmaking at Barnum's Museum, and almost broke Barnum's heart by their hatred to his discovery of a mermaid, the one ordinary existence, perhaps, the first in his stamp, obeying, as without doubt he does, the maxim of "speech is silver, silence is golden," only that he could, by gathering Stony Brookway, looking into the shop windows, and, paying, without a growl, for the poles in the cars, or allowing his little ones the many times the dancing jacks at "only 25 apiece" by St. Paul's Church, or the other who sends a standing boy dressed for the usual consideration of a quarter, top dancing, the great general goes on and enjoys the privilege of being where he is not known, and can do just as he pleases. And then what can be pleasanter than to go to Delmonico's on one's own? Many years it has been since they have met, and then the general was made Lieutenant-General and now Lieutenant without the General. Now, after a chat that deserves, every word of it, to be part of history, the senior Lieutenant-General gives a copy of his autobiography to the junior, and writes in it with his own hand these lines:

"From the oldest to the oldest General in the world.

"WINFIELD SCOTT."

Was it not equal to a battle won? We wonder whether Grant, on receiving the same copy of it at Vicksburg, felt more exultation than on receiving that original letter from Lee which was the means finally to come part of the keeping of our land?

We have had the pleasure of a bound from Dan to Beersheba, but as the mood strikes us so must we write. Something the last week or two has been decided in one of our courts, which, though unimportant in itself, has revealed a new danger to travelers, or, better one of those things which, though escaping the notice of the daily press, are worthy of all attention as making up our daily lives. It is one in which a verdict was rendered against the Harlem Railroad Company for $4,500 for injuries inflicted on a person while trying to cross the railway. The case was briefly this: A gate on the platform that only the railway belongs to the pedestrian, but to enter that platform you must cross the railway, and that the crossing so well belongs to the traveler on foot, and that the same law, that a vehicle must not be driven on an omnibus line, is bound to step on the holding up of a finger and give way to the foot passage. It has been a rule city that the entering of a passenger crossing any railway, and especially by the policy of under the wheels of the vehicle, is considered by the driver as a good joke, and something for which he can laugh back his fare above the drinking also above. It now becomes the duty of the railway authorities to see that the men whom they consider their sovereignty. If it can be done no other way, the footpassenger has a right to draw his revolver and shoot the fellow who deliberately seeks to take his life driving over him. We don't see a more desirable mode of bringing fellow to their senses, or advocate the law spanning a passenger, especially in Broadway, but only as a fact embodying the rights of pedestrians, and as a hint to the railway authorities and those who have no desire to be crushed under the wheels of a horse-car, that they will find that the people of Broadway of the imminent peril of their lives, then we shall have a little confusion in the streets, and a great thoroughfare, and shall not feel that we are an omnibus-crushed people.

Our Amusements.

"Don Sebastian," Dentlett's masterpiece, at the music hall, is drawing well. The audience is generally crowded with the dilettanti and fashion of the time; the performance is excellent. The play is one of great beauty and artistic effort, and yet, strange to say, it has not yet started the extraordinary success that it ordinarily from the press.

"Don Sebastian" is decidedly not a great opera. The music is entirely there is nothing absolutely striking, and we predict that it will not be one of the operas that will be familiarly through the streets, as the immortal march in "Faust," or the opening chorus in the "Barber of Seville," and yet it has had a success, and will continue to have, simply on the ground of the great excellence of the whole. It is a work. There is no opera of Donizetti's or Bellini's that has been produced, none that has been received with the critics of the great master. It is full of great dramatic effects, and we make no doubt that it will be as much heard often enough to form a real opinion, the probability is that it will be pronounced a masterpiece, and a work of eminent power. As the highest compliment we can pay, let us say that it reminds us of the immortality of Verdi, the orchestration especially so, without the resemblance to any one piece, but the great composer.

It was received with almost continuous applause and several encores, that of the trio between Zorilda, Ruiz and Don Sebastian being the most marked and earnest and real. When we have heard it a few times we shall have more to say of it.

There is a rumor about town that a body of highly respectable and wealthy citizens have banded together and have sworn by their lives, fortunes and sacred honor to protect the property of the city. In what way they'll bestow, or care playing Solon Shingle, until such an emergency arises it is impossible to say, but many occasions have grown up and witnessed him. How they will make their arrangements for this we are not knowing, but most certainly the thing at present seems to have some significance. We have always had a fear now for something like the sixteenth thousand time, and we have always found for the fear that the police with the public sympathies in it's search by returning nightly to their homes.

At Niblo's, through the week, we have had "The Seven Sisters," and "The Two Orphans," which is by no means "The Two Orphans," which is by no means nothing; firstly, because everybody knows it; and secondly, because it is a good piece, and well worth hearing about. It is of the modern French-Germanic sensation school, and the scenes are laid in Paris during the reign of the Bonaparte—Mr. Wheatley—who pop about him a pea on a hot shovel, down on the other, and another, and then he is ready to answer what poses to know which is which. Mr. Wheatley, as Fabien, Dorval, is one of the best in the situations and plain every day incidents enough to make a good actor.

Among the other successes of the day, we chronicle "Father and Mother," which is a touching portrait in how each of these, great as they are in their especial spheres, are helpless in the management of their child, even to the extent of turning people away from the house when she is sick, because they do not know how, and consequently cannot get in. There is a mystery about it, a little of the "Lady of Lyons" mixed with ugly reels upon their talent, and that backed by the talent of their business agent, who is one and the same.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE news most interesting to an American is that Capt. Semmes, the notorious pirate, had received the cross of the Legion of Honor. He was in command that vessel, off Madeira. The men were shipped in Liverpool, and were dispatched in another vessel to join Semmes. The Emperor Napoleon, in making the speech, explaining the nature of the duties expected from others in the confederacy, and of the conclusion of his address 39 out of the 190 men refused to go with him, and returned to Liverpool in the Lorral.

Lord Russell had delivered a speech at the University of Aberdeen, in which he declared his conviction that, no matter how long the struggle may last, the end will be the union and separation, the negro be for ever free.

Hon. J. O. Sanford, late British Minister in Athens, has been appointed to the same position in Spain.

From Mullet was to be executed on the 14th Nov., the Spanish Government having refused to release him.

The British legislature has approved of the treaty of peace.

The London papers continue their malignant comments upon the conduct of Capt. Collins in carrying off the Florida from anchored port, and some of them have published the correspondence between the British Consul at Bahia and the Governor of the Province, in consequence of the seizure of the piratical craft.

Lord Palmerston had made a speech at the Lord Mayor's dinner, in which he expressed a hope that the Queen's Majesties might soon be brought to a close.

The Emperor of the French has left Biarritz for Paris.

A Pan-Franco-Italian Convention and the removal of the capital from Turin to Florence, are the results of the late conferences of half-civilized nations are very remarkable.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—They are getting the capitol at Washington in readiness for the next meeting of Congress, December 5th. The old Representative Hall is to be converted into a National Statuary Gallery. Each State is privileged to furnish two statues, either in marble or bronze, of citizens distinguished by civil or military services.

The estate of the late Stephen A. Douglas has been settled. Mrs. Douglas realizes $75,000, and each of the two children of the deceased Senator receives over $7,000. All cash, of course, and good.

Hon. George Parkman, of Vermont, is dead, at the age of 72 years. He was one of the publishers and manufacturers of the Fairbanks scales, and was a wealthy and influential man in Vermont.

Governor Randall has ordered several towns in Illinois in Randolph nearly all the houses were blown down. In Chester $60,000 worth of property was destroyed.

The city clerk of Gloucester, Massachusetts, the leading fishing port of the State, proposes to contribute $2,000, if necessary, to the Sanitary Commission in the U. S. Army.

The Governor of California has called for another regiment of volunteers to garrison the harbor defences of San Francisco.

Mr. John A. Davis, a Quaker, residing at Achsnet, N. J., aged 90 years, cast his first vote on the occasion of the recent Presidential election.

Mr. Vallandigham has resumed the practice of law at Dayton, Ohio. We trust he will make no further political disturbances.

They burn houses in Fredericksburg, for fuel—it being cheaper than coal, and easier to buy wood.

Our Government is said to be pledged to non-intervention in the affairs of the French and Maximilian in Mexico.

On the erasing of the 26th of Nov. attempts were made to set fire to the public buildings in New York city: The St Nicholas, Metropolitan, Lafarge, St. Charles, Howard, Everett House, Fifth Avenue Hotel, Park and Barnum's Museum. The Fire Department were active and found in each of the premises named, not only trifling loss. In every instance the presence of a portion of turpentine was discovered in the beds, showing a combination of incendiaries, with a manifest intention of setting fire to the beds of every hotel in general conflagration in the city. Chief Engineer Kenny says: "The fire was evidently designed to kill the hotels to guard them against danger. Two persons were arrested on suspicion of the crime.

The U. S. Navy includes 588 steamers, of an aggregate tonnage of 498,000 tons. Large additions to the number are being made.

An ironclad, called the Canandaia, has been launched at Mystic, Connecticut, and will receive her guns and the various parts of her were shipped in the Aquila and sent to Key West. The barkof 1,000 tons, and the Aquila sunk at anchor, under pressure of a terrible gale of night. Her crew and the officers on board have been recovered from the sunken ship, and so the vessel is saved. The vessel, which is now on the coast of the Pacific, unless, perhaps, the Peruvians have launched an earlier one.

The city of Salem, Mass., is to be supplied with water from Wenham Lake.

Another gold mine has been discovered on Lucrat Fork, in Upshon county, Virginia. It is beautifully situated in a valley, and abounds in the under soil, in gold, in length, and 25 feet in width.

About 1,000,000 tons of merchandise were carried from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast by railroad during 1863, valued at nearly $650,000,000, and the value of the freight charges amounted to about $232,000,000.

A letter from Fortress Monroe says that a salute was fired on the 15th of November, in honor of the anniversary of Washington the late pirate Florida, in honor of the re-election of Abraham Lincoln as President of the United States.

On election-day, a town-clerk of a rural town paid his respects to the ballot-box and carried his ballot home, satisfactied that he had done something for the Lower Law and Order.

The World's Health Association met at Hope Chapel on the 16th. The room was filled almost entirely by a party of very pretty women, giving a graphic picture of her trials and tribulations while the public sympathies in a search by returning nightly to their homes.

At Niblo's, through the week, we have had "The Seven Sisters," and "The Two Orphans," which is by no means nothing; firstly, because everybody knows it; and secondly, because it is a good piece, and well worth hearing about. It is of the modern French-Germanic sensation school, and the scenes are laid in Paris during the reign of the Bonaparte—Mr. Wheatley—who pop about him a pea on a hot shovel, down on the other, and another, and then he is ready to answer what poses to know which is which. Mr. Wheatley, as Fabien, Dorval, is one of the best in the situations and plain every day incidents enough to make a good actor.

Among the other successes of the day, we chronicle "Father and Mother," which is a touching portrait in how each of these, great as they are in their especial spheres, are helpless in the management of their child, even to the extent of turning people away from the house when she is sick, because they do not know how, and consequently cannot get in. There is a mystery about it, a little of the "Lady of Lyons" mixed with ugly reels upon their talent, and that backed by the talent of their business agent, who is one and the same.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE news most interesting to an American is that Capt. Semmes, the notorious pirate, had received the cross of the Legion of Honor. He was in command that vessel, off Madeira. The men were shipped in Liverpool, and were dispatched in another vessel to join Semmes. The Emperor Napoleon, in making the speech, explaining the nature of the duties expected from others in the confederacy, and of the conclusion of his address 39 out of the 190 men refused to go with him, and returned to Liverpool in the Lorral.

Lord Russell had delivered a speech at the University of Aberdeen, in which he declared his conviction that, no matter how long the struggle may last, the end will be the union and separation, the negro be for ever free.

Hon. J. O. Sanford, late British Minister in Athens, has been appointed to the same position in Spain.

From Mullet was to be executed on the 14th Nov., the Spanish Government having refused to release him.

The British legislature has approved of the treaty of peace.

The London papers continue their malignant comments upon the conduct of Capt. Collins in carrying off the Florida from anchored port, and some of them have published the correspondence between the British Consul at Bahia and the Governor of the Province, in consequence of the seizure of the piratical craft.

Lord Palmerston had made a speech at the Lord Mayor's dinner, in which he expressed a hope that the Queen's Majesties might soon be brought to a close.

The Emperor of the French has left Biarritz for Paris.

A Pan-Franco-Italian Convention and the removal of the capital from Turin to Florence, are the results of the late conferences of half-civilized nations are very remarkable.

PAYING SOLDIERS AT ATLANTA.

Prior to Gen. Sherman's departure from Atlanta on his grand march across the rebel States, eight month's wages were paid to his soldiers. Our double army, with its thousands of camp followers, to whom this payment was made, and may also serve as a general illustration of pay-day in camp. It is treated by the soldier, and by every church and school in his own story. The soldiers file up and receive their money at the paymaster's tent, and when they have scored the names, letters and remittances for their wives and children and parents at home. The scene is joyous and exciting. Every soldier who has not wife, child and family is necessarily ill-starred, and may march to his duty with confidence that all is well at home.

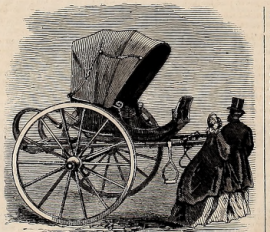
GEN. SHERMAN'S GRAND MARCH.

Our Map of the Field of War.

THE advance of Gen Sherman across the Southern States now absorbs public attention, both at the North and the South. The subject is discussed elsewhere in this issue, and we present in this summary our Map on page 180, while it takes in the entire field of operations, prominently displays the line of march, and may be easily moved from Atlanta in two columns—one towards Augusta, the other towards Macon—and thence to Milledgeville, Sherman to move forward, either to Savannah or Charleston, but most probably to Savannah. We have also taken pains to trace from the reports marked upon our Map, so that the reader will be able, at a glance, to comprehend the grandest military operations of modern times.

PAYING SOLDIERS AT ATLANTA.

Prior to Gen. Sherman's departure from Atlanta on his grand march across the rebel States, eight month's wages were paid to his soldiers. Our double army, with its thousands of camp followers, to whom this payment was made, and may also serve as a general illustration of pay-day in camp. It is treated by the soldier, and by every church and school in his own story. The soldiers file up and receive their money at the paymaster's tent, and when they have scored the names, letters and remittances for their wives and children and parents at home. The scene is joyous and exciting. Every soldier who has not wife, child and family is necessarily ill-starred, and may march to his duty with confidence that all is well at home.



A New York paper enumerates the sweet scented compliments that have been paid by the press to the President of the United States. There are some of them: Ape, gorilla, fool, silly story-teller, despot, liar, thief, braggart, buffoon, usurper, robber, swindler, monster, boor, boozer, tyrant, ass, knave, fiend, hound, butcher, land pirate, ——. Perhaps the most complimentary of these names could be longer." Jack should have lived in our day.

SCENE IN CAMP LIFE—CHIMNEY ARCHITECTURE—OUR SOLDIERS AT THEIR CAMP FIRES.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, ANDREW M'CALLUM.

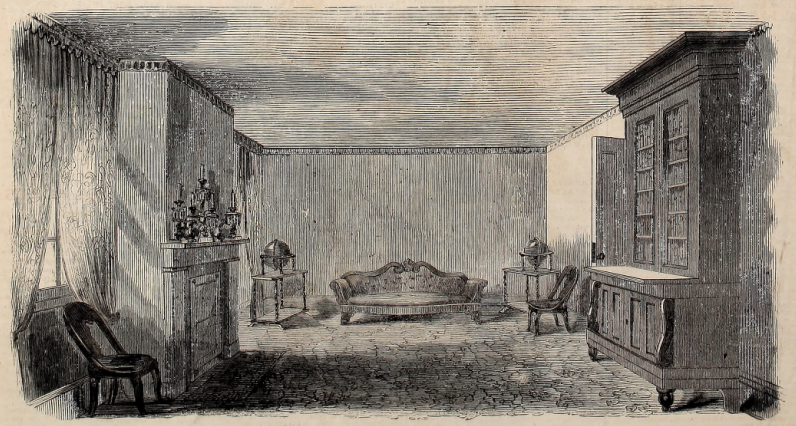
THE LIBEY PRISON.

Among the names that are "damned to the same everlasting fame" as the Black Hole of Calcutta, and the Prison Ships of Brooklyn, will ever be found that of the Libey Prison, at Richmond, Virginia, of which a sketch—from a photograph accidentally picked up by one of our travelling Artists—will be found on page 177. There is something odious in the very sound of the name of this Prison, which conjures up a perfect phantasmagoria of horrors. Prior to the outbreak of the civil war the building now infamous as Libey Prison was the store of respectable dealers in provisions—the Messrs. Libey & Son, Shipchandlers and Grocers. The upper part of it was devoted to the process of drying tobacco, and a large quantity of that valuable weed was stored in it. It is a large, straggling, uncouth building, as shown in our picture. The subject of the cruelties practised therein, towards Union prisoners, has been much canvassed. Southern apologists have declared that the inmates of Libey Prison had as good fare as the rebel soldiers, and that only those prisoners were severely treated who made themselves particularly obnoxious to their captors. Mr. Libey, senior, whose name is thus unpleasantly associated with a scene of hardship and suffering, has attempted to leave the South, and, according to one account, has been successful. But we think it probable that his escape was prevented, since nothing has since been heard of him. Our sketch of the Prison reproduces it with all its customary accessories. The tents in the foreground are those wherein the rebel guards and their officers are stationed. The Provost Marshal guard was drawn up before the main entrance of the Prison when the photograph, which we have copied, was taken. To the right is the James river, Libey Prison being situated near the banks of that blood-stained stream—the modern Scamander.

STEPHEN GIRARD'S OLD GIG, LATELY PRESENTED TO THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. Kirke, in his narrative of his recent peace proposition visit to Richmond, thus describes this charnel-house

"By this time we had reached a dingy brick building, from one corner of which protruded a small sign, bearing, in black letters on a white ground, the words:



LIBEY AND SON,
SHIPCHANDLERS AND GROCERS.

It was three storeys high, and I was told, 80 feet in width and 110 in depth. In front, the first storey was on a level with the street, allowing space for a tier of dungeons under the sidewalk; but in the rear the land sloped away till the basement-floor rose above ground. Its unpainted walls were scorched to a rusty brown, and its sunken doors and low windows, filled here and there with a dusky pane, were cobwebbed and weather-stained, giving the whole building a most unsightly and desolate appearance. A dozen-shirted boy, in ragged 'butternuts' and a Union cap, and an old man, in gray regimentals, with a beer keg and a limping gait, were pacing to and fro before it, with muskets on their shoulders; but no other soldiers were in sight."

SHERMAN'S ARMY CROSSING THE COOSA RIVER.

The Coosa river is formed by the confluence of the Etowah and Costenaula, which unite at Rome, Georgia. It flows south-west to the north-east extremity of St. Clair county, Alabama, after which its course is south until it unites with the Tallapoosa, and joins the Alabama about 10 miles north of Montgomery. Its total length is about 360 miles. Small steamers navigate this river between Rome and the Ten Islands, which is 180 miles.

Our Artist has sketched Sherman's army crossing the Coosa river after its recent pursuit of the rebel Gen. Hood. The soldiers are crossing on a pontoon bridge, while the cattle are fording the stream.

PARLOR IN PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S HOUSE, AT SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC—SCENE IN CAMP OF NEGRO REGIMENTS—METHOD OF PUNISHMENT OF NEGRO SOLDIERS FOR VARIOUS OFFENCES.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, JOSEPH BECKER.

BABBETTE.

BY MARY KYLE DALLAS.

I.

'Twas in the streets of Munich,
What time the sun went down,
Engolding every window
Within the quaint old town.

That first I saw that sunny face,
Those eyes of brightest jet,
And doffed my student's cap to thee,
My fair fraulein Babbette.

II.

An hundred braids of golden hair
Lay bound about thine head,
And on that dimpled cheek, ma belle,
Were rose and lily wed.
In all the lands my feet had trod,
No girl I ever met
So bonny or so debonaire
As thou, my bright Babbette.

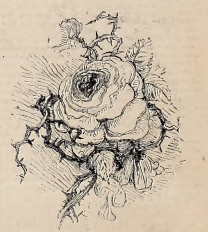
III.

I was bold, I know, to greet thee so,
Yet Love will have its way;
Then didst not bid me go, although
Thou didst not bid me stay.
I whispered, "May we meet again?"
And "No!" thy lips replied;
But thy glances had a thousand tongues,
Their "Yes!" that "No" denied.

IV.

Oh, I was very young, Babbette,
And thou wert wondrous fair,
And youth and love, my little pet,
Together much may dare;
So when it came to kissing thee—
Oh, was it not divine
The meeting of those scarlet lips,
So shly caught by mine?

V.



Sweet trystings at the eventide,
Vows breathed 'neath moonlit skies,
Till, to my heart's wild prayer, I read
An answer in thine eyes;
Then lay that little hand in mine,
And on its finger shone
The golden signet ring of love,
And thou wert all mine own.

VI.

Remembrest thou the garden bright,
Where tulips in a row,
And violets and ladies' pride,
And snowy waxdrops grow;
Thy father smoking in the porch,
Thy mother at her wheel,
When I, as at some monarch's throne,
A suppliant came to kneel?

VII.

My boyish cheek was pale, I know,
For never in my life
Throbbed my heart so as when I claimed
Forgiveness and—my wife!
Oh, I had neither house nor lands,
Nor gold, nor fame, and yet
Thy student lover they forgave
For love of thee, Babbette!

"NO ROSE WITHOUT A THORN."

VIII.

Oh, bless the streets of Munich old,
The stones trod by thy feet,
The summer sunset's lingering gold,
The chance that made us meet;
And God bless her who lulls to sleep
My babe upon her breast,
Babbette, the fairest in the land,
Of all sweet wives the best!

ARTHUR RECOVERS CLARA'S HAT.

TURNING THE TABLES.

BY LIZZIE CAMPBELL.

IT was about five o'clock on the afternoon of a bright day in last August that Arthur Meberley, with his two cousins, Alice and Kate Cleeves, and a friend of theirs, Fanny Compton, stood before the door of a pretty little white cottage, ornamented with green window blinds, in the small watering-place called Norfolk.

It was not a fashionable place, very few people knew anything about it, and that was why Alice Cleeves, a pale, delicate girl, whose parents feared she was going into a consumption, persuaded her cousin, and sister, and their friend Fanny to spend the summer weeks there instead of at the White Mountains or Saratoga or Newport. Mr. Arthur contemplated the white cottage for some moments, and then, turning to his companions, remarked:

"This must be the place, girls. Shall I ring?"

"Yes, Arthur, do. This is the place; I recognise it from the description in the letter."

Arthur rang the bell, and the door was opened by a neat little maid-of-all-work, who, to their inquiries for Mrs. Barton, ushered them into a well-furnished and even elegant little parlor, and told them that Barton would see them in a minute. Presently Mrs. Barton, a homelike, comfortable-looking lady, appeared, and Kate Cleeves at once took on herself the task of spokeswoman.

"Madam," she said, in the off-hand, dashing manner peculiar to her, "we are the party who answered your advertisement for summer-boarders."

Mrs. Barton's face beamed with a pleasant smile.

"I'm delighted to see you, young ladies. Very happy to see you, sir—Maberley, I think, I will show you to your rooms, and ten will be ready at half-past six."

At the tea-table Mrs. Barton presented a young girl, seated next to her, as her niece, and the whole party having bowed to each other, began to partake of the good things before them with a relish that was their best compliment to the landlady's cookery.

Before the meal was concluded Arthur had taken occasion to look once or twice at the landlady's niece, and discovered that she was a remarkably pretty young lady, and though her dress was simple, it was elegance itself, and made in the latest style. Her golden hair, parted in the middle, her lovely face, and rippling like waves, was tied in a knot behind, and ornamented with blue ribbon that came in the form of a necktie under her throat and wrists were ruffles of fine lace. Arthur knew it was both rich and expensive, for he had taken some pressed like it for his sisters that very summer. And then the little hands that handled so deftly the knife and fork completely enchanted him—so white and soft, so shapely. No vulgar country girl this. Who could she be?

After tea, and a fifteen minutes' rest in the parlor, the girls proposed a stroll out on the beach, and got on their hats and mantillas for the purpose, and a very pretty show they made, all with lawn dresses, lace mantles, and hair drooping in curls or rolled back in picturesque waves after the style, and Arthur in a complete suit of light summer clothes.

"Don't you think, girls," proposed that young gentleman, as they were about to start, "that we should invite the landlady's pretty niece? Perhaps she might like to stroll on the beach, too."

Miss Compton tossed her head slightly, not that she was the least in love with Arthur, but as he was the only gentleman about, and her two friends were only girls, she thought, she herself entitled to his entire attention. Alice Cleeves, who "thought all the world of Fanny," immediately spoke up in her behalf:

"I dare say the young lady has plenty of walks on the beach. She can go whenever she wants to."

"Nonsense, Alie!" replied Kate. "Where's the fun of walking all by one's self? I'm sure Arthur is quite right and very thoughtful, too. I'll ask Miss Barton myself."

"I'm not sure that her name is Barton, Kate," said her cousin.

"Well, Alie mind, Arthur. I heard her aunt call her Clara; so, to be on the safe side, I'll ask for Miss Clara," and she whisked out of the room, returning in a minute with that young lady, who, Arthur thought, looked prettier than ever, in little drooping black straw hat, with a white plume, and an embroidered muslin scarf on her shoulders.

"Well, I declare!" whispered Fanny, slipping her arm through Alice's, "Miss Clara doesn't spare compass in getting up ladies' finery. That plume's a real ostrich—and the scarf never cost less than thirty dollars."

Arthur, Clara and Kate brought up the rear, and the whole party were soon on the beach, gaily laughing and chatting, and picking up pebbles on the beach, to skim off over the water, cutting little edicts and circles as they flew.

Clara and Kate ran races on the beach, while Arthur shouted and gave the word to run or halt, and Alice and Fanny looked on from a distance, one too feeble and the other too proper to join in the fun.

Clara beat her hat in the chase, and reached the stopping-place with her hair all blown loose over her shoulders and about her glowing cheeks, panting and laughing, and calling on Arthur to confirm her statement when she declared she had won the race. But Arthur was off in search of the missing hat, which was finally captured out of the sea, covered with seaweed. Clara declared it was no matter, though the plume was drenched with seaweed, and insisted on wearing it when the seaweed tangled in it; and "looked like a Syren as she was," Arthur said, when she placed it above her dishevelled rippling hair, that reached half way to her feet.

"But we can't stay any longer," she said, looking at Alice, "or we must go home and take off all these wet things, since you would insist on getting my hat. I'm sure it wasn't worth such a dipping."

Arthur drew her little hand within his arm, and made a complimentary speech about "adventuring for such marauders as these: it is fair to that shore washed with the hurtliest sea;" and Clara blushed a most enchanting rose-color; and then their all turned homeward, laughing and talking in the gayest manner. And even Fanny became fascinated with the landlady's pretty niece; and Alie, of course, followed suit.

A week passed, and the little party from the city thought they had never known what real comfort and happiness was till they had found them in Mrs. Barton's cottage.

Kate, whose friends feared she was disposed to be a little fast, declared it was perfectly "jolly" and she never had such a glorious time. And then the breakfasts—always ready at eight, and large, with cups of foaming milk; omelettes made of fresh laid eggs! How glorious! Alice declared it was delicious, and showed her appreciation by a pair of rosy cheeks, and better health and spirits than she had known for years; and Fanny, though she said nothing about it, was never beheld when meals were on the table, and did ample justice to the viands. As for Arthur and Clara—they were evident what they were doing to and Fanny felt it her duty to warn her two friends of the snare their cousin was falling into.

"And what if he is in love with her," retorted Kate, "it couldn't be low with a prettier girl, and she's just as pretty as a dream."

"Pretty enough," assented Fanny, "but don't you see she is as artful as anything can be? I don't believe she cares a pin for him—it's only his money and position she covets."

"Stuff and nonsense! Let me tell you, Fan, there's nothing mean or mercenary about that girl; and I ask nothing better than to have her for a cousin. I love her dearly."

"Oh, well, my dear, of course it is more your affair than mine. But I wonder what Ellen Tracy will say to it."

"Bother Ellen Tracy! Let her look out for herself—Arthur won't engaged to her; and she hasn't a chance in the world. And as for her's as handsome or fascinating as Clara, no one's to blame for it, and I guess she's not the one to lose her heart about. Arthur and Kate hunmed a gay air and ran up to her room.

A minute after enter Alice with an open letter in her hand.

"What's the news, Alie?"

"Oh, Fanny, you there! Who do you think is coming to stay three weeks? Can't you guess—Arthur's sisters, Ellen Tracy and Will."

"What—Will Tracy!" and Fanny's face flushed with a very brilliant color.

"Yes, you needn't blush so. I'm sure you knew he wouldn't leave you here all summer by yourself."

"When are they coming?"

"Next week—this is Friday; they'll be here Monday evening."

"Splendid! I'll tell, you, Alie—let's keep it a secret. If Kate knows she'll tell Arthur, and if he knows he'll have time to model his conduct to Clara after that of Will, and their sister has no surprise he will be compelled to show which of them he cares most for."

"Will Tracy the capital, wouldn't it; and, perhaps, would bring him to terms with Clara; she's a nice little creature, and he has no right to trifle with her."

Monday evening came; and with it three very fashionable ladies in the persons of the Misses Maberley, the scorn of Miss Tracy and a good-hearted, handsome, dashing young fellow, by name Will Tracy.

Arthur and Maberley turned up their aristocratic noses at Clara as soon as they discovered how things were going; and as for Miss Tracy, between jealousy of the fair-haired beauty and molested pride at Arthur's neglect, she fell out of humor with herself, she was most unpleasantly situated.

There are two kinds of young men in this special particular of summer-boarding, who can be bullied and laughed and sneered out of an attachment to a girl whom his friends don't approve of; and whether she is made more devoted and determined by such treatment. Fortunately for himself, Arthur belonged to the latter. So, when he found that Miss Tracy had taken a cold shoulder on the lady of his love, he at once made up his mind to propose and carry her off in spite of them all.

A riding party was proposed by somebody, and every one at once agreed to it. Of course Arthur invited Clara; and Kate proposed accompanying him—either not having observed the manner of his sisters, or deeming it of no consequence. Miss Tracy took Will, and Maberley took Miss Belle—sympathised; Kate applauded and admired Arthur's spirit; Alice quietly approved and Fanny looked on, with the fair brunette's rage, and wondered if it annoyed Will as much.

As Will seemed to find only time enough to wait on and admire his fair fiancé, she soon became conversant with the fact that he was almost the least on the subject; and the cavalcade set out, led off by Arthur and Clara. Neither the Misses Maberley could boast of more magnificent horsewomen, and finally became ashamed of their awkwardness when contrasted with Clara's perfect grace and confidence of her animal, and declared they would return to the house again.

There was nothing for it but compliance, and as each had a brother there, the whole party were obliged to turn their horses heads homewards. Arthur, Kate and Miss Tracy couldn't possibly be lifted from their saddles by any one except their own brothers.

Kate made no attempt to conceal her indignation, and expressed it in terms of "some people's selfishness," in very plain terms; while Clara, comprehending the movement, smiled archly in answer to Arthur's apologies.

About a mile from the house the horse ridden by Miss Tracy suddenly became unmanageable; and before either Will or Arthur could succeed it Clara was beside her. Between fright and vexation, Miss Tracy had contrived to lose her bridle and get her skirts entangled in the stirrup; and Clara, dropping her bridle on her horse's neck, gave all her attention to restraining the other horse's animation.

She had just succeeded in putting the bridle in Miss Tracy's hands, and disengaging her skirt, when the gentlemen came up. Arthur uttered an exclamation of admiration at sight of Clara's coolness, on hearing which Miss Tracy gave her an impatient push, and whether accidentally or otherwise, flashed her whip across her horse's eyes. He gave one bound, reared backward, and before Clara could gain the bridle, or make an effort to keep herself in the seat, she was thrown to the distance of several feet, and fell striking her head against a stone on the roadside.

There was a simultaneous shriek of dismay; and the passionate, jealous beauty turned pale as ashes at a sight of her own act.

Arthur was kneeling beside the insensible girl, and with her head raised on his arm was pouring into her ear every tender word that love and fear could inspire; and when Clara recovered sense, she was strong and healthy, and the blow had only stunned her for a minute, while the passionate words she heard from her lover brought something like her usual color back to her cheeks. She declared herself well enough to walk home, as her horse had quieted down, and at least she would try soon. She was a little giddy, then, and her head drooped on Arthur's shoulder, the paler returned to her face—and the cavalcade had started again.

Like an infant he raised her in his arms, placed her easily on the saddle before him, and holding her head on his breast slowly walked the horse homeward.

Kate said she would ride on ahead, because she was more than half frightened to death; and Miss Tracy would have been glad to follow her example, had she dared to urge her horse into a canter. But she had ample time then to reflect that she had gained nothing by her ebullition of temper.

Mrs. Barton was indeed, frightened; but there was Utile occasion for Clara, after lying on the lounge in the parlor, propped up among pillows for two or three hours, made her appearance at the tea-table looking quite as usually well. It will be sure, Arthur had set beside her, holding her hand in his, all these hours, and it must have been very blind indeed that didn't see that they perfectly understood each other.

That same week Arthur announced his intention to be married to Clara, and to have it over before the wedding. Kate screamed with delight, and stipulated for the office of chief bridesmaid. The Misses Maberley declared they gave notice that they would return to town that same evening, and desired Will to be in readiness. That heartless brother refused.

"Delighted to wait upon you, girls, I'm sure; but you see I'm engaged to be groomsman, and I wouldn't slight dear Arthur's request for worlds."

"Then we shall return to town alone."

"If you are determined to deprive us of the pleasure of your countenances, that, I fear, is just what you must do."

The indignant trio left the room in disgust. Fanny, pleased with anything that pleased Will, accepted the invitation with pleasure; and Alice kissed Clara and called her "cousin."

Everybody who writes a story declares that before a fancy bridal party can take place she must have a lovely lovely in white satin, lace and orange flowers. And so beautiful was Clara—what fairy fancy could condescended, to remain—declared that Arthur never need be ashamed of his bride's appearance. She looked a little country-girl, without a penny to bless herself—well, I wonder what pups will say?

When Clara came to sign her name after the ceremony, she looked at Arthur with a mischievous smile, and then wrote for a moment on the paper.

"Well, Clara, it's a joke I declare, but I don't even know what your name was; let me see," and he looked over her shoulder—"Vernon!"

"Yes, Arthur, long enough he had been shot, "Vernon!"—he repeated, "and Clara Vernon it is—is it sannot be——"

"Hush!" she answered, putting two little fingers on his lips, "it is, but don't say a word."

The next movement of our party was to return to New York, where Arthur made the most splendid preparations for a large party to introduce his bride to New York society.

It was now late in September, and great numbers of the fashionables had returned to the city. Among the guests were Miss Tracy, Kate and Alice Cleeves, Will Tracy and Fanny Compton. Arthur was overjoyed at having upon the movement of the young bride with interest, and could not help admiring that she bore herself bravely; but still he had a most unpleasant sensation in knowing that there would soon be a precious commotion, when Maberley's pore learned that his son and heir had married a penniless girl.

At last the looked-for moment came.

Enter the elder Maberley, to him advances Mr. Arthur, leading the beautiful woman in the room leaning on his arm.

"Father," he says, "this is my wife."

Mr. Maberley looked upon his new daughter.

"Eh—what! Clara, my dear, I'm delighted to see you—and you, my dear little daughter! I would have eloped you from all the world," and he kissed the bride's cheek, "but, you see, which she returns heartily, and kissing him warmly, says:

"Dear Mr. Maberley, how glad I am to call you father!"

Then you may lay a very large wager there was much better among this brilliant assembly, and sundry guesses, and innumerable suggestions, as to the real position of Clara's friends—as to her wealth—previous lucky to get her for a daughter. Pumkins indeed! Well, thank you! She's Clara Vernon, and a ward, just now! Clara Vernon's ward, and worth half a million! She's been spending her income as the adopted daughter of her father's, a widow lady by the name of Barton, and that's how nobody has ever heard of her before.

Arms and Belle Maberley would have been glad even of the poor shelter of hiding their heads in the sand; but failing that, they were content to be covered with confusion, to hear Clara's pardon, and acknowledge the tabooed soon fairly turned on them.

Clara only smiled at their discomfiture, and immediately forgave them. "It was a mistake," she said; "but I'm sure we may all be good friends. Our acquaintance began with trouble; but there is no rose without its thorn."

THE OLD SONG.

BY GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS.

Sing again the song you sung
When we were together young—
When there were but you and I
Underneath the summer sky.

Sing the song, and o'er and o'er,
Though I know that never more
Will it seem the song you sung
When we were together young.

MEDUSA

CHAPTER I.

HERNE COURT, February 10th, 1863.

DEAR EDWARD—I am not coming up. Your bill of fare does not tempt me. I don't want to see "Bel Demonio;" I saw the "Duke's Motto," which was very much better. I don't care in the least about scenery and dresses, but I adore having bare rowed. "Buy Bias," if you like! I have seen it four times, and am good for a fifth; or if they would only give that naughty little French play, which, in dear consistent old England, it is proper to say it is not to say, and in which I believe Fechter is absolute perfection, I would scatter decorum to the four winds, set William at utter defiance, and walk manly off with you to the stalls in no time. Only fancy! Ha—William wants me to see it in Paris, and left me at home (though I was dying to go), and then he came back, and told me it was a very fine play, and that I shouldn't like it; after which he went back again himself. What a prodigate old William! No; I shall wait till I have a good Fechter and Fechteress, and then send you my commands as to places and so forth. London is so dirty and dismal at this season; no air, no light, no flowers. My conservatory here is already one mass of bloom, camellias, rhododendrons, orange-trees, azaleas, and a perfect regiment of dear little hyacinths and narcissus, making the whole house smell of the spring—it is too pleasant to leave. Besides, the country, even this season, is rather boring, and gives one an impression of complete and pure delight twenty times a day. One's human resources in London don't give one that quite so often; even you don't, my dear boy, fond as I am of you. And why, when are you coming to Herne Court again? I have been thinking of getting up all the marriageable girls in the neighborhood for your especial benefit, and among them there are really two or three who I think would make your affair, as the French say. First, there is Miss Laura Baker, a most cheerful active girl, with an even flow of great animal spirits (invaluable for you who have none); not very good looking, though not ugly, and has a head bit suddenly turned up at the end; the mouth rather large—but a thoroughly good girl. Do you like the description? Then there is another contrast. Little Amy Robarts, twenty-two, and fifteen hair; not quite so much conversation as Laura, but a good deal of the old Women, and as quiet and down at the school. Her only real drawback is a rather tiresome little trick she has of repeating the last two words every time you speak; if you remark that it is a fine day, she answers, "Yes, it is a fine day;" and if you add, "Charming for driving," she mechanically replies, "Quite charming for driving." But I feel sure you will soon overcome in a great measure from shyness, and if you would only come down and teach her to get fond of you, you could cure her of it, I have no doubt, in a short time. Then there is perhaps tells most against her in society is, that she has one leg a little shorter than the other; it was an accident, poor thing, which, you know, isn't like having been born so, and one does not see it when she sits. Now, what do you think of coming down and making love to her? Oh! how I should like to see you once really thoroughly in love—utterly and miserably in love. It would be so pleasant, and so much better for you than going about for ever as you do, singeing yourself and every one else in a continual flirtation. You are so fearfully capricious. Think of it for my sake, now do; and come down like a dear good boy, and look seriously at Amy and Laura.

Yours affectionately,
HARRY BRANDE.

61 Pall Mall, 15th February.

DEAREST HARRY—I am nailed in town by business, I am sorry to say, for the next week or two, as there are quite symptoms of my going to stay next to Herne Court. How like your dear, funny, insensible (shall I say nonsensical?) self, your letter is! and how completely one sees by it how you always sailed in smooth waters. If you had not, you would not desire that your friends should be the permanent subjects of complacent, touched of merely taking a pleasant little occasional search. After all, you and I are very much alike (but for me, thank goodness, I enjoy myself much more), each in my poor aunt, and of which, as you truly remark, I have little or none). We both lead placid contented lives enough, and both rejoice in the possession of undisturbed hearts. Why, then, do you always quarrel with me for a condition of existence which you so completely share? Now, do you say? Don't be angry with me if I don't give dear old William credit for having stirred the depths to that amount; and don't be angrier still, if I ask if any one else ever did? No, it isn't possible: you never would go hunting after great emotions, with that good unclouded child's face of yours as you do, if you knew what the words meant. In the meantime, I am afraid neither Laura nor Amy will do; neither of them seems to be the little darling I require. I think I fancy rather less figure—and I do mind the leg.

Yours affectionately,

E. S.

Herne Court, 16th February.

Your questions have not made me angry; they have only set me into fits of laughter. You are perfectly right, dear Edward. I have not the remotest comprehension of the passions I read and hear of, and I owe to an almost morbid degree of curiosity with regard to states of feelings of which I have not the smallest conception in my own experience.

You know what a secluded life we always led in the country. An unbroken unshining stillness of home affection and duties during all our earlier childhood. We had poor papa when we were too young to understand the terrible meaning of death; and since that, the only shadow that ever came to darken the days was Minnie's marriage. We had been dear companions in all our occupations and pleasures; we had never been away from one another in our lives before, and the separation fell very heavily upon my heart. Shortly after Minnie and George had gone abroad, when the sad blank of her absence was beginning itself dotibly felt, now that the excitement of the wedding was over, just when I was at my very worst, in short, Mr. Bramble came down to the neighborhood to look at an estate which he had some thoughts of purchasing. He had been an old friend of papa's, and mama asked him to come and stay with us while he made his inquiries about Beech Hill: the place did not please him, but there were others, more or less near us, to be seen in the neighborhood, and so he stayed on and on, and at the end of two months he had found both a home and a wife to suit him: he bought Herne Court, and asked me to be the mistress of it. Mama was overjoyed at the prospect of giving me into such safe keeping, and having me settled tolerably near her; and William was so dear and good, so excellently kind to me when he was feeling and losing Minnie, and so perfect for mama, that I was very sure I should never meet any one I could esteem and love as he does; so I married him, and we were married. There are as many as twenty-four years between us, but I think he seemed to me quite an old grandfather when I married him, I believe I have got to think him younger by the way with him. I have my own dear man, unselfish, tender and guileless as he is. And although he did not "stir my depths" very violently—I did not say to stir, which I think is awful—he has filled my heart entirely for the twenty years that we have been married, during which time he has developed me like a large sunflower sets me like a devoted friend, and petted and spoiled me as I thought it was only in one's mother to do.

And now for the second question, which I dare say you thought was sufficiently answered by what I have said—and so it is—and yet it isn't quite, either—that is, I have just a wee corner of conscience about it that makes me speak, at the risk of your calling me more than your proportions to my small confidence than it ever deserved.

About a few years after we were married we passed a season in town, and became acquainted with a person whom William took an extraordinary fancy to. He shot like William till he hunted like Nimrod, he drew like an artist, and the worst of it was that he sang like an angel, and that dear good William, who doesn't know God's Queen from Xaxier Boodle, and had never cared about my singing in the least, must needs bethink him suddenly how good it was for me to be keep up my music, and was quite delighted to see my little talents appreciated by capable people, and so was I, I confess I do so blame. The consequence is, about this man to come down and stay with us, and he didn't see that by degrees he was beginning to pay me more attention than he ought, and that I might end with getting more distressed upon his companionship in those pursuits in which William is not sympathize with me, than was desirable. Well, this state of things went on, and we sketched together, and we sang together, and we read German together, till at last my life became spirited with an atmosphere to which it had been an utter stranger until then. I can't mean to say that I cared for the man in the least; but he troubled me—don't ignore the word more than its exact meaning—he just troubled me. He never had said anything to startle me, or that I could possibly be expected to take offence at; but I was made to feel that I was getting on day long: respectfully, but still adored, and thought it was certainly sometimes a little distressing, I found it a little pleasant too.

At last things came to a crisis; one of his long summer visits had just drawn to a close, and he bade us good-bye, more than usually out of spirits at leaving us. He was to go abroad early in the autumn, and not to return until the following spring. I watched the carriage as it drove away over the bridge, and then I went into the morning-room, got my work-basket, established myself on the lawn, with a sense of intense relief at being free of him. His manner during this last visit had got somewhat to be more earnest than it used to be; not content with the many hours which we naturally passed we could either compass, he would make excursions for being alone with me, which used to annoy me; he would go on fishing with William, and then forget some essential bit of tackle, and come back again to the house to fetch it, or agree to meet him at some particular spot, see him well started, and then pretend a headache to stay at home with me; and what enraged me more than all the rest was, that once or twice, in a sort of indirect covert way, he hinted that William's want of perception proceeded from his not having a proper appreciation of me, and from the indifference and apathy of age. He could not see that it was the gruffle sness of the creature, who thought no evil, because he was incapable of it himself. To all of this I could oppose nothing, because he managed so cleverly that I could not come to an explanation with him without seeming to assume that he had feelings for me to which he had taken no pains to give an impression. It was a state of things that had worried me, and made his visit odious to me, and I felt thoroughly glad that he was gone. I put my work-basket, and settled me out my work, when lo! between the folds of it, I found a letter lying, neither more nor less than the most audacious piece of flattery and nonsense I could not know what to do; I did not like to conceal it from William, and still I could not bear to hurt him either by a scene or entirely unhappy and ill at ease. However, the letter was going abroad almost immediately, we should not meet again for ages, and I made up my mind to say nothing about it. Of course I did not dream of answering him, and as he now took to writing invariably to William instead of to me, as he had used occasionally to do, I thought my silence had been understood, and that his addressing me no more was a sign of grace.

We were expecting a large shooting party on the 1st of September; and on the 28th of August William was obliged to run up to London for a few business hours. Of course I did not dream of a second letter, and I was not even surprised at receiving him, and asked him if he had seen any of our friends in town. I was perfectly unprepared for the fact that the very first person he had met on St. James's street was the hero of my story, whom I had already fancied well upon his travels; and still more so when William added:

"He seems altogether undecided about going abroad, and I told him he had better come down here for the 1st."

I didn't close my eyes all night, and got up the next morning in a very different mind as to what it would be best for me to do. I knew that if I were to have him here again with that idiotic love-letter fresh in both our memories, and yet I hated to tell William why, in a matter of the heart, that it was so far from him to suspect, and so I went thinking and thinking the matter over, when I made up rounds to the stables and saw to my guests, to see that all was comfortable, and to leave in their portfolios and envelope-cases the necessary materials for writing. I came back again to the little room which he had always occupied, and the moment I got into it I felt so suddenly saddened by the idea of his coming again with that odious common secret between us, that I made up my mind that as soon as I had deposited my little store of paper in his portfolio, I would run and find William at once. It was a fine night, and thing hidden from him a single moment longer. I hastily seized the blotting-book, it accidentally fell from my hands, and out of it dropped a single sheet of paper, which I opened, and read the following:

"Oh! ma tre douce vie!"—and this, mind you, was only letter A of the performance, it went quite as far as the fourth, and I don't know if it had more compliments" in the envelope, and I don't care to see. I was going in to breakfast, I met William, who was in a letter in his hand, looking the very picture of disappointment, and I knew that finally made up his mind, and had started for Paris the night before."

This, dear Edward, has been the only approach to a romance in the whole of my life, and the only concealment I ever had from my husband. I don't think it is a thing to be proud of, though it may be a proof of inferior organization—I sometimes think it is—meanwhile, in all humility, I thank God for it. I am very glad to be a victim of this very defect that I am quite the happiest woman of my acquaintance.

Your affectionate cousin,

HARRY BRAMBLE.

CHAPTER II.

MRS. WILLIAM BRAMBLE was a real lover of music; and she liked best the very best, which is a rare quality in those who pretend the most to be devoted to it. She had a fine soprano voice of its country, but contrived every now and then to take a run to London when some particularly tempting performance might be given there or at Jenny's Hall. Her husband did not care to lose a day's hunting by accompanying her on these innocent little excursions of hers, and so she set off, as does for a playfellow. She was sweet-tempered, refined, pleasant and kindly, and at seven or eight-and-thirty had preserved the most delightful air of girlishness. Children women do sometimes keep it to the last, that pretty, almost infantile candor of the eyes; and if you saw Harry's only sorrow that at Herne Court he little feet were to be found growing overhead, and no little voices filled the house with that sweet treasure so unlike and so much better than any other music in the whole world. Harry Bramble had been left his parents, and was master of a very good fortune, but he lived more like a poor man than a rich one, had no expensive tastes, and not a particle of ostentation. He was now twenty-nine years of age, and his cousin and fast friend, Harry Bramble, thought it would time that he should take to some profession ing and riding, and that he should marry and and keep house, and settle down, like other folks. Two days after dispatching her letter to 61 Pall Mall, she saw an irresistible musical announcement in the newspaper, and Edward Saville received the following:

Dear Edward—Such an advertisement in today's Times! Joachim, Halle and Piatti all together! Take places for Monday week; I am coming; and if you like eating horrible food, I will provide you with a basket, plus at 9 o'clock. But no, don't do that, dear—the dinners there are too nasty for anything, and though you wouldn't mind, I should for you. So just leave the tickets for me, and we will give each other rendezvous at eight o'clock at the St. James's Hall.

I have come to the conclusion of a new young lady; the family has only lately come into the neighborhood; we called when first they arrived, and yesterday the mother and daughter returned our visit. I spare you the description of the mother; the daughter is tall, and fair, and large, and not worrying, and her name is Beginald Peregoon; she's from an—shire (as afraid you'll think that rather old?), but though she is altogether too ripe for "little darling," you might, perhaps, make a sort of inquiry part of her. I believe I would like to see you married to your great-grandmother rather than not married at all. You see I am beginning to feel that you have become one being but a dreamer. It has been the ruin of you.

Your affectionate cousin,

HARRY BRAMBLE.

P. S.—I have had a lovely bullinch given to me, and have hung him up between my linnet and lark. He whistles delightfully, and only every now and then bazards a few mellow little chuckles down in the very bottom of his throat. I must take his instructions in non-conventional music, when the linnet and lark have an answering each other by the hour together; but the linnet, who prepares the interval of the lark, the instant poor bully attempts to open his mouth, lapses into rigid silence, sticks his stupid little beak down into the sawdust and gravel, and sulks. He makes himself an odious object of disgust and discontent. So vulgar of him! And so like the world, isn't it? I have seen two fine fellows have a long and friendly conversation just in the same way, letting all his observations drop exactly as if they had not been, and carefully listening to the remarks of the other gentleman. I'm glad I don't live in a great town! Be sure you take the seats in time, so as to get good ones near the orchestra.

Mr. Saville enjoyed the dinners as he was bid, and on the following Monday he deposited Mrs. Bramble's ticket, according to her order, at a small private hotel in St. James's place, where she was staying with her husband, and went to Exeter Hall, in the neighborhood of which he was already there, or, at all events, of seeing her appear shortly after himself. The places were the last side-seats at the end of the room, close to the orchestra. Mrs. Bramble was not yet come, and her chair was vacant. He took possession of the one next to it, and looked about him. It was a very full attendance, and every available platform upon which the artists were to perform was crowded to suffocation by a less elegant though not less enthusiastic portion of the audience. The concert had not begun, and he looked up and down the long lines of faces in search of something pretty with which to occupy himself, and after the enumeration of Harry Bramble should appear. Whole families there were of short people, with knobby heads and fat faces, and he watched the performers attentively in large massive books, which they had brought with them; wearing virgins with Roman noses, and rather pretty figures, who kept upon their heads endless fabrics fatally fanciful, composed of aged flowers, tumbled ribbons, limp strips of black lace, and bonnets like nothing, that hung on, or rather dangled off, the few straggling dark hairs still clinging feebly to the sides of divisions as which you could see the parting in three or four places and four. Here and there you caught a glimpse of a fresh little girl, with blooming cheeks and a large-eyed wonder at the whole thing; but these looked almost like that of an angel by contrast with the dingy multitude by which it was surrounded.

A noise of steps on the wooden staircase that leads to the platform, a burst of applause from the public, and Joachim and three other gentlemen made their way to their places for the first concert. Mr. Saville, who was looking at them through his glass, felt a rustle by his side, and became aware that Mrs. Bramble had come in from bench, which, up to the present moment, had been empty, were suddenly filled. He looked round and saw that a party of about a large wife much the same as the old ones, with the exception of the woman who occupied the seat nearest to him, and the daughter to boot, who, in the first by some strange mistake, so entirely dropped out of another world did she appear. When he first perceived her she was leaning back in a position of fashion repose against the rail of the bench, with her face turned away from him. All that was offered to him for speculation was a tall, slight figure, without any crinoline, clad in a dress of violet velvet, made high to the throat; and a delicate little head, with a profusion of small braids to support the weight of the great masses of fair hair which were loosely wound round a stately head of most noble shape, and crowned by a magnificent diamond comb—the only ornament she wore; just thrown over her shoulders hung a mantle, also of violet velvet, richly bordered with sables. He watched in vain for a glimpse of her countenance; she was completely absorbed with the bearing of the people on the room, and the platform, and evidently looking for some one she expected to meet. At last she found the face she was seeking for, upon the platform; and immediately made a quiet, hardly perceptible, little inward gesture with her bandie, pointing to herself as though she would say, "I am here." Edward Saville followed the directions of this slight movement, and saw it smilingly acknowledged from above by a young man dressed in a scarf gown of the commonest description, a rather shabby brown shawl, and a coarse black straw bonnet. She had sharp features and a bright color, and no one would have remarked a person of such ordinary appearance, but for the odd fact of her holding a gray worsted stocking in her hand, at which she was indefatigably knitting while the music went on, and for the still stranger circumstance of her relation (whatever it might be) with the distinguished personage to whom she was now known. Edward Saville and she were both at the extreme end of the hall; the woman in the orchestra was opposite to them and to the left, and the violet lady still had her head turned away from him. The evening wore on, the concert progressed, Mr. Bramble's place remained vacant. It was very unaccountable—what could have detained her? Or had she changed her mind, and altogether given up her appointment? This was not the only disappointment of the evening; he had reckoned upon hearing Joachim, but there was no sign of him; and the accustomed place at the pianoforte was filled by a lady, who was playing delightfully one of Beethoven's divinest sonatas.

Mr. Saville began to think he must have made some extraordinary mistake about the day; he had not any acquaintance of his own, so partly to clear his doubts, and still more to give an excuse to his neighbor to look round, he determined to borrow her book. At the close of the slow movement of the sonata, he asked her for it, and startled by his voice, she turned suddenly towards him. What a face it was! Deathly white, with lips as colorless as her cheeks, pale golden eyebrows, and a pair of gray eyes that swam in tears; they were eyes such as he had never seen before; so wistful, so forceful, and full of such strange pain. The violet bandeau Magdalene's face quite bathed in tears; and the unexpected appearance of this vision of sorrow, for a second, took away his breath; he recovered himself, however, and asked her to lend him the programme; she gave it to him with a quiet little bow, and immediately relapsed into her half-reclining attitude, again looking up at her friend who looked down and nodded and smiled at her. He glanced down the programme. The name was not mentioned, Miss Arabella Goddard was the lady at the piano: there was evidently some blunder about the day. He returned the paper with thanks; the lady took it with another slight inclination of the head, while a tremulous little smile played for a moment round her pale lips. It was a handsome face undoubtedly, and he was not the impression that predominated as one looked upon it—there was some painful want of harmony in the expression, which struck him above everything else. The upper part of the face was quite statuesque and cast in the grand mould of Lord Nolan's family; but the lips were full and vacillating in expression, was handsome too in shape; but its odd convulsive movement seemed to change the whole character of the countenance every moment. She was evidently extraordinarily affected by music; for while Joachim was playing a solemn adagio of Bach's, she leaned back from head to foot and seemed to shrink together; her face, from white that it was, grew to an awful ashy gray, her lips were drawn tightly together in speechless agony, and her eyes fixed upon the slender figure of the violinist. Her appearance at this moment had something so singular about it, that Mr. Saville felt that on the other side of her could not help observing it; and one of them pulled a large bottle of smelling-salts out of her pocket, which she handled nervously for a few minutes, and then put back again, like the thorough Englishwoman she was, on the principle of the master courage to offer it. Edward Saville raised his eyes to the platform; the woman in the orchestra was looking intently down upon her friend, and once or twice shrugged her shoulders impatiently at the whole scene.

When the first part was over, the pale lady, who had seemed almost sunk in a swoon, rose to herself, got up, and walked towards a screen that stood on the right of the platform and close to it; her dress immediately fell in front of the entrance-door just in time to see her drive off in a hired brougham, attended by a very respectable-looking elderly gentleman as escort, and she had seen that she was quite alone in the carriage, and he turned back again quickly for the chance of meeting her coming again by the way she meant to be found, and he went home in a state of unusual excitement. It was barely ten o'clock, he had still a couple of hours to lounge in the room, and so he sat down to write to Mrs. Bramble. On turning over a heap of papers which by accident he had left on the table, he found a letter of hers, which she had told him to take the places; and on looking at it again, he discovered that, by some piece of carelessness, he had read Monday and instead of Monday week, and so the mystery was solved. His note to her was a very short one; he told her of his stupid blunder, and merely added "There was no Halle, no Piatti; Joachim played, but I did not hear him. Mamma was there 5" which accordingly puzzled his cousin, who piled him with continual notes upon the subject, but never got any answer.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—PAYING OFF SOLDIERS AT ATLANTA, BEFORE STARTING ON THE GRAND MARCH ACROSS THE SOUTHERN STATES.

BESIDE THE SEA.

BY WILLIAM WINTER.

I.

They walked beside the summer sea
And watched the slowly dying sun;
And "O," she said, "come back to me,
My love, my own, my only one!"
But while he kissed her fears away,
The gentle waters kissed the shore,
And, sadly whispering, seemed to say,
"He'll come no more! he'll come no more!"

II.

Alone beside the autumn sea
She watched the sombre death of day;
And "O," she said, "remember me
And love me, darling, far away!"
A cold wind swept the watery gloom,
And, darkly whispering on the shore,
Sighed out the secret of his doom,
"He'll come no more! he'll come no more!"

III.

In peace beside the winter sea
A white grave glimmers in the moon,
And waves are fresh, and clouds are free,
And shrill winds pipe a careless tune.
One sleeps beneath the dark blue wave,
And one upon the lonely shore;
But joined, in love, beyond the grave,
They part no more! they part no more!

NINA MARSH;

OR,

THE SECRET OF THE MANOR.

CHAPTER XXX.—CONCLUSION.

Nina was brought up for trial, but when Mrs. Oldum's deposition was read in court the prosecution at once broke down, and she was honorably discharged. The first person she saw on leaving the Town Hall was Captain Marsh, and by his side, her shrewd, earnest face sparkling with joy, stood Mrs. Trent. She passed from the arms of one to those of the other, and then back again, to be held to Cyril's heart with a lingering, passionate strain.

They were seated in the neat parlor of the little inn Mrs. Trent had formerly chosen for the very reason they chose it now—because it was quiet and retired. Mrs. Trent kept with them for a time and then discreetly retired. They had so much to say to each other, these two, and yet they were silent a long while. Nina's head had found some rest for its weariness on Cyril's breast, and the joy of her double deliverance was beyond words. She was too happy to tell of her happiness; she felt satisfied to feel it. Cyril, too, was busy conning over his own bright thoughts, and did not care to disturb her reverie. But presently his hand, in caressing her hair, exposed, amongst the ebon masses, two lines of snow, sure tokens of the work done by sorrow and care.

"How you must have suffered, my poor child," he said, pressing his lips against the silver threads. "Do you know that you are getting gray?"

"Am I?" she answered, with her sweet shadowed smile. "Oh, Cyril, no one can tell how small a gift beauty seems to me now. If I had only been ugly——"

"Nina, don't let us look back on the wretched past," said Cyril, quickly; "let it be dead to us from henceforth. We have a bright future to pass together."

"Not now, Cyril—you cannot want me now!"

"I do; but I suppose I must wait many, many a long day yet. I must be patient, and the reward will come at last."

"Ah, Cyril, what patient, tender love yours has been!" Nina could not help saying.

"I don't know that that is praising me much, Nina. I loved and hoped because I could not help loving and hoping. I did nothing of my own free will. The passion I had taken into my heart was stronger than myself; and although I once most earnestly endeavored to conquer it, I don't think I succeeded very well. You see I am not a hero, after all—only an egotist."

"Don't malign yourself, for I cannot bear it, even from you," said Nina. Then she passionately added: "Cyril, I will be to you such a true, tender, submissive wife as man never had before. What I have lost in honor I will make up in love. In times of trial I will forget to suffer, in order to comfort you; in hours of happiness I will take my smile from your lips, and all my sunshine through your eyes. I will never express a wish that you have not first fathered, and I will make you own in your heart that, of all the women in the world, Nina was the most fitting for your wife."

"Then your task will not be very difficult, for I own that now."

"You only think it yet; some day you shall be quite sure. I have always felt that I could make you happy, Cyril; I understand you so well, and we suit each other. The very look of you calms and comforts me, and I know I am pleasant in your sight. I hope I may live long—live to be very old—since I am to live with you."

"My darling," was Cyril's low-breathed reply, "there is nothing I would not do for you."

"You have proved it," was her triumphant reply. "I could not doubt you now, even if I would. Cyril, I am the proudest woman in the world! My one jewel is equal to Cornelia's three; for I have, or shall have, a true and faithful husband who loves me and whom I love; and will he not be more to me than three virtuous sons? Don't think me bold and unwomanly, Cyril; you know that one who has hungered wellnigh to death eats greedily at the first meal. I cannot be moderate, I cannot learn to repress my joy just yet. When I get accustomed to this plentiful delicious fare I shall be more temperate, but now I must eat my fill."

But Cyril had no fault to find with her expansiveness. He was as eager to listen as she was to talk. He had been starving, too, and this feast warmed his heart and quickened his blood. He sat devouring her face hungrily with his eyes, drinking in the music of her low, impassioned voice, and the hours passed as if they had been seconds.

At last Nina roused herself to contemplate the actual present, which seemed to cause her some doubt and fear.

"Where must I go?" she said. "Cyril, I cannot return to Beechwood."

"We have settled all that, Mrs. Marsh and I. Your father's health is terribly shattered, and we think it would be well for him to go abroad for a time. We, therefore, arranged that you and Mrs. Trent should go to Boulogne and await us there. We shall all join you in the course of a few days, and I propose our hiring a chateau somewhere in France, and living quietly together until I can claim you as my wife, when I should like, if you approve, to leave the Old World behind and make our home in the New."

"That is just what I should wish," said Nina, gratefully. "But, Cyril, are you sure that my father will receive me?"

"Quite; only you must be prepared for a great change in him, mentally and physically. Fortunately, my aunt is able to take his place; for the blow that crushed him seems, somehow, to have developed all the latent strength in her nature. You would be astonished how firmly, and yet how gracefully, she fills the place of trust he has ceded to her from sheer inability to retain it himself. I hardly know my aunt again. She is quick in her movements, decisive in her words, wise in her judgments, and still most tender in heart. She is so careful, too, of her husband's pride, lest he should regret the authority that has passed from him, that she refers to him even when she knows the reference to be worse than useless. I am only sorry to see that she ages perceptibly with these new responsibilities. She looks pale and worn; but though so much of the bloom and beauty she retained so long is gone, I like my aunt's face better than ever now, and think it as lovely as the face of a saint."

"Poor mama!" said Nina, regretfully. "Oh! how I have made everybody suffer who belonged to me! Can I ever atone for the past?"

"The consequences of your first deception were so terrible, that we may believe, Nina, you have expiated your sin. And now Mrs. Trent will be here in a few minutes. Let me tell you something about her before she comes. She confided it to me, and wished me to tell you and Mr. and Mrs. Marsh. She spoke of it with great pain and difficulty, and any repetition would be terrible to her. It seems that she was married to Colonel St. George ten years ago, and lived with him nearly six months, when—growing tired of her, I suppose—he confessed that he had another wife. She was very young at the time—barely twenty-two. It appears that he had first met her at a friend's house, where she was governess; and being struck with her peculiar style of beauty, he paid her violent court. She was an orphan, the daughter of an officer in the army, and her situation was so miserable that she listened eagerly to his proposals, and married him after they had known each other but a few weeks. She says that even now it is impossible for her to speak of that terrible time, when, quite coolly, as if he were telling her an excellent joke, he made her acquainted with her true position. She would not believe his word—she demanded Mrs. St. George's address. He gave it to her, and she went immediately to Yorkshire, and received the confirmation she required from the lips of his wife herself. She had not money enough to bring her home, neither could she take another situation as governess, having no references to offer. She felt her disgrace too keenly, besides, to court inquiry by any step of this kind; and after nearly starving for three days, she pocketed her pride and her gentility, and applied for a place as servant of all-work in a farmhouse. They were good Christian people, and they took her in, asking no questions, but giving her every chance, if she really were fallen, which they suspected, of retrieving her character. She lived here two years, and from there she went as companion and nurse to an old lady, who kept her until she died, and left her a legacy of five hundred pounds as a provision for her old age. The rest of her history you know, excepting that she learned the greatest part of your secret during your delirium, and consented to see and speak to the man who had betrayed her, for the sake of urging him to do rightly by you. She also wrote to him at the time you were convicted, to tell him that if he did not come and stand by you in your trial, she would proclaim him to the world as a bigamist and forger. You know the result of her appeal—his sudden flight, which ended in a terrible death. My dear Nina, you see now that you were not the only person at Beechwood who suffered silently and bravely, wounded in her honor and her heart. I only pray God that both you and Mrs. Trent may find enough joy in the future to amply atone for the miseries of the past."

"Amen!" and they turned and saw Mrs. Trent herself standing within the threshold of the door, as if she had just entered. Nina rushed into her arms, and for a minute both were too moved to speak. But Mrs. Trent was not naturally demonstrative, and had been long accustomed to discipline and repress her feelings. Presently she put Nina on one side, kissing her softly between the eyes, and said, with something like her usual self-possessed manner:

"Captain Marsh's prayer, so far as you are concerned, will be answered. You will be happy, since you are to live always with him. As for myself, I am an old woman in heart, if not in years, and I only ask from the world moderate indulgence and a small measure of peace. If I have these I shall be satisfied. It is for the young to hope; for such as me there is only one possible future—a future of usefulness and contentment which shall lead me slowly and softly to the grave."

Cyril's plans were carried out to the letter. The whole family removed from Beechwood Manor, and joined Nina and Mrs. Trent at Boulogne. Here they remained for a few days, whilst Cyril, who took all the fatigue and anxiety on his own shoulders, went to look at a chateau a few miles from Montpellier, which he had seen advertised in some of the papers. Finding this a desirable residence, and in good repair, he hired it on the spot, and returned to fetch the others.

They were soon installed in their new abode, with the old faces from home about them, Mrs. Trent taking her proper place as a true and valued friend, although she still relieved Mrs. Marsh of all household cares. Here Nina learned to smile again—not quite the smile of days gone by, for such sorrows as she had passed through must leave some traces behind—but she was always cheerful, often gay; and strengthened by the knowledge of Cyril's enduring love, she feels she may strive for that glorious crown which is for those "who do rightly the work that is set before them."

A few more words to the other characters of our tale, and we have done. When Lord Gillingham found himself so signally baffled in his double vengeance, he was almost beside himself. He had collected facts which seemed to promise that, with the aid of Mr. Caudlum and the learned Dorothy, he should be able to bring the crime of forgery home to Colonel St. George. And just when he saw his plans near fruition—when the woman who had scorned him was confined in a prison which it seemed very probable she would only leave for the scaffold—when the man he hated with all his wicked heart was about to be hurled down from the height of prosperity to the lowest depths of adversity—Fate gently interposed, rescued them out of his hands, and dealt with their delinquencies in its own way—meting out to one the full measure of wrath he had earned, and gathering the other into its bosom pardoned and contrite, and pushing her forward on her new and better life with a smile. To tell you how my lord raved and swore when he found his evil ends defeated, would not edify you in any way.

In spite of all her breakages and bruises, Dame Oldum partially recovered. She said she wouldn't die, and she didn't. She had the most wonderful vitality left in her crippled frame, and, as she says, she can walk with a crutch as fast as some people walk with their natural legs. It was curious to see the gradual change of feeling that marked her progress towards convalescence. At first she was heartily sorry for her errors, and glad to have made all the expiation in her power; then she began to pine after the thousand pounds which she had forfeited by her frankness, and to wish she had postponed her confession until the money was safe in her hands; finally, the dame, finding herself in for a tolerable lease of life yet, mourned her precipitancy in unburdening her mind with the deepest grief, and gathered into a cordial and collective anathema the parson who had shrived her, the parish who supported her, the peer who had cheated her, and the fortunate people who had escaped out of her toils.

Good and gentle Rose Woodman nursed the surly invalid through the worst of her troubles, then she and Ben were married, and took possession of their little cottage in the village. Ben is far too happy to remember his spite against his mother, and many a shilling of his earnings drops from Rose's generous hand into the wrinkled palm of the wicked old dame.

Mr. Barbary, after a little delay in his wooing, through a rival who was that ambiguous and mysterious "something in the City" not to be defined, or inquired into too closely, took his Margaret's redundant charms to his bosom, and was a happy man. Amorosa Grimaldenne was not so successful in securing her prize. Three separate times she got Mr. Mervyn up to the proposing point, and he suddenly cooled before the deed was done. She has now given him up in despair, and acknowledges to her intimate friends that, painful as it was to her sensitive feelings, she was obliged to refuse him, for his peculiarities were too much for her. Mrs. St. George is still alive, but it is whispered in Balmwick that she is beginning to fail, for once she actually forgot to turn up her own trump card.

Gabrielle de Pène satisfied her mother's ambitious desires; and really did marry a prince. Whether she is happy or no we cannot tell, but her husband is cited as le meilleur mari de son temps.

And now, dear readers, one more scene, and we have done. A gallant ship is about to sail for the New World. The rising tide laves her broad breast, the wind flaps her snowy sail. She dips her dainty brow seaward, kisses the lips of the waves, and glides forward to the sonorous chant of the sailors, friends on shore shouting a last adieu. Cyril and Nina stand on the deck of the noble vessel, looking towards land with eyes as mournful as tender. There is Mrs. Marsh weeping on Mrs. Trent's shoulder; poor tremulous Miss Mervyn repeating anxiously "that it is all her fault, and she ought to be killed;" and honest Jack Dawes. Madeleine is in France with her father, who could not bear the fatigue and anxiety of such a journey. Slowly and calmly the great ship recedes from the shore, and Jack's deep voice, a little thickened with the tears he stifles now, but must indulge by-and-bye, sends after them a last prayer:

"God bless and speed you!"

"Amen!" murmured Nina, pressing closer to her husband's side. "Cyril, shall we ever see them again?"

"Why not?" he says. "Either they will come to us, or we shall return to them. Where are your hope and faith, Nina?"

"At least I have you," she answers, and her tearful eyes turn on him thankfully.

"Yes; and when we have struggled for riches, my wife, and won them, then we shall gather our English family under our happy roof, and make in the New World another Beechwood Manor for our sons to inherit with the old place at home."

THE END.

HUMAN LIFE.

I.

I stood by the towers of Ardenville,
As the bells rang forth a joyous peal;
Loudly and merrily rang they then,
O'er hill, o'er forest and sylvan glen.
Each cheek was bright with the blush of morn,
Each voice sounded gay as the forester's horn,
Each heart was glad, for an heiress was born.

II.

Again by those portals proud did I stand,
As forth there came a gorgeous band;
There was the priest in his robes of white,
There was a maiden lovely and bright;
A gallant knight rode by her side,
And shouts of joy spread far and wide,
For the heiress was Rudolph de Courcie's bride.

III.

I stood by those stately towers again,
While forth there came a solemn train,
I saw the same priest, slow and sad was his pace,
I saw the same knight, but he shaded his face,
I saw not that maiden in beauty's bloom,
But the bier, and the hearse, and the sable plume,
For the heiress was borne to her forefathers tomb.

IV.

And such is human life at best—
A mother's, a lover's, the green earth's breast;
A wreath that's composed of three—
Primrose and myrtle and rosemary.
A hopeful, a joyful, a sorrowful stave,
A launch, a voyage, a whelming wave,
The Cradle, the Bridal Bed and the Grave.

THE ACROBAT'S REVENGE.

CHAPTER I.

The sun was setting behind the hills of Maldon, one June evening, in the year 1845, when an acrobat, with his wife, was seen plodding along the road to the next market-town.

They were weary and sad. The acrobat himself was a man about thirty, of dark complexion, with raven black hair curling over his forehead. His eyes were black and piercing, and there was something in his look which bespoke a nature above that of a mountebank.

His wife was some years younger, and carried an infant child at her breast. She, too, had the appearance of a person superior to her lot, and her face was comely to look upon.

Their life was a hard one, but they bore it well. Nor, as yet, had all the hardships which poverty had brought into their door sent love, as the proverb has it, flying out of the window.

They were now journeying to the market town of Maldon, and as to-morrow would be market day, Duval thought he might come in for a portion of the money that would be changing hands. But as it was very desirable that he and his wife should have supper after their long day's journey, and a place to sleep in, he was anxious to earn a few pence either in the town or before reaching it, and presently an opportunity arose by which, as he thought, he might do so.

Almost opposite to him, at two or three hundred yards' distance, was the lodge and noble gateway of a gentleman's park. As Duval approached it he heard voices sounding high and mirthful in the air—the voices of children making merry, with their light young hearts, and their clear, ringing laughter.

As he came nearer and looked through the gate, he saw between twenty and thirty children, in holiday attire, playing upon the lawn, before an old and spacious mansion, which had belonged to the Windus family for many generations, and was now in the possession of Sir William Windus, the tenth baronet; and it was the birthday of his little daughter which the children were celebrating.

The acrobat's eyes kindled as he looked in at the bevy of holiday-makers. Here was a grand chance for him. Surely it would delight the children to see him flash his golden balls in the air, whirling them up and up, like the ever-springing stream of a fountain. Surely all the other wonderful things he could do would be the very thing for them. Surely the great and wealthy parents would pay handsomely for the amusement of the little ladies and the little gentlemen.

He paused for a moment, then slowly pushed open the gate, and walked in towards the la followed by his wife.

Had there been any one there whose permission he could have asked he would have done so. But there was no one but the children themselves; and, therefore, addressing one of the oldest, he asked her if they would like to see some of his feats. The girl smilingly replied that they would; and all the little faces, with their great eyes, were turned upon the acrobat, and the wonderful box which he took from his shoulders and laid upon the ground.

And now the eyes of wonder opened as wide as they could go. And so intent was the little audience in watching the acrobat, and so intent was Duval in catching his brass balls, that none of them perceived that Sir William Windus was ap-preaching, with his gamekeeper. He came forward with rapid strides, and when within a few paces of Duval, he called out to him in a voice of thunder—

"Vagabond! how dared you enter here?"

For a moment Duval stood astounded and dumb at this sudden interruption. He saw before him a gentleman much taller than himself, in shooting coat and boots, with a felt hat; narrow shoulders; fair, with sharp face and chin, but lively whiskers of deep tawny hue; his eyes of a hideous grey, large and bright, and his hearing that of an aristocrat, with a strong dash of the bully.

"Come, pack up your trumpery and begone!" said the harsh, seeing that Duval stood looking at him. But the poor man had recovered his self-possession, and now said, with a firm voice—

"I meant no offence, your honor; nor to harm any one, or remain where I am not wanted. I saw the children and made bold to enter, thinking it would please them to see my——"

"Oh, that's a very old story," said the baronet. "When thieves and gipsies prowl about gentlemen's parks we all know that their intentions are perfectly innocent!"

"Do you call me a thief, sir?" demanded Duval, his dark cheek coloring and his eyes flashing fire.

"Scoundrel!" exclaimed Sir William, his blood rushing into his face, and making it in a moment red with rage; "do you think I would chat logic with a stinking vagabond like you. I tell you to pack up and be off! Do so at once."

And as the baronet uttered this command he raised the hand in which he held his whip, as if about to strike the stranger.

Duval looked at him with a savage glare of his keen dark eyes, and slowly, in a deep voice, trembling with emotion, replied—

"You had better not!"

"Duval!" said his wife, gently pulling him by the sleeve, and in a voice of mingled pathos and humility; "never mind the gentleman. We shouldn't have come in without his leave. We humbly ask your pardon, sir; come, Duval, let us go."

"Take your wife's advice, my man," said the gamekeeper, "and be off, or some less gentlemanly parks no more till such times as you're specially invited. There, now, gather up your toggery and get out!"

While Martha and the gamekeeper had been speaking, Duval's eyes remained riveted on Sir William; and there appeared to threaten him with a blow; with a blow of that whip with which he was wont to chastise his dogs. Duval would have died sooner than receive such a degradation, and he felt half inclined to spring upon Sir William as it was, and show him that when it comes to close fighting bulk and muscle are worth more than gold, and that his rush set, if steady cause he fixed on him, and that his ground and overbearing nature had met its match. His blood boiled at the insult.

"Impudent villain!" he at last exclaimed, stamping on the ground, "do you dare to beard me, to threaten me with your insolent looks? Take that!" And lifting his arm he brought down his whip with a thud upon the scrobat's back that could be heard as far off as the house.

Mad with rage, frenzied with insult, Duval, with a fierce spring, rushed at the baronet; and dearly would Sir William have paid for his rash act, if the scrobat could only have had one blow at him, delivered with the prodigious strength of his muscular arm and broad, shoulders. But as soon as Duval rushed forward, Leo, one of the noblest hounds in Sir William's kennel, which had for some time been watching the gentleman his master and Duval with grave, sedate face, sprang upon the scrobat and intercepted the attack. Meanwhile, two other gamekeepers had arrived. And Lady Windus, from her bedroom casement, saw the struggle between the man and the dog, and wondered what it all could be about.

"Down, Leo, down!" cried Sir William, and the dog sprang away from the man and sat down by his master's side.

"Now put him on," said the baronet, as he turned away and walked off towards the hall.

"It's no use making any more fuss about it," said the elder-looking gamekeeper, as Duval sprang upon his feet, his face and hands covered with dust and blood. "You were wrong in the beginning, Jack, and you'll get your way quickly."

And Duval was advised: the more easily because of the appealing look his wife gave him as she gently wiped the blood from his face. He sprang his box once more over his shoulders, and walked slowly towards the gate; he passed through it, closed it, and then passing a few paces he halted and lifting it towards heaven, cried out, in the agony of his heart:

"My God, I humbly ask this favor of thee—that I may one day be revenged!"

So he and his wife resumed their journey.

Presently a postchaise, driven by a lady, was heard behind them; when it came close to them the lady drew up; asked them, with slight agitation, the way to Naterly; then asked Martha whether the infants she carried was a boy or girl; looked at it, kissed it, dropped a sovereign into Martha's hands, and drove on. It was Lady Windus.

CHAPTER II.

Two years passed, and a beautiful lady Ivy reclined upon a sofa in the large and richly furnished drawing-room of a country mansion, everything about which betokened the great wealth of its proprietor, who sat by the window, patting the head of a noble mastiff, which every now and then looked up at his master, and gave a bark as if to ask what he could do for him. There was not much that dog or man could do for the wealthy owner of Woodbury Park; for time had lavished on him all her favors—ancient descent, great wealth, a beautiful wife, and two promising children. Well might Sir William be a proud man.

Suddenly the heavy-sounding door of the room was disturbed by a loud clamor in the hall, in which questions were heard rapidly put by some one in an agitated voice. "Where is my lady? Where is Sir William?—and the next moment Emily Carter, Miss Joan's maid, rushed into the drawing-room.

Sir William and Lady Windus started up.

"What is the matter?" demanded the baronet.

"Oh, Sir William! oh, my lady—oh, my dear good lady!"

And then Emily shrieked three or four times running, and, turning white as death, fell back into a chair in a faint.

"Heavens on earth!" exclaimed Sir William; "what is the meaning of all this? Chambers, do you know?"

"Only, Sir William," said Chambers very slowly, and selecting her words with a precision which showed that she was not ready to utter a word or over state what she had heard from Emily; "only, Sir William, this much. Emily Carter came to the door, and, looking out on the lawn, and with an awful countenance, and everyone knows what Emily's countenance is when Emily's in one hour—"

"Confound it, woman! come to the point!" cried Sir William.

"So, sir, she says to me," said Chambers, suddenly quickening her pace; "'the children,' says she; 'the boat,' says she; 'where's Sir William?' says she; 'where's my lady?' says she; 'I told you so, my lord,' says she, 'and my lady was, she said, in, and as my name's Sarah Chambers that's all as Emily Carter said to me."

Though Chambers's information was neither copious nor distinct, it conveyed forcibly enough that the children were in danger, and that the boat had something to do with it.

It is impossible to describe the ghastly hue which spread over Sir William's face, as the brought flashed across his mind that his children had been drowned. But he had hardly time to realise the possibility of such a calamity when in rushed the orgrair, with a soft step and a smiling face.

"There is no imminent danger," he said at once. "There is no water in the boat, during which it is quite possible to save them. But lose not a moment in sending a messenger on horseback, to the nearest town for surgical aid; his brag found his host directly. If you'll lend me one of your horses, I'll go myself."

Orders were given for the immediate saddling of a horse, and meanwhile Sir William learnt from Mr. Ling that Master William had run his boat upon a sunken rock; that she had filled and gone down; and that Miss Joan, with the true pride of a woman, had stood by the boat in shore; and that, as Emily declined to venture on account of her tendency to idle, and her dislike of sharks, he took his sister, of his own lovely will and authority, under his protection. Then Mr. Ling's account went down; and, by good fortune, William, with Joan in his arms, was able to reach the point of rock on which he now stood.

What were the feelings of Lady Windus when she reached the shore, and beheld her children on a small rock in the middle of the lake, surrounded—smooth almost as glass it is true; but with the tide flowing, and every minute covering a fresh portion of the rock on which her babes were standing.

But in vain did her mother's heart swell within her till it was ready bursting, as she with Mrs. Chambers dimpled hands of her Joan stretched out towards her, and her brave boy take off his cap and wave it absurdingly in encouragement to courage, which he drew from her generous bleed much more than from his sire's.

But could nothing be done?

Sir William now appeared on the road which ran along the shore. He was followed by the old gamekeeper, Emily Carter, who had recovered; by Sarah Chambers, who had not, for the gamekeeper. Sarah Chambers said, if there was no one who could make the attempt, she herself would try it; but when questioned on her powers as a swimmer, she replied that she could only float; and that even that feat she had never performed out of her depth.

The caretaker, being applied to by Emily Carter, looked at that young person coldly for several seconds, and then quickly closed his eyes, and thus addressed her:

"Young woman, do you see this here rat in this here cage?"

"Well?" demanded Emily, with much dignity.

"Then, unless some on you can swim fardener nor me, or unless a boat comes up, or unless somethink else happens, which I see no promising sign on, I wouldn't give the li'est of this here rat for the life of them two children."

And the tide was rising. Smooth as glass—smooth, specious, and smiling as a lying hypocrite, it was rising, and Lady Windus could see that already it was licking the feet of her children.

"Leet, look, William!" she exclaimed, at the same time directing her husband's attention to the rock; "he lifts her up. The water is at their feet! My God! can we do nothing?"

Yes, it was true. The water was at their feet. William had raised Joan in his arms; and as he saw his mother direct the baronet's attention to him, he called out, though she couldn't hear him—

"All right, mama; there's plenty of time yet."

Plenty of time! He was deceiving her. Often as the party on the shore turned their eyes in the direction in which Mr. Ling had ridden to procure a boat, there was nothing in sight.

Lady Windus had fainted. Sir William stood the picture of agony, looking at his children; Sarah Chambers, Emily and the stable-boy were grouped round the old gamekeeper, who assisted them in shedding a great many tears, but had nothing better to offer his young master and Miss Joan, than the hope that help, perhaps truly, had he was ready to die for them.

The caretaker seated himself on a stone.

"Now, my man," said Sir William, as a man who stood at Sir William's side, but whose approach had not been noticed.

The person did not turn to look at the speaker. It was some seconds, indeed, before he recognised that any one had addressed him; but when he did, he replied, in a deep whisper of despair:

"They are——"

The man's gaze were fixed upon the children. Sir William looked at the speaker. He thought he remembered him, and so he did, for it was the scrobat.

"Duval Duval!—Duval, who had prayed for vengeance as the sole favor for which he would trouble heaven. It was Duval, at whose door, if he would give it, he would give all, all the miseries of life had knocked, and at whose hearth they had seated themselves. For did not she, whom he loved more than himself—Martha—did not she lie in her cold grave, with her body by her side, in the same pauper's coffin? And was not—what was left to Duval?—only to wait for death.

Nay, something more—to live for revenge!

For no heat made its appearance, the tide had risen and subsided, and now they saw the boy kneel down in the water, and look up as if he were praying. And only Duval could save him and his sister. Only Duval? Nay, of all who stood there, could breast the flood to the rock and back with the girl—to the rock and back again with the boy.

Why not tell Sir William so? Why not, indeed? Is not revenge sweet?

And still the tide was rising. Lady Windus, restored for a moment to consciousness, opened her eyes; but no sooner realised her position than she relapsed into insensibility.

"Sir William," said Duval; "I see you remember me! Once I thirsted for revenge upon you! For two long years I thirsted for it. Heaven has sent it to me!"

A bright light shot from his eyes as he said this, and then he slowly walked down to within a few paces of the water's edge, undressed; he waded into the sea till it came up to his breast, and then, throwing himself forward, struck out for the rock.

Sir William looked on, as they with which the parents, who had watched in agonised suspense the scrobat's attempt to rescue their children, look upon the efforts of angels' arms. But while they were fondling them, Duval had dressed and slipped away. He had regained the road, and stood before Sir William with a light step and a light heart, for he had had his revenge.

No, not all of it. Sir William no sooner missed him than he set off in pursuit of him.

"Here," exclaimed the baronet, when at last he came up with him, endeavoring to put a well filled purse into his hand. "You have saved my children, and are entitled—I say entitled—to a reward."

Duval drew back his hand.

"I have had it!" he exclaimed, darting a look of fierce and withering scorn at the baronet, and then turning from him with an expression of contempt, pursued his journey.

And the proud baronet stood looking after him, rebuked and humbled.

WINTER SCENE IN CAMP.

THE silver mantle of winter has been dropped upon the earth. In more prosaic language, snow has fallen in large quantities at the north and west. In some localities the mercury has been carried to the degree of six or eight feet. On the White Mountains it has two feet deep upon a level. In St. Louis the heaviest snowstorm ever known in that region, the ground to the depth of six inches. In Canada it has rendered the wild and picturesque scenery of the fall grand and ghostly white. Before many days, it will, we doubt not, be dancing over our own roofs, and over the camps of our soldiers in the army of the Potomac, however, will know how to make themselves comfortable in their winter quarters. Above is the first page of this paper presents a winter scene in camp, and suggests the life of our gallant defenders, when the skies begin to lower, and "the stormy winds do blow."

PARLOR IN PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S HOUSE AT SPRINGFIELD.

IN our paper of Nov. 17, 1860, we presented a sketch of President Lincoln's house at Springfield, Illinois, which residence he left for the White House at Washington. On page 180 of this paper we publish a sketch of the principal parlor in the President's Springfield home. The public naturally feels curious as to the private lives and circumstances of distinguished individuals, and the American people might well be excused for a little curiosity as to its President. Our sketch of the President's parlor will, we fancy, please many persons. The correspondent of a daily paper, who visited Mr. Lincoln soon after his nomination for the Presidency, in 1860, speaks as follows of that apartment: "It is very tastily and substantially furnished. There are a few books, and on the walls are some good engravings. All is, in fact, indicative of the well-to-do country lawyer, or retired farmer."

Such is the room to which, after his eight years sojourn in the White House, the President of United States will retire to reflect on the most terrible epoch of his life.

COMMODORE NUTT'S MEDAL.

ANOTHER, and the last, of Mr. Barnum's little people sailed away from these shores on the 23rd of November. On the day before his departure he went, by invitation, to the Astor House, the old city, there to meet and say farewell to a number of old acquaintances and admirers. Upwards of 100 ladies and gentlemen were assembled on the occasion, when Commodore Nutt exchanged the usual greetings of courtesy. On each of the latter then presented him with a beautiful gold medal, the work of Messrs. Ball, Black & Co., of New York, a sketch of which appears on page 189. The medal is in the form of a shield, suspended from an anchor. On the front of the shield is a ship's register, on which stands a figure of the Commodore, draped with American flags, while the bright star of Union glitters over all. On the reverse of the shield is the inscription: "Presented to Commodore Nutt, by his Lady Admirers in New York, Nov. 23, 1864."

On receiving the medal, Commodore Nutt delivered the following little speech:

"Dear Madams and Ladies—I feel both flattered and delighted at receiving this beautiful token of your kind regard and esteem; flattered by the inscription it bears, and delighted in receiving the high testimony of your approbation. Ever since the date of my commission as Commodore, I have been attached to England, being ordered to join my little fleet in Europe, and as fortunate as to meet with an extravagant and cordial a welcome. My fame as I find it now rings upon my breast, but my heart, as a remembrance of your kindness, will ever respond and I surrender to the great Admiral. Ladies, I thank you, and wish you all health and happiness."

A gold watch was subsequently presented to the Commodore, on behalf of the Sons of Temperance, of which fraternity he is a member. The interesting presentation was given him by Mr. Barnum. It is stated that he will shortly make his reappearance at St. James's Hall, in London, assisted by little Minnie Warren, for whom it is alleged that he entertains sentiments which, being reciprocated, are likely to lead to matrimony.

ARMY DISCIPLINE—PUNISHMENT OF NEGRO SOLDIERS.

WHEN it is remembered that our Government has upwards of half a million men in the service, the infrequency of punishments in the Army and Navy is something wonderful. Nor is the wonder lessened when we reflect that so many rough spirits, whose natural impulses are not softened by culture, are subjected to systems of punishment being peculiar and perplexing. This state is obtained by the moral influence of the one to mere pastime to another. Much depends upon the individual nature. In the Army the best disciplinarians have combined with the highest physical and moral courage, in preference to those which affect the ogbol or the moral element. The petty discomfort, notwithstanding the inventor of hotels, is, therefore, the principal penalty inflicted upon the disobedient, disorderly soldier. Bucking and gagging, the wheel still, the horse, and other complicatory semi-gymnastic feats, are among the penalties for breach of military discipline. Extremely ludicrous scenes often result from the enforcement of these punishments, and the offending soldiers are well ridiculed by their companions for their exertions. But punishment is usually received in good part, especially among the negro troops, whose sensibilities are so obtuse as their personal appearance. It is worthy of remark, however, that the negroes do not seem to cherish any vindictive feelings, such as might well be occasioned in the lessons of which they are the subjects of flogging. We present, on page 181, a sketch illustrative of a method of punishing refractory soldiers in camp. It is, as will be mounting them upon a rail, wherein they sit perched in mid air, playing cards and amusing themselves as best they can, while their sentries walk below. Our drawing is from life, and it serves to bring the truth of camp punishment vividly to the spectator's mind.

GIRARD'S CIG.

A RELIC of Stephen Girard has recently been presented to the city of Philadelphia, by Mr. E. C. Knight of that place. It is the old cig in which Girard was wont to draw. A sketch of it appears on page 190. The relic is to be preserved on the Girard College property—a fitting depository for Girard was a public benefactor, and as such he will ever be remembered. The story of his life has often been published, so that we need only here say that he was born in Bordeaux, Stephen Girard was born near Bordeaux, France, on the 23rd of May, 1750, and died in Philadelphia, Penn., Dec. 26th, 1831. He began life as a cabin boy, and ended it as a banker, leaving a property of $6,000,000. His wealth was acquired by trade with West India ports by renting houses, and by prudent banking. The negro insurrection at St. Domingo threw money into his hands. Among the bad wars that we can record which several planters shipped property which they were otherwise unable to save. He was a true friend of man in matters of charity, but very stern and exacting in matters of business. To the sick and the poor he was universally kind, but he had no friends. He was, in the fullest sense, a public-spirited man. In 1810, when the U. S. Government refused to negotiate a loan of $5,000,000, he took the whole of it. He built many splendid buildings in Philadelphia, and at his death bequeathed nearly the same amount of money to found a college for orphans, and to endow other public charities. His grave is at the Girard College, where also the traveler will often look with reverence, and sometimes with amusement, upon his ancient, queer, old-fashioned cig.

A coon sketch by a contemporary artist represents the calamities of a traveller on a dreary railroad, who thought, while entering Bergen tunnel, he would have a good opportunity, in the darkness, to change his shirt. He unbuckled his carpet-bag, got out many hands in putting on the garment, and had just got the last arm fixed, when the train, with a shock, the disarray and the uproar of the passengers, the train emerged into broad daylight.

MAP OF GEN. SHERMAN'S ADVANCE ACROSS THE SOUTHERN STATES—THE ROUTE FROM ATLANTA TO THE SEACOAST—GENERAL VIEW OF THE FIELD OF WAR

"WASHERWOMEN" IN THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, JOSEPH BECKER.

CHIMNEY ARCHITECTURE IN THE ARMY.

One of our most interesting illustrations this week is that on page 190, which depicts the styles of chimney architecture adopted by our soldiers in the army of the Potomac and elsewhere. The entire scene, made up of tents and chimneys, from which the smoke is curling upwards, and soldiers and sentinels at their posts, and the dark forest beyond, is extremely animated and picturesque. There are four different styles of chimney included in the picture. The first, at the right, is constructed of straight rails, the interstices being filled with mud. The next is made of straight rails, long and short, and old pork barrels, placed one above the other, without their heads. The third is the oldest in point of fashion, being made of short rails, or cross sticks, placed horizontally, and wedged together with mud. The addition of a pork barrel at the top is an innovation. There are several specimens of this order of architecture in our camp scene, this being the best known and easiest of construction. A more elaborate piece of workmanship is the chimney on the left, which is constructed of oyster cans, the ends of which have been knocked out. This imposing column extends along, beneath a little mound of earth, into the tent itself, where it connects with the fire. The tents in our sketch are called shelter tents. They are light, and divide in three or four pieces, so as to be easy of transportation. A deserted camp, with all its chimneys standing, is even more picturesque than one which is occupied.

COMMODORE NUTT'S MEDAL, PRESENTED BY LADIES OF NEW YORK.

"WASHERWOMEN" IN THE ARMY.

An amusing sketch on page 189 represents the army "washerwoman" engaged in the useful business of washing clothes. The "lumdrum," in this case, is a stout negro, who pursues this avocation amid the most primitive surroundings. His assistants or gossips are near at hand, to chatter of the news. The clothes of our officers are mostly washed by "washerwomen" of this description. Our soldiers generally do their own washing.

Metallic beds are by no means an invention of this age of inch—the 19th century. The bed of the King of Bashan was a bed of iron. Solomon speaks of a bed decked with tapestry, with carved work, and with the fine linen of Egypt. The prophet Amos speaks of beds of ivory. The fascinators of the Egyptians, Greeks and Romans, show us numerous examples of their beds. In the Middle Ages they were made of bronze as well as of ivory, horn, and precious woods encrusted with enamels.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—OUR ARMY CROSSING THE COOSA RIVER, ALABAMA, ON ITS RETURN FROM THE PURSUIT OF THE REBELS UNDER HOOD.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, STANLEY FOX.

EXCELSIOR
MUSICBOOK

For Violin, Flute or Fife, containing popular tunes, "Finnigan's Wake," "The Dark Girl Dressed in Blue" "Lucy Neal," "Lubly Fan," "Old Dan Tucker," "I Into a Young Man from the Country," "Conscript's Waltz," etc., etc. Price 25 cts.; 3 numbers, 50 cts., mailed. Musical instruments of every description. Send stamp for price list.

FREDERICK BLUME,
o 206 Bowery, N. Y.

FIRST PREMIUM
$5 SEWING $5
MACHINE!
A BEAUTIFUL PRESENT
FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Just Out. THE FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE! a most Wonderful and Beautiful Construction! Novelty in nearness in operation, ease the greatest speed, sews with Cotton or Silk from Spool Thread. Makes the Running Stitch more perfect and regular than by hand, Will Gather, Hem, Stitch, Quilt, Bind, Braid and Run Tucks, &c., &c.; requires no Instruction or Change of Stitch or Tension; is not out or course, sews with but a LEVERTH, and is the prettiest and most useful Christmas Gift you can buy. Read the following:

"For the Dressmaker it is invaluable; for the Home hold it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Lester Book.

"At length the Machine long sought for, combining usefulness, speed and cheapness, has been gained. The simplicity of the construction and beautiful finish of Machine will at once command attention; and the speed, certainly and ease with which the work is done will rank it THE FAVORITE with the ladies."—Mrs. ANN S. STEPHENS, in N. Y. Mirror.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.

This ingenious and useful little Machine is perfect in its construction, and is the wonder of the Manufacturers of Price Sewing Machines. No one will pay from $150 to $100 for a Sewing Machine when this one can be bought for the small sum of $5.

This wonderful Machine was awarded the FIRST PREMIUM by the New York State Fair, showing its superority over all others.

All imitations of this GENUINE ARTICLE are liable, as infringements on the Patent.

Agents wanted all over the world.

Single Machines sent by mail, address per Express, packed in box on receipt of $5.

Address all orders to
FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
102 Nassau Street, N. Y.

PERRY'S MOUTH
AND
FRECKLE LOTION.

CHLOASMA, or MOTH PATCHES, LENTIGO, or FRECKLES, Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying to the fair, to ladies of light complexion, as the discolored spots on the skin show more strongly in contrast with the fair skin, but they contribute greatly in marring the beauty of either; and anything that will remove them without injuring the skin in texture or color, would be considered a great achievement in medical science. DR. B. C. PERRY, who devotes all his time to diseases of the skin, has discovered a fellible remedy for the removal of Moth, Freckles and other discolorations, without injury to the skin or texture. Prepared only by DR. B. C. PERRY, Dermatologist, 49 Bond St., New York. WEEKS & POTTER, 170 Washington St., Boston, Wholesale Agents for New England. Sold by all Druggists. Call for Perry's Moth and Freckle Lotion. Price $2 per bottle. 470-82

$70 A MONTH! I want Agents everywhere, at $70 a month, expenses paid, to sell Wilson Ansley's New Family Shuttle Machine. Full particulars free. Address OTIS T. GAREY, Biddeford, Maine. 479-4t

New Map of Richmond,
Showing all of the Fortifications surrounding the Rebel Capital, and correct description of the City and all the Forts, etc. Price only 10 cents per copy; Wholesale or retail agent wanted, at $5 per 100.

NEW MAP OF MOBILE. A splendid Map. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, $5 per dozen.

MAP OF PETERSBURG, a very desirable Map. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, $5 per dozen.

NEW MAP OF ATLANTA. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, 69 cents per dozen; $5 per 100.

CORD PROGRAPHS of Gens. Grant, Meade, Sherman, Hooker, Burnside, Foster, Hooker, Banks, Howard, Gilmore, Farragut, Lincoln, McClellan, etc. Price 10 cents each; Wholesale, $6 per 100.

NEW POCKET ALBUMS, holding 10 Cards—Very Desirable—for only 75 cents. Sends sent Postpaid. Agents Wanted. Catalogues and free.

G. W. TOMPKINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Holley's Ordnance and Armor,
Embracing Descriptions, Discussions and Professional Opinions concerning the Material, Fabrication, Requirement, Capabilities and Endurance of Projectile and Armor, in Rifled Guns, for Naval Warfare and Harbor Defence, and their service, resources and peculiarities, with Experimental Researches, Records from Official Records, with an appendix, reference to Gun Cotton, Rocket, Guns, etc., etc. By A. L. HOLLEY, B. P., with 493 illustrations. 1 vol., 8vo., 948 pages. Half Roan, $10. Just published by D. VAN NOSTRAND, No. 192 Broadway. Copies sent free by mail on receipt of price.

LOVE AND HATRED
Contrasted and Completely Mastered by
DR. MARCHISI'S GREAT DISCOVERY.

No person should be without it; it is invaluable. It will be sent to any address on receipt of $1.

DR. A. H. MARCHISI,
Box 6713 New York Post Office.

Sent Everywhere by Mail, Postpaid.
Extension Silver-Mounted Holders,
WITH COMPOSITE
GOLD PENS
REVERSE LEAD PENCIL.

In case: of one dozen pens, the boxes are finely finished and gilt on itself, so that the contents cannot rain out easily in transportation. Prices same as before the War.

The Holders are of the most handsome and durable construction; are heavily silver-plated, with an extension of three lengths. All are engraved, chased or engine-turned, and for beauty are not surpassed by any others. Our prices for our holders and pens, and holders only, are as follows:

Size One.—When open, 6½ inches in length. Price per dozen by mail, postpaid, $10 25; retails at $20 each.

Size Two.—When open, 6 inches in length. Price per dozen by mail, postpaid, $12; retails at $24 each.

Size Three.—When open, 5½ inches in length. Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $20; retails at $40 each.

Size Five.—When open, 5 inches in length. Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $24 50; retails at $10 each.

Sent to the army and elsewhere, by mail, postpaid.

Also WATCHES AND JEWELLERY in Great Variety at the lowest prices. Send for Circular. Reply to letter letters at our risk. Orders respectfully solicited.

Address T. & E. HOGEL, Manufacturers,
115 Broadway, N. Y.

THE PERUVIAN SYRUP
1864
Supplies the Blood with its LIFE ELEMENT, IRON, infusing STRENGTH, NEW LIFE and NEW BLOOD into all parts of the System. Thousands have been changed by the use of this Remedy, from Weak, Sickly, Suffering Creatures, to Strong, Healthy and Happy Men and Women (the picture of which will be sent free by mail), and hundreds cannot personally testify to the fact.
Depot, 291 Broadway, New York. J. P. DINSMORE.
For sale by all Druggists. 474-84eow

THE SALEM LEG!

UNDER THE PATRONAGE
OF THE
United States Government!

This is the Leg which is steadily supplanting the many "best legs in the world." The reasons for this rapid ascent from "Cumberland, No. 2" into favor, which DESERVES the top, sets forth its ADVANTAGES, and contains testimonials and all other particulars information. Soldiers entitled to a Government Leg can receive the Salem Leg WITHOUT DELAY.

SALEM LEG CO.,
4984 Salem, Mass.

The Most Popular Piano Songs.

"Tree Sweetie, at the Window." Hoffman. 30
"Do they pay for us at Home?" Hoffman. 30
"I'm lonely since my Mother died." Thompson. 30
"I live for those I love most" Clark. 30
"Trusting on the Old Camp Ground." Kittredge. 30
"I'd choose to be a Fairy." (Comic) Buckley. 30
Copies mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price.
OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

WESTERN CIDER

Made without apples or other fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe mailed everywhere for 50 cents. Address
WESTERN CIDER CO.,
000 Box 320, Boston, Mass.

"Matrimonial Agency." Send stamp for information. Address
P. J. WILDAY,
Box 417, P. O., Brooklyn, N. Y.

$135 A MONTH!

WANTED—Sewing Machine Agents! Every-where, to sell the celebrated and world renowned Lock Stitch Sewing Machine, the only low price machine in the market with the Reversible Feed. Office, 505 Broadway, Boston, Mass. 479-4t

NEW MONTH OF MOBILE.
A Splendid Map. Price, 50 cents; Wholesale, $5 per dozen.

MAP OF PETERSBURG, a very desirable Map. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, $5 per dozen.

NEW MAP OF ATLANTA. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, 69 cents per dozen; $5 per 100.

CORD PROGRAPHS of Gens. Grant, Meade, Sherman, Hooker, Burnside, Foster, Hooker, Banks, Howard, Gilmore, Farragut, Lincoln, McClellan, etc. Price 10 cents each; Wholesale, $6 per 100.

NEW POCKET ALBUMS, holding 10 Cards—Very Desirable—for only 75 cents. Sends sent Postpaid. Agents Wanted. Catalogues and free.

G. W. TOMPKINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Whiskers! Whiskers!
MY ONGUENT will force them to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Satisfaction given or money returned. Price by mail, free from observation for $1, by mail. Address J. A. JAGGERS, Cahoon, Pa.

False Moustaches.
MOUSTACHES 50 cents and $1; GOATEES 50 cents and $1; Eyebrows 50 cents. Sent by mail, postpaid. Send for Circulars and Great Curiosities that every one should have. Address
G. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Whiskers and Mustachios.
For $1 I will send a "French Compound" which will cause your Whiskers to grow on Smoothest Face in few weeks, or money refunded.
Dr. WILSON, Wethersfield, Conn.

Gayest of the Gay!
Transparent "Cards, used same as common, cards (by mail, 15 cts.). Agents wanted (by mail $1.25; $10 per dozen) packs. Also marked Cards, $3 and $1.50 per dozen packs. Circulars free.
D. D. HEMBLETTE, 38 Liberty Street, N. Y. 000

Dr. Talbot's Concentrated Medical
PINEAPPLE CIDER
is a PREVENTIVE of SICKNESS. The experience that Dr. Talbot has had for the last Twenty-five years of his practice, has taught him that the public had an article offered that will prevent sickness. The article offered is Dr. Talbot's Medicated Pineapple Cider, designed for all classes, old and young. It is not new to the Doctor, but is entirely new to the public. One quart bottle will last a well person one year. This is rather a new mode of Doctoring; but why not? It will save millions from Early Sick. It is better to pay three dollars a year to keep the Doctor away, than to pay big fees or twice that in Doctor's bills, and as much more for the loss of time and the inconvenience of being sick? To prevent sickness, use as follows: Add one teaspoonful of Medicated Pineapple Cider to a tumbler of cold water, and drink the first thing after you rise in the morning, and the same quantity before you retire. It will increase the strength and give vigor and action to the system. A celebrated New York Preacher, after using a few bottles of the Pineapple Cider, assures Dr. Talbot that he gained a pound a week in the same month at the first trial. He continues its use as above directed, and finds it very beneficial; says it has prevent an entire prostrative of sickness in his case. Also, another well-known politician in New York says that Dr. Medicated Cider certainly on ten years, and has not been sick one day during that time.

Price $1 per bottle (full quart) pints, $2; half-pints, $1. Can be sent by express in bottles or four bottle tight bottles, sent free by Express on receipt of price. All orders should be addressed to

B. T. BABBITT, Sole Agent,
474-4t99 No. 313 South Seventh Street, and 61 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

AGENTS WANTED.
Ladies' "Hemmer and Shield" for Hand Sewing. "Bird-eye Holder" for the Leg, and 15 more Novelties. Useful and Saleable. Sample 50 cents. For Catalogue and terms, send stamp.
G. RICE & CO., Manufacturers, 37 Park Row, N. Y.

DISTILLED DEW

Imparts to the Skin a natural Whiteness and Clearness and Youthful Delicacy of Complexion unattainable by any other means. Sold by all Druggists. tf

$100 A MONTH made by Intelligent Agents, in Valuable work now published. Particulars in Circular Mailed Free. J. L. G. FITZPATRICK, No. 97 & 99 Nassau St., N. Y. 473-91

CHASE'S CHEMICAL COMPOUND,
For the Beard. One bottle will force a vigorous growth of hair upon the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks. Testimonials of thousands given. Sent to any address, warranted as represented or money returned. Price $1, or four bottles for $3. Sent under seal. Address S. A. CHASE,
P. O. Drawer 369, Cohoes, N. Y. 478-90

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS
BRIDAL SUITS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDES-MAIDS' SUITS, OSTRICH FEATHERS AND PARIS FLOWERS,
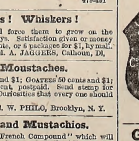
At TUCKER'S, 759 Broadway.



Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PIERRE BIBON, 24 Ann St., N. Y.

Old Eyes Made New!
A pamphlet directing how to speedily restore sight and give up spectacles, without aid of doctor or medicine. Sent by mail, free, on receipt of 10 cents. Address
E. B. FOOTE, M. D.,
46Seow 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

Beauty.—Hunt's Bloom of Roses,
A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin or clothing; perfectly pure and cannot be detected. Price $1. 18 cents by mail, securely packed from observation. Sold by Druggists.
000 183 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

C. S. Sea, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. His Celebrated Female Pills. Prepaid for return stamp. Sample for $1 in part for a package.

$10 AGENTS $10
And Dealers. Sometheme New, Patent Pin Cushion, Universal Needle-Threader. Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, Flower Vases, Jewelry, Soaps, Gent's Vest Pocket Match Safe, Silver-Plated Send stamp for Circular. S. P. & CO.,
tf 83 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Gold $3—Silver $1.50
1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 14th, 15th, 20th, 23d

ARMY CORPS,
Showing each Division.

BY THE SINGLE ONE, 100 or 1,000.
Send for Circular.
Address
DEGWYER & MOORE,
Manufacturers,
No. 5 Spruce Street, N. Y.

GLASS LETTERS.
Glass Letters, &c., for Signs—European Style. Door Plate, Show Cards, &c. Send for Circular. 197 Fulton Street. 480-6eow

Trappers, Here It Is!
NAT TODD'S (the celebrated trapper) fur lure, with which any amount of furs can be caught. The Receipt for making and using same for sale by all druggists.
P. E. MARTIN, Faulina, N. J.

Holiday Presents.
J. H. WINSLOW & CO.
THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.
100,000
WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, SOLID GOLD LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.
Worth $500,000!
To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time give our Circular containing full list and particulars, and terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.
J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
259 Broadway, New York.

Do You Want to get Married?
"Certainly Male Ugly." A Book of 100 pages, Illustrated. Treating on Psychomancy, plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry anyone they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps. Address 486-7t J. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1626, Portland, Me.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION!
250,000
Watches, Chains, Diamond Rings, Etc.
WORTH OVER
One Million Dollars!
All to be Sold for One Dollar Each!!
WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE! NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO RECEIVE!

Splendid List of Articles! All to be Sold for $1 each!

260 Gents' Gold Hunting-case Watches	$50 to $150
260 Ladies' Gold and Enamelled Watches	25 " 75
500 Gold Vest Chains	10 " 50
500 Diamond Rings	50 " 150
2,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains	10 " 50
2,000 Lockets	5 " 20
5,000 Gold Oval Band Bracelets	5 " 20
5,000 Chased Gold Bracelets	5 " 10
3,000 Imitation Pearl Gem Chains	5 " 10
7,000 Solitaire and Gold Brooches	5 " 10
7,000 Chased and Enamelled Brooches	5 " 10
5,000 Coral, Opal and Emerald Brooches	5 " 8
5,000 Cameo Shells and Intaglios	5 " 8
Ear Drops	4 " 8
7,000 Gold Pens, Silver-Mounted	3 " 6
4,000 California Diamond Breast Pins	2 50 " 10
4,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc	2 50 " 8
4,000 Fob and Vest Ribbon Slides	1 " 3
5,000 Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs	3 " 8
3,000 Gold Tablets, Pencils, etc	3 " 7
10,000 Miniature Lockets	3 " 8
10,000 Gents' Magic Spring	3 " 20
5,000 Gold Toothpicks, Cameos, Etc	3 " 8
5,000 Pairs Gold Rings	4 " 11
5,000 Gold Thimbles	4 " 11
10,000 Gents Set and Signet Rings	2 50 " 10
15,000 Children's Diamond Rings	2 50 " 10
7,500 Sets Ladies' Jewellery—Jet & Gold	5 " 15
7,500 Sets Ladies' Jewellery—Cameo, Pearl, etc	4 " 15
10,000 Gold Pens, Silver Extension-holders and Pencils	4 " 10
10,000 Gold Pens and Gold Extension Holders	3 " 8
5,000 Silver and Gold Extension Holders	2 " 10
5,000 Silver Fruit and Drinking Cups	5 " 20
5,000 Silver Castors	15 " 50
5,000 Sets Silver Cake Baskets	15 " 50
5,000 Dozen Silver Tea Spoons	PER DOZEN.
5,000 Table Spoons & Forks	20 " 10

In consequence of the great expansion of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, through the war now happily at an end, we have been able to secure this Valuable Jewellery, originally intended for the English market, but now thrown off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT ANY SACRIFICE!

Under the above arrangement, ARNDALE & CO., acting as Agents for the principal European Manufacturers, have received upon Grand Gift Distribution, subject to the following regulations:

All articles, numbers, each article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail, by address on receipt of 25 cents.

ALL ARTICLES SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH.
WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE!!

On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you are going to have, and then it will be optional to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may map their choice. A Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewellery on our list for ONE DOLLAR, and in no case more than a dollar. Jobbers and Peddlers, there are no blanks. The price of Certificates is as follows:

One for	25 cents.
Five for	1 "
Eleven for	2 "
Thirty for	5 "
Sixty-five for	10 "
One Hundred for	15 "

Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to One Dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us. Address all letters to Agents Stamps.
ARRANDALE & CO.,
197 Broadway, New York.

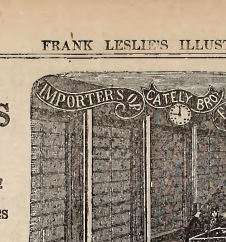
TWENTY-FOUR
CARTES DE VISITE
OF
FRENCH GRISETTES,
In different attitudes of art.
Inclosed $1 25 and form of cut, sent.
479-80 GILES, MANLY, Nassau St., N. Y.

Six Dollars from Fifty Cents.
Agents, come and examine Inventions, or Samples sent free by mail for 50 cents. Notice for Family. E. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York.
4-18eow

$1 WHISKERS! $1
For $1 I will send sealed, postpaid, the GRECIAN COMPOUND, highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of hair upon the smoothest face in two weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Entire satisfaction or money refunded. Descriptive circular mailed free. Address
E. L. DUTTON,
Lunenburgh, N. Y.
471-6t

$7 WATCHES

FOR



HOLIDAY PRESENTS!

RICH AND UNIQUE WATCHES

OF

EVERY DESCRIPTION,

Suitable for Christmas and New Year's Gifts. Single Watches at Importers' Wholesale prices.

AN ELEGANT WATCH in Fine Gold Plated Double Case, Richly Engraved, Turned Centre, Curved Balance Bridge, English Full Jewelled Movement, adjusted Regulator, Spring Bolt, Spade Hands and Fine Enamelled White Dial, a serviceable article in running order, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and a Gentle Watchman For Gentlemen breakfast. MINIATURE GOLD LOCKET to match, with Double Cases, Dial, and Glass for Two Likenesses. A Beautiful Christmas Present. Sent by mail to any address for only $5. A NEW SILVER WATCH, especially adapted to Army use, in Heavy Double Cases, Small Size, same as the above, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and Gentle Yet Reliable Alarm. Engraved Double Case Lasket, etc. A neat Holiday Gift. Sent by mail to any address for only $7. THE IMPERIAL WATCH, Combining in Rare and Beautiful Combination of Mechanical Appointments within its cases and attached to its machinery a beautiful and correct working TIMEKEEPER, an accurately adjusted Mariner's Compass in miniature, such as Dial, and a Reliable Calendar, indicating day of month, week, etc., in Case, rendering this Watch a perfect Sporting, Field and Time Keeper. The beautiful machinery of this valuable Watch is placed in Finely Finished Double Engraved, Hunting Cases, and the being of the 18 Carat Gold, inner cases of Solid Gold Composition, Richly Engraved top and bottom, with Fancy Pin Name, Turned Neck, movable Pendant Bow, and Fancy Push Spring. Reverse, English Improved Jewelled Action, M. F. Tobin movements, Polished Cap or Dome Self-acting Glass, Inner Silver, Enamelled Setting, Fine White Dials, Polished Steel Hands, and is an Exact Imitation of a $100 watch, and used by the Royal Princes and Officers of THE BRITISH ARMY. None Genuine unless bearing our private trade mark. Price per single one in Morocco Case, with Key, &c., all complete by mail, $5. Catalogues of our Descriptions of Watches mailed free. Address CATELY BROTHERS, Sole Importers, 102 NASSAU STREET, N.Y. Established 1856.

GREAT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION

OF

Gold Watches, Diamond Rings, Elegant Jewelry and Fancy Goods,

Worth $500,000!

T. BENTON & CO. Jewellers, 599 Broadway, N. Y.

CERTIFICATES, naming each Article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, and well mixed. One of these Envelopes, containing the Certificate or Order for a Watch, Set of Jewelry, or some Article worth over $1 will be delivered at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of 25 cents; the Article named on such certificate will be sent to any address for ONE DOLLAR, or it may be exchanged for any other Article on our list of the same value.

NO BLANKS!

YOU MAY get a WATCH or DIAMOND RING for ONE DOLLAR, which you do not buy until you know what you have drawn.

YOU MUST get the VALUE of your money.

Entire satisfaction guaranteed in all cases.

Six Certificates for $1; thirteen for $2.

AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamp for a Circular. All letters should be addressed to

T. BENTON & CO., Box 5507, P. O., New York.

Soldiers of the Union!

Read the following Letters received from your comrades as endorsements of the

WORLD KNOWN AND WORLD TRIED REMEDIES, KNOWN AS

PROF. HOLLOWAY'S

PILLS AND OINTMENT.

You will here find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country where our army of occupation is in force.

See to your Health!

All of you have some one interested in your welfare. Send for and read them.

Your Life is Valuable!

Not only to yourselves, but to your Fathers and Mothers Sisters, Wives and Brothers.

Then while you may, purchase your Health!

35 cents, 62 cents, or $1 40,

Will, when expended in these medicines, bring you down to the greatest and truest old age.

The following are a few specimens of genuine letters on file for inspection at this office. Copies sent by mail to any inquirer.

60 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT,
20th Illinois Volunteers,
FORT DONELSON, Tenn., Feb. 5, 1864.

Prof. HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:

SIR.—Enclosed please find two dollars, for which send me one dollar's worth each of your celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please attend to this at once, for I want to use the rest of the above remedies.

Address Lieut. A. W. FELLOWS, Q. M.,
20th Illinois Vols.

CAMP NEAR BRANDY STATION, VA.,
Nov. 7, 1864.

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR.—I have heard a great deal of talk about your famous Pills, and as I never was in the need of them till now, I want to try them, as I surfeited myself very prevalent at the present time; send me the worth of the enclosed. Yours, &c.,

JOSEPH WALSH,
Co. E, 5th Regt., Excelsior Brigade.

FULTON, TENN.,
Nov. 6, 1864.

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR—Please find enclosed one dollar, and send me the amount in your famous Pills, as I am troubled with Dyspepsia, and want cure. Yours, &c.,

THOMAS F. TURNER,
Co. I, 2d Iowa Infantry.

MONROE LEAGUE, CO. C,
Nov. 1, 1864.

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

Please find enclosed the sum of one dollar for Pills I have Diarrhœa, and can't it stopped, so I want to try your Pills. Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM CHRISTY,
Co. D, 104th Regt. Penn. Vols.,
Morris Island, S. C.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen—Samples and Catalogues sent for 25 cents. Enclose an envelope with your own address and stamp.
000 D. SEMMETTE, 89½ Liberty St., N. Y.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this season that the markets of the United States are flooded with the direct poisons, under the name of imported liquors, to which dyers and corner compounders purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known then, that while all the different stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing acid or fusel oil, a morbid poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the purest roots, herbs and barks of stomachic, anti-bilious and aperient herbs and plants, forming a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor, and to-day as every day we equal to the combined sales of all the other Bonks advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and interpolations

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 59 CEDAR STREET.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, secure a certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the character of fortunes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address
T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by forwarding $2 50 or $3, according to the quality desired. Address

HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT—A Powerful Stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustachios in Six Weeks, on the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Ongnent and finding it not as represented by the forming one of the pack, can have their money returned to them at any time within Ten Days after day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address

A. C. CLARK,
458-62 P. O. Drawer 18, Albany, N. Y.

For Nervous Debility, &c.,

Use " Omper's Concentrated Cure." The only reliable remedy. Price, per vial, $1—4 for $3. Sent free by mail. Send for Pamphlet—sent free. Address

C. E. HELMS & CO., 39 Chambers st., N. Y.
000 Sold by Druggists everywhere.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $9

A handsome Engine-Turned or Plain Sterling Silver Double Hunter-patented Watch, Double-case, Stalled Movements, Sun-set or Gold-cut Sweep Hands, Enamelled Dial, new style of index, Chaste Action, Self-acting Balance, Polished Cap. Especially adapted for Army use. A reliable Timekeeper. Price $7.

A fine 18 Carat Heavy Gold Gold Watch, in Double Cases, same as above, in perfect Running Order, and a Reliable Key, Sleeve Pin, and Pen in a neat case for $9.

American Army Watch,

Imported by me expressly for the American Trade. In Solid Oxide Gold Composite Hunting Cases (sunken pattern); open face or Hunter's Cases, or Hunter Cases being 18 Carat Gold, and the finer one Solid Gold Composite; the two combinations being known as Oxide Metal, the imitation being so brilliant that it can scarcely be told from Gold; and is beautifully engraved, and finished equal to a fine Gold Watch. It is particularly recommended not only for beauty, but durability. It has the genuine European Jewelled Movements (16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, improved Duby Action, Independent Balance, Sunk Seconds, plain or fancy Dials, Gilt Hands, Polished Steel Screws, Patent Push-pin, Lever Cap, and is warranted for one year. A magnificent Silver Army Watch, Double Hunter Case, with fine French Curb Vest Chain, for $15.

Our stock comprises over 40 different styles of European and American Watches, of the latest and most saleable styles, for Army and Home Trade, consisting of American Levers in various styles; Cases, Dials, Movements, Hunting Silver and Glass Combination Watches (something new).

Thermometer Watches, Night Watches, Ladies' Petite Watches, Enamelled Watches, Imported Pocket Chronometers, Stop Watches, Lithographic Watches, Composite Watches, Gold Levers, Gold Chronometers, and a variety of Watches not to be found elsewhere. Those wishing to buy single Watches, or dealing in them, should send a stamp for our Descriptive Circular. Address

KELLEY & ALLEN,
No. 200 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite, 1,000 different Subjects. Send for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELLPO, 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Great Money-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or soldiers can make $10 per day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, 25 cents. Address

E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.
000

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smooth face (not) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of order.

R. G. GRAHAM, 129 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most desirable Cards ever published—Sporting Set, Fancy Set, Comic Set, Visit Sporting with Love; Bedtime; Bombarding Charleston; Smoking the 20th; etc., etc. Price only 25 cents each, or $1 for the set of 15 choice cards.

E. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, produced by the Vices of Solitude, is treated in the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Impotence, Impaired Nutrition and Dyspepsia.

Any one wishing to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 First Street, Troy, N. Y. 462-74

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE.

FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE has fully established the superiority of

Redding's Russia Salve

Over all other Healing Preparations

It cures all kinds of Sores, Cuts, Scalds, Burns, Boils, Felons, Whitlows, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Piles, Chilblains, Lips, Sore Eyes, etc., etc. Removing the Pain at Once, and producing the most speedy healing by Scabbing and Inflammation is all by Magic. Only 25 cents—Sold by Mail 37 cents. For Sale by

J. F. REDDING,
474-6mw No. 421 Broadway, N.Y., and by all Druggists.

Wonderful! Strange!

Full Instructions by which any person can master the art of Ventriloquism in a few hours. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Sent by mail, free of cents. Address

M. A. JAGGERS, Caldwell, Ill.

ELEGANT $9 English Count Watches.

FOR LADIES, ONLY $30.

Fine English Levers, $25.

American Army Watch, $15.

Gold Chronometer, $70.

American Levers, $30.

All Watches sent by mail to any address on receipt of price.

G. L. & J. B. KELLY,
WINDOW SHADE MANUFACTURERS, AS BROADWAY,
NEW YORK.

NEW STYLES, 1864.

IMPORTERS OF

LACE CURTAINS,

AND ALL OTHER

Curtain Materials

Also, PIANO AND TABLE COVERS.

"How 'Tis Done;" or, the Secret Out. Gambling Exposed.—"Marked Cards"—"Fortune Telling."—"A Book of Wonderful Wishes," in 42 days—100 Great Secrets—New Book. No humbug. Satisfaction guaranteed. Mailed free for 25 cents. Address HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
477-99

PLAYING CARDS!

The American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards,

Manufactured from the Best Stock.

They are the prettiest cards made, and suit the popular ideas. The suits are Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags; Cabinets in place of Kings, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Soldier for Jack.

All the games can be played as readily as with cards bearing foreign emblems. Each pack is put up in a neat cardcase, and then in Boxes for the trade.

In order that ALL desires may have an opportunity to test these cards, a sample pack will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
472-5 No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

Shults' Curlique, for curling the hair. Price 50 cents. Send stamp for Circular. Address
471-83 C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

The Brazilian Hair Curler. One application warranted to curl the most straight Caucasian hair into very ringlets or heavy massive curls. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address

S. S. CRANE,
471-83 Cohoes, N. Y.

"The Most Laughable Thing on Earth."

A Game that can be played by any number of persons; is susceptible of 59,906 CHANGES, ENDLESS TRANSPOSITIONS OF WORDS AND SENTENCES, producing PEPPERER ROARS OF LAUGHTER, often making the breath of one's face equal to its length, causing WATERMARKS TO BURST and BUTTONS TO FLY. Just the thing for SOLDIERS IN CAMP and HOSPITAL. SOLD EVERYWHERE. A YOUNG FELLOW at HOME; for EVENING PARTIES and DULL DAYS. A Sure Cure for Home Sickness and the Blues. Mailed, postpaid, for 25 cents. Address Box 456, Boston, Mass.

TRANSPARENT PLAYING CARDS

THE BEST THING OUT!

Can be used the same as any other Cards, and contains 52

BEAUTIFUL SCENES.

Enclose $1 25 and three red stamps for sample pack. $144 per gross, twenty per cent. off. $10 per Quire.

W. ADAMS,
94 Nassau street, New York.

ATTENTION!

100 Photographs of Female Beauties, for 10 cents. Birth and Marriage Photographs of Generals, for 50 cents. Send 3 orders for 25 cents.

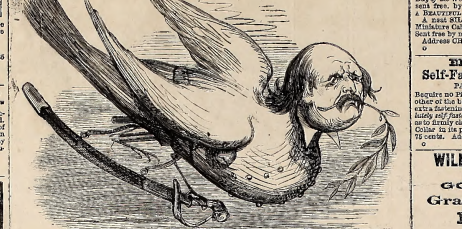
O. BRIGGS, Chicago, Ill.
476-9 P. O. Drawer 6595.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Matrimo Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 500 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 13 Wall Street, New York.

BEGIN WITH THE NEW YEAR
TO READ THAT REPOSITORY OF
Interesting and Instructive Miscellany,
THE
Atlantic Monthly
The prospectus for 1865 is now ready, and will be sent to any address upon application. The new volume will contain
SEVERAL REMARKABLE FEATURES.
Now is the time to subscribe. Terms $4 a year, or 35 cents a number.
Address the Publishers,
TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.

SOMETHING NEW.
The Patent Army Pocket Pipe and Cigar Holder combined, is decidedly the best Smoking Pipe ever invented. It imparts a rich soothing flavor to the Tobacco; is of elegant appearance and finish; with fine carved Horn Mouthpiece and Cigar Holder. It is easy to carry, easy to clean, and is always ready for a good smoke. Sample dozen sent free on receipt of $2 50. Address
RICHARDS & CO.,
97 William Street, New York.

FRAGRANT
SOZODONT
For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.
Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth, Purifying and Sweetening the Breath; the most convenient, elegant and economical article for the toilet the world has ever seen.
Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—75 cents per bottle.
HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors,
208 Greenwich St., N. Y.



KENDALL'S
AMBOLINE
FOR THE HAIR
IS composed of extracts from Flowers, Roots and Herbs, for the Beauty and permanent Vigor of the Hair. It prevents hair falling out or thinning gray, exhilarates dandruff and is a delightful and pleasant dressing.
Also effecting a cure for most diseases incident to the scalp.
A trial will prove our assertion.
For sale by all Druggists.
Price $1 per case.
WANING & CO.,
Proprietors,
35 Dey Street, N. Y.

THE UNIVERSAL PAPER COLLAR
TAINTER & JACKSON'S
Patent August 2—1864.
The Trade supplied at No. 630 Pearl Street, New York.

PATENT AGENCY OFFICES.
Established in 1846.
MESSRS. MUNN & CO.,
Editors of the Scientific American,
SOLICITORS OF AMERICAN & EUROPEAN PATENTS
With a Branch Office at Washington, D. C., corner of F and 7th streets, have had thirty years' experience in procuring patents in the United States and various foreign countries. More than 20,000 inventors have availed themselves of their services. A pamphlet of information, containing the laws and regulations now in force, and directions how to proceed to obtain patents, sent free. A copy of the Scientific American, containing the Claims of all the Patents issued from the Patent Office during the week, is published every Saturday. Terms of the Scientific American, $3 20 per annum; $1 60 for six months. Specimen copies sent free. Reference is permitted to the Commissioner of Patents, and to the Editor of the Scientific American. All business connected with the Examination of Inventions, Preparing Specifications, Drawings, Caveats, Assignments, Hearing Appeals, Reissues, Extensions, Infringements, and the Management of Patents, and Conducting Trials in the Courts, and Validity of Patents, will receive the most careful attention.
Patents secured in England, France, Belgium, Austria, Russia, Prussia, and all other foreign countries where Patents are granted. Hand-book about the Patent Laws, Patent Office Decisions, and how to obtain Patents, sent free. Address
MUNN & CO.,
No. 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

WARDS SHIRTS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.
French Flannel Overshirts.
Cut 38 inches long, $4 75 and $5 each. Sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 63 cents postage each shirt.
STEEL COLLARS
Enameled White, having all the comforts of linen collars. Washed and dried in a moment. A sample Collar mailed free on receipt of 75 cents. Cuffs $1 00 per pair. Ladies' Collars and Cuffs same price.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD,
Box
No. 387 Broadway, New York.

GOLD PENS.
We will send to any address on receipt of the following prices one of our First Quality 14 Carat Warranted (Diamond Pointed) Gold Pens and Silver Ebony Desk Holder and Morocco Case, or Silver-plated Extension Case:
No. 3. Large Pen and Holder . . . $ 1 60
" 4. Commercial " . . . 2 25
" 5. Engrossing Desk Pen and Holder . . 3 50
" 6. Gentleman's " and Holder . . . 4 00
Send a stamp for our Circular of Engravings of all our new styles, and gold pen stubs and pipes. Pens Repointed for 50 cents. Address
AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO.,
200 Broadway, N. Y.

A DOVE OF PEACE.

A WATCH FREE
And $15 or $20 per Day made Easy. A New Invention. Our Great Novelty, the WONDERFUL PRIZE PORTFOLIO. Just out and creating an immense sensation and furore. Sixty cents' worth, throughout the country; there is nothing like them. Sales Enormous; profits immense. Each Portfolio, Extra Large Size, 16 by 20, contains an immense quantity of useful and valuable goods—Paints, &c., worth Several Dollars, and sells for only 50 cents. Articles that no Soldier or Family can possibly do without. The sale is Sold Every Day. Soldiers on their a Month's Pay in a Single Day. Agents Wanted in Every Camp and Village. A Beautiful Gold or Silver Watch Presented free as a Premium to Every Agent. This is the Greatest money-making Business of the Day. We Guarantee any agent $15 per Day. Premiums sent with Goods same day the order is received. Catalogues containing Extra Premium inducements sent by mail free. S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Sole Manufacturers.

MANUFACTURER'S STOCK
OF
Watches, Lockets, Chains, Rings, Pins, Bracelets, Gold Pens and Cases,
And a full assortment of fine Jewellery, to be disposed of by distribution for the next 60 days.
Certificates of all the various articles are put in envelopes, sealed and mixed, and sold without regard to choice. One certificate telling you what you can have for $1 will be sent for 3 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5. After seeing what you can have, it will be at your option to send and get the article, or not, and after seeing the article, if it does not give perfect satisfaction, you can return it and get the money. We also manufacture pure Silver and Gold Badges for every Corps and Division of the Army. Also Infantry, Artillery and Battery, Engineer and Pontonier, Masonic Base Ball and Society Badges of every kind. We will send a Sample Badge (pure Silver), for any Department in the Army, with your Name, Regiment and Company handsomely engraved thereon, on receipt of $1 50.
Agents wanted everywhere, to whom great inducements are offered.
S. M. WARD & CO.,
268 Broadway, N. Y.

Shults' Cognent—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, prepaid, for 50 cents. Address
458-859 C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S PIANOFORTES.
99 & 101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. 475-860

Martel's Great Picture
OF
CENTRAL PARK,
Now on exhibition and for sale at MESSRS. BALL, BLACK & CO.'S, Broadway, corner of Broome St. WILLIAM SCHAUS, WILLIAM & BROTHERS, ACOSTA BENJAMIN & WILMERTH, Broadway, corner of Grand, will supply part of the work on receipt of price ($6), or by express, C. O. D. Address CENTRAL PARK PUBLISHING CO., 720 Broadway, New York.
To (First-Class Local Agents wanted everywhere.

IVORY AND PEARL BROOCHES, Ear-Rings and Cuff Buttons,
Latest Styles, $2 50 & $3 per Set.
Gilt Belt Buckles, $3.
Send free on receipt of price
WM. M. WELLING,
o 571 Broadway. (Sign of Golden Elephant.)

Friends.—Send a Stamp for Information and my Circular. Address J. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.

DIAMOND PARLOR MATCHES.
These Matches are the BEST IN THE WORLD. SURE FIRE WITHOUT SULPHUR, NO DISAGREEABLE SMELL, and a luxury and comfort to smokers and people with weak lungs. For sale wholesale and retail by
THE LODI MANUFACTURING CO.
No. 6 Cortlandt Street, New York.
479-859

FREE READING!
Soldiers, Sailors, Marines, Everybody—send us your address, and in return, send you a large family newspaper, replete with good miscellaneous reading matter. Send Grats. CHAS. E. MACKEY, 61 Nassau St., N. Y.
480-0

GOLD PENS.
If you want the best Pen ever used send to Johnson for Circular giving exact sizes and prices. Pens from $1 to $5, to suit every hand and pocket. Pens Repointed, by mail, 50 cts.
N. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office,
0478-60 15 Maiden Lane, New York.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD-PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Set, Small Size, White Enamelled Dial, Gilt Hands, "English Movements," and Stopped Seconds, with an accurate "Miniature Calendar," indicating the Day of the Week, Month, &c., in last case. A single one sent free by mail, to any address, in neat case, WITH A BEAUTIFUL GOLD CHAIN, for only $10.
A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with the Stopped Seconds, &c., specially adapted to the Army. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.
Address ELLIS, F. N. SMITH & CO., Sole Importers.
o 36 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

BENNETT'S PATENT
Self-Fastening Steel Collars,
PATENTED AUGUST 30, 1864.
Require no Pins, no Studs, no Elastic Loops, nor any other of the latticework (and apt to get lost or broken) extra fastenings of other Metallic Collars, but are elegantly self-fastening by means of button-holes arranged so to firmly clasp the buttons of a shirt while putting the Collar in its place. Samples mailed free on receipt of 75 cents. Address the Patentee, OTTO ERNST, o 49 Bowery, New York.

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
GOLD MEDAL
Grand and Square
PIANOS,
BALTIMORE, MD.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Bendel, G. Satter, and other leading artists. Every instrument warranted for five years.
Pianos for hire promptly sent on application.
A full assortment of the above celebrated Instruments at J. BAUER & CO.'s Warerooms, 0 No. 865 Broadway, N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes in both sexes—new and infallible treatment in Report of HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address HOWARD ASSOCIATION, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

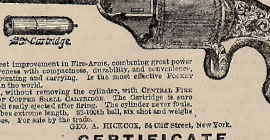
FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!
All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent forward, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Soldiers' Checks taken. 0000

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,
Magnifying 600 times, mailed to any address for 20 cts. THREE of different powers for $1. Address
BOWEN & CO., Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Do not purchase a STEREOSCOPE until you have seen the BELLEVUE, or perfect Stereoscope. For sale by dealers generally, and mailed, prepaid, for $3, or with 12 views for $6. By HENRY CRAIG, 125 Centre Street, New York. Will also mail, prepaid, the celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE for $2 50, with beautiful mounted Objects for $3 50; with 36 objects, $6 50. The Novelty Microscope for examining Bank Bills, Seed, Insects, Flower, Lace, &c., is sent for $2, or with 12 objects $3 25. 477-859

GREAT CHANCE
TO MAKE MONEY!
AND OBTAIN A WATCH FREE, by selling our celebrated PRIZE PACKETS and SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. Address, for particulars, CHARLES FRASER, Publisher, 0 Box 4326, New York City.

LADIES' LETTER.
FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS
His information never before published. Sent, free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.
Address Box 4586, New York Post Office.



N. Y. S. VOLUNTEER INSTITUTE.
$50,000 Worth of Real Estate.
50,000 Highly Embellished Steel-Plate Portraits of the President of the United States, Lieut.-Gen. Grant, Gen. McClellan and the Generals of the Army will be distributed among the subscribers to the N. Y. S. Volunteer Institute, for the establishment of a home for orphan children of our volunteers, on Washington's Birthday, 1865. Every person remaining ill by mail, addressed to DAVT. H. R. RANDALL, Treasurer, Post-Office Box 4586, New York City, will receive any one of these engravings and a certificate of subscription, which will entitle the holder to any share in this property, which will be distributed as stated. For further particulars, send for Circular.
COL. W. H. YOUNG, Prest.
C. A. THOMPSON, Sec. DAVT. H. R. RANDALL, Treas. o

FOR A FORTUNE
Address FRANKLIN & ST. CO., Box 253, Boston, Mass.

A Likeness of your future Husband or Wife. Send ten cents and red stamp to
F. WILDAY,
o Box 41, P. O., Albany, N. Y.

$20 to $30 per Day Profit,
Realized by "Sutlers and Agents," by the sale of the 5,000 DOZEN SELF-ADJUSTING Enameled White, from $2 to $3 per dozen. Samples at 20 cts., 30 cts., 75 cts., $1, Snow White, Linen Polished, Linen Stitched and Corrugated, $2 50; Celebrated Tip, $1. Globe Steel Cuffs, $2 50; Ladies', $1 50; Collar, $2. Mailed on receipt of measure. Size of collar.

JEANERET, Agent for the Patentees, 78 Nassau St., New York.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER

Is the latest improvement in Fire-Arms, combining great power and effectiveness with compactness, durability, and simplicity both for operating and carrying. Is the most effective POCKET REVOLVER in the market.
Is loaded, without removing the cylinder, with CENTRAL FIRE WATERPROOF COPPER CARTRIDGES, which, when fired, explode entire, the shell really ejected after firing. The cylinder never fouls. Is but 7 inches extreme length. 32-inch ball, six shot and weighs 14 ounces. For sale by the trade.
GEO. A. HICKCOX, 84 Cliff Street, New York.

CERTIFICATE.
I have thoroughly tested the new "National Revolver," and find it an effective weapon, of sure fire and convenient size. At fifty yards I think I could with this pistol kill at every shot. I take pleasure in recommending it as a weapon in every way desirable. In company with others, I carefully tested this pistol a large number of times, and not one cartridge failed to explode.
JOHN CHARLESTON, Chief of Police, Cairo ILL.
o (Signed)

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 481—Vol. XIX.] NEW YORK, DECEMBER 17, 1864. [Price 10 Cents. $4 00 Yearly. 13 Weeks $1 00.

CONSECRATION OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL AT PHILADELPHIA, NOV. 20—BISHOP WOOD BLESSING THE WALLS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, F. H. SCHELL.

To the Public.

The approaching commencement of a new year presents a fitting opportunity for subscribing to FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, which is not only the oldest but the best, as well as the most enterprising Illustrated Paper on this continent, for excelling the London Illustrated News in its enterprise and general attractions. Without referring to its past triumphs, we shall merely allude to the present gigantic Rebellion, which has been historically and pictorially illustrated at every step by our Artists and Correspondents. Not content, as other illustrated papers have been, to rely upon voluntary and chance contributions, we have had a trained corps of the first artists, both foreign and American, to accompany our armies and navies, and furnish us with sketches, taken on the spot, of every interesting event.

It is not too much to say that no important expedition, during the last four years, either by sea or land, has been left by the scene of action without FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER being represented in it by an Artist of acknowledged ability and experience. Illustrations as it may sound, we have had, since the commencement of the present war, over 80 Artists engaged in making sketches for our papers, and have published nearly 3,000 pictures of battles, sieges, bombardments, stormings and other scenes, methods to war.

NOR IS FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER less attractive in its other features. It is the only Illustrated Paper in America whose contents are purely original; its stories are not copied from foreign periodicals, but are written expressly for it, by the ablest authors of the day. Every number contains an original poem, beautifully illustrated; an original story, with two fine illustrations; headed with original stories, sketches and adventures; with a complete digest of the week's news, as well as a spirited description of the current fashions, depicted in our pages, making, in point of fact, every number of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER not only the most entertaining periodical offered to the public, but a complete pictorial history of the times. In addition to these general attractions, it contains a continued story, by an eminent author, the last one now coming to a close. Progressing FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED PAPER $5,000, being over the amount ever paid for a similar work.

We have also to remark, that FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER has never been the organ of any party, but has always advocated the great cause for which we are fighting, THE RESTORATION OF THE UNION, on which our integrity as a nation depends. This has been the sole aim and object of our editorials, carefully avoiding those sectional views and personal prejudices which are distasteful to all true Americans.

At the present juncture, when so many important movements are in progress, it is especially essential that the public should be correctly informed; and to accomplish this object, FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER has Special Artists with GRANT, Butler, Sherman, Sheridan and Farragut, as well as with all other armies now in the field.

TERMS FOR

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months - - - -	$1 00
One copy, six months - - - -	2 00
One copy, one year - - - -	4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper - - - -	7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper - - - -	15 00
Five copies, one year - - - -	20 00

(With an extra copy gratis to the person sending up the club.)

One copy of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper and one copy of Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine, the most complete Lady's Book published, for one year - - - - 7 00

Address

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Now Ready, Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This annual contains a greater amount of useful and entertaining information than any publication of the kind ever issued. It is indeed the only Lady's Illustrated Almanac published. It is embellished with over 70 beautiful engravings, by the finest Artists of the day, executed in the highest style of art. It contains directions for the parlor, ballroom, bedroom, nursery, kitchen, garden, nursery and sick-room. In a word, it is the matron's only treasure, as well as the young lady's companion, and it should be found in every household. In addition to general illustrations, it contains splendid portraits of Mrs. Lincoln and Mrs. McClellan, colorishly engraved on steel, and a graphic Bathing Scene at Long Branch, printed on fine paper. This complete Lady's Almanac—which contains more reading matter than an octavo volume—costs only 50 cents. It will be sent, postage free, on receipt of the price, either in currency or postage stamps. Address

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Second Edition. Frank Leslie's Illustrated Comic Almanac for 1865.

This amusing Almanac is full of comic cuts, astronomical knowledge made easy, side-splitting jokes and other fearies. The illustrations contain hits at every class, by the first comic Artists of both worlds. Bellew, Newman, McLenan, John Leech, Tenniel, Rose, Howard, Brown, &c. FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED COMIC ALMANAC contains 32 pages, comprising an Illustrated Calendar for every month, and upwards of 60 humorous engravings. Price only 15 cents.

For Sale at the above Almanacs sent, Postage Free, on receipt of the price.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

The valuable work is the exception to its prototype, the London Illustrated Almanac, and much cheaper. It contains valuable information, Religious, Political, Railroad, Statistical, Astronomical and Useful, being a repository of 36 beautiful Engravings, by the best European and American Artists, engraved in the highest style of art. It is also embellished with two splendid Ethiographic Portraits, printed on fine paper, of Governor Brown, Secession Governor of Georgia, one, satirical, by the first Artists of the day—Bellew, Newman, McLenan, Tenniel, Howard, Fields, John Leech, Forbes, &c., &c. Price 15 cents.

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Barnum's American Museum.

IMMENSE ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Giants, Bloomative Dwarfs, Albino Children, Japanese Hop, Stalking Horse, Happy Family, Living Whale, &c. AMUSING PERFORMANCES daily at 2 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under ten, 15 cents.

All who want Immediate Employment must send a Watch can have them both on application to Edwards & Co., of 102 Nassau Street.

See advertisement on our last page.

The Family Gem Sewing Machine

is one of the neatest and most welcome gifts a household can receive. Its cheapness is remarkable. Send for the Company. For particulars, see advertisement on page 206.

The Ne Plus Ultra of Convenience,

Cheapness and Neatness, has been reached in the Ink Stands and Pens sold by the Excelsior Manufacturing Co. at their office to 102 Nassau Street.

JUST RECEIVED,
A NEW EDITION OF
OSCANYAN'S ORIENTAL ALBUM.

IN BOOK FORM, elegantly bound, in Turkey morocco, containing 24 splendidly executed Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both interior and exterior costume, representing Turkish, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druse Costumes, and also Views of Constantinople, &c., &c. Each Photograph is accompanied with a letter-press description of the costume represented.

It is the most popular Album should be seen on every drawing-room table, and is the most elegant and acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Could only $5. Sent free, by mail, on receipt of the price, by

O. OSCANYAN,
Second Avenue, near 30th St., N. Y.

PERRY DAVIS'S
VEGETABLE PAIN KILLER!

The Great Family Medicine of the Age!

Every Volunteer should have a Bottle, in case of sudden attacks of disease.

Pain Killer, taken internally, should be adulterated with milk and water, and sweetened with sugar, or made into a syrup with molasses. For a cough, a few drops of Pain Killer, on sugar, will RELIEVE AND SOON CURE the worst cough. For sore Throat, gargle the throat with a mixture of Pain Killer and water, and the relief is immediate and sure to cure.

It should not be forgotten that the Pain Killer is the best remedy to take in bilious or fever and ague cases. Each bottle is wrapped with full directions for its use.

PERRY DAVIS & SON,
FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 17, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

Important to Subscribers.

In renewing Subscriptions, Subscribers are particularly requested to mention the number with which the New Subscription is to commence. This will save much receiving duplicates or missing any number. It is decidedly to our advantage to have Subscriptions run only to the expiration of the former subscription, in order that our books may be kept properly adjusted. Attention to this will much facilitate the labor of the clerks among both publishers and subscribers.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and Gazette of Fashion. Terms for 1865.

The following are our terms for 1865, which, considering the literary value of our Magazine and the superior excellence of its Fashion Department, are, we think, peculiarly moderate in price:

One Copy - - - - - - - - - -	$3 00
Four Copies to one Post Office - - - -	11 00

with the additional advantage of one Extra Copy, gratis, to the person getting up the club.

One Copy of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER and One Copy of FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE, to one Post Office - - - - - -	$7 00

Sherman—Thomas—Grant.—The Conflict Coming to a Focus.

As we write, our latest intelligence from Gen. Sherman is to the 29th ult., at which time he had occupied Millen, an important railway junction, within six days' easy marching of Savannah. There were no impediments before him, and no serious means of annoyance behind him. That he has effectively severed the railway communications between Georgia and Richmond, and between Georgia and Charleston, Wilmington, or for an immediate junction with Gen. Grant, as he may elect. His expedition, therefore, may be set down as a complete success, insuring the most decisive results in favor of the Union cause.

The rebel Gen. Hood, meantime, on his mischievous route into Tennessee, after his severe repulse at Franklin, has been able to do nothing better, down to the 5th instant, than to menace the army of Gen. Thomas in its strong position at Nashville. As the campaign is at that quarter now stands, we conjecture that Hood will be fortunate indeed if he shall contrive to recross the Tennessee, in his impending retreat, with the remnant of his shattered forces. East and West, under the most promising aspects, the great conflict is coming to a focus, and all from this whilgoose chase of Hood from the heart of Georgia to Nashville.

These two momentous military movements, both from the heart of Georgia, of Sherman for the eastern seaboard, and Hood in the opposite direction into Tennessee, and the results inevitably, then, will we are confident, form the most interesting and important chapter of the history of this war. To which side belongs the initiative in these movements—to the Union armies or to Sherman or Hood? Directly after the capture of Atlanta in September, Jeff Davis made his appearance at Macon, and in a speech to the people there he told them that the occupation of Sherman with Tennessee would be cut off, that he would thus be compelled to fall back out of Georgia to secure supplies; that Hood's army would be employed in the interval in starving our armies; the local militia of Macon, including the "old men and boys," would be depended upon to hold that city against any raid, by way of a diversion, and Jeff Davis himself with sufficient force to take care of Hood, wheeled short with the main body of his army, returned to Atlanta and Kingston, and rapidly at those two points destroying the great expedition struck out holdly for the Atlantic seacost, his legions covering all the roads over a swath of country seventy miles wide.

From those facts, it will appear that these tremendous movements were initiated by Jeff Davis, and for the good and sufficient purpose of compelling Sherman to retrace his steps back into Tennessee, to secure his depots and communications. But on the other hand, as Gen. Sherman, as soon as he was in occupation of Atlanta, issued his famous order for the depopulation of the city, leaving it optional with the inhabitants to go North or South, as they might respectively determine, families or individuals. It is thus evident that Sherman, before entering Atlanta, had some greater object in view than the occupation of that city, and to make Atlanta a new base of operations, and to start from it on another march South or East with the collection of sufficient stores of supplies. The unexpected interference of Hood in Macon this course would probably have been adopted; because, in that case, with Hood's army still in his front and wasting the country with the militia behind Sherman, the latter, in his pursuit, would have been compelled to draw his subsistence from an established base of supplies in his rear. To prevent the collection of these stores, Hood's army was moved on Sherman's communications; but this bold stroke of strategy, instead of arresting, immensely facilitated Sherman's designs. In getting the control of Hood out of his way he was relieved of the labor of establishing a great depot of supplies at Atlanta. He had a country before him to the seaboard abounding in provisions, with no opposing force before him sufficient to destroy them or to impede his march. Hence it will be seen that the movement of Hood on Sherman's rear, which, in the outset, had the appearance of a masterly piece of strategy on the part of Davis, was to him and his cause in Georgia, Tennessee and Virginia, and everywhere else, a terrible blunder, and the very thing desired and expected by Sherman.

We have gone into these details to illustrate to the general reader, from a striking example, the incalculable value of superior sagacity, and, indeed, of genius on the part of the director of the delicate, complex and dangerous game of war. We see, in this case, and in the boldest relief that Sherman, under the general coöperation of Grant, is, indeed, a master of the game. Great occasions produce great men. One of the chaos and the great Continental wars of the first French revolution rose the great Napoleon and his Marshals; so out of the trials of this great American Continental war have risen another galaxy of heroes in Grant and his Generals, whose deeds will henceforth establish the glory and destiny of the nation, and the stability of our popular institutions.

Congress.

The two Houses of Congress reassembled at Washington on Monday last, and, with the President's Message before them, they have their work cut out for the session. As it is the closing session of the 38th Congress, which expires by constitutional limitation on the 4th of March, we cannot expect that much business will be done beyond that involved in the consideration of the annual appropriation bills. We may have, perhaps, some additional and additions to our income taxes and duties on imports; and, another trial in the House on the constitutional amendment for the abolition of slavery; but, after all the other excitement, we shall have no cause to complain, if the work of the session shall be limited to the appropriation bills, current private and local bills of relief, and such constitutional amendments of our tax laws, &c., as experience may have suggested to be necessary, proper and expedient. We hope, however, that the national finances will not be neglected, and that some wise and wholesome measures will be adopted to establish the national credit and currency on a broad and solid basis, adapted to the new condition of things which will follow the impending collapse of the rebellion and the reclamation of the rebellious States.

The Late Incendiary Plot and the Law.

It strikes us that several of the daily journals of New York are rather tender-footed in their treatment of the incendiaries concerned in the late rebel attempt to illuminate this city with the burning conflagration. One of these journals, for instance, fumes that the summary method of dealing with these criminals, proposed by Gen. Dix, trenches upon the constitutional right of habeas corpus law; and another of the State rights school of our political press says: "Let the military agents of the administration leave the subject in the hands in which it properly belongs; let every indictment be referred for the detection of the conspirators to the civil police." "If not afraid of the truth, and we can hardly suppose it is, the administration owes to itself the duty of withdrawing its hand, and setting on, from the investigation of this extraordinary attempt at incendiarism, and we call on it, in the interest of law, justice and sound policy, to take this occasion to show that it is not going to a searching inquiry into the case at the hands of our civil tribunals."

Now, as a neutral, on mere party questions, we have nothing to do with the party criticisms of the journals quoted. We propose only to consider, and that very briefly, the question of jurisdiction which they have raised. They contend that the parties are arrested and accused of belonging to the rebel phosphorescent conspiracy should be tried before our ordinary civil or criminal courts, and that the Administration, with its extended military arm, should not, even in this matter, interpose, for fear of crossing the boundary of State rights. But what are the facts in this case? A deeply developed plot, and in the nature of the crime which they disclose? The facts established beyond the shadow of a doubt are—that this last diabolical attempt to destroy the city of New York by fire was the work of a deliberately organised treasonable conspiracy in the interest of the rebellion—that the incendiaries were rebel emissaries—and that the object was a general explosion in favor of Jeff Davis by a terrible blow at the great continental base of supplies of the government, the treasury, the army and the navy of the United States. It needs no argument or lengthy array of statistics to show that the destruction of New York city, with its custom house, sub-treasury, assay office, banks, public funds, assurance offices, shipping, &c., would be a more terrible blow to the Union cause than the defeat and pursuit of Gen. Grant's army to the fortifications of Washington. In view of the nature and extension of New York was, in this view, the aim and object of this phosphorus conspiracy.

We hold, therefore, that the proper and the only proper tribunal for the trial of the conspirators in this plot is a United States court-martial. The enormity of the crime, the overt act of treason against the United States, and the magnitude of the issues involved, and our ordinary local rights of jurisdiction over cases of arson and murder, and it becomes a matter which only the military arm of the United States can properly deal with. We hold, accordingly, that Gen. Dix is pursuing the proper course in the premises, and we are quite sure that the supreme law of the land and public opinion will sustain him, in his exercise, by court-martial, of his legal right to arrest, try, and speedily execute, if convicted, the guilty traitors. We believe, too, that, in a case like this, it is neither wise nor politic on the part of any Northern public journal to attempts to raise an issue in their behalf between State jurisdiction and the supreme constitutional authority of the United States.

Mem.—The Strength of the North.

The most remarkable and encouraging fact developed in the results of the late Presidential election is this, that notwithstanding the immense drainage from the loyal States, during the last four years, of their able-bodied men for the destructive work of this gigantic war, those States are stronger in men to-day than they were in 1860. The following table of the aggregate Presidential vote polled in the States named, in 1860 and in 1864, establishes this extraordinary and important fact:

STATES.	1864.	1860.
Connecticut	86,778	77,000
Delaware	16,924	16,239
Illinois	347,786	339,693
Indiana	288,643	276,143
Maine	110,877	97,918
Massachusetts	175,489	169,175
New Hampshire	68,801	65,953
New Jersey	128,630	121,125
New York	720,687	675,156
Ohio	420,872	442,447
Pennsylvania	498,103	476,442
Rhode Island	22,075	20,141
Vermont	55,741	44,644

Here we find, East and West, in every State named, a gratifying increase in the popular vote, against all their losses of men from the war, and all their losses from the mighty streams of emigration that have been building up new States from Nebraska to the Pacific Ocean. Such a picture of strength and prosperity has never before been exhibited in the world's history. What a contrast between this increasing population and expanding power of the Union, and the contracted, distracted, depopulated and exhausted "Southern Confederacy!" Jeff Davis, despoiled of two-thirds of the territorial area which, in the outset, was subject to his demands, and reduced from a population of twelve millions, obedient to his will, to less than five millions, more than one-half African slaves, has been brought to the virtual confession that he is on the brink of "the last ditch," in his appeal for a "black draft." The rebel sympathising correspondents of the English press, from Virginia to Georgia, are also beginning to realise his desperate situation from the exhaustion of his fighting material. It will not be long, however, before they realise this other fact, that Davis and his Confederacy are reduced, exhausted, demoralised and cut to pieces beyond the possibility of resuscitation, even should England and France come to the rescue. For defensive or aggressive war, the loyal States are stronger now than were all the States of the Union together on the eve of the rebellion.

Summary of the War.

BEFORE PETERSBURG.

In order to find out if the rebels were sending any of their force to act against Sherman, Gen. Grant dispatched Gen. Gregg's division of cavalry beyond the enemy's right flank below Reams's station. At Stony Creek station, by a sudden dash, they succeeded in capturing the entire garrison of 200 men, two pieces of artillery, eight wagons, 30 mules, and all their arms, ammunition and stores.

From thence they proceeded rapidly to Duvall's station, below Stony Creek, and fell upon the enemy with such impetuosity as to rout him utterly, and capture an immense amount of commissary stores and public property, among which were 3,000 sacks of corn, 500 bales of hay, one train of cars loaded with commissary stores, a large amount of bacon, many carbines, and a very large amount of public stores of various kinds.

The depots, shops, public buildings and all the captured stores were burned on the spot, through our inability to bring them away. The two captured cannon were spiked and abandoned, and the carriages burned.

The result of the reconnoissance has satisfied Gen. Grant that no portion of the rebel army has been sent to operate against Sherman.

BEFORE RICHMOND.

Last week has been an uneventful one, the only operations being an occasional exchange of shots between the artillery of the two armies. Deserters report that a considerable number of cannon has been transferred from Petersburg towards Richmond, to resist the expected advance of Butler's gunboats up the James.

TENNESSEE.

There had been a heavy battle at Franklin, a post village about 18 miles south from Nashville, between the Union army under Thomas and the rebels under Hood. It was fought on Wednesday, the 30th Nov., and lasted from morning until nine at night, when the enemy were repulsed on all points, losing 7,000 in killed, wounded and prisoners, the Union loss being over 2,000, although some accounts make it less. After the battle, for some strategical reasons, Gen. Thomas retired towards Nashville. By the last accounts the Union army was within three miles of that city, in order of battle.

SOUTH CAROLINA,

The Fulton brought the news that an expedition led by Gen. Foster in person had visited Pocotaligo bridge, on Broad river, which place was captured after some sharp skirmishing, the rebel garrison evacuating it with great precipitation. This would imply that these places had been denuded of troops to oppose Sherman.

GEORGIA.

General Sherman is reported to be within six miles of Savannah.

ARKANSAS.

An expedition had crossed the Mississippi from Memphis, and proceeded some miles into Arkansas, and captured about 50 rebels, among whom were General Evans and several officers. The districts of West Tennessee and Vicksburg had been formed into one, under command of Major-Gen. Dana.

TOWN GOSSIP.

THERE are some things that are more than a nine days' wonder, and the firing of New York city is destined to be one of them.

Since the occurrence there has been nothing but mystery connected with it. The police, both special, ordinary and detective, have pried into every hole and corner; searched the pockets and the knowledge boxes of sundry suspicious—i. e., ill-dressed—people; arrested an enterprising New Englander, who was in possession of an infernal machine intended to shave chins without the aid of a barber, and still nothing has turned up. Dark interviews, in still darker closets, have been held between the civil and military authorities, and rewards have been offered sufficient to tempt Jeff Davis himself to turn States evidence, and yet the four and twenty conspirators, at this writing, remain undetected.

And this is the only really wonderful thing about it. It seems impossible that a plot of that magnitude could have been fulminated without at least entrusting it to a score of people. That not one of these under the high rewards—amounting in all to something like $30,000—should betray his fellows, is certainly a mystery. That a plot and combination of workers of some kind was on foot is beyond all denial, but what that plot or by whom managed is the strange part. There are four positive parties to the discussion; the first, who believe it to be a genuine rebel plot; the second, who profess to think it originated at Washington, and was done for the purpose of intensifying the war spirit; the third, who believe it to be the machinations of a gang of thieves, bent only on plunder; and the fourth, who regard it as a practical joke, got up for the purpose of making an excitement. We give these, each, for what they are worth, pronouncing no opinion, and scarcely having one to pronounce. We opine that it is one of those mysteries that not even time will solve, the solution, perhaps, not being desirable in all quarters.

While talking of rebels and rebel plots we may as well mention the capture and passing through New York of that arch traitor, Roger A. Pryor. The press seems to attach much importance to this fellow, for what reason we cannot see. His rank is only that of a private, though he was once a Brigadier-General in the rebel army, and was forced to resign for some peccadilloes, after which in a fit of pique he enlisted. About Pryor there is not one trait commending him to the notice of respectable people outside of his traitorous proclivities. In Richmond, before the war, he was looked upon as a rowdy and a blackguard, always ready to drink whiskey at somebody else's expense, or fight when there was no danger. He was the terror of hotel-keepers and respectable citizens, and continually in a quarrel or urging others to it, and never travelling the streets without a gang of his own stripe at his heels. Such is Roger A. Pryor, as we personally knew, and a few months on the regimen of Fort Lafayette can do him no harm, and may possibly do him good.

From such subjects let us fly to something more pleasant.

We see there is a plot of another kind on foot, not to fire the city, but to supply it with fire. A few of our citizens who have cash to spare are about to organise and purchase largely of coal, wood and provisions, and retail it to the poor at cost price, thus breaking down the middlemen and corner grocers, who live and fatten upon the blood and sinews of the working classes. It seems a wonderful thing that, in a great city like this, speculators and capitalists should be allowed to operate, and get through State and city laws to suit their purposes, until they have control of our markets, and not a morsel of food can reach the people without passing through several hands and being doubled in price. The countryman and producer, by our municipal regulations, is shut out from our markets, and actually prevented from selling his produce to the consumer. He is forced into the hands of the middle men, who by combination can offer what price they please, and he is obliged to accept or take his load home. It is to obviate this in a measure that these gentlemen propose to buy in large quantities, and give to the poor at the same rates through the winter, keeping their original capital intact that it may be returned to the lenders in the spring. The Masonic Mission, as it is termed, we believe an association of Masons, are doing the same thing, but as their doings have not been made public we cannot speak of them with any certainty.

Our attention is called to a nuisance of such magnitude, by a circumstance that has just occurred—that we despair of doing any good by denouncing it even in the most powerful terms. We allude to the fast driving on our streets and suburbs, and especially that reckless style practised by butcher boys entrusted with their master's cart, or pedlars off business, and taking a trot through the streets to see how many old women and children they can destroy. The especial case we have to notice is that of the killing of a horse valued at $5,000 belonging to Mr. M. Sandford, on the 8th Avenue, on Wednesday last, by collision with a recklessly driven wagon. This may not be in the estimation of some equal to the killing of a human, but we think it worthy of citation, and while we are citing it say that the same principle governs. In the same sequence we would speak of the Central Park, where the "Ride" seems to have become a spot whereon every snob who can afford to pay a dollar and a half for a hack horse shall exhibit his brutality. Ladies go upon the Park to ride high-bred horses, believing that they can do so in safety, but they are mistaken. No sooner do they attempt it than they find the "Ride" a racing ground for be-whiskered drygoods clerks, who have their afternoon out, or butcher boys, who not daring to bring the cart into the park bring in the horse. Some regulation on the part of the Park Commissioners is necessary to abate this evil.

Our Amusements.

"Don Sebastian" gains favor every day. Each night we can mark that the gems, though partaking too much of the recitative, are received with more decided favor, which, while we are disposed to allow every credit for the grand orchestration, must at the same time be attributed to the powerful dramatic action, and the admirable scenic arrangement. It is rarely that an opera has been put upon the New York stage with more powerful attraction in the last respect than this, and we are satisfied that the public understand and value the liberality that has prompted it.

Zucchi has in this opera established herself as a favorite in New York, and may consider from this time forth her home is here if she chooses to make it so. Massimiliani, we fear, has not shown how well he can do. There is a carelessness in his action of which he needs reminding, and an attention to which will be not only a wonderful improvement to his own reputation, but an addition to the public enjoyment. In a word, he lacks action. He makes little difference whether in ordinary recitative or grand passion, and seems to regard the sacrifice of Zaida as a commonplace affair hardly worth an effort.

The ballet and chorus are really good, and the scene of the funeral is worthy of all praise. There are a few shortcomings in costume and stage arrangements that need reforming, but we suppose that a few representations will open the eyes of the manager to these, and that they will be attended to before our notice of them can be printed.

Of the gems of the opera we have left ourselves little space to speak, but we can speak of the Inquisition scene as grand. The quintette and chorus by Zucchi, Massimiliani, Susini, Bellini and Lorini, is really fine and worthy of every praise.

At Wallack's the old comedy of "To Marry, or Not to Marry," has been made new by production at this house. Of all dramatic writers Mrs. Inchbald was, perhaps, the most careful, not esteeming time as of consequence when finish was in question. "To Marry, or Not to Marry," is a notable instance of this, and as rendered into three acts by the Wallackian scissors, is made a most actable play. The plot as now given is this. Mr. Lester Wallack, as a bachelor of about 40, has a sister, Mrs. Vernon, who is an old maid. To this old maid Miss Gannon flies for protection from an unpleasant lover. Lester sees the girl, and feeling a spark of love grants her an asylum in his house, and on the unpleasant lover making a demand for the lady refuses to give her up. Up to this time the uncle of the old bachelor has made up his mind to marry his nephew to a lady of rank and title, but now, the old bachelor feeling that fair exchange is no robbery, makes a trade with the unpleasant lover, and gives him the titled lady in swap for Miss Gannon. On this is the whole plot of the play, and with the addition of certain small jealousies and by-plays turns up a sprightly and actable affair.

At the Olympic, Mrs. Wood has given us something new in "St. George and the Dragon." As usual in this house, it is a clever little affair, cleverly done, with plenty of jack boots, pretty women and clanking sabres. It is well calculated to please the easy taste of a New York playgoing public.

The Artists' Fund Exhibition is open at the galleries No. 625 Broadway, and though our space is limited we will endeavor to name some of the more worthy of the pictures, reserving to next week a more extended remark.

Wier has a pretentious picture called "Taking the Veil," a mixture of merit and oily imagination.

Cropsey is represented by "The Wa-way-an-da Valley." Not up to the artist's general coloring and only praisable for its admirable cattle.

Boughton shows two or three pictures, "Meditation" and "Bashful, yet Fond." In looking at these pictures we go back to the old wonder, why it is that an artist bestows so much labor upon a picture without the shadow of an idea. We can wander through a whole gallery and not see one picture with as much of an idea as would suffice a third-rate poet to write a five dollar poem.

Beard has "In and Out," a mechanical cat chasing an unbendable gutta-percha rat.

Louis Lang sends "The Funeral." J. C. Brown, "Two is Company, Three is Not." Gifford, a bard, slaty picture, which he calls "Chenango Lake," but which we declare to be a lake of Mr. Gifford's own imagination. Kensett also gives us lakes, "The Lakes of Killarney," another picture of the leaden, slate kind.

Can it be possible that our artists see all nature through such solemn, hazy eyes? Constant Meyer gives an ideal head looking about as much like the real artist as a turnip, and calls it "The Head of a Confederate Soldier." It simply shows that Mr. Meyer never saw a Confederate soldier with his head on.

Next week we shall speak of those pictures really deserving notice.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The ports of Norfolk, Virginia, and Fernandina and Pensacola, Florida, have been proclaimed open once more to domestic and foreign commerce.

—— A very interesting series of performances will be given at the Academy of Music, on Thursday, Dec. 8th, for the benefit of Mr. Charles Peters, the comedian, who was lately injured by an accident on one of the horse-railroads in this city, in such a manner as permanently to disable him from active duty. Mr. Peters is a good actor and a worthy man, and we hope the public he has so often amused will remember him in his time of trouble.

—— Christmas and New Year's Day come on Sunday.

—— A law was passed at the last session of Congress requiring all American vessels to be remeasured, on or before the 1st of January next, and the tonnage to be permanently marked on the main beam of the vessel. The penalty for non-compliance with this law is the vessel's forfeiture of all claim to the protection of the United States.

—— Among the romantic incidents of the civil war is the fact that Mrs. Julia M. Pierce, wife of Oliver Pierce, who lives in Spring valley, has been found to be a missing daughter of Henry E. Clifton, Esq., of Baltimore, formerly of Richmond, Va., and heiress to considerable property.

—— Judge Pitman is dead, at Providence, R. I. He was 65 years of age, and has been on the bench since 1824. He was an intimate friend of Henry Clay.

—— Two hundred Irishmen, Union soldiers, who were prisoners in the South, and have been in rebel custody over a year, becoming weary of their confinement, are said to have joined the rebel army, and been sent to Hood.

—— Mr. Bates has resigned his position as Attorney-General.

—— A St. Louis paper says there are not less than 200,000 persons in Missouri who are little better than paupers, not knowing where to get food to maintain them through the winter.

—— Gen. Hancock retires from active service, and the command of the 2d corps devolves upon Gen. Augur.

—— A Maine editor has incurred the displeasure of the ladies of his town by calling an Affghan a horse blanket.

—— The rebels have taken to smuggling in bacon, past the blockade. The evidences multiply that they are on their last legs.

—— About 200 men are now engaged upon Gen. Butler's canal, at Dutch gap, James river.

—— An apology for the absence of a guest at the Winslow banquet, in Boston, was made in the following lucid language: "The Chairman of the Naval Committee, who intended to be present, is prevented from being here, by something which kept him away."

—— Brig.-Gen. Tyler has forwarded to the Adjutant-General's office the black flag captured from Early's command last August near North mountain. He says the flag was in charge of two rebels, and set up against a tree. One of the rebels went in search of water. C. H. Marsh, a detective, who had been watching the flag from nightfall, determined to get it if possible, and sprung upon the man left alone, secured him, took the flag, and brought it and the prisoner within our lines.

—— Lieut. Cushing when he went to sink the Albemarle, in lieu of a signal bell, tied a string to the engineer's leg, and pulled it when he wanted a movement of the engine.

—— There are Mormons in California who reject polygamy.

—— By the admission of Nevada the Republic now numbers 36 States in all, including those in revolt.

—— President Lincoln's popular majority at the recent election is now given at upwards of 300,000. In 1860 he was in a minority of 103,623 votes in the States now loyal. Gen. McClellan, on the other hand, received the largest popular vote of any defeated Presidential candidate since the organization of this Government. It is but little less than that received by Mr. Lincoln in 1860.

—— Mineral salt, taken from the mine in blocks, is now brought in ballast from Russia. It is as hard as stone, and is quarried just as we quarry marble.

—— Water has been introduced, with suitable celebration ceremonies, into the cities of Charlestown and Worcester, Massachusetts.

—— The wheat crop of the United States for 1864 amounts to 160,695,823 bushels, which will make about 33,000,000 barrels of flour. The rye crop amounts to 19,872,007 bushels. The yield of barley is 10,716,328 bushels; that of oats is 178,670,064 bushels; that of hay is 18,116,751 tons; that of corn is 530,581,403 bushels; that of buckwheat is 18,700,540 bushels; that of potatoes is 96,256,888 bushels. The quality of the crops is superior to that of last year. The falling off in tobacco is stated at 67,000,000 pounds. These statistics are authorised by the report of the Agricultural Bureau.

—— A valuable coal mine is yielding a good article of coal near Providence, R. I.

—— A hen at South Scituate, Mass., who had never laid before, lately astonished her owners by laying, in the course of the same week, two eggs, each of which was 8¼ inches in circumference. One of the eggs was broken, and found to contain a second egg, of ordinary size.

—— Gen. Sherman's farewell message to his wife, on commencing his grand march into the South, was as follows: "I have received all your letters up to the 3d. I start to-morrow. Write no more, and don't expect to hear from me, except through rebel sources, for some time to come. Good-bye."

—— Kearsarge Mountain is marked on Holland's map of New Hampshire, published at London in 1784, "Kyar Sarga Mountain; by the Indians, Cowissewaschook."

—— Silver has been found in some copper ore in Orange, Vt.

—— President Lincoln has received a singular present from the California hunter, Seth Kinman. It is a chair made of elk horns.

—— Gen. Scott recently gave Gen. Grant a copy of his memoirs, inscribed with the words, "From the oldest General in the world to the ablest." It chances that Frederick the Great gave Washington a sword, with a similar inscription. Besides, Gen. Scott is not the oldest General in the world. Viscount Combermere is still alive, at the age of 95. He was Sir Stapleton Stapleton Cotton, in the Peninsula war, and he took Bhurtpore, in the East Indies, in 1825, after a memorable siege.

Foreign.—The Emperor Maximilian, of Mexico, has written to the Emperor Napoleon, asking him to recommend a financier capable of adjusting the disorganised treasury of Mexico. La France, which gives this piece of news, does not say what Frenchman is considered of sufficient ability to execute the Herculean task.

—— Franz Muller was hanged at Newgate, London, on the 14th of November. He confessed his guilt at the last moment to the German clergyman who attended him on the scaffold.

—— The King of Prussia is chief of all the lodges of Freemasons in his kingdom. Of this position he has just taken advantage to transmit to the grand masters of all the lodges in Berlin and the provinces a circular, exhorting the members to remain "faithful to the King," in the political struggles of the immediate future. The grand masters are requested to read the circular to their respective lodges, and to follow it up with personal exhortations of a tendency similar to that of the document itself.

—— A Welsh paper states that silver has been discovered in the Orme's Head, Llandudno.

—— Coal is very scarce at Halifax.

—— The question of direct steam communication between the British Colonies in the North Pacific and the Isthmus of Panama has again been brought up before the Vancouver Island Legislative Council. Such communication will doubtless be established.

—— An English theatre is to be started at Bombay, E. I.

—— Donato, the one-legged Spanish dancer, is to appear at Brussels. He was very successful at Berlin. Many imitators of this cheap prodigy have sprung up in European cities.

—— The new planet discovered by M. Tempel, at Marseilles, on Sept. 30, has been named Terpsichore.

—— A festival of "reformed drunkards" was held at Leeds, England, on the 8th ult.

—— Wagner's new opera, "The Flying Dutchman," was announced for production at Meningen, on the 17th inst., in honor of the birthday of the Duke of Meningen.

—— Among the new books announced in London are the following: "The Choicest Jests of English Wits," edited by Mr. W. Moy Thomas; "The Choicest Epigrams in the English Language;" "The Choicest Humorous Poetry in the English Language;" "The Choicest Humorous Anecdotes and Short Stories in the English Language."

—— Bombay has had but little rain this season, and a diminution of the next cotton crop is anticipated in consequence.

—— Mdlle. Carlotta Patti has gone to fulfil an operatic engagement at Prague.

—— It is proposed to cover the Seine between the Pont au Change and Pont d'Arcole, in Paris, and make a flower garden on the stone vault.

—— Interesting horse shows have been held at Caen and Pin, in France. Their object was to allow the imperial commissioners to select the best horses in the empire, several being intended for the Emperor's private stable.

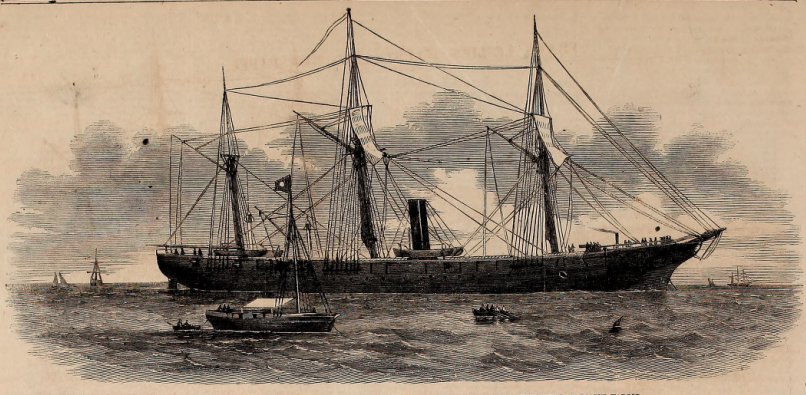
—— Another terrible warning to women who wear expansive crinoline is contained in the following paragraph from a recent London paper: "On the 5th, Mrs. Waddilove, wife of Mr. Waddilove, architect, Seymour street, Somers Town, went into the kitchen to give some directions to the servant, when her dress, expanded by a large crinoline, came in contact with the fire in the range, and she was almost instantly in flames. The unfortunate lady, who was far advanced in pregnancy, was so fearfully burnt that she only survived a few hours."

—— We copy the following touching words from a recent number of the London Punch. They reveal, we think, the pen of Tom Taylor. Not every man who dies is thus mourned:

"JOHN LEECH.

OBIT OCTOBER XXIX., MDCCCLXIV

ÆTAT 46.



The simplest words are best where all words are vain. Ten days ago a great artist, in the noon of life, and with his glorious mental faculties in full power, but with the shade of physical infirmity darkening upon him, took his accustomed place among friends who have this day held his pall. Some of them had been fellow-workers with him for a quarter of a century, others for fewer years; but to know him well was to love him dearly, and all in whose name these lines are written mourn as for a brother. His monument is in the volumes of which this is one sad leaf, and in a hundred works which, at this hour, few will not remember more easily than those who have just left his grave. While society, whose every phase he has illustrated with a truth, a grace, and a tenderness heretofore unknown to satiric art, gladly and proudly takes charge of his fame; they, whose pride in the genius of a great associate was equalled by their affection for an attached friend, would leave on record that they have known no kindlier, more refined, or more generous nature than that of him who has been thus early called to his rest."

—— The Prince and Princess of Wales returned to London on the 7th ult., after a somewhat protracted tour, in the course of which they visited Copenhagen, Stockholm, Hanover, Darmstadt, Bonn (where Prince Alfred is studying) and other places.

—— During the present year 2,000 tons of iron have been turned out at a single iron works, in Woodstock, New Brunswick.

—— An American schooner, the Amelia, of Chicago, was wrecked near Goderich, on the Canada side of Lake Ontario, on the 12th ult. She had 16,000 bushels of corn on board, and was a total loss.

—— There had been a great conflagration at Yeddo, Japan, caused by the Prince of Dagota setting fire to his palace there in order to create a political riot, in the midst of which he was to seize the person of the Tycoon. A desperate conflict in the street ensued, in which the Prince's adherents were totally defeated. The allied fleet of French, English, Dutch and American has gone to the dominions of this prince to chastise him for outrages on foreigners. He is thus at war with his own Government and the Foreign Powers.

THE U. S. SLOOP OF WAR WACHUSETT, THE CAPTOR OF THE REBEL STEAMER FLORIDA, NOW LYING IN BOSTON HARBOR.

THE WACHUSETT AND THE FLORIDA.

WE present, on page 196, a picture of the U. S. war steamer Wachusett, and on page 197 a picture of the rebel steamer Florida. Both these vessels have, of late, attracted much public attention, incident to the affair of the capture of the latter, by the former, at Bahia, in Brazil, on the 7th of October. The particulars of that capture may be briefly detailed. The Florida arrived at Bahia on the night of the 6th of Oct. Bahia is in the bay of San Salvador, on the Atlantic coast of Brazil, 800 miles north-east from Rio Janeiro. The Florida came there to get coal and provisions, and to repair her engine. Mr. Wilson, U. S. Consul at Bahia, protested to the Brazilian Government against the Florida's admission to the port, and asked that a penalty should be exacted from her for burning a United States vessel within Brazilian waters, near the Island of Fernando de Noronha. The Government answered the protest respectfully, but decreed that the Florida was rightfully in a neutral port. The U. S. Wachusett, Capt. Napoleon Collins, was also in port at this time. Capt. Collins challenged the Florida to go out and fight, but the challenge was declined. Thereupon he determined to capture the rebel steamer and carry her away. This design was put into execution on the night of Oct. 7th, at which time Capt. Morris, of the Florida, and many of the crew were on shore. The Wachusett ran into the Florida, striking her on the quarter, and at the same time shooting away her mizzen-mast and main-yard. Little or no resistance was offered to the capture. A hawser from the Wachusett was made fast to the Florida, and to the latter was towed to sea. Two officers and fifty-eight seamen were captured with her.

From Bahia she was taken to St. Thomas, where several of the prisoners were transferred to the Kearsarge, Capt. Winslow, for transportation to Boston. The Kearsarge arrived duly at that port, bringing intelligence of the capture of the Florida. The Wachusett, also, has since arrived in Boston. The Florida, meanwhile, furnished with a crew of loyal Americans, and flying the flag of the Republic, sailed from St. Thomas to Fortress Monroe, where, on the 26th ult., she was accidentally run into by an army transport, and seriously injured. She subsequently sunk at her anchorage, in nine fathoms of water.

This entire affair is one for diplomatic arrangement. We offer no opinion upon it at present.

The U. S. Wachusett was built at the U. S. Navy Yard at Charlestown, Massachusetts, and was launched in 1861. She is 198 feet long, 33 feet broad in beam, and 16 feet deep. She is barque rigged, and is a good sailer. Her armament consists of two eleven-inch Dahlgren pivot guns, two thirty-two pounder rifles, and eight broadside guns. Her commander, Capt. Collins, is a Pennsylvanian, who has been 30 years in the U. S. navy.

The Florida was built in England for the Italian Government.—It was said—but was purchased by rebel agents in Liverpool, and surreptitiously sent to sea in the rebel service in March, 1863. She was about 750 tons burthen, carrying three masts and two smoke-stacks. Her depredations upon our commerce have been incessant and most injurious, and her loss is only to be regretted in so far as it may prove vexatious in the adjustment of diplomatic business that may grow out of the affair between our Government and that of Brazil.

DONIZETTI'S OPERA OF "DON SEBASTIAN," AT THE N. Y. ACADEMY OF MUSIC—SCENE ON THE BATTLEFIELD, 13 ACT II.—DON SEBASTIAN SHIELDED BY ZAIDA, FROM THE INFURIATED ARABS.

THE REBEL WAR STEAMER FLORIDA, CAPTURED IN THE PORT OF BAHIA, BRAZIL, BY THE U. S. SLOOP-OF-WAR WACHUSETT, OCT. 7, ACCIDENTALLY SUNK AT PORTRESS MONROE, NOV. 28.

PEARL ISLAND.

BY MAUD L. CRIMSON.

The isle of Pearl! the isle of Pearl!
That sleeps within the placid West,
How beauteous in its rounded shape!
How perfect seems its rest.

Oft in my dreams this isle of Pearl
Hath loomed in beauty on my sight,
And silvered o'er with magic rays
The sky of Fancy's night.

Oft have I sailed in fairy boat
Around its shores, the blue sea through,
And woke in sorrowed thought, to find
My giddy dream untrue.

And oft I think, as twilight falls
In crimson curtains down the West,
I hear the thrilling strains that float
From out this isle of Rest.

I long to live with those who dwell
Upon this little isle of Pearl,
I'd lie with them in coral caves,
And watch the blue seas curl.

And fancies, charged with rapture's fire,
Before my mental sight should roll;
Oh, what a depth of gleaming thought
Would fill my uncurbed soul!

But I can only note afar,
The glist'ning of its silver strand,
And wonder mutely, oft and oft,
If that's Utopian land.

I sigh and slowly turn away—
Oh! would I might such heights attain!
How many sinful souls of earth
Take up this sad refrain.

Oh, lift your heads! be sure you will,
Sometime, attain that isle of Rest;
Gaze often on its pearly banks,
Calm lying in the West.

Until your soul its pure hue takes,
Until your hidden wings unfurl;
Then shall you wend your airy way
Unto that isle of Pearl.

THE FALL OF THE LION'S HEAD.

BY J. G. AUSTIN.

North, East, South, West lay the waters, heaving smoothly in long billows, unvexed by obstacle or current, lither than the eyes of a poet's love, clearer than the visions of a seer, brighter than the dreams of youth, lying at every hand in wide reaches until in the distance they gently curved to the tremulous horizon line.

Above arched the smiling sky, as blue, as clear, as bright, as unbroken in its unity, save when slowly ascending to his throne of mid-heaven the regal sun extinguished color with plenitude of light.

Adam, waking to that scene and hour, should have found blue the color of creation, and in Eve's azure eyes have read fresh proof of her heavenly origin. Nor need Paradise, if intended for two alone, have differed materially from the little island, that formed the one break in this vast duality of sea and sky, the one spot in all the scene where the sun might chronicle his course by shade of tree or crag, or be welcomed by morning song of bird and flower. A mile of glittering beach, sown with rare tropical shells and vivid mosses, described its circumference, and rising thence on every side the ground sloped evenly toward the centre, where a huge rock crowned the summit, and relieved with its cool gray tints the riotous color and lush luxuriance of tree, and shrub, and flower, massed in rich hosquet, or dotted in unique beauty over all the space beside.

But Earth was made for man, Paradise for love, and here were no happy Adam and Eve, no human life indeed unless it lingered in those two still forms, lying so strangely there among the shells and seaweed of the beach.

A man and woman that the sea casting from its bosom still scornfully drenched with the crest of each retreating wave. They might have been the bodies of some norman and his love who, longing for earthly life and heavenly immortality, had found the one but the vestibule to the other.

Soon, however, the waves no longer reached them, the vertical sunbeams dried and warmed the sand, and kissed so ardently the pale cheeks and parted lips of the woman that a faint glow crept up beneath their surface, a tremulous shudder ran through her frame, and she wearily raised her eyelids, looking about her in the vague unconscious manner of an infant whose soul returns before its body from heaven to earth.

Presently those languid glances rested upon the quiet face lying a few feet from her, she eyes closed, the cheeks and lips as white as her own had been an hour before, and wandering no more, widened and darkened into consciousness. Then came memory and thought, until at last the dull throb of pain in her awakening heart took voice, and repeated in monotonous anguish:

"He is dead, he is dead!"

"Why, then, should I live?" responded the struggling sense, and all the awakening powers of life sunk back in apathy, all but the great love in the woman heart that still cried ceaselessly:

"He is dead! Rouse thee and look at his dead face lying here before thee!"

Until goaded to action by that sharp pang she stirred uneasily, a faint moan parted her lips, the blessed tears crept from under her stiffened eyelids, and with many a weary effort the woman roused herself, and once more took the burden of life upon her weary shoulders.

Creeping to his side she took the heavy head upon her lap, looking solemnly down upon the face of him she loved so well. Then parting the hair from off his forehead she tenderly wiped away the ooze and sand that clung there, and at the last she timidly stooped and pressed her lips to his. Raising her face all glowing with love and shame, even in that solitude, a joyful cry escaped her lips, for following that kiss a faint, faint sigh, not her own, had stirred it e sultry air, and smote open her ear with a sharp thrill of hope and joy.

Could it be that God would be so merciful to her weakness? Would he really live to hear and answer those wild words throbbing so fiercely at her heart? Might she yet hope to feel on earth that heaven hes beyond?

THE LION ROCK.

The blood leaped through her veins, power returned to her frame, firmness to her purpose. With sudden strength she dragged the body higher up the beach beyond the wet line of the tide's limit, and heaped the burning sand upon it. Then with handsful of the same sharp stimulant she chafed the temples, the region of the heart, the extremities, until her own delicate hands were wounded and bleeding, although she was conscious of no pain. Then she patiently administered drop by drop some of the brandy from a flask in his own pocket, she spoke aloud his name, coupled with every tender and endearing epithet, until at last her unwearied efforts, her frantic appeals for God's pity and aid met their response. The life that was so much more to her than her own was restored to her, and with many a painful throe entered again into the body it had so nearly deserted, and showed itself in warmth, mobility, motion, and at last consciousness.

Paul Morgan opened his eyes and looked up in the anxious face between him and the sky, read the eager love glorifying its every line, and even as the trembling lips parted with a murmur of his name, he coldly and wearily let fall the lids again without attempt at response.

"Thank God, Paul, that you are not dead!" whispered the voice beside him. It was hoth an aspiration and an adjuration, and the faint sneer that stirred his lips served for an answer to both.

A deadly pallor crept over the woman's eager face, and the same voice that had so persistently cried that he was dead, now changed its meanie—

"He loves me no more, he neither forgets nor forgives!"

But not for this should she intermit the services she had begun to render in such sweet hope, and now continued in such sad humility.

"The sun is too hot for you here on the beach, Paul; up there are trees and grass, and perhaps water. Will you try to walk so far?"

"Go you, if you will. I do not care to move."

The voice was faint and chill as the sleeping breath of the Ice-King, and with a dull sabe at her heart, Clare seated herself quietly, folded her bleeding hands upon her lap, and looked far out upon the sleeping waters. At her feet, the long shimmerous waves slid up the sand and broke in evanescent cadence, leaving many a pretty toy of pebble, shell or wood upon the beach, but holding in their unmoved depths the more treasured playthings that but yesterday had been living men and women, gasping away their lives in the fierce embrace of those playful waves.

PAUL RESCUES CLARE FROM HER LIVING TOMB.

The same thought possessed the minds of both these who only had escaped from that sudden shipwreck. Clare shuddered and turned pale. Paul smiled, and whispered, half aloud:

"Sea and woman—alike smiling and alike treacherous!"

She heard them, she to whom those few words spoke so bitterly, and with one quick glance at his averted face, she bowed her head to her knees, and sat with shrouded face as one who mourns a buried hope.

At last, however, she crept quietly away towards the trees, whose cool shelter and inviting watercourse lay so invitingly behind the arid beach.

She drank feverishly of the water, and then with womish fancy gathered a cup of the great leaves of a grapevine running riot among the clustering palms about the fountain. This she filled, after bearing in the cool and sparkling bunch of the ripe grapes, she hastily returned to Paul's side, and kneeling, presented her sylvan cup, saying, quietly:

"Drink, Paul. Forget who offers it, and take it as God's gift."

The water touch his lips, and with a sudden impulse he drank it thirstily, and seizing the grapes placed silently within his hand, he eagerly devoured them, saying more kindly than he yet had spoken:

"They are delicious. But you should not take so much exertion, Clare."

Ah! He had spoken her name once more, he had accepted her offering, and a faint glow crept into Clare's pale face as she timidly said:

"There are more grapes, and other fruits, just on there."

"I will gather some for myself, and for you also. I can do it sooner now," said Paul, rising to his feet and staggering forward.

Leaning on my shoulder, please. I am quite recovered," said Clare hastily, but the man, his vitality in some degree restored by food, could no longer endure to be dependent upon a woman, and hastily replied:

"Thank you, no. I am very well able to walk."

So, muscled, and with many a painful pause and stumble, he at length reached the trees and sank exhausted in their shade.

Clare, taught by feminine tact to offer no comment or assistance, unconsciously bound him by watching, with all her soul in her eyes, the handsome face lying at first so sharp and white upon the greensward, and then slowly flushing into life and vigor, until, with painful effort, Paul dragged himself to the margin of the brook, and after drinking copiously, bathed his head and face in the cool and sparkling water.

After this he found himself able to stand upright, and pluck the luscious fruits and berries that hung in every side of this little forest labyrinth whose shade the fountain sprung. These he flung into the lap of his companion, until she begged him to desist, as the weight of them himself with the fierce hunger of a man.

Then hagridly stretching himself among the flowers, whose heavy odor filled the place, he slept profoundly, while Clare steadily watched beside him, saw the sun placidly sink from out the cloudless sky, where stood presently great white stars gazing softly down at her, wondering at their immortal calm at her human sorrow and despair. Dust arose the splendor of the Southern Cross, and those glorious emblem of Hope and Faith before her eyes. With its rays fell a great calm upon her troubled soul, and softly whispering a prayer, she closed her eyes and soon slept serenely as an infant.

Waking in the early morning she found herself alone, and after casting such toilet as she might and brushing her fair with the rich fruits, she stole out of her leafy covert and looked timidly about her.

Upon the beach she soon discovered Paul, and shuddered as she saw that he was busy in hollowing a grave in the sand for two bodies that had washed ashore at high tide. Turning in the other direction Clare walked slowly on, casting curious glances towards the interior of the island. It was one varied scene of beauty. Such foliage, such luxuriance of growth, such warmth of color and full ouvres of form, had never before met her eyes, lured in the cold sterility of New England scenery.

Flowers that she had nursed as delicate exotics here richly developed in wanton exuberance, and birds, such as she had seen pining in solitary confinement behind their prison wires, flashed from tree to tree, flaunting their gorgeous colors, and calling good-morrow to their mates in notes gay if not too musical.

Beyond the grove where she had slept lay an open lawn, smooth and fair, unbroken by tree or shrub from the waters edge to the foot of that great rock crowning the summit of the island, and now, as Clare glanced towards it, she stopped short in her advance, struck and repelled by the extraordinary likeness of this immense boulder to a colossal head. The thin flank, the massive shoulder covered with a flowing mane, the haughty head somewhat elevated as if the better to scan this prying intruder upon his domain, the huge paws thrust forward at either side, all were reproduced in this startling specimen of Nature's sculpture.

It might have been supposed a veritable lion of the time when giants were, petrified, and set there upon this green pedestal of an island to show the world of coming ages how dwarfed and degenerate it had become.

Indeed so vividly did the likeness strike upon Clare's timid and imaginative nature, that as she continued her walk she turned cautiously to cast an apprehensive look at the great gray monster, half expecting to see a paw protruded, the great head spending in a yawn, the sun spread, some sign, in short, of returning life and aggressive action.

It was a relief when a clump of trees again closed in the view and the lion was no longer visible.

Continuing her exploration, Clare found herself approaching from the other side the spot where she had seen Paul at his dreary task, and she perceived that the sand was now smoothed into the form of a grave, and a great stone had been rolled to the head and foot to mark the place.

A little farther on sat Paul, his chin resting on his hand, his gloomy eyes steadily bent upon the sea, now glowing in the morning sunshine.

As Clare stood beside him he neither moved or spoke, and after a moment she moved slowly on, and went to seat herself in a little bower that had evidently become more homelike to her than any other spot upon the island.

The day passed slowly on, and was near its close when Paul entered the server, and leaning against the stem of the rustling palm, spoke abruptly and coldly:

"It is evident that only you and myself have escaped from the wreck of the Ingot; there is no longer any hope of companionship or prospect of rescue from this place. I have, then, but one favor, for best to arrange our lives as distinctly as possible for the term of our detention here. Under most favorable circumstances we are the direct route of vessels bound to Australia, and the signal I shall erect will, no doubt, be soon seen and answered. Meanwhile we must do our best to make as at least a shelter beneath the great rock in the centre of the island, which will think make a safer and more comfortable home than the open beach. Whatever I can do towards making you comfortable you will be so kind as to suggest. As for food, there is a great supply of fruit, and I have no doubt of game also. I fortunately have the means of kindling a fire, and there are birds and various small animals to be snared, when I can contrive it. So, on the whole, we be correcting himself, "you and I need have no apprehension of starvation. Whatever you cannot suggest for yourself, I shall, of course, supply you with, if in my power."

"But you," hesitated Clare.

"I am about to construct such shelter as I require for myself, at the farther extremity of the island. I have secured several planks, and some spars with cordage and sail, which I watched ashore in the course of the day, and shall do very well."

"But—but we, shall, shall meet?" stammered Clare, and paused, the appeal she could not phrase trembling on her lips unspoken.

Paul Morgan looked down upon her, into the dilated eyes, raised in mute eloquence to his. He did not shrink from her appeal, he understood it perfectly, and his answered coldly:

"We may see each other often since we wholly madam. It will be hardly worth while to try to renew on former intimacy."

Clare paused as if in a trance, and received a blow, and bid suddenly in her hands the face she had so eagerly raised to his. And in the eyes still looking down from towering height, or scorn, or pity, nothing but the cold abstraction that seemed to embody the man's whole nature.

"Will you leave me to see the cave I mentioned?" asked he at length.

Without reply Clare rose and followed him from the grove to the beach, and then up the green slope towards the conebant hon, now keeping grim ward over the sunset sea, as she had first seen it in the morning. As they approached, and the likeness rather increased than diminished, the sensitive woman crept closer to her companion and murmured:

"he should come to life!"

Paul looked down at her in undisguised astonishment:

"Why," said he, "you are not afraid of this rock because it resembles a lion? I confess that the likeness struck me forcibly myself at first, but the features are more are not so shaken thatthis seriously moves you?"

"No, oh, no!" exclaimed Clare, dreading another touch of contempt but half concealed in his tone.

"Where is the cave?" continued she quickly

"Here, between the lion's paws if you will carry out the fancy," said Morgan, and pointed to a hollow extending beneath the body of the beast, and rounded outside of its entrance by the outstretched legs and feet.

The cave was dry, large enough for one person, and entirely free from vermin. It was with invincible repugnance that Clare looked upon it as her future abiding-place.

"And will not the Obelot do as well?" asked she, tremulously.

"I do not think so, but you will judge for yourself. I, of course, claim no right to control your movements," said Paul, coldly.

"Oh, this is best, no doubt. I shall sleep here, and you there, between the lion's paws," said she, suppressing gained no mark of approval, other than

"Very well, if you think best. To-morrow will pull and dry some grass and leaves for your bed."

"Cannot I do that for myself and for you also?" timidly inquired Clare. "It will be easy and pleasant labor, and you will have so much to do with your cabin. Shall I do it?"

"For yourself, if you choose. Not for me, thank you."

"If I will not accept a service from me, and only renders them to me because he is a man and I a woman," thought Clare bitterly, as she silently retraced her steps to the thicket, while Paul as silently walked towards the other end of the island.

Soon after sunset Clare reluctantly sought the cave, but even when she stood at its entrance could hardly persuade herself to enter it, nor could she finally have done so had it not been the only wish expressed by Paul with regard to her future movements. To please and cheer him was now the only desire in her heart, and the only impulse sufficient to overcome the nervous repugnance that prompted her to turn and fly from the vicinity of the grim monster beneath whose very jaws she had been hidden to repose herself.

But she would have been no woman had not her heart sent up one thankful sigh for her safety, through interminable hours over thoughts of bitterness and woe; holding no communication more than could be done morning or evening ramble encountered Morgan, and asked some question or made some remark, eliciting always a cold and courteous response, but no continued conversation.

Once she saw him busy in lashing a long spar to the top of a lofty tree on the summit of the island, and the next morning a white flag fluttered out, a signal of distress to whatever craft might sight the lonely spot. Once also in the first few days human remains and bodies washed ashore, and were laboriously buried by Paul. Also various chests, barrels, packages and portions of the wreck had been secured by the latter, and each portion of their contents as could be useful to herself was silently placed either in her dreary grotto, or in the lower branches of the trees where wood and waking hours were passed. Chief in value among these was a trunk, belonging to one of the female passengers of the Ingot, containing not only clothing, but implements of needlework, books, and a writing-case, all somewhat injured by salt water, but still in a state to be available.

Many, however, were the hours when, book or work lying neglected at her side, Clare sat gazing, with dilated eyes, upon the sapphire sea, far beyond the bright horizon line, looking at the life she had left in her far-off home, looking through the sorrow of the present to the joyous past of her innocent girlhood.

She had loved Paul Morgan since she had first known him, a timid, shrinking but new brotherly love, shily and secretly at the first, and when he had asked for her his wife openly and proudly. Nor did she care to conceal from herself even when the knowledge that it reached the heart of her cousin Wyvil, who since her infancy had claimed her as his, at first with her careless assent, but of late with deep and secret pettish denials. And so did Wyvil Randolph become the cruel enemy of Paul Morgan and the bitter-sweet lover of his cousin Clare.

It is scold a story one is ashamed to tell it again; but does human nature change from age to age, and are we not, in our hatreds and treachery, the same passions to-day that they were when first the sons of God wooed the daughters of men?

So Wyvil Randolph had plotted, schemed, and had read so well the pride, the sensitiveness, the sudden impulse of his cousin's nature, that he led her to be vindicated in the eyes of the world, and the cruise of his plot, while she, poor child! thought she was but following the dictates of her own judgment and affection.

The wedding night arrived, and the guests, few in number, but comprising the chief of the whose opinion led the public mind in the conservative old town, were assembled.

Paul Morgan, proud and joyous, stood awaiting his bride, who, leaning on her father's arm, descended the stairs without look or word except suddenly by him and stood alone beneath the bridal arch at the end of the long room.

Then Wyvil Randolph appeared, the book opened in his hand, was about to speak, and as the bridegroom and guests stood silent astounded, the whole scene was changed by a piece of a rory and smiling bride, held up her hand to enforce silence, and spoke in a hollow and stifled voice:

"I am the wife of Wyvil Randolph, you who are hidden to the wedding know, but my husband will be my second, Wyvil Randolph, not Paul Morgan!" And this piece of purpose will seem to be strange, so wanton to meet of you, that in no manner less public than this could I justify myself and vindicate my own honor and nature, whom we all have thought so true and pure."

She gasped for breath as she spoke these last words, and turned her head away from the pale face so steadily regarding her, the face where contempt and indignation were now taking the place of love, and those who would have been willing to close other eyes whose powerful bidding she could not disobey, she seemed to gather strength, and went on:

"We all thought poor Mary Scarver was dead when she disappeared so suddenly from this place, three months ago, but I knew better for her life was dear to me, but she lives. I have seen her. I have heard from her own lips what it was that tempted her away from home and those who would have saved her. Yes, and he all the time daring to tell me that he loved me! It is unwomanly in me to say these things, but what am I more than an instrument in the hand of eternal Justice? Even at the cost of my own nature, Paul Morgan, I, the woman whom you have insulted, thus avenge the woman you have betrayed!"

As the last words parted from her white lips Wyvil Randolph stood beside her and held her hand.

With an imperious gesture and quiet word, he aroused the old clergyman from his stupor of amazement and horror, and after a moment the desecrated service was commenced, and a most unholy union blessed in the sacred name of God.

Then fell an ominous silence upon all the room. The scared and bewildered guests seemed in an hour to congratulate the bride, who, with wild unseeing eyes and rigid lips, stood like the monumental marble of a maiden frozen dead with horror in her nuptial hour.

Even her father and brother (alas! she had no mother) seemed uncertain what part to take in the strange scene, and stood whispering together in the centre of the room.

Only the bridegroom of all present seemed will at ease and ready, but for his position, for mirth and a hearty rejoicings. But upon the tumultuous silence broke a clear, incisive voice, full of haughty scorn, the voice of Paul Morgan.

"A story you have heard, said he, "is false—as false as the heart of him who made it or the lips of her who has uttered it. I, too, have seen the wretched girl referred to, and I, too, have heard her story—her true story—from her own lips, but if my character is not strong enough to refute this calumny, I disdain to attempt it in upon another's infamy. Mr. and Mrs. Randolph, allow me to hope that your married life may be as happy as circumstances will permit it to be."

He bowed courteously to the stupified host and whispering guests, swept one look at Clare that stung deep, even through her humiliation, and with the next moment was gone from the room and house.

The next day he took passage for Australia in the ill-fated brig Ingot, advertised as ready to sail out of Boston harbor in one week from the night of the wedding.

Clare was in a state of passion or despair. The proud self-respect of his nature would have protected him from such, would have kept him in the strength of his self-control, and have left us to others through any press of humiliating annoyance.

His Australian scheme had, in fact, been presented to him some months previously by a friend, who was about to emigrate thither as a wool merchant, and who would have gladly taken Paul into partnership engagement as the Ingot.

While completing his preparations he accidentally met Wyvil Randolph and Mrs. Randolph were to sail for India in the Brahmin, out of New York, a few days earlier than the Ingot, whose voyage had been unexpectedly postponed.

This expeditious escape from the notoriety of the proceedings at the late wedding had formed part of Wyvil's original scheme, and was carried out with the most business accommodation with a large importing house in the India trade, who had offered him very tempting terms as a resident agent in Calcutta.

Morgan heard this intelligence with apparent indifference, but when he was alone clenched his hands with the fierce pressure of concentrated rage, and muttered bitterly:

"I thought to place the world between us!"

Two weeks after the Ingot's departure arrived a three days' gale, and suffered so severely that her master decided to put back into port for repairs and refitting. Among the cargo of the Brahmin, Mr. Randolph, whose affairs in India were pressing, and who secretly dreaded a renewal of the averted glances and whispered sentences that he believe very frequent among his acquaintance since the night of his marriage, vehemently opposed this movement, and insisted that he should proceed immediately to some port upon the English coast, where the brig might be repaired, and the cargo overhauled, as well as the vessel.

The master, faithful to the interest of his employers, objected that the expense would be greater, and should the Brahmin prove always seaworthy, which no one could be certainly disposed of and the goods reshipped in a domestic than a foreign port.

Mr. Randolph was raising warm, and master and supercargo were beginning to each assert his own authority and measure it against that of the other, when the disputing sail was announced to be the Ingot, for Australia.

Upon hearing this intelligence, the harassed captain of the Brahmin suggested that his fellow-passengers should transfer themselves to the Ingot, and landing at Melbourne, wait there for the arrival of the Brahmin, repaired, and by the same firm as the Brahmin, and advertised to sail two weeks later than that craft. The captain added, that should the arrangement be decided upon, the supercargo, he must resign himself to return to New York, and in fact proceeded immediately to give orders for getting the Brahmin about and making sail on the homeward course.

After a few moments' hesitation Randolph decided upon accepting this proposition, and the change was accordingly hailed, and the arrangement briefly concluded between the two shippers. A boat was lowered from the Ingot's side, and having had her only available one in the storm—and in a very brief time the transfer was complete, and the two vessels parted company.

Paul Morgan, doggedly absorbed in an abstruse mathematical work, had not chosen to inquire the cause of the delay, or the purport of the messages shouted back and forth through the speaking trumpets of the two captains. Now, however, his studies were interrupted by the first officer of the Ingot, who came to request that certain luggage of Morgana's, stored in an empty stateroom, might be removed for the accommodation of the new comers, and by mention of their names, and that of the Brahmin, informed him of the strange chance that had brought him again in contact with the man and woman whom, of all the world, he most wished to avoid.

His first impulse was to return to New York in the Brahman, but running on deck to effect this purpose, he perceived that a wide interval already lay between the two ships, and this the Ingot, steadily gathering way before a favorable breeze, was rapidly increasing.

As Morgan turned moodily from the rail where he had leaned to watch the lessening sails of the homeward-bound Brahman, his eyes encountered those of Clare Randolph, who stood gazing at him in bewildered dismay.

With a cold smile and bow, her former lover passed her, and descending to his stateroom, remained with a clear head and undivided interest the consideration of his mathematical problem.

After the first only met at table, and not always then, as Clare confined herself much to her own apartment. For the rest, their intercourse was formally courteous, and so well did Clare's tact and Morgan's pride conceal the fact, that Randolph and Paul never by any chance spoke or looked at each other, or in any of the little particulars of constant intercourse recognised in any manner each other's existence.

Matters stood thus upon the memorable day when the Ingot, soon after entering the tropics, encountered the terrible typhoon, whose sudden wrath was the total wreck of that illustrious craft, with the loss of every life, except those of Paul and Clare, the one saved by God's grace, the other preserved by His mercy to the frailer appeals of human love.

And this story, with all its wild details, details that in have perforce omitted, pictured itself for Clare upon the evening sky, whispered in the rhythmical plash of the waters, rang through the sudden lull of its strange hints, rustled in the palm-leaves, haunted her in the still midnight, looked at her from the myriad eyes of the starry heaven.

She brooded over its every feature, she peered into its ugly shadows as she had never done while she could fly for refuge to the things about her. But now that she stood apart from life, and no longer had a present, the past rolled back upon her, importunately urging her to remember its follies and its sins, to look upon the ruin she had wrought in three lives, and to consider if any possible future could efface it.

Until a fate of this constant retrospection and remorse, grew a will yearning for pardon and reconciliation with Paul. The ocean had discerned the kindly impulse that fearful night, and it had cast them here together to end their lives; and she was all to be for naught, was only bitterness and estrangement henceforth to possess the hearts once filled with love and trust?

Better than this that she had perished on that fearful night, her first Paul and revived only to frost that sleep of death, for sitting beside his grave she could not be unconscious that he lived he would have forgiven and loved her.

DON SEBASTIAN.

THE readers of our Town Talk gossip are already familiar with the character and peculiarities of Donzetti's opera of "Don Sebastian," recently produced at the Academy of Music, and in that city even those who may not have witnessed its representation upon the stage. It is not necessary, therefore, for us to describe it anew. Suffice it to say here that it abounds in strong dramatic situations, one of which is illustrated, in a spirited sketch, on page 196. Our Artist has selected for illustration, the scene, in Act II., wherein Don Sebastian, the wandering King of Portugal, is protected from the fury of the Moorish Princess, Zaida, by Zaida.

The subject is full of admiration and picturesque effect and it is we think, better treated with taste and spirit, so as to give a picture vividly before the reader's mind, heightened by blanks, and richly colored costume, and graphic accessories, and delineations of character, and sensation, one of the most impressively agreeable scenes ever produced upon the lyric stage.

THE ALLIGATOR.

It is believed that the alligator cannot devour its own species, and that after eating and assuming all he carries it away and secretes it in a hole; and that when partially decomposed, he takes a piece and, like jerk, eats it by the surface, then it is said he then enjoys it. The proper way to set an alligator hook is to procure a rope of three yards in length, run a forked stick into the ground, so that the bait hangs temptingly over the water. In the way I have seen seven bait alligators, or rather hooks, pulled out of one bank in one morning, the hooks having been set over night. Every alligator is not easily caught.

Two large ones, of English breed, were floating close to the banks of the Rio Grande del Norte, when an alligator seized one of them by the head; the other one, seizing the tail right, after the manner of the country, to the one which was seized, did all in her power to assist her companion to take what little life was left, but in vain; after a violent struggle both ones were carried off. It is not designed to be inquired into by the curious, and my informant, accompanied by some Englishmen, went in pursuit.

About a mile distant from where the cows had been seized, he saw a most interested spectacle, a large male alligator. He had beaten down and smashed off him half a cord of the best of sugar-canes, and had then laid the carcasses of the two cows, while he, stretched at full length, was enjoying himself in the sugar-cane, and chewing over his expectations. The hunters stole quietly upon him, and one of them fired at the head, killing him in what is called in "sailor-gear." His size was ten feet. The alligator had been a pirate like the seizer, and there said to the bottom. They then began pulling their boat across into the mud, and at last left the alligator below, apparently lifeless. The question now was, who should go down and inquire after him? Each unflinching which everybody politely offered to have no somebody else. At last one man, who had pistols from self for the occasion, said he would go down and bid the rest. He then proceeded and sent came up to say that during that the alligator was dead. Hopes were then given him, and he went down again and shot him through the carcase. With very great difficulty they succeeded in making it to shore, when it was found to be 15 feet long.

WHAT IS LIFE?

BY ST. GUILD P. ROY.

Is life an empty dream,
A cloud of vapor fringed with gold?
Its trials what they seem,
Tyrants of stern and vengeful mould,
Or mercy's gentle glean?

Is it an idle tale,
In fetters nonsense would hold?
A ship before the gale,
Upon the billows aimless rolled,
Without a chart or sail?

Is life a gaudy gem
That in its setting shall hold
Many a black and grim,
That will blooms, as we grow old,
Pale, valueless and dim?

Is life a garment rare,
Made for the rich and the bold
With cunning art and care,
But laid aside till plait and fold
Are marred beyond repair?

Is life a meteor pale,
Upheld by spirit fingers cold,
Of ghosts of noblest wail,
That have through devious wand'rings strolled,
Till hope and purpose fail?

Life is a fearful thing,
By Wisdom infinite controlled,
Whose ways are mysterious spring,
A precious treasure that we hold,
A holy offering.

FEMALE SOLDIERS.

We had ridden hard and far, but our efforts to overtake the enemy had proved unsuccessful, and now we sat in our tent, vainly striving to be cheerful and contented.

Major Hardy, Captain Mason and myself were the three senior officers on the staff of a general officer, distinguished equally for his valor in the field and his wisdom in the council. No man could be more truly and devotedly attached to their commander than we, and we have often thanked the good fortune to be under one more worthy of that attachment. But this does not tell my story.

Our tent, which had weathered many a storm, was pitched upon a damp, uneven piece of ground—ground which had been the scene of fateful contraband had somewhere found three boards on which we thankfully stretched our weary limbs, and, wrapped in our blankets, we laid down. A tent picket guard, the camp, far, far below us in the valley, and the brilliant signal lights which, over and around the mountain, denoted the foe, assured us that others were as vigilant as ourselves.

Hardy lay where the light from the fire at our door fell upon his face, and I think no true man would have been ashamed to acknowledge that the bright dewy tears glistened on his cheeks were tears, or that it was the thought of a dear young wife and beautiful child, far absent now, perhaps never to be seen again on earth, which caused them to flow. You would find no truer soldier than Hardy. Through the Mexican war he had won the praises and esteem of every officer under whom he served, and the hearts of all fellow-prisoners; and now, when he had "settled down," as he said, and had married a lovely girl to whom he had long been affianced, he was not willing to call for men to defend our country. Among the first to enter the field was Hardy, and his name had been distinguished for many a deed of wonderful daring and bravery.

Mason had drawn his "downy couch," as he called it, near the fire, and was busily engaged in deciphering a piece of old newspaper which he had found in a deserted house during the day's ride. Mason, like Hardy, was a regular officer. He was so brave, so gallant, such a thorough soldier and true gentleman, so frank and open, so wise in planning and judging, yet so modest in advancing his opinions, so pleasant a companion in the long nights which we occasionally take in the Army of the Potomac, that truly—

"None knew him but to love him,
Or named him but to praise."

I had withdrawn, as I said, to a dark corner of the tent, and it would have been difficult for me to say whether I was most thoroughly heart-sick or worn-out physically.

Mason was the first to break the long silence.

"Well, for my part," quoth he, "I don't believe one word of women's enlisting and serving as sisters. Every regiment has a couple of Joan of Arc small trash. I don't believe that any woman could bear the fatigue and exposure, or that they would have the courage to stand before a volley of musketry."

Hardy laughed.

"You remember the General's wife at Fair Oaks, didn't you, Mase?"

"No; what was it?"

"Well, you remember how these rascally rebels use to wake us every morning just before sunrise, by a dozen or so of shells, or a few volleys of musketry? Well, I was just lying down for a day or two, and insisted upon staying in the tent near the outworks with her husband. The morning after her arrival, the enemy began firing in earnest, and one or two shells burst quite near her tent. Of course the General sprang up at the first sound, and was soon with us, directing in person the fire of our batteries. He did not stop to give his wife any directions how to act in case of danger, but left her entirely to the force of the enemy, but trusted entirely to her own good sense and decision. She ordered her carriage to be in readiness at a moment's warning, secured a large amount of money which she had with her upon her person, and then, after hastening for some time to the incessant firing, and watching the shells as they whizzed about in the distance, she told her servant to call her if the sergeant of the ground at headquarters pronounced it necessary for her to retire, or if the General sent her any message, and returned to her tent. When, after silencing the enemy, the General returned about three hours after, he found her sleeping as quietly and peacefully as a tired child. When she awoke, she told him she was determined not to leave there as long as she could stay without a hindrance to him, and that, confident he would return to her in safety, she had run down to see the battle-ground."

"Yes," said Mason, "that may all be true, but in his first place, there are very few women like Mrs. Grafton, and, in the next, how long do you think even she could stand the wear and tear of a soldier's life? Not six weeks, I believe."

"Perhaps not," replied Hardy. "I pity any woman from the bottom of my heart that does so, but, let the reason be what it may. There must be something very wrong somewhere."

"The other day at inspection," said Mason, "Jay, the assistant-surgeon of the 49th, said he'd bet that splendid boy of his that one of the corporals' company, A, or the 10th, was a woman. I haven't seen him since to inquire, but I never should have thought of suspecting the man—the woman, I mean."

Hardy did not reply.

"Mason," said I, "do you remember at Bull Run, when we were both in the 7th infantry, that a splendid young fellow we had for a color-sergeant? How gallantly he defended his flag, and when how almost miraculously he saved Colonel Blair's life in the charge?"

"Indeed I do!" replied the captain with enthusiasm, pleased to find that he spoke "by the card" in the most gallant action performed that day. Why, doctor, his hands were all shattered to pieces by bullets, and his arm broken by the staff, and the flag, yet he managed to hold it by pressing it to his breast with his arm, though he must have suffered excruciating pain. Blair said he had given up ever getting out of that serape alive, when the fellow came dashing along, and throwing himself between him and the enemy, received in his own body the ball intended for the Colonel. I never saw a man feel anything as Blair did that. I never could get him to speak of it but once, and then he seemed almost overwhelmed deeply affected.

"You never surmised that the color-sergeant of the 7th was a woman?" I asked quietly.

"By Cornwallis, you don't mean it, doctor," exclaimed Mason in astonishment, and even the quiet Hardy started up from his board and looked at me with a look of astonishment.

"You need not stare so," I continued. "I am telling you the truth. I dressed the poor creature's wounds myself, and the next day she was sent for me and told me her secret. She had been left an orphan when quite young, and Blair's father, who was a rich planter, had taken her into her family as a sort of confidential servant, keeping her mostly in her own apartments. In this way she had seen more of Blair than she had of any other member of the family, although He was a handsome, dashing young fellow, and almost unconsciously to herself, and entirely so on his part, she became attached to him. Not long before the war broke out, he married and brought his wife home to this. Thus opened poor Margaret's eyes to the truth that her peace of mind was gone for ever, and unable to endure the misery to which she knew she must be subjected as a member of the family, she pleaded ill health as a reason for leaving them and spending the summer with an old friend in a distant part of the country. When the war broke out she was of the first to offer his services and raise a regiment when the war came. Margaret heard of it, and, by her own account, did not stop to consider to disguise herself and enlist in it. I can't imagine her deep-seated detection, but she did, and all along with high bravery and coolness she fulfilled her duty. When she found that her wounds were approaching, she desired me to send for the Colonel, and I left them together. What passed in that interview no one knows, but in about half an hour I was sent for, and found Blair looking almost as much like death as the poor girl herself. He had learned the truth. They were sure I should save your life in some way, and I did be happy. Think sometimes of poor Margaret, my Maud Parkwood, and the next Brevet Major Margaret Powers, the brave color-sergeant of the 7th infantry, was dead."

My recital was followed by the most profound silence, which was at length broken by Hardy, who, Hardy covered his face with his hands, and turned away from the light, and Mason sat looking thoughtfully into the fire. An hour passed in this manner.

Weary as we were, our position was one of too much danger to permit us to sleep quietly, and Hardy and myself had each an occasional doze as we lay on our hard beds.

Suddenly Mason started and listened intently; then, without a word, sprang to the side of his horse which was fastened near the tent, and began placing the saddle upon him with his own hand. Hardy quickly followed his example, and in a few minutes stood, thoroughly equipped, beside our horses, ready to mount. Then I asked:

"What is it, Mason?"

"The long roll," he replied.

"Where?" asked Hardy.

"On the right; Devereaux Division, I think."

"Another stampede among Hazelly's mules, probably," said I.

"No," said Mason. "Hazelly is on the left now, and besides the General heard it and started before I did. He is no ready for action as any man in our army, I believe. Have you any carriage to fit my pistol, doctor?"

I gave them to him, and they mounted and

CONSECRATION OF THE NEW ROMAN CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL

At Philadelphia.

THE new Roman Catholic Cathedral at Philadelphia has at last been completed, and dedicated to the solemn purposes of worship. The ceremony of consecration was performed on Sunday, Nov. 20th, in the presence of an immense concourse of spectators. We have engraved, for our Illustrated Weekly Journal, on the first page of this paper, an illustration of the scene in the interior of the beautiful Cathedral walls. The ceremony was performed by the Right Rev. Aurea J. Wood, Bishop of Philadelphia, a portrait of whom will be found on page 206. The Bishop, in our engraving, is depicted in the canonical robes, wearing his mitre of gold cloth, holding in one hand his arras crozier, pronounces the solemn words of the service. Behind him are other his silver instruments, from which he sprinkles the holy water over the altar and the floor. The procession is indicated in one of the most significant and impressive of the many rites of the church, and it is one of the most beautiful ceremonies performed with pomp and splendor.

The consecration of this magnificent Cathedral was laid Sept. 9th, 1846 by the late much lamented Dr. Kenrick, then Bishop of Philadelphia, and left unquestionably the finest edifice of the kind in the country. Bishop Kenrick, who succeeded Dr. Kenrick in the Bishopric of Philadelphia, continued the work, but neither of these prelates lived to see it finished. The Cathedral is now under the immediate care of Bishop Wood. It was designed by the eminent architect, Mr. Keely, and has been erected under his own superintendence. Its cost, about half a million dollars, has been defrayed by voluntary contributions, chiefly from members of the Roman Catholic congregation, collected, from time to time, during the earlier years which have been consumed in building it. A noble and lasting monument has thus been erected to the piety, liberality and generous liberation of the donors.

The Cathedral is the largest edifice—in the city of Mexico—the largest church on this continent. It is built in the form of a cross, and is 216 feet long, 104 feet wide, and 80 feet high, to the apex of the roof. The exterior diameter of the dome at its base is 71 feet, and its interior 55 feet. The towers, which are 19 feet at the great base and triangular in shape for 8 feet high, cylindrical and panelled. Over the intersections of the main vaults is the celebrated dome, octagonal in form, which is on the highest degree grand and imposing. The side aisles and transepts are divided from the nave by massive piers, which give support to the arches on which the clerestory is built; the piers being nearly square, with cylindrical moulded shafts at the four principal salients or the Corinthian order, with enriched base and capital. These pillars support an entablature, including the architrave, frieze, cornice and blocking course, over which springs the vaulted semi-circular arches. The architrave is carried round the pillars, which is on the highest degree grand and imposing. The side aisles and transepts are divided from the nave by massive piers, which give support to the arches on which the clerestory is built; the piers being nearly square, with cylindrical moulded shafts at the four principal salients or the Corinthian order, with enriched base and capital. These pillars support an entablature, including the architrave, frieze, cornice and blocking course, over which springs the vaulted semi-circular arches. The architrave is carried round the pillars, which is on the highest degree grand and imposing. The side aisles and transepts are divided from the nave by massive piers, which give support to the arches on which the clerestory is built; the piers being nearly square, with cylindrical moulded shafts at the four principal salients or the Corinthian order, with enriched base and capital. These pillars support an entablature, including the architrave, frieze, cornice and blocking course, over which springs the vaulted semi-circular arches. The architrave is carried round the pillars, which is on the highest degree grand and imposing.

The location of the building, on Broad street, facing on Logan square, is exceptionally fine and imposing. The material of the church is dark brown stone. Its architecture is the richest style of Roman Corinthian. Its front, on Broad street, is 104 feet wide, and 80 feet high, consists of a portico of four enormous columns, 60 feet high and seven feet in diameter, with a pediment above, surmounted by a richly sculptured. The inscription upon the frieze is—finished loading his revolver the General had mounted, and we were by his side, hastening to the front. For a time all was quiet, but just before daybreak the enemy attacked and drove in our pickets, of whom two were killed and several wounded. A skirmish followed, and for the next few hours I was fully occupied with my professional duties. About noon they brought in a poor young fellow—mere boy, apparently—and one glance at the fearfulness in his head assured me that he had but a few moments to live. I would not stay to examine his wounds any longer. I knew I could do nothing to prolong his life or alleviate his sufferings. At that moment Mason came in search of a message from the General, and as his eye fell upon the poor fellow before me he whispered:

"Ad augustum Dei ejusque (to the greater glory of God).

Over the portico, in the centre, is a large circular window, filled with tracery and stained glass of the richest description. The doors are of white Italian marble. The pews are of white pine, capped with mahogany, and are furnished with revolving seats. The floor is covered with rich carpeting. By Constantine Brumidi, over the main aisle, is one of the most striking features in the interior decoration of the Cathedral. Other paintings adorn the church, which is also glorious with colored glass and statuary, overall with magnificence the softened light, falling from above, sheds a holy lustre, in perfect keeping with the sanctity of the place. Here, through years—many to through centuries—the devotion of man will express itself, in humble adoration, before the Almighty Master, and in grateful thanksgiving for the gift of His son, a testimony to the pious energy and Christian labors of the present generation.

"Doctor! it's the corporal of the 10th; the one Jay says is a woman."

I made no reply for the breath came more and more slowly, the death-dew stood upon the smooth, white brow in great drops, and the next moment, with one gasp, he died. Jay was right—the corporal was a woman—the mask had undergone the greatest hardships, and endured the greatest fatigues, for during the campaign we had lost more than eight soldiers dead as the ranks of the 10th were so much thinned by sickness and casualties, the few who remained were formed into companies and regiments. Afterwards I questioned some of the men in her company, but none of them had ever suspected that their former comrade was a woman, though they had frequently noticed her quiet, retiring manners, and evident wish to keep by herself and answer no questions.

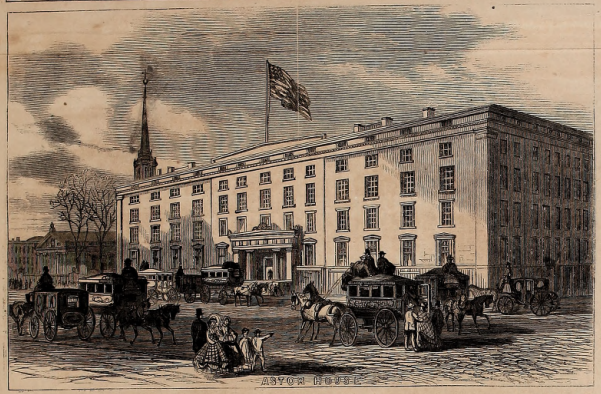
So Mason was satisfied that a woman might have sufficient courage to face the enemy, and strength and fortitude to endure a soldier's hardships and privations.

CONSECRATION OF THE NEW ROMAN CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL

At Philadelphia.

THE new Roman Catholic Cathedral at Philadelphia has at last been completed, and dedicated to the solemn purposes of worship. The ceremony of consecration was performed on Sunday, Nov. 20th, in the presence of an immense concourse of spectators. We have engraved, for our Illustrated Weekly Journal, on the first page of this paper, an illustration of the scene in the interior of the beautiful Cathedral walls. The ceremony was performed by the Right Rev. Aurea J. Wood, Bishop of Philadelphia, a portrait of whom will be found on page 206. The Bishop, in our engraving, is depicted in the canonical robes, wearing his mitre of gold cloth, holding in one hand his arras crozier, pronounces the solemn words of the service. Behind him are other his silver instruments, from which he sprinkles the holy water over the altar and the floor. The procession is indicated in one of the most significant and impressive of the many rites of the church, and it is one of the most beautiful ceremonies performed with pomp and splendor.

The consecration of this magnificent Cathedral was laid Sept. 9th, 1846 by the late much lamented Dr. Kenrick, then Bishop of Philadelphia, and left unquestionably the finest edifice of the kind in the country. Bishop Kenrick, who succeeded Dr. Kenrick in the Bishopric of Philadelphia, continued the work, but neither of these prelates lived to see it finished. The Cathedral is now under the immediate care of Bishop Wood. It was designed by the eminent architect, Mr. Keely, and has been erected under his own superintendence. Its cost, about half a million dollars, has been defrayed by voluntary contributions, chiefly from members of the Roman Catholic congregation, collected, from time to time, during the earlier years which have been consumed in building it. A noble and lasting monument has thus been erected to the piety, liberality and generous liberation of the donors.



The Cathedral is the largest edifice—in the city of Mexico—the largest church on this continent. It is built in the form of a cross, and is 216 feet long, 104 feet wide, and 80 feet high, to the apex of the roof. The exterior diameter of the dome at its base is 71 feet, and its interior 55 feet. The towers, which are 19 feet at the great base and triangular in shape for 8 feet high, cylindrical and panelled. Over the intersections of the main vaults is the celebrated dome, octagonal in form, which is on the highest degree grand and imposing. The side aisles and transepts are divided from the nave by massive piers, which give support to the arches on which the clerestory is built; the piers being nearly square, with cylindrical moulded shafts at the four principal salients or the Corinthian order, with enriched base and capital. These pillars support an entablature, including the architrave, frieze, cornice and blocking course, over which springs the vaulted semi-circular arches. The architrave is carried round the pillars, which is on the highest degree grand and imposing. The side aisles and transepts are divided from the nave by massive piers, which give support to the arches on which the clerestory is built; the piers being nearly square, with cylindrical moulded shafts at the four principal salients or the Corinthian order, with enriched base and capital. These pillars support an entablature, including the architrave, frieze, cornice and blocking course, over which springs the vaulted semi-circular arches. The architrave is carried round the pillars, which is on the highest degree grand and imposing.

The location of the building, on Broad street, facing on Logan square, is exceptionally fine and imposing. The material of the church is dark brown stone. Its architecture is the richest style of Roman Corinthian. Its front, on Broad street, is 104 feet wide, and 80 feet high, consists of a portico of four enormous columns, 60 feet high and seven feet in diameter, with a pediment above, surmounted by a richly sculptured. The inscription upon the frieze is—

"Ad augustum Dei ejusque (to the greater glory of God).

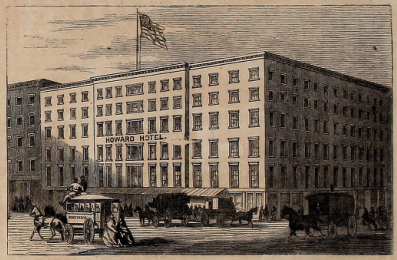
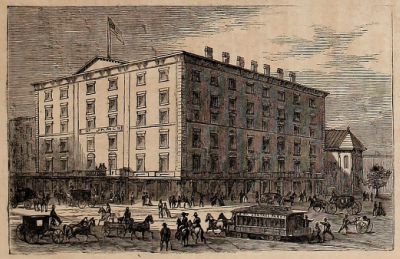
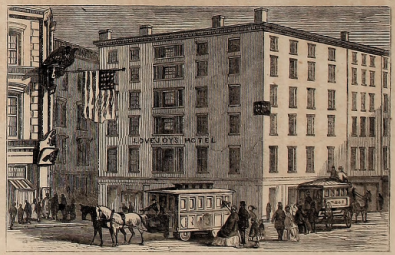
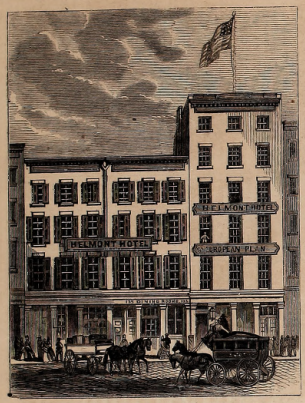
Over the portico, in the centre, is a large circular window, filled with tracery and stained glass of the richest description. The doors are of white Italian marble. The pews are of white pine, capped with mahogany, and are furnished with revolving seats. The floor is covered with rich carpeting. By Constantine Brumidi, over the main aisle, is one of the most striking features in the interior decoration of the Cathedral. Other paintings adorn the church, which is also glorious with colored glass and statuary, overall with magnificence the softened light, falling from above, sheds a holy lustre, in perfect keeping with the sanctity of the place. Here, through years—many to through centuries—the devotion of man will express itself, in humble adoration, before the Almighty Master, and in grateful thanksgiving for the gift of His son, a testimony to the pious energy and Christian labors of the present generation.

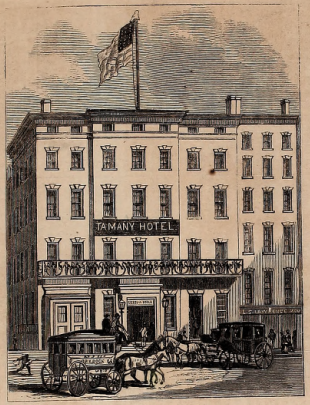


METROPOLITAN HOTEL

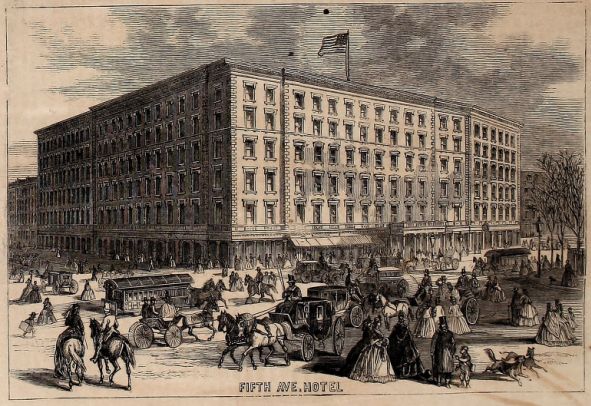








THE HOTELS OF NEW YORK CITY, THAT WERE SET ON FIRE BY REBEL INCENDIARIES ON THE EVENING OF NOV. 25.



BELMONT HOTEL
BELMONT HOTEL
EUROPEAN PLAN

TAMANY HOTEL

FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL

METROPOLITAN HOTEL

FIFTH AVE. HOTEL

A LOVER'S THOUGHTS.

How many thoughts I give thee!
Come hither on the grass,
And if thou'lt count unfailing
The green blades as we pass;
Or the leaves that sigh and tremble,
To the sweet wind of the west,
Or the rippling of the river,
Or the sunbeams on its breast,
I'll count the thoughts I give thee,
My beautiful, my blest!

How many joys I owe thee!
Come sit where waves run high,
And count the heaving billows,
That break on the shores and die—
Or the grains of sand they fondle,
When the storms are overblown,
Or the pearls in the deep-sea caverns,
Or the stars in the milky zone,
And I'll count the joys I owe thee,
My beautiful, my own!

And how much love I proffer!
Come scoop the ocean dry,
Or weigh in thy tiny balance
The star ships of the sky;
Or twine around thy fingers,
The sunlight streaming wide,
Or fold it in thy bosom,
While the world is dark beside;
And I'll tell how much I love thee,
My beautiful, my bride!

MEDUSA.

CHAPTER II.—CONTINUED.

On the Monday following the eventful Monday described, true to her original plan, Mrs. Brande came up to town, and, faithful to her appointment, drove up to the Piccadilly entrance of St. James's Hall at ten minutes before eight o'clock. She was a real child about her amusements, and always liked to be there ever so long before the beginning. She found her cousin, early as it was, already in waiting for her at the door.

"What have you been doing with yourself all day, you bad boy," she said, as he helped her out of the carriage, "that you never came to look me up, though you knew I was to arrive by the twelve o'clock train?"

"I couldn't, dear," he answered; "I was at a monster concert and couldn't get away; it began at one, and was not over before half-past six. I had got helplessly jammed in, and had to bear my fate as best I might, and bide my time to the end."

"Good heavens!" she said, "what an ostrich's stomach for music you must have! Fond as I am of it I couldn't have done that, and then do this on the top of it; no wonder that you look dead beat! Was it a good concert? What did you hear?"

"Oh, a lot of things," he answered, carelessly; "I'm sure I don't know what."

"And who sang?" asked she.

"Let me see," said Mr. Saville. "Oh, a whole heap of people sang—everybody sang—I can't recollect who."

He had taken care to secure the same seats of the week before, and when they arrived, he noticed with emotion that the first six places on the front bench close to them were still empty. As the hour of commencing drew near, he was in a state of abstraction that at last became quite apparent to his cousin; he hardly heard what she said to him, and scarcely answered when he had heard. The orchestra was filling by degrees, and he kept his eyes riveted upon the people as they entered.

"My dear Edward," said Mrs. Brande, "who in the world are you looking for among all those shabby people up there on the platform?"

"I am looking for a checked shawl and a gray worsted stocking," he answered.

But he looked in vain. Presently a party of people rustled past him, the women's gowns as they brushed by filled him with a strange agitation. He recognised them—they were the people of the Monday before—and took the same seats on the front bench. There was the elderly gentleman with the red nose, the daughter with the spectacles and the big music-book, the stout mother with the pagoda on her head, and her bottle of smelling-salts in her hand, and they had brought with them a son of fifteen who took the place next to Mr. Saville, who could have kicked him. Our friend was in an irritable frame of mind, and the boy fidgeted him into a perfect fever. The youth's neckcloth was too stiff, and he craned his neck about incessantly; then his waistcoat was too tight for him, and he tried to ease himself by first unbuttoning the three upper buttons, and then buttoning them up again, and unbuttoning the four lower ones, so as alternately to relieve the different portions of his suffering person. Harty Brande was quite delighted with the boy; he had chilblains too, and after rubbing his wretched feet together, and making his boots creak till he nearly drove his neighbor wild, he finally kicked both his boots off at the heel, after which he sighed deeply and seemed rather better. Harty, who had a great sense of fun, was thoroughly wrapped up in him. Edward Saville thought with savage delight of the end of the concert, and the moment when he would have to put those boots on again. The music came, the music went; the evening had come, and was gone, and Edward had accompanied his cousin home, and was now sitting by a bright fire in her small drawing-room, moodily drinking a very good cup of tea.

"My dear boy," she said to him, "what ails you? You don't seem half glad to see me, whatever the reason may be; and I am so disappointed about it that I really don't think I shall tell you something which I had imagined would have given you pleasure."

"Yes, I am glad to see you, Harty, dear," he said, kissing her hand affectionately; "but I am tired, and out of spirits, and the music and that hot room together have finished me. Decidedly London is a mistake at this season of the year; and to-morrow when you start, I think it not at all unlikely that you will find me at the station ready to accompany you back to Herne Court."

"Don't go to the station to-morrow, then, for if you do, you won't find me," she said, laughing; "this is exactly what I was nursing up as such a treat to delight you with—William has gone for a few days' hunting to the Digbys, and I have a holiday until Saturday. I thought you'd be so pleased! But you don't even make the demonstrations that bare civility requires, and I feel quite mortified. I had meant to go everywhere this week, and had reckoned upon you for the partner of all my little dissipations."

"My dear Harty, I shall be delighted to go with you everywhere; but on Thursday I can go nowhere. My sister starts for Malta with her husband at eight o'clock on Friday morning, and I must spend the last evening with her. Besides, this last week I have given myself a sickener of music, and just at the present moment feel very much as if I would rather never hear another note as long as I live. Last Monday, I went as you know to that ill-fated place we were at to-night."

Here Mrs. Brande burst out laughing, but on looking round at him, saw with surprise that he was perfectly serious.

"On Tuesday I was at the Vocal Association—one Wednesday there was Benedict's concert—on Thursday I went to Henry Leslie's Choir—on Friday there was the Israel in Egypt at Exeter Hall—and on Saturday I was at Covent Garden. I can't go to any more music!"

"But, my dear Edward, what could induce you to go to these places in such frightful quick succession?"

"Medusa," he said, with a nervous little laugh.

She pressed him in vain for an explanation; she could get nothing further out of him. As he was bidding her good-night, she kept hold of his hand, and said to him:

"Tell me who Medusa is?"

"Only a woman with gray worsted stockings, and a checked shawl," he answered, and left her.

CHAPTER III.

Edward Saville had passed a feverish, unsatisfactory week; haunted by the strange face he had seen at the concert, he had (as he told his cousin) gone by turns to every musical entertainment in London, for the chance of meeting the pale lady again. Everything about her seemed mysterious. That she was foreign he had no doubt, most probably German, he thought, as he recollected the circumstance of the knitting; and then he passionately regretted that this should not have occurred to him at the time. He had lived for years in Germany, and the language was as familiar to him as his own; if he had spoken to her in German, perhaps she might have answered him.

At last, exasperated by all these unsuccessful efforts to see her again, worried by recollections he could not banish, and speculations that arrived at no conclusions, in a sort of spite at himself he made up his mind to think that after all she was probably only one of the many foreign women of disreputable career with whom London is always teeming. Her costly clothes looked like the thing enough—so did her being there all alone—and then he remembered that irreproachable distinction of appearance, the quiet of her demeanor, and the pale face and wistful eyes seemed to reproach him for his thought.

If Edward Saville had had a profession, or an occupation of any sort, he would not have been subject to this kind of possession; but from a boy he had been his own master; and as, owing to his independent means, he had had life pretty much his own way, and had never met with anything like wholesome opposition to any of his wishes; while blasé upon all the ordinary pursuits and pleasures of most young men, he was capable of being roused to an almost insane degree of excitement by any adventure which seemed attended with doubt or difficulty.

However, continual concerts had somewhat damped his ardor, and at the end of this week of disappointment, provoked with his want of success, he thought himself a fool for his pains, and made up his mind that nothing should induce him to pursue his wild-goose chase any further; and so he devoted himself very thoroughly to his cousin, and took her to all the places she wished to go to, except to Leslie's Choir; it would have brought his recent disappointment too vividly before his eyes; besides, he was engaged to his sister, and, as we have seen, he refused to accompany Mrs. Brande there. On Friday, when he was calling, he asked her how she had liked her evening.

"Quite charming," she said; "we had all manner of lovely things, and then wound up with Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, which I had never heard before. I never liked anything so much in my life, though I am free to confess that during the last chorus I only listened with half an ear to the music, for I suddenly caught sight of a face so unlike any face I ever saw before, and that looked so curious altogether, that I could not take my eyes off it."

"Yes," said her cousin, absently, "one does see such faces sometimes."

"I am sure," she went on, "there must be a story to that face. Edward, don't you believe that when people look like that they have stories? I haven't a story, and I don't look like that; you haven't a story, and you don't look like that; don't tell me that people look like that for nothing."

"Like what, in the first place?" he asked, laughing. "And in the second, did the face belong to a man or a woman? for you haven't told me even that yet. I dare say it's the man with the big red beard, whom one sees everywhere—you always go mad upon beards."

"It was a woman," said Harty, impetuously; "and the only thing in the world she was like was an ecstatic triumphant Virgin, in an Assumption by some glorious old master. She was just two rows behind me, and when I first caught sight of her, she was leaning back with her hands clasped in her lap, her face was turned upwards towards the orchestra, and had a rapturous transfigured aspect, such as I never saw on any human face before. And oh, what eyes! It was not only the beauty of them, but a look they had in them, as if all the time they saw something that we none of us could see. It seemed as if only the husk of her were sitting there, and that her soul was away, away, away, bathed in the light of a paradise that was invisible to her grosser sense."

"Some Southern woman, probably," said Edward. "One sees rays of light stream from those dark faces sometimes in a marvellous way."

"No, she wasn't Italian," interrupted Harty, eagerly; "she was not dark, she was a fair woman, with heaps of light hair, and a face as white as marble." (Edward Saville's heart gave a great jump.) "And what was so wonderful about her was her extraordinary unconsciousness; it seemed to isolate her so completely from the whole room. She had no one with her—wasn't it odd for so young a woman? She can't be more than three or four-and-twenty; she passed out close before me, and I saw that she was alone—you'll think I am gone quite crazy on the subject, but her dress, too, was so very peculiar: she had got on a gown of——"

"Violet velvet, I know, and a diamond comb!" exclaimed Edward Saville, starting up in a state of great excitement. "My dear Harty, can you tell me anything about that woman?" he said, taking both her hands. "You say that you left the concert-room together; did you see her drive off? Did you hear what direction was given to the coachman?"

"No," said his cousin, in amazement at the degree of agitation he expressed. "Her carriage was just before mine; there was an elderly-looking man waiting for her at the door, and 'Home!' was the only direction given."

Mrs. Brande knew the riddle now, and Medusa was revealed. She was troubled for her cousin; he looked worn and haggard, and his manner was so disturbed that she felt quite unhappy about him. She moved heaven and earth to get him to promise to go down with her the next day into the country, but was obliged to leave town without him, and, what was worse, with but little apparent prospect of seeing him for some time to come.

The months passed; winter had rolled into spring, and Edward Saville was still in London. Harty wrote to him continually from Herne Court, loading him with little commissions to execute for her, that he might be obliged to write, and that so she might be kept a little au courant of his life. She did not gather much information, however, on this head; he did what she asked, but was silent about himself; the letters were short, unsatisfactory, and read sadly; at least, so it seemed to Mrs. Brande's kind heart.

One morning he got a note from her containing a list of plants, which she begged he would be so good as to order for her from some nursery-grounds on the Bayswater road. It was a lovely morning towards the middle of May; he got into a Hansom, and went off in search of the florist. There was a brougham waiting at the door, which moved a few paces on to let him draw up. He passed through the little shop into the nursery-garden behind the house.

The master of the shop was busily engaged at some distance with two ladies, who were coming down the principal walk towards the shop. They were veiled, but a strange throbbing seized Edward Saville's heart as they came nearer, and he saw that the one next to him wore a checked shawl and common stuff gown. The other was a lady dressed in black silk, and held a large nosegay of lilies of the valley in her hand. He stood aside breathless as they approached. It was she; he took off his hat as she passed; she looked full at him as she went by, and smiled, but did not return his bow, nor look back once. They got into the carriage and drove away.

Without thinking of Harty, or her commission, or of the gaping shopman who was re-entering the house, and whom he nearly overthrew in his mad haste, Mr. Saville precipitated himself into his cab, and desired the man to follow the brougham, which was still in sight, but on ahead at some little distance before them. They drove on for some time upon the Bayswater road, keeping the carriage steadily in sight all the while, until they saw it stop very nearly opposite the gate of Kensington Gardens, before a long, low, Gothic cottage that stood within walls and a little way back from the high road. Here Edward Saville saw the young woman whom he supposed to be a servant get out and ring the bell. The door was opened by an elderly man, whom he recognised as the one he had seen at the hall. The carriage drove off empty, and the two women disappeared into the house.

He discharged his cab, and then walked leisurely past the cottage. It looked astonishingly rural among all the other suburban residences. Home Cottage was the name of the spruce little white box with the bright green blinds just before it. It appeared to have a large garden at the back, for over the wall he could see a considerable space untenanted with houses, and in which there were three or four trees: real trees of respectable magnitude. The cottage was of a light stone color; there was clear blue in the heavens, soft white clouds were sailing about, a fresh spring wind tempered the mid-day heat, and a lithe cherry tree, covered with blossoms, was nodding its white head in at the latticed bedroom windows in front; it was a very pretty picture. Having made this inspection of the premises, he turned back again and rang at the bell.

"Pray can you tell me if Mrs. Brande live here?" he said, when the old man appeared.

"There is no such person here," was the reply, very crustily given, and with a strongly-marked German accent.

"Do you know, by any chance, if there is such a person in the neighborhood?" pursued Edward, as he saw the door gradually closing against him.

"There is no such person," said the old man again, and shut the door in his face.

He crossed the road and turned into Kensington Gardens. The great walk, which is generally the favorite resort of nursemaids and their small charges, was nearly empty, and he wandered on in almost complete solitude among the trees until he came to the round pond. In the retirement of that lovely place he tried to collect his thoughts and calm the agitation of his mind. At last he had found her! He had no project, no plan, and he hardly felt any desire to make one. He knew where she lived; she could escape him no more! He had found her. All the harassing anxiety of the last weary months seemed to roll away in one deep sigh of relief. It was enough, and he sat down to enjoy the new, divine sense of rest in which his heart was steeped.

Edward Saville passed once more before the cottage on his way back to the nursery garden; no one was to be seen, but he heard the sound of a pianoforte, which was being played upon in a masterly manner. After executing Mrs. Brande's commission, he asked the shopkeeper who the ladies were whom he had seen there in the morning.

"Well, sir," said the man, "they're foreign ladies; they come down a'most every morning, between twelve and one o'clock, and buy as many lilies of the valley as I can cut for them. I have sent flowers down to the house once or twice; they live at Home Cottage; it's a long low house, sir, a good bit further down the road."

This he knew.

"Did you say they were foreign?" he inquired.

"Yes, sir; I've got the name down in my book." The man opened his book and pointed to a direction that was written in it. Mr. Saville read: "Mrs. Hausmann, Home Cottage, Bayswate Road."

The next morning, by twelve o'clock, he was at the garden, and made the gardener cut him all the lilies in the valley that were out. He had made up his mind to leave them at the cottage anonymously, and trust to the feminine instinct of the pale lady to guess from whom they came. He had just paid for the flowers when he saw the two well-known figures arrive. They passed through the shop and went up the broad pathway to speak to the gardener. Mr. Saville was in a side walk, and watched the conversation at some distance. He saw the man point to him and shake his head—they were evidently being told that there were no lilies for them this morning. He changed his mind at once, and decided that, instead of leaving the flowers at the house, he would offer them in person. He went into the shop and waited, the ladies took a little turn in the grounds and then came back. They entered the shop, and he was just preparing to speak to them, when the pale lady, who was passing close to him, suddenly snatched the flowers out of his hand, and, without a word, made for the carriage, followed by her companion, who was in fits of laughter. Encouraged by this extraordinary freedom of manner in both the women, Edward proceeded at once towards the cottage. He had not gone a hundred paces before the old man-servant met and passed him on the road. He hastened on and rung at the door. It was opened this time by a little maid-of-all-work.

"Is Madame Hausmann at home?" said he.

"No, she's out," answered the girl.

"But the other ladies, are they at home?"

"Yes, Miss Elizabeth came in about twenty minutes ago."

"Oh, that was Miss Elizabeth, was it? I have just met her, with her maid, at the nursery-garden. Will you take in my card, and ask if she will be kind enough to receive me?"

"There ain't no maid but me, and you've made a mistake," said the girl; "and it's no use my taking in the card, they never sees any one."

"But there were two ladies; if one was Miss Elizabeth, who was the other one?" said Edward. "Don't be in such a hurry, my dear," he continued, as he saw the door, which she held in her hand, preparing to close upon him as before, "you shan't lose by doing me a good turn." And he gave her half-a-crown.

"Well, there was only Miss Elizabeth and Countess Vander, but it's no use your asking to see them; I've been here nigh upon two years now, and never let any one in yet—two or three is come like you, but they never got in. I tell you they sees no one."

"Jane!" cried an angry voice from above, "who are you gossiping with all this time? Shut the door this minute, and go back to your work!"

She slammed the door to, and Edward Saville turned away. Madame Hausmann, Miss Elizabeth and Countess Vander, what an odd hash it all was! He was so deep in his brown study that he did not see where he was going, and ran right up against a handsome man, with a fair beard, who was coming along at a swinging pace in the opposite direction. By an unerring instinct of the heart, Edward Saville knew that he was going to the cottage, and turned to look after him. He was right enough; but the stranger was more fortunate than he, for, without asking a single question, when Jane opened the door, the young man entered the house.

Edward retraced his steps, and, as he walked slowly before the cottage, he could hear the man's voice and sounds of laughter from within. He went past, and looking up at the spruce villa that was next door (Europa Point it was called), he saw "To Let," in the windows of the first floor. He immediately asked to see the mistress of the house, inquired about terms, and was sa liberal, and made himself so accommodating, that he not only settled everything then and there, but, by dint of a sovereign or two more judiciously thrown in, persuaded the landlady to allow him to instal himself in the mansion, which he had taken for three months certain, that very evening.

He arrived about eight o'clock, having given out to all his friends and at his club that he was going to leave town. Just as he had jumped out of the cab and he was paying the man, he glanced up at the next cottage. One of the top windows was open, and he saw the young companion of the pale lady looking steadily down at him. Their eyes met, she colored, and he saw that she had recognised him. She called to some one in the room, and a stern-visaged old woman came to the window. About half an hour afterwards his nosegay of lilies of the valley was returned to him.

The evening was excessively hot, and Edward Saville was in a fever. His little stuffy lodging, with its dingy drab moreen curtains, saturated with dust and smoke, seemed to stifle him. The front room was a tolerably pleasant apartment, of fair size, but the back drawing-room, which was about a quarter as large, entirely overlooked the neighboring garden, and of course it was here that he took up his residence. He threw open the narrow windows as wide as they would go and looked out. It was ten o'clock then, and a lovely moonlight night. From the next house he could hear the sound of music, the exquisite slow movement of Chopin's second sonata in B minor was wafted over the wall to him, and the young man, melted by the soft air and by the tenderness in his own soul, leaned his arms upon the window and listened with his eyes full of tears.

Suddenly a loud slam, as if the piano had been violently shut down, broke the silence, the door of the drawing-room, which gave upon the garden, was thrown wide open, and out rushed the pale lady with a sheet of music in her hand, followed by the man he had knocked up against in the morning. She flew round and round the garden in the moonlight, dodging in and out among the trees and bushes with the young man in full chase after her, while their peals of laughter echoed through the still air. Edward Saville stood motionless watching them, glued to the window and devoured by jealousy. At last the young man doubled adroitly round one of the bushes and caught her full in his arms. They had a sharp struggle for the music, during which her comb tumbled out, and all her hair came down, covering her to her very feet. She was beaten at last, and he got the music.

"Ach lieber, Wilhelm," she sighed. "Ich bin so müde, lass mich ruhen!" ("Ah, dear William," she sighed, "I am so tired! Let me rest.")

Close by them was a bench, under one of the large trees on the lawn. They both sat down. Presently she fell asleep. How lovely she looked lying there cradled in his arms! The moonlight touched her pale face and the rose in her bosom, and fell upon the clouds of her fair hair, while little dark tremulous shadows of leaves, thrown by a swaying branch, flickered here and there across her white dress. Once or twice he softly moved back her hair from off her face, and once Edward saw him stoop his head and kiss her forehead.

"Come in! come in!" cried a harsh woman's voice from the house; "you'll catch your death of cold!"

She did not wake, and he carried her, all sleeping as she was, like a baby into the house. Soon after, Edward heard the front door shut, and saw the young man walk down the road, humming a contented little tune to himself.

NEW BOOKS.

As the Christmas holidays approach, books for the young become numerous on the shelves of the booksellers. Two of these have attracted our attention. The first is entitled Frank's Campaign, and is published by Mr. Loring, of Boston. Its writer is Mr. Horatio Alger, Jr., whose pen is familiar to the habitual readers of this paper. It is a well written story, full of unpretentious interest, and inspired by genial feeling and good moral motive. It is well printed, and we can conscientiously commend it to parents, as an agreeable present for their children. If favorably received, Mr. Alger proposes to publish other works of a similar character, adapted to the tastes of the young.

Another, and an excellent publication of the same class, is The American Boys' Book, published by Messrs. Dick & Fitzgerald, of this city. It is comprehensive in details, and handsomely illustrated, and it far excels its English prototype. It is embellished with over 600 engravings, in a suitable style of art, and it is altogether a very attractive epitome of the sports and accomplishments of boys. It is well adapted to the young of from ten to twenty years of age, and we fancy it may yield instruction and pleasure to children of even maturer years. We cordially commend it to all parents, or good uncles, who wish to make the boys happy at Christmas time.

Messrs. Ticknor & Fields, of Boston, have published, in "blue and gold" style, Mrs. Jameson's Legends of Monastic Orders, as represented in the fine arts. The work has long been in circulation, and has acquired a permanent reputation among the best books of its class. Mrs. Jameson wrote in deep sympathy with art, and a fervent love and reverence for its grand achievements; and thus her works are elevating in spirit, as well as rich in culture, and extremely graceful in style. The present edition of the "Legends" is embellished with a portrait of Titian.

The same publishers have issued, in very neat dress, a third series of Hymns of the Ages. This volume, like its predecessors, consists of extracts from the sacred poetry of the best writers of different nations. The selections have been made with severe good taste, as well as deference to Christian sentiment; and the result is a collection of poems as satisfactory to critical literary judgment as it is comforting to pious minds.

An Anti-Slavery novel, called Waifwood, has been published, in plain but neat style, by Mr. W. V. Spencer, of Boston. We commend it to the attention of those for whom a hacknied subject still has interest. It is replete with incident, and is smoothly written.

REBEL PLOT TO BURN THE CITY OF NEW YORK.

Attempt to Destroy $15,000,000 Worth of Hotel Property.

The most diabolical attempt at arson and murder of which there is any record in the history of our country was made in this city on the night of Friday, the 25th of November. By whom it was made has not yet been settled beyond question; but there is no doubt that the nefarious scheme originated with Southern rebels, who have gained access to our city from the shelter of neutral Canada. Several persons, suspected as perpetrators of this outrage, have been apprehended, and the properly severe measures adopted by Gen. Dix will, we doubt not, bring the guilty to punishment, and preserve us henceforth from any similar danger.

There was so much similarity in all the incendiary attempts of the 25th of November, that it would be monotonous and tedious to relate them at length. While we must admit the malignity of the intention, we cannot commend its ingenuity. The failure was at once conspicuous and complete. With one solitary exception, every Guy Fawkes of this memorable band of conspirators had a small black leather valise. The exception to this black leather rule was the Mr. Simpson who set fire to room 302 of the Metropolitan Hotel. He had a russet portmanteau, and his attempt was one of the most deliberate, he having secreted a bottle of phosphorus under the mattress, another in the bureau, and a third in his portmanteau. Next to the St. Nicholas, the Metropolitan was the most injured, the damage amounting to over $1,000. The conspirator, who disappeared about an hour before the fire was discovered, had taken his room three days before he made the attempt. A person has been arrested who called on him several times, but it would not be prudent to communicate his name.

At the St. Nicholas the alarm was given by Mr. Ward, the proprietor of the well-known shirt store in Broadway. Owing to the admirable management of the fire apparatus, the flames were speedily extinguished—indeed more damage was done by water than by fire; all the furniture and bedding were destroyed, so cleverly had the villain arranged the combustibles.

Similar arrangements, with similar ill-luck, attended the conspirator whose task it was to destroy the Astor House. The party, who went under the name of Harrison, had taken his room ten days before he made the attempt; and his lodging seems to have been the general rendezvous, since he had a fire made therein every day, and had several persons call to see him, who remained in consultation with him for hours. The same agents, phosphorus and turpentine, were employed, and the same disposition of the bedding and furniture was made here as at the other hotels.

It seems strange that all these attempts were partially neutralised by the ignorance of the villains as to the necessity of a draft of air to make the phosphorus efficacious.

The attempts to fire the International and the United States Hotels were both attended by singular circumstances. At the former, early in the day, an officer, in military uniform, accompanied by a fireman, demanded a room. The clerk, not liking their appearance, declined their request. They were so abusive that he had to call the employés of the house to turn them out. Later in the evening they went again, and, speaking in a more respectful manner, a room was given to them. In this room the fire was found. At the United States a man asked for a room, but the proprietor, for some reason or other, refused. He hung about the place for some time, till he obtained one. Late in the evening the proprietor, seeing him downstairs, suddenly conceived a suspicion about him, and ran up to his room, where he found all arranged for firing. When he came downstairs the man had disappeared. But as the cases are identical, we need not recapitulate each attempt. Suffice it to say, the combustibles were phosphorus and turpentine.

The total result of this nefarious attempt upon the lives and property of our citizens has been to render them more secure for the future. When it is borne in mind that the value of the property thus jeopardised was over $15,000,000, saying nothing of the thousands of lives which might have perished in the conflagration—for there were lodged that night in the twelve hotels thus fired by the incendiaries over 5,000 persons—it is truly gratifying to reflect that the damage was confined to the partial destruction of half a dozen rooms of furniture, the total loss by which will not exceed $5,000. That our country friends may know what magnificent palaces we have in New York, and to commemorate the American Fifth of November, we have given exact pictures of the hotels thus marked out for destruction by the rebel incendiaries, and to these we append descriptive remarks.

Thirty years ago, with the exception of Washington Hall, the fashionable hotels of New York were below Park place, where the principal theatre was situated. At Washington Hall—which stood on the site now occupied by Stewart's Chamber street store—all the fashionables of the day were accustomed to congregate, and here the present French Emperor made his headquarters in 1837; here also Martin Van Buren staid when he visited New York during his Presidential reign. Next to that in prestige was the City Hotel, corner of Thames and Broadway. This was the headquarters of Andrew Jackson, when he visited our great metropolis. These with the American Hotel, corner of Murray, the Globe, nearly opposite Trinity Church, and the National, corner of Barclay, the Carlton and Florence's, in Broadway, have passed away, giving place to the Metropolitan, St. Nicholas, and others of that class. In 1836 Mr. Astor built the Astor House.

It was opened by Messrs. Boyden & Sons; it was proclaimed to be the largest hotel in the world, certainly on this continent, but now there are many which exceed it in size. In 1840 Boyden sold it to Coleman and Stetson, and under the management of the latter it still remains. It has long been a famous place for politicians, and there are few distinguished men in the history of the last 30 years who have not made it their temporary home. It was the favorite resort of Daniel Webster, Governor Floyd, George N. Sanders, and many others whose names are already historic. In its early days it contained a garden with a fountain in its centre, but this has given place to a splendid restaurant. The Astor House will easily accommodate from 350 to 400 guests, and the value of the building, furniture, &c., is estimated at nearly $700,000. Everything appertaining to it is of the most solid description.

Lovejoy's Hotel.

When the Lelands left the Clinton Hotel a great opening was offered for the establishment of another in the same locality, and Lovejoy's prosperity may be dated from that time. This establishment can easily house 250 persons. It has a very large transient custom, the principal visitors being those who come to our metropolis on business, or on their way to other parts of the Union.

St. Nicholas.

This magnificent hotel was opened for the reception of guests January, 1853, and cost, including the ground, buildings and fixtures, $1,200,000; to this must be added $450,000 for furniture, and $50,000 for stores and wines—making the total cost of the establishment, with all its sumptuary appliances, nearly $2,000,000. The number of rooms is about 600, all well lighted. There is excellent accommodation for about 700 guests, but as many as 1,000 have been accommodated, on an emergency.

United States Hotel.

This well-known hostelry, one of the oldest of the now existing hotels in New York, is situated in Fulton street, near the East river, and was opened in 1834. It has always been the resort of merchants and ship captains, more especially those engaged in the trade of Eastern States. When the terrible conflagration of the Boston steamer Lexington occurred, in Long Island Sound, in the winter of 1840, the only man who made his escape, upon reaching the city, went straight, with true Yankee instinct, to this his favorite hotel. It has ample accommodation for about 260 guests.

Belmont Hotel.

This establishment is situated in Fulton street, and has the good fortune of being next door to the New York Herald Office—a fact to which it most probably owed its escape from being burnt the other night. It is conducted on the European plan, and can accommodate nearly 200 guests. The aggregate value of this establishment is about $200,000.

Metropolitan Hotel.

This renowned hotel is one of the largest and most flourishing of these establishments. It is conducted by the Leland Brothers. It was opened in 1852, and has since then been always crowded with the élite of the political and fashionable world. It can easily accommodate from 600 to 700 guests, and the value of its building, furniture, etc., is estimated at nearly $2,000,000. One of the Lelands is always on the spot, and their admirable supervision is apparent throughout their mammoth establishment. The efficiency of its fire arrangements was triumphantly tested on the night of the 25th of Nov. The average number of domestics employed in the Metropolitan is 280, and a police force, with intelligent detectives, is always on the qui vive to preserve order and protect the property of the guests.

Lafarge Hotel.

This elegant resort of the floating population of the New World was opened to the public in 1853, and is built on the Lafarge estate, formerly the property of Louis Philippe, the late King of the French. It has accommodation for about 550 guests, and enjoys a good reputation for liberal management. Adjoining to it is the Winter Garden, now under the management of Mr. Mr. William Stuart, at once a scholar and a man of business. The gross value of the Lafarge Hotel and its accessories is over $1,000,000.

The International.

This commodious hotel is built over the famous Taylor restaurant, and has been in sucessful operation for about ten years. Its present proprietor is W. H. Gileon. It is valued at about $1,000,000.

The Fifth Avenue.

This is one of the most elegant structures in New York, and is furnished in a style worthy of its fashionable name. It contains accommodation for about 1,000 to 1,200 guests. The proprietors, Messrs. Hitchcock, Darling & Co., are very popular, and the whole of the immense machinery of a first-class hotel works with the greatest ease. The house is valued at $1,500,000.

St. James.

This is conducted on the European plan, and is one of the latest opened. It has accommodation for about 600 guests, and is worth about $750,000. Mr. James L. Harway is the proprietor.

Tammany Hotel.

The word Tammany is so entirely associated with the unterrified democracy as to convey to many only the idea of politics, but under the roof of the wigwam, where the voices of the sachems are so frequently raised to marshal the unterrified to battle, are over a hundred capital rooms, where travellers are entertained with great hospitality. This hotel is kept on the European plan, and is very convenient for business men. It has also long been the headquarters of the genuine Democratic party.

Howard Hotel.

One of the largest and best conducted of the down town establishments is the spacious building situated in Broadway and Maiden Lane. It contains about 160 rooms, and can accommodate over 800 guests. The politicians of the Second Ward here give excellent dinners, and altogether it is a great favorite with downtown merchants and the strangers who have business with them.

New England Hotel.

An attempt was also made to fire the hotel situated at the corner of Bayard street and Bowery. This establishment can accommodate about 120 guests. The incendiary here was very expeditious, engaging the room about 10 o'clock in the evening, and when shewn to it, only remaining about ten minutes. He then came down, saying he would return in half an hour. Soon after the room was found to be on fire, when it was discovered that he had piled the furniture on the bed and set fire to the pile. A bottle of phosphorus was discovered on the floor.

Barnum's Museum.

This world-famous institution, as dear to the American youth as the British Museum is to the Cosmopolitan savans, was built in 1831, and purchased by Mr. Barnum in 1841, since which time it has been the favorite resort of the curiosity-seekers of this continent. As it is unnecessary to describe a building so universally known and visited, we shall content ourselves by merely stating, that under the management of its present able and liberal proprietor, it has become the most amusing spot in the world. Here everything from an animalculæ to a hippopotamus can be found, while the curiosities alone have cost Barnum over $100,000. The Lecture-room will accommodate 2,800 persons. On holidays there are frequently from 8,000 to 10,000 persons in the building at the same time, without undue crowding, so well arranged are the various departments, and so judiciously distributed the myriad curiosities on view. As a place of amusement it is unrivalled for its multifarious attractions.

Scene on the Docks.

An attempt was also made to fire the hay barges anchored between Beach and North Moore streets. Upon examination a broken bottle, which had contained phosphorus, was found. The fire was promptly extinguished.

The Value of Property.

Some idea of the property thus attempted to be destroyed may be gathered from the fact that the gross value of the hotels is at least $15,000,000, and that the personal property of the guests is considerably over $10,000,000, the amount varying, of course, greatly with the occasion. Some four years ago a foreign gentleman, who put up at an uptown hotel, had diamonds with him, the cost of which was estimated at about $2,000,000.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A minister is like a locomotive, because we must look out for him when the bell rings.

"Have you seen my black-faced antelope!" inquired the keeper of a menagerie, slightly mispronouncing the name of the animal.

"No," said a visitor. "Who did your black-faced aunt elope with?"

"Raining pitchforks" is bad, but "hailing omnibusses" is worse, says a contemporary joker.

A lunatic in Paris defaced a statue, on the Place de la Concorde, by cutting off its nose, arms and feet. He said that the figure resembled his wife, whom he disliked.

A political meeting was recently held, in a Western town, to which "ladies without distinction of sex" were invited to attend.

Several new cannon were lately sent from Richmond to Gen. Early. A wag altered the direction, so as to make it read: "Major-Gen. Philip Sheridan, care of Lieut.-Gen. Early."

An enthusiastic Democratic orator commenced an address, to a rural assemblage, as follows: "My fellow-citizens, were I an angel from heaven, with wings dipped in sunbeams, I would fly from the cold North to the sunny South, from the wild shores of Maine to the golden regions of California, proclaiming Democracy! Democracy! Democracy!"

A police officer, accustomed to night duty, says he has observed that with many young men the most approved method of winding up the night is reeling it home.

A torchlight display was lately made at Middletown, Connecticut, on the occasion of the re-election of Mr. Lincoln to the Presidency. A sympathetic clergymen of the place, exhibited over his door a transparency, bearing this inscription: "The Angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of Heaven a second time."—Genesis, 22: 15.

A traveller in Arkansas called at a house by the roadside, and in course of conversation with the presiding lady, asked if there were any Presbyterians in the neighborhood. She hesitated awhile, and then said she guessed not, as her husband hadn't killed any since they'd lived there.

Mr. Punch says that on the appointment of vivandieres to the Scottish regiments in the British army, the bands and bagpipes immediately struck up "the Camp-belles are coming."

A "side judge" in one of the country courts, in speaking of the important and honorable office he had held for several years, said the presiding judge never consulted with him except on one question, and that was after listening to three or four windy pleas of an hour's length each, when he turned and whispered, "Isn't this bench made of hard wood?" I told him "I thought it was."

"I say, boy, where does that right hand road go to?" inquired a pedestrian of a country rustic.

"I doan't know, sir," replied the boy, "'taint been nowhere since we lived here."

Cornelius O'Dowd, in the last Blackwood, tells a story of an Irishman bound over to keep the peace against all her Majesty's subjects, exclaiming, "Then heaven help the first foreigner I meet!"

Punch has a cartoon representing an Irishman who has got the worst of it in a street fight. His better half approaches the vanquished hero, when the following dialogue ensues:

Wife of his Bussum to Vanquished Hero.—"Terrance, yo great Umadawn, what do yer git into this Thrubble for?"

Vanquished Hero to Wife of his Bussum.—"D'ye call it Thrubble, now? Why, it is Engyement!"

Democrats, in certain sections of the country, claim to be the élite of American society. Whereupon a local wag suggests that Mr. Belmont, a prominent Democrat, is its Isra-élite.

A Portuguese shoemaker used to give his wife a severe flogging every month, just before he went to confession. On being asked the reason of this proceeding, he replied, that having a poor memory he took this method of refreshing it, as his wife, while under the castigation, was sure to remind him of all his sins.

A woman from the country wishing to engage the services of a cabman, addressed him as follows:

"Pray, sir, are you engaged?"

"Och, bless yer soul, ma'am! I have been married this seven years, and have eight children!"

The following lines express the evil consequences of bigamy:

If John marry Mary, and Mary alone,
It is a good match between Mary and John:
But if John marry more wives, what blows and what scratches!
'Tis no longer a match, but a bundle of matches!

The Bordeaux doctors decided that a woman of that place died from the effects of the perfume of a basket of quinces which had been placed in her bedroom while she slept. This, says the Louisville Journal, was a novel case of quincy.

The New Bedford Mercury, under the head of a "Fowl Joke," says if our soldiers are well fed on turkey, they will be better able to gobble up the enemy.

"Facts are very stubborn things," said a husband to his wife.

"Are they," she answered. "Then what a fact you must be!"

Theodore Hook once saw an exceedingly pompous man walking in the street, in London, whom he immediately accosted thus:

"Sir, may I inquire if you are anybody in particular?"

He then walked off, without waiting for a reply.

The November number of the Art Journal has been duly published here, by Messrs. Virtue, Yorston & Co. It contains three full page engravings; one is from Turner's picture of Cologne; another—very tender and graceful in sentiment—is from P. F. Poole's "Gleaner;" the third is from G. Fontana's expressive statue, "The Genius of Commerce." It also republishes several illustrations from Dalziel's Illustrated Goldsmith, and comprises the usual amount of varied and instructive art description and criticism.

Mr. Martel's picture of Central Park has been lithographed, and is meeting with a rapid and extensive sale, which it thoroughly deserves. It is a beautiful specimen of coloring, and it affords an accurate and comprehensive view of one of the largest and loveliest parks in the world.

Medical College. City Hall.

VIEW OF THE CITY OF ATLANTA, GA., LOOKING SOUTH—TAKEN ON THE EVE OF ITS EVACUATION BY GEN. SHERMAN, NOV. 12.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

Railroad Round House. Railroad Depot. Union Guns.

GEN. SHERMAN'S SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN—EVACUATION OF ATLANTA BY OUR FORCES, NOV. 12—COMMENCEMENT OF THE GRAND MARCH—VIEW AT THE RAILROAD DEPOT.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

ATLANTA, GA.

We publish on page 264 two interesting sketches from our Special Artist, sent by him as he was on the point of starting with Gen Sherman's army, on the great Southern Expedition. Writing from Atlanta on the 11th of November, he says: "I send you a sketch of the last train that will run North, as I understand this place is to be destroyed to-morrow, on which day we leave Atlanta."

As we are now aware, on the 12th of November, Gen. Sherman, at the head of the 6th corps, first destroying every building in the town abandoned to aid the enemy, left Atlanta, and commenced his advance across the rebel territory.

Atlanta, or, as it is popularly called, the Gate City, is situated seven miles south east of the Chattahoochee river, and on the line of railroads leading from Savannah to Chattanooga and Nashville, and to Macon, Augusta, Milledgeville, Savannah, Charleston, in the south-east direction. It is 101 miles from Macon, 171 miles from Augusta, 307 miles from Charleston, and 293 miles from Savannah. Four of the principal railroads of the State terminate at this point. The Georgia railroad extends from Atlanta to Augusta; the Western railroad to Macon, the Atlantic and Western railroad to Chattanooga; and the Eagvage railroad to West Point, 72 miles distant. Atlanta was laid out in 1845, and has grown with great rapidity, its population being, in 1850, 2,570; in 1860, 4,240; and in 1860, 9,970. Its situation is elevated and healthy. With regard to the alleged Vandalism of Sherman, said to be shown in his expelling the inhabitants of the place, and destroying so much of the city, it was a timely military act, dictated by the most imperative prudential reasons.

STATUE OF HENRY CLAY,

At New Orleans.

An illustration on this page, from a sketch by one of our Special Artists, represents the statue of Henry Clay, which stands on the corner of St. Charles and Canal streets, in New Orleans, Louisiana. The statue is of bronze, and is colossal in size. It stands upon a granite pedestal, which is approached by granite steps. The entire structure is surrounded by an iron fence. This statue was erected in 1856. It was designed and cast by Messrs. Wood & Perot, of Philadelphia. Our picture is a perfectly accurate reproduction of the statue and its accessories. Looking up St. Charles street, one sees the well known St. Charles Hotel, with its Corinthian columns. The statue of Clay is a most appropriate ornament to New Orleans, but not more so than it would be to any other American city. The great Kentucky statesman and orator belonged, emphatically, to the nation, by which he was admired, loved and honored in life, and by which he has been lamented in death. When one considers the distress of our country and its sad lack of statesman, and turns to gaze upon this mute figure of departed greatness, one is tempted to exclaim, as Rufus Choate once did, apostrophising the portrait of Webster, in Faneuil Hall: "Oh, for one hour of such a life, and all might yet be well!"

RIGHT REV. JAMES F. WOOD, ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOP OF PHILADELPHIA.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY F. GUTEKUNST, PHILA.

RT. REV. J. F. WOOD,

Roman Catholic Bishop of Philadelphia.

Bishop Wood, who has just, with so much pomp, opened, for the public worship of the Church, over which he presides, the magnificent Cathedral on Logan square, is a native of Philadelphia, and the first American born Bishop of the See. Like his suffragan prelate, the Bishop of Newark and Erie, he is too, one of those brought up outside of that denomination, but bringing to it in manhood their zeal, energy and devotedness.

On receiving orders in the Catholic Church he was attached to the diocese of Cincinnati, and, after a few year's service in the cathedral, was, till his selection as a Bishop, the popular and earnest pastor of St. Patrick's Church. When the late Bishop of Philadelphia, Dr. Neumann, required an assistant, Mr. Wood was appointed, on the 9th of January, 1857, Bishop of Antigonia, in partibus infidelium, and coadjutor to the Bishop of Philadelphia. He was consecrated, with the usual pomp, at Cincinnati, on the 26th of May, by Archbishop Purcell, assisted by many others of the Episcopal bench.

On the death of Dr. Neumann, on the 5th of January, 1860, Dr. Wood became titular Bishop of Philadelphia, and has presided with singular acceptance. He has not sought public notice, but displays signal ability in the management and direction of the affairs of the church committed to his care.

HENRY CLAY'S MONUMENT, CORNER OF ST. CHARLES AND CANAL STREETS, NEW ORLEANS, LA.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BONWILL.

It may not be amiss to note, while speaking of one who was a Bishop in partibus infidelium, that the meaning in this title is rule of the Catholic Church: it thus is not should Love but one Bishop. When a chaplain is needed, he is created Bishop of some see now in the hands of Mahometans or Pagans, a see to which he cannot go, and his services are then used where he can go. It is like the knights of the English law.

WANTED.—A lady novelist who will promise never to mention curates or babies.

An examiner has recently declared that he will never be an examiner again.

A public school man who never brags about his school.

A magistrate who never remarked, "How painful it was to see a person in that position of life."

Lastly, more subscribers to our paper.

In the burial register of Lymington, Hants, here is the following entry:—"31st August, 1772. This Evening the body of Samuel Gribble, late inhabitant of Brockenhurst, was conveyed in a vessel off to sea, and when the corpse was in the deep Gribble rocks, near the Isle of Wight." The appearance of the rocks will save a Hampshire pepper, in accordance with the wish of the deceased, to prevent his ever dancing over his grave, which she had threatened to do.

FIRST PREMIUM
$5 SEWING $5
MACHINE!
A BEAUTIFUL PRESENT
FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Just Out. THE FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, a most Wonderful and Exquisite Combination. Novelty in construction, beauty, and the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, is secured by the Family Gem Sewing Machine. Makes sewn with Double or Single Thread alike and regular than by hand. Running Machine very perfect and regular than by hand. Will Gather, Hem, Tuck, Stitch, Fell, Run and Quilt with ease. Needle Reversed for Fabrication or Change of Stitch—IS NOT HARDER TO GET OUT OF ORDER, and will last a Lifetime, and is the prettiest and most useful Christmas Gift you can buy. Read the following:

"For the Holidays, it is invaluable; for the Housekeeper, it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Ladies' Book.

"At length the machine long sought has come, which is simple, elegant and cheapest, has been gazed, wished for, and at last obtained by the Family Gem. The simple working of which cannot but meet the speed, Machine will at once command attention, and the speed, certainty and ease with which the work is done will make it a FAVORITE with the ladies."—MRS. ANN S. STEPHENS, in N. Y. Weekly.

"It runs as noiselessly, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.

This ingenious and useful little Machine is perfect in its construction, and is a source of the fruits of the High-Priced Sewing Machines. No one will pay from $50 to $100 for a Sewing Machine when this one can be bought for the small sum of $5.

This wonderful little Machine was awarded the FIRST PREMIUM by the New York State Fair, showing its superiority over all others.

All imitations of this GENUINE ARTICLE are liable, as infringements on our Patent.

AGENTS wanted all over the world.

Circulars sent to any address per Express packed in box on receipt of $5.

Address all orders to

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
102 Nassau Street, N.Y.

PERRY'S MOTH
AND
FRECKLE LOTION.

CHLOASMA, or MOTH PATCHES, LENTIGO, or FRECKLES, Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of fair complexion, as the discolored spots on the skin show more strongly in contrast with the fair surface, but they also tarnish greatly in marring the beauty of either; and neither should be more tolerated, when without injuring the skin in texture or color, would be considered a great achievement in the science. Dr. B. O. PERRY, who devotes all his time to diseases of the skin, has discovered a safe, speedy and sure remedy for the removal of Moth, Freckles and other discolorations, without injury to the skin or texture, as proved only by Dr. B. O. PERRY, Dermatologist, 49 Bond St., New York. PERRY'S MOTH AND FRECKLE LOTION, 19 Washington St., Wholesale Agents for New England. Sold by all Druggists. Call for Perry's Moth and Freckle Lotion. Price $1 per bottle. 479-81

Wheeler & Wilson's Sewing Machine MAKES THE
LOCK STITCH

And ranks highest on account of the elasticity, permanency, beauty and general desirableness of the stitching when done, and the wide range of its application. Reports of Premiums sent free.

614-480 No. 625 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

New Map of Richmond,

Showing all of the Fortifications surrounding the Rebel Capital, together with a Description of the City from all the Forts. Sent to any country 10 cents per copy; Wholesale 60 cents per dozen, or $3 per 100.

NEW MAP OF ATLANTA. A splendid Map. Price, 20 cents; Wholesale, $1 50 per dozen.

MAP OF CHESTER, and very desirable Map. Price, 15 cents; Wholesale, $1 per dozen.

NEW MAP OF ATLANTA. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, 60 cents per dozen, or $5 per 100.

This list includes Maps of Gen. Grant, Meade, Sherman, Sheridan, Butler, Foster, Hooker, Hancock, Rosecrans, Burnside, Banks, Lincoln, McClellan, etc. Price 10 cents each; Wholesale, 10 per 100. Cards—Very FINE PORTRAITS, LANDSCAPE, FLORAL and Comic Cards. Price only 75 cents. Books sent Postpaid. Agents Wanted. Catalogues sent Free.

G. W. WOODWARD, Publisher,
223 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

LOVE AND HATRED
Controlled and Completely Mastered by
DR. NAPIER'S GREAT DISCOVERY.

No person should be without it; it is invaluable. It will be sent to any address on receipt of $1.

DR. A. H. NAPIER,
Box 3712 New York Post Office.

GREAT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION
OF
Gold Watches, Diamond Rings, Elegant Jewelry and Fancy Goods,
Worth $500,000!

T. BENTON & CO. Jewellers, 699 Broadway, N.Y.

CERTIFICATES, naming each Article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, and well mixed. One of these Envelopes, containing the Certificate or Order for a Watch, Set of Jewellery, or some Article worth over $1 will be delivered at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of 25 cents. Each package received on such certificate may be sent to any address for 25 CENTS, or two will be sent to any address for 50 cents. No blanks. Our Article on our list of the same value.

IN BLANKS!

You MAY get a WATCH or DIAMOND RING for ONE DOLLAR, which you do not pay until you know what you are to receive.

You MUST get the VALUE of your money.

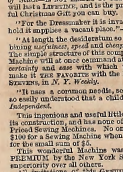
Fifteen Million Certificates in all issued.

Sent Certificates for $1; thirteen for $2.

AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamp for a Circular. All letters should be addressed

T. BENTON & CO., Box 5507, P. O., New York.

THE SALEM LEG!



UNDER THE PATRONAGE
OF THE
United States Government!

This is the Leg which is steadily supplanting the wooden Leg all over the world. The process of fitting may be learned from "ORIENTAL No. 5," by mail, free. Also, Hands, Arms, Feet, Eyes, Ears, Artificial Noses, and contains TESTIMONIALS and all other necessary information. Address the Inventor and Manufacturer to receive the Salem Leg WITHOUT CHARGE. Address

SALEM LIMB CO.,
480-1 Salem, Mass.

Metallic, Artificial Legs

WEIGH ONLY FOUR POUNDS. Patent Secured. THE LIGHTEST, EASIEST, CHEAPEST, AND THE MOST DURABLE. A fit guaranteed. It makes no noise. Does not show the foot of the wearer. Patients can be sent, and the leg returned by express, thereby saving time and expense of coming to New York to be fitted. PRICE FROM $75 TO $100.

Sent for a Circular.

J. W. WESTON,
Office and Salesroom, 785 Broadway, N. Y.

"Cultivate the Beautiful—The Useful will take Care of Itself."

THE PRETTIEST PRESENT FOR A FRIEND
IS A
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUM.

A splendid Album, holding 50 pictures, bound in French morocco, full gilt, with two clasps, spring back, and a pocket for holding the pictures, will be delivered by mail, postpaid, to any address, on receipt of $4 50. Same Album, holding 96 pictures, will be sent on receipt of $7 75.

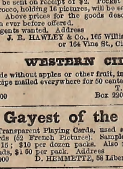
Pocket Albums, French morocco, holding 24 pictures, will be sent on receipt of $2. Pocket Albums, French morocco, holding 16 pictures, will be sent on receipt of $1. Above prices for the goods described are lower than ever before offered.

Agents wanted. Address

J. R. HAWLEY & CO.,
167 Williams St., N. Y.,
or 164 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

WESTERN CIDER

Made without apples or other fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe mailed everywhere for 50 cents.



T. B. LOWEN,
000 Box 256, Boston, Mass.

Gayest of the Gay!

Transparent Playing Cards, used same as common Cards. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of $1 50; $10 per dozen packs. Also marked Cards, 42 kinds, $1 50 per pack. Address

C. E. HEMMETTE, 86 Liberty Street, N. Y.
000

REMINGTON'S

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Revolver in use. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.
465-78

Playing Cards!
Sporters' Playing Cards!

Single Packs sent free by mail on receipt of $1 50; four packs $5.

CHARLES WILLIAMS,
Box 164, Cincinnati, O.

$70 A MONTH. I want Agents everywhere, at $70 a month, expenses paid, to sell Pifers Patent Evening Lamp. Just selling agent called. Full particulars free. Address OTIS T. GAREY, Biddeford, Maine. 479-81

Dr. Talbot's Concentrated Medical
PINEAPPLE CIDER

is a PREVENTIVE of SICKNESS. The experience that Dr. Talbot has had for the last Twenty-five years convinces him that it is for the public health and benefit that will prevent sickness. The article offered in Dr. Talbot's Concentrated Pineapple Cider, designed for all classes, old and young. It is not new to the Doctor, but is new to the public. One quart bottle will last a well person one year. This is rather a new mode of doctoring—particularly as it never tells—from being sick. Is it not better to pay three dollars a year to keep well, than a year's doctor or heavy bills in Doctor's bills, and as much more for the loss of time and the necessary comforts denied? To prevent sickness use as follows: Add one teaspoonful of Medicinal Pineapple Cider to a tumbler of cold water, and drink the first thing after you rise in the morning, and the same before you retire at night. This will increase the strength and give vigor and action to the system. A celebrated Physician of Boston, who has made a thorough trial of the Pineapple Cider, assures Dr. Talbot that he gained five pounds of flesh in one month at the first trial. He continues its use as above directed, and finds it very beneficial; says it has proved a sure preventive of sickness in his case. Also, another well-known gentleman in New York has used it with decided Cider constantly or ten years, and has not been sick one day during that period.

Price $3 per bottle (full quart); pints, $2; half-pints, $1. Cider sent by express, C. O. D., or four dollars per bottle, sent free by Express on receipt of price. All orders addressed to

E. T. DABBITT, Sole Agent,
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., N. Y.
478-89

Beauty—Hunt's White Liquid Enamel, prepared by Madame Rachel Lawrence, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enameller. Gives a pearl white to the neck, satin-like texture, and imparts freshness and transparency to the complexion which is only equalled by nature in its purest. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address

HUNT & CO., Enamellers,
123 South Seventh Street, cor. 41 South Eighth
000 Street, Philadelphia.

AGENTS WANTED.

Ladies "Hemmer and Shield" for Hand Sewing. "Bird-work Holder" and Ruffler. All 11 very Novelties. Exclusive Sale Sold by Druggists. Sample 30 cents. For Catalogue and terms, address

C. E. & CO., Manufacturers, 37 Park Row, N. Y.
000

DISTILLED DEW

Imparts to the Skin a natural Whiteness and Clearness and Youthful Delicacy and Softness unattainable by any other means. Sold by all Druggists. 17

CHASE'S CHEMICAL COMPOUND,

For the Beard. One bottle will force a vigorous growth of hair upon the smoothest face in five weeks, or more bold beads in eight weeks. Testimonials of thousands given. Circulars mailed free. Warranted to prevent scented or money returned. Price $1, or four bottles for $3. Sent sealed and postpaid. Address S. S. CHASE, F. O. Drawer 959, Cohoes, N. Y. 478-90

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS

BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDES-MAIDS' BOUQUETS, GROOMS' FAVORS AND PARIS ELOWERS,

At TUCKER'S, 769 Broadway.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PIERRE BIBON, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

If you want to Know, &c., read
MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

A curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. Price $1 50. To be had at all News Depots. Or copy sent free mailed free. Address

DR. E. B. FOOTE,
466cow No. 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Beauty—Hunt's Bloom of Roses,

A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years, and cannot be detected. Price $1. 18 cents by mail, securely packed from observation.

HUNT & CO.,
000 123 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

C. S. Sea, M. D., Baltimore, 95 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. His Celebrated "Balsam" for $5. Prepayment for return stamp. Sample for $1 in part for a package.

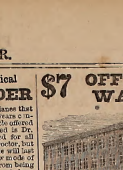
$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New. Patent Pin Cushion, Universal Needle-Threader, Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Ointment, Potion Eye Wash, Corset Steels, Pocket Hatch Safe, Silver-plated, Sand stamp for Circular. S. S. HALL,
4 t 85 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Trappers, Here It Is!

NAT TODD'S (the celebrated trapper) fur lure, with which any amount of furs may be caught. Its keeping and making secret for 21 Address

F. E. MARTIN, Poultney, N. Y.



The Best Thing Out!

Ritter's Portable Desk, Pen-pliers & Pocket cost combined, contains 28 articles, weighs only 12 oz., useful to Soldiers, Sailors, Miners, &c. Sent by mail for $2.

J. J. RITTER, Rahway, N. J.

"Matrimonial Agency." Send stamp for information. Address J. WILLIAMS, Box 417, P. O. Atlanta, Ga.

$7 OFFICER'S WATCH $9

Our Whole Stock of Imported Watches, suitable for Gentlemen and Young Men's Presents, being of rich and novel designs, are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale rates.

AN ELEGANT WATCH in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases, Richly Engraved, Turned Centre, Curved Enamel Dial, Jewelled Full Plate Lever Movements, Adjusted Keyless, Spring Bolt, Spade Hands and Fine Imported White Dial, a serviceable article in running order, with Key, Case, complete, and a Gent's Handsome Vest Chain and beautiful

MINIATURE GOLD LOCKET!

to match, with Double Cases, Box and Glass for Two Likenesses. A beautiful Holiday Present. Sent by mail to any address for only $9.

The Star Keyless Watch, expressly adapted for Army use, in Heavy Double Cases, Small Size, same as the above, with Key, Case, complete, and a Gent's Vest Chain, Engraved Double Case Locket, etc. Sent by mail to any address for only $7.

The Imperial Watch,

Containing a Rare and Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Effects, combining within the smallest compass to its machinery a beautiful and correct working Instrument, as accurately adjusted. Hunter's Cases in miniature, sunk in Dial, and a Reliable Calendar, indicating the correct day of the week, etc., the whole Fine Watch a perfect Steam, Hunt and Time Instrument. The beautiful engraving of this watch may be obtained in Finely Finished Double Hunters, Magic Keyless or Open Face Cases, at the enormously low rate of One Dollar Each, inner cases of Solid Gold Composition, finely engraved and gilt bottom, with Finely Fine Patent Lever Movements, Double Patent Bow, and Fancy Push Spring, Genuine Reliable Jewelled Lever Action, M. & J. Glass movements, Polished Cap and Dome Safe-Acting Orbit, Patent Stem Winding and Setting, Fine Engraved and Polished Steel Cut Hands, and is an Exact Imitation of a $100 watch, and recommended by the Proprietors as Officers of the Regular Army. Note Genuine unless bearing signature of Proprietors on each case. Sent by mail complete, by mail, $10.

Address CLARK & BROTHERS, Sole Importers,
102 Nassau St., N. Y.—Established 1855.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION!
250,000
Watches, Chains, Diamond Rings, Etc.
WORTH OVER
One Million Dollars!
All to be Sold for One Dollar Each!

WITHOUT asking a CENT MORE TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO RECEIVE!

Splendid List of Articles! All to be Sold for $1 each!

	EACH.
250 Gents' Gold Hunting-case Watches	$50 to $150
250 Ladies' Gold and Enamelled-case Watches	25 " 75
500 Gents' Silver Hunting-case Watches	20 " 70
200 Diamond Rings	15 " 300
2,000 Gold Vest Chains	5 " 30
2,000 Gold Lockets	4 " 8
3,000 Gold Oval Band Bracelets	3 " 20
5,000 Chased Gold Bracelets	3 " 30
5,000 Gold Fashion Chains & Guard Chains	3 " 20
7,000 Solitaire and Gem Brooches	3 " 20
7,000 Gold Pencils and Pen-holders	3 " 10
5,000 Coral, Opal and Emerald Brooches	4 " 20
5,000 Jewelled, Jet and Enamelled Ear Drops	4 " 6
7,500 Gold Band Diamond Ear Drops	4 " 6
4,000 Chased Gold Bracelets	4 " 6
4,000 California Diamond Breast Pins	2 50 " 10
3,000 Gold Fancy Sleeve Buttons	3 " 10
4,000 Pocket and Vest Ribbon Slides	3 " 10
5,000 Gold Fancy Sleeve Buttons, Studs, etc.	3 " 8
3,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils and Keys	3 " 6
10,000 Miniature Lockets	2 50 " 8
5,000 Gold Watch Keys, Seals	2 " 50
5,000 Gold Tooth-picks, Crosses, etc.	3 " 8
5,000 Jet Bracelets	3 " 8
5,000 Chased Gold Rings	3 " 12
5,000 Gold Band Bracelets	2 50 " 8
10,000 California Diamond Rings	2 " 10
10,000 Ladies' Jewellery—Gold	2 " 10
9,000 Sets Ladies' Jewellery — Cameo, Jet, Pearl, Coral, Opal, Turquoise, etc.	4 " 15
10,000 Gold Pens, Silver Extension-holders and Pencils	4 " 10
10,000 Gold Pens and Gold Mounted Holders	3 " 8
5,000 Gold Pens and Gold Extension Holders	6 " 10
5,000 Silver Cobbets and Drinking Cups	5 " 50
5,000 Silver Castors, Fancy Goods	5 " 50
2,000 Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets	10 " 50
6,000 Dozen Silver Tea Spoons	PER SPOON. $10 " 50
5,000 " Table Spoons	10 " 50

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of Birmingham, we have undertaken the supply of certain, a large quantity of the above Articles, and have purchased for the English Wholesale Jewellers, cut off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD BY ANY MEANS.

Under these circumstances, ARRANDALE & CO., acting as Agents for the Jewellers, have determined to dispose of the whole stock by a Great Gift Distribution, subject to the following conditions:

Each article is numbered certain and its value, are placed in Sealed Envelopes, and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

ALL ARTICLES SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,

WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE!

On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your option to send us $1 and take the Article named, or you may exchange it for any other Article of like value on our list. Or, if you prefer, you will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

ARTICLES SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE!

On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your option to send us $1 and take the Article named, or you may exchange it for any other Article of like value on our list. Or, if you prefer, you will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

Certificates, naming each Article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents. Each package received on such certificate may be sent to any address for 25 CENTS, or two will be sent to any address for 50 cents. No blanks. Our Article on our list of the same value.

Certificates will be sent to any address for One Dollar each, or six for five dollars.

One for.....25 cents.
Five for.....$1
Eleven for.....2
Thirty for.....5
Sixty for.....10
One hundred for.....15

Agents will be allowed Ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to Ten Dollars. Agents will obtain Certificates at One Dollar each, and remit 15 cents to us, either in coin or postage Stamps.

ARRANDALE & CO.,
167 Broadway, New York.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' FINE SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, SOLID SILVER, &c.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can receive for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
260 Broadway, New York.

Soldiers of the Union!

Read the following Letters received from your comrades as endorsements of the

WORLD KNOWN AND WORLD TRIED REMEDIES, KNOWN AS PROF. HOLLOWAY'S

PILLS AND OINTMENT.

You will here find unsolicited testimonials received from almost every country where civilization and population is in force. SEE TO YOUR HEALTH! All of you have some one interested in your welfare, then do not delay. YOUR LIFE IS VALUABLE! Not only to yourselves, but to your Fathers and Mothers, Wives and Brothers. Then while you may, purchase

35 cents, 88 cents, or $1 40,

Will, when expended in these medicines, bring you back to the pleasure and quiet of home.

The following are a few specimens of genuine letters on file for inspection at this office. Copies sent by mail to any inquirer.

80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT,
39th Illinois Volunteers,
POCAHONTAS, S. C., Nov. 4, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:

SIR—Please send me two dollars' worth of your Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please attend to this at once, for I am much in need of the above remedies.

Address Lieut. A. W. PILLOWS, Q.-M.
39th Illinois Vols.

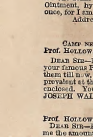
CAMP NEAR BRANDY STATION, VA., Nov. 7, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR—I have heard a great deal of talk about your famous Pills, and as I never was in the need of them before, I did not send for them, but I am very sorry I prevaricated at the present time; send me the worth of the enclosed. Yours, &c.,
JOSEPH WALSH, Co. F, 5th Regt., Excelsior Brigade.

PUTNEY, Penn., Nov. 4, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY:



DEAR SIR—Please find enclosed one dollar, and send me your Pills and Ointment as fast as I am troubled with Dyspepsia, and such are. Yours, &c.,
THOMAS F. TURNER, Co. I, 2d Iowa Infantry.

MORRIS ISLAND, S. C., Nov. 5, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

Please find enclosed the sum of one dollar or Pills. I have Diarrhœa, and can't get it stopped, so I want to try your Pills. Yours, &c.,
WILLIAM CHRISTY,
Co. I, 104th Regt. Penn. Vols.
Morris Island, S. C.

000

PATENT AGENCY OFFICES.

Established in 1846.

MESSRS. MUNN & CO.,
Editors of the Scientific American,
SOLICITORS OF AMERICAN & EUROPEAN PATENTS
With a French Office, and Agency in Paris. During the past seventeen years MESSRS. MUNN & CO. have acted as attorneys for more than 10,000 inventors, and have examined nearly one-third of all the applications for patents which have been prepared in the United States and forwarded to the Scientific American Patent Agency. All business connected with the Examination of Inventions, Preparing Specifications, Drawing Patent Cards, Assignments of Patents, Prosecuting Rejected Cases, Infringements, Appeals and Extensions of Patents, will receive prompt attention and validity of Patents, and reports as to novelty, &c., cheerfully made.

Parties desiring to Purchase, Procure, Assign, Manufacture, Patent, and all other foreign countries where Patents are granted, are invited to call at the "Scientific American Patent Agency," containing the Patent Laws of the United States, which can be had free. All communications strictly confidential. Address

MUNN & CO.,
No. 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

000

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Hilton Head, Port Royal, Newbern, Port Royal, and all other places should be sent at once, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Rates charged low rates.

000

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Samples and Catalogues sent for 6 cents. Parties in Europe with your own name and address.
000 D. MARSHALL, 769 Liberty St., N. Y.

TWENTY-FOUR CARTES DE VISITE OF FRENCH CELEBRITIES,

In different attitudes of art.
Enclose $1 25 and four red stamps.
477-60 CHAS. MAGY, 34 Nassau St., N. Y.

Six Dollars from Fifty Cents.

Agents, come and examine Invention, or Samples sent free by mail for 50 cents. Retails for 25 cents. Address WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York.
477-524

$1 WHISKERS! $1

For $1 I will send sealed, postpaid, the GRECIAN COMPOUND, highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of hair upon the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Descriptive circular mailed free. Address
S. A. SANFORD,
Lansingburgh, N. Y.
477-58

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the masses of the Patriotic dead are flooded with the most poisonous, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds purporting to be medicinal, but not a with less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known then, that while all the different ingredients called flavors or essences, and all the poisons containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article commonly termed Proof Spirit, a neutral product HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contains none of these things, but are derived from the purest essence of rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic and alterative vegetable herbs and plants, and it as a sale and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its direct complaints, it has proved established before the world without a rival or competition. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which corroborate its usefulness are ranged in the highest standing of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

PREPARED AND SOLD BY

HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 59 CEDAR STREET.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, &c. Free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book of great power. Illustrated edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address
T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Pittsburgh.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing $2 or $3, according to the quality desired. Address
HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N.Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONQUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each bottle warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches. Also a sure cure for dandruff, tetter, salt rheum or scurvy to the skin. Any person using this Onquent and not finding it to answer the above performing one of the facts, can have their money returned on sending a like quantity within twelve months from date of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money.
A. C. CLARK,
458-83 P. O. Drawer 19, Albany, N. Y.

For Nervous Debility, &c.,

The "Organic Concentrated Cure." The only reliable remedy. Price, per vial, $—5 for $5. Sent free by mail. Send for Pamphlet—sent free. Address
O. S. READ & CO., 78 Broadway, N. Y.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.

AMERICAN EXPRESS COMPANY.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

THE GENERAL OFFICES of the AMERICAN EXPRESS COMPANY, including the offices of the Treasurer, Manager, Cashier, Superintendent, Cashier Cheque and the Express Delivery Department, will be removed from No. 61 Hudson Street to Nos. 122 and 124 Broadway, corner of Cedar St., on Thursday, Dec. 8th, inst.

The Freight Depot, for the reception and delivery of goods and packages of every description, will be continued at No. 61 Hudson Street, as heretofore.

ALEX. HOLLAND, Treasurer.
NEW YORK, Nov. 26, 1864.

For Choice of Pursuits,

Physical and Intellectual Culture; Labor, Mental and Manual; Rural Pages; "The Mad-House;" Varieties of Character; Idiocy, Insanity, Genius and Crime. See DECEMBER No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL—26 cents by first post. Newsmen have it. Address
462-2 FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Diaries for 1865,

From 25 cents to $3. All kinds BLANK BOOKS, PAPER and STATIONERY of every description. Orders solicited. FRANCIS & DOUTEIL, Stationers and Engravers,
477-61 45 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

$7 WATCHES. $9

A handsome Engine-Turned or Plain Sterling Silver Double Edge-Hinged Watch-Case, English Movements, Fancy Steel or Gold-and-Steel Hands, Enameled Dial, new style of Index, Chain Action, Self-acting Balance, Patented Cap. Especially adapted for Army use. A reliable Time-keeper. Price $7.

A fine 18 Carat Keyless Gold-plated Watch, in Double Cases, same as above, in perfect Running Order, and a Reliable Time-keeper. Price $9, a neat case for $9.

American Army Watch.

Imported by us expressly for the American Trade. In Solid Gentle Gold Composite Running Cases (Sandos pattern); the most perfect and durable plain case being 18 Carat Gold, and the inner one solid Gold Composite; the outer composition, now known as Composition Metal, the imitation being so nonlikes that it can scarcely be distinguished from Gold; a solid Gold Bow, engraved, and finished equal to a fine Gold Watch. It is particularly recommended for duty for beauty and durability. It has the genuine European Jeweled Movements (M. J. Tobias, Liverpool), Improved Duty Action, Independent Seconds, Split Seconds, plain Finish, Jeweled Escapement, Hardened and Tempered Steel Pinions, Patent Lever Cap, and is warranted for one year. A single case, with Key, Money Order for $20, with a fine French Cloth Vest Chain, for $10.

Our Stock comprises over 40 different styles of European and American Watches, of the latest and most valuable styles for Army and Navy Officers, consisting of American Levers in various styled Cases, English, Swiss and French Lever and Quartier Duplex Escapements, Independent Seconds, Ladies' Patent Watches, Enameled Watches, Repeating Watches, Gold Levers, Gold Chronometers and Chronographs, ranging in price from $5 to $50. Send for Circular, containing full description of the above, and we will send a stamp for our Descriptive Catalogue.

KELLEY & ALLEN,
No. 200 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. Largest assortment in the world. Catalogues free.
000 VICTOR DELLAFO, 86 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Great Mousey-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $16 a day selling it. 100 particulars sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
000 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will cause any one to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.
E. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Album Gems"—Something New, Gay and Funny. 16 more photographs of beautiful girls, including the French Dancing Girl; Venus Sporting with Love; and the Unfortunate Gentleman Shaking the 20th, etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 15 (the only set complete).
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
21 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, prevented and cured by DR. ALCOTT'S Physical Training and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on this subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Spinal Cord and Brain, and hidden causes of Dyspepsia, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

Sent by mail, post free, for stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 56 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 427-74

Wonderful! Strange!

Full Instructions by which any person can master the art of WRITING SIMILAR to PRINT. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Sent by mail for 25 cents. Address M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

WONDERFUL DEVELOPMENTS

In the use of Petroleum.

WOODWARD'S Patent Self-Adjusting LANTERN Quest call has the following advantages over any Lantern yet invented:

1st—It burns with a brilliant light, and cannot be easily extinguished.

2d—The wick can be instantly removed for cleaning, or replaced when worn out.

3d—It is the best made and most beautiful Safety Lamp or Lantern in use.

Sample of Lantern, including Sausage & Co.'s celebrated No-Chimney Burner, will be sent on receipt of $2 50.

Send for Circular and Price List.
SAVAGE & CO.,
286 Greenwich St., N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both sexes—how and reliable treatment. Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address, WILLIAM HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

BRNST'S PATENT
Self-Fastening Steel Collars,
PATENTED AUGUST 30, 1864.

Require no Pins, no Studs, no Elastic Loops, nor any other device to confine them to the neck. Are free from the extra fastenings of other Metallic Collars, but are made solely self-fastening by means of ingenious devices so arranged as to firmly clasp the buttons of a shirt while putting the Collar in its place. Sent by mail, post free, on receipt of 75 cents. Address the Patentee, OTTO ERNST,
No. 6 Bowery, New York.

Employment for All!

$16 to $20 a day clear. For particulars send stamp to 483-2 J. W. SIEPHENS, 226 Broadway, N. Y.

Use of Tobacco, in all its forms, Cured and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
485-500 REV. JAY'S SON, New Haven, Conn.

1 GOOD AGENT WANTED in every Village, City, Company and Regiment for the most valuable work ever published. Every one will become a customer. Particulars in Circular mailed free.
J. C. HOTCHKISS,
No. 27 Gold St. Basket St., N. Y.

Sent Everywhere by Mail, Postpaid. An Extension Silver-Mounted Holders,
WITH COMPOSITE

REVERSE LEAD PENCILS,

In case of one dozen each; the boxes are finely finished and contain a Rubber Ink Eraser, and combination by which to transportation. Prices same as before the War.

The Holders are of the most handsome and durable construction, are lined with Rubber, allowing no escape of the finest ink. All are covered, chased or engine-turned, and the joints are so arranged by our own contrivance that they cannot be pulled out.

Size One.—When open, 6¾ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $12 50; retails at $3 each.

Size Two.—When open, 6 inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $10 25; retails at $2 50 each.

Size Three.—When open, 5¼ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $8 25; retails at $2 each.

Size Four.—When open, 7¾ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $20; retails at $5 each.

Size Five.—When open, 8 inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $32 50; retails at $8 each.

Also WATCHES AND JEWELLERY in Great Variety at the lowest prices consistent. Send for illustrated descriptive letters at our risk. Orders promptly executed.
Address T. & H. CHANDLER, Manufacturers,
116 Broadway, N. Y.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy," plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, gain the love, affection, and marry whomever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by return mail, in sealed and new red stamps. Address 469-76 T. WILLIAM & CO., Box 1288, Portland, Me.

"How 'tis Done"; or, the Secret Out. Gambling Exposed. "Stock Jobbing" Explained. Tricks in Trade. "The Book of Wonders"—Whiskers in 42 days—100 Recipes, &c., &c., &c. Sent by mail, Satisfaction guaranteed. Mailed free for 25 cents.
HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
477-60

PLAYING CARDS!

The American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards, National Emblems.

They are the prettiest cards made, and suit the purpose ideal. The military Eagles, Shields, Liberty Caps, Colored in place of King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Knave.

All the games can be played as readily as with cards having Kings emblems. Every pack is put up in an elegant envelope, and then in Boxes for the Trade.

In order that ALL dealers may have an opportunity to test the cards we manufacture, a sample pack will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of $2. Address

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
No. 34 Chambers Street, New York.

Shults' Curlique, for curling the hair. Price 50 cents. Sent sealed, postpaid. Address
477-63 C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

The Brazilian Hair Curler. One application has warranted to curl the most straight, stubborn hair into wavy ringlets or heavy massive coils. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address
S. S. CHASE,
477-62 Colcord, N. Y.

THE BEST THING OUT!

Can be used the same as any other Cards, and contains

BEAUTIFUL SCENES,

Enclose $1 25 and three red stamps for sample pack. $14 per gross, twenty per cent. off. $12 per dozen.
T. ALLEN,
84 Nassau street, 34 w York.

ATTENTION!

100 Photographs of Female Beauties, for 50 cents. Birds and Flowers, 100 Photographs of Scenery, for 50 cents. Send 3 orders to 476-9 C. BROOK, Chicago, Ill.
P. O. Drawer 6308.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, 200 pages, $1 25 per copy. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 26 cts. Address Wells' Agency, New York.

$125 A MONTH!

WANTED.—SEWING MACHINE AGENTS! Every County, Town and Township in the United States! Grover & Baker, the only low price machine in the World which is licensed by Grover & Baker, Wheeler & Wilson, Howe, Singer & Co., and Sherbrooke. Salary and expenses paid, or large commission allowed. $50 other Machines now sold for less than $40 which are vibrating-shuttle machines, and infringements on Grover & Baker Patents sold by us. Address SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.
476-43

Royal Havana Lottery.

In Drawing of November 11th, 1864.

No. 18838	drew	$100,000
No. 1,134	"	50,000
No. 2,952	"	20,000
No. 29477	"	10,000
No. 21,619	"	5,000

Being the five capital prizes.

Information furnished. Commission paid for prizes. Information furnished. The highest rates paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
16 Wall St., N. Y.

BEGIN WITH THE NEW YEAR

TO READ THAT SPLENDIDEST OF

Interesting and Instructive Miscellany,

THE

Atlantic Monthly

The prospectus for 1865 is now ready, and will be sent to any address upon application. The new volume will contain

SEVERAL REMARKABLE FEATURES.

Now is the time to subscribe. Terms $4 a year, or 35 cents a number.

Address the Publishers,

TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.

SOMETHING NEW.

The Patent Army Pocket Pipe and Cigar Holder combined, is decidedly the best Smoking Pipe ever invented. It imparts a rich soothing flavor to the Tobacco; is of elegant appearance and finish; with fine carved Horn Mouthpiece and Cigar Holder. It is easy to carry, easy to clean, and is always ready for a good smoke. Sample dozen sent free on receipt of $2 50. Address

RICHARDS & CO.,

97 William Street, New York.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT

For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.

Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth, Purifying and Perfuming the Breath; the most convenient, efficacious and beneficial article for the Teeth the world has ever seen.

Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—75 cents per bottle.

HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors,

466-780 218 Greenwich St., N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

French Flannel Overshirts.

Cut 38 inches long $4 75 and $5 each. Sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 63 cents postage each shirt.

STEEL COLLARS

Enameled White, having all the comforts of linen collars. Washed and dried in a moment. A sample Collar mailed free on receipt of 75 cents. Cuffs $1 40 per pair. Ladies' Collars and Cuffs same price.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,

off No. 387 Broadway, New York.

GOLD PENS.

We will send to any address on receipt of the following prices one of our First Quality 14 Carat Warranted (Double Pointed) Gold Pens and Silver Ebony Desk Holder and Morocco Case, or Silver-plated Extension Case:

No. 3. Large Pen and Holder - - - - 1 50
" 4. Pencil - - - - - - - - 50
" 6. Engrossing Bank Pen and Holder - - - 3 00
" 8. Magnificent Pen and Holder - - - - 4 00

Send a stamp for our Circular of Engravings of all our new styles and exact sizes and prices. Pens Regulated for 50 cents. Address

AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO.,

o 209 Broadway, N. Y.

N. Y. S. VOLUNTEER INSTITUTE.

$30,000 Worth of Real Estate.

50,000 Elegant Embellished Steel-Plate Portraits of the President of the United States, Lieut.-Gen. Grant, Gen. McClellan and the Corps Commanders of our Army will be distributed among the subscribers to the N. Y. S. Volunteer Institute, for the education and support of the orphan children of our volunteers, on Washington's Birthday, Feb. 22d, 1865. Every person sending $2 by mail, addressed to CAPT. H. B. RANDALL, Treasurer, Post-Office Box 2126, New York City, will receive by any one of these engravings and a certificate of subscription, which will entitle the holder to one share in the property, which will be distributed as stated. For further particulars, send for Circular.

COL. W. H. YOUNG, Prest.

C. A. THOMPSON, Sec. CAPT. H. B. RANDALL, Treas. o

INQUIRE FOR

TUCKER'S PATENT SPRING BEDS.

For sale by the Furniture Dealers generally through the United States. At wholesale by HIRAM TUCKER, 117 and 119 Court st., Boston, Mass. 481-90

GIFTS FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

Rare opportunity to get a fine Watch or valuable piece of Jewelry for only $1. Send us 26 cents and we will send by return mail our chance in this great sale and our Circular, which will tell you how to make $10 a day and get a Watch free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,

o 36 Beekman St., N. Y.

"CUPID'S KISS!"

Something new. By the use of which you can gain any person's love IMMEDIATELY. Sent upon receipt of stamp. Address J. J. WILDAY, o Box 417, P. O., Albany, N. Y.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Strasburger & Nuhn,

Cor. Maiden Lane and William St., N. Y., importers of

TOYS, CHINA AND FANCY GOODS,

o

AH! WOULD YOU?

HEAD DAVIS'S LAST ATTEMPT UPON NEW YORK FRUSTRATED.

NEW YORK FIREMAN—"Dry up, old hoss! you see we can put you out with a pail of water."

MANUFACTURER'S STOCK

OF

Watches, Lockets, Chains, Rings, Pins, Bracelets, Gold Pens and Cases.

And a full assortment of fine Jewellery, to be disposed of by distribution for the next 60 days.

Certificates of all the various articles are put in envelopes, sealed and mixed, and sent without regard to choice. One certificate telling you what you can have for $1 will be sent for 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5. After seeing what you can have, it will be at your option to send and get the article, or not, as you please. Any article not as it does not give perfect satisfaction, you can return it and get the money. We are manufacturers, and Gold and Gold Badges for every Corps and Division in the service. Also Infantry, Artillery and Sabers, Engineer and Pontonier, Masonic, Blue Ball and Society Badges of every kind. We will send a Sample Badge (pure Silver), for any Department in the Army, with Your Name, Regiment and Company handsomely Engraved thereon, on receipt of $1 each.

Agents wanted everywhere, to whom great inducements are offered.

S. M. WARD & CO.,

o 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Shuits' Ongcent—Warranted to prevent the Hair of Washers in its Works or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address

436-85 E. SHUITS, Troy, N. Y.

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S PIANOFORTES.

99 & 101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway, Warerooms for Sale and to Rent.

Martel's Great Picture OF CENTRAL PARK

Now on exhibition and for sale at Messrs. BALL, BLACK & CO., TIFFANY & CO., ARNOLD, CONSTABLE & CO., A. WILLIAM SCHAUS, WILLIAMS & STEVENS, AUGUST BELMONT, WILLMOTT, Broadway, Also for sale by artists of the world on receipt of price ($50, or by express, C. O. D. Address CENTRAL PARK PUBLISHING CO., 764 Broadway, New York.

o (Favorable terms to Local Agents wanted everywhere.)

IVORY AND PEARL BROOCHES, Ear-Rings and Cuff Buttons,

Latest Styles, $3 & $5 per Set.

Gilt Belt Buckles, $3.

Sent free on receipt of price

WM. M. WELLING,

o 571 Broadway. (Sign of Golden Elephant.)

Friends—Send a Stamp for information and my Catalogue. Address E. H. SMITH, Keene, N. H.

DIAMOND PARLOR MATCHES.

These Matches are the BEST IN THE WORLD. STRIKE FIRE WITHOUT NOISE, NO DISAGREEABLE ODOR SMELL, and a Penny and comfort to smokers and users with wax lights. For sale wholesale and retail by

THE LODI MANUFACTURING CO.,

479-820 No. 50 Cortlandt Street, New York.

FREE READING!

Soldiers, Sailors, Marines, Everybody—send us your address. Will, in return, send you a large family newspaper, filled with good reading matter. Sent free. Sent Gratis.

480-3 CHAS. E. MACKEY, 51 Nassau St., N. Y.

GOLD PENS.

If you want the best Pen ever used send to Johnson for directions giving exact sizes and prices. Pens from $1 to $5, to suit every hand and pocket. Pens Repointed, Repaired, or Exchanged.

E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office,

0478-90 15 Maiden Lane, New York.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD-PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, White Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, Exquisite Movements, and Correct Timekeeper, with an accurate "Minuteless Calendar," indicating the Day of the Week, Month, &c., in back case. A single one sent free, by mail, to any address, in neat case, with a BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN, for only $10.

A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with the Minuteless Calendar, &c., specially adapted to the Army. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.

Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers,

o 88 and 90 Ann Street, N. Y.

FURNITURE FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

AT

FR. KRUTINA'S

MANUFACTORY AND WAREROOMS,

Nos. 96 and 98 East Houston St.,

Between Bowery and 2d Avenue.

421-40

A Likeness of your future Husband or Wife. Send 8cts coin and red stamp to

J. J. WILDAY,

o Box 417, P. O., Albany, N. Y.

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

GOLD MEDAL

Grand and Square

PIANOS,

BALTIMORE, MD.

Certificates of Excellence from Ullsberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, Maretzek, and other leading artists. Every instrument warranted for five years.

Price list promptly sent on application.

WM. KNABE & CO.

A full assortment of the above celebrated instruments at J. BAUER & CO.'s Warerooms,

470-82 No. 544 Broadway, N. Y.

THE UNIVERSAL PAPER COLLAR

TAINTER & JACKSON'S

Patent August 2 1864.

The Trade supplied at No. 830 Pearl Street, New York. f

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 60 cts. Terms of different powers for $1. Address

0000 F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

GREAT CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY!

AND OBTAIN A WATCH FREE, by selling our celebrated PRIZE PACKETS and SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. Circulars, with full particulars of great inducements, mailed free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,

o 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.

LADIES' LETTER.

FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS

Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 25 cents.

Address Box 4663, New York Post Office.

$20 to $30 per Day Profit,

Realized by "Sutlers and Agents," by the sale of the

5,000 DOZEN SELF-ADJUSTING Enameled White, from $3 to $9 per Dozen. Samples at 90 cts., 60 cts., 75 cts., $1; Snow White, Linen Finished, Rimless, and Corrugated, $1 50. Suitable Tie, $1.

Detail Stock, 75 Cts.; $1; $1 50; Collar, $2. Mailed on receipt of price and "size."

AGENTS WANTED, AGENT FOR the Patentees, 78 Nassau St., New York.

FOR A FORTUNE

Address FRANKLIN & M. CO., Box 370, Boston, Mass.

A WATCH FREE

And $15 or $20 per Day made Easy. A New Sensation. Our Great Novelty, the WONDERFUL PRIZE PORTFOLIO. Just out and creating an immense sensation and Extraordinary Demand throughout the Army and Country; there is nothing like them. Sales Enormous; people wonder. Each Portfolio, Extra Large Size, 6 by 10, contains innumerable quantity of useful and valuable goods, Pictures, etc., worth Several Dollars, and sells for only 25 cents. Articles in as to Soldier or Family can possibly be without. Orders are Sold Every Day. Soldiers can clear A Month's Pay in a Single Day. Agents Wanted in Every Camp and Village. A Beautiful Gold or Silver Watch Presented free as a Premium to Every Agent. This is the Greatest money-making Business of the Day. We Guarantee any agent $15 per Day. Premiums sent with Goods same day the order is received. Circulars containing Extra Premium Inducements sent by mail free. S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y., Sole Manufacturers.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,

501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Have constantly on hand a full assortment of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, to which additions are constantly being made; also

STEREOSCOPES & STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,

Of their own publication, comprising Views of the Great Cities of Europe and Scenery in Switzerland, Italy, Algiers, Egypt, Palestine and Portugal, and a large collection of Views of Scenery, Architecture, Antiquities and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, to which additions are constantly being made. Also a large collection of Stereoscopic Views of American Scenery, Cities, &c. Our Catalogue will be sent on application.

ALBUMS, PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS,

Of more than fifty varieties, from the Celebrated Morocco Albums, which we call the Premium Album, to the Cheapest Photographic Album made. Our Catalogue will be sent on application.

PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue now embraces over FIVE THOUSAND different subjects to which additions are continually being made; also Portraits of Eminent Americans, viz.:

Gen. Grant, Gen. Sherman, Gen. Thomas, 182 Bishops, 100 Major Generals, 200 Brigadiers, 200 Governors, 200 Statesmen, 200 Generals, 75 Navy Officers, 125 Admirals, 50 Army Officers, 50 Presidential Women, 40 Artists.

1,200 Copies of Works of Celebrated Engravings, Painting representing the Battles of the War, and Scenes in Camp and Field, Portraits of Generals and Statesmen.

Agents for Our Own Publications. Agents for Our Own Publications will find it to their interest to call at our Warerooms, or send for our Catalogue. Photographers and other dealers will find it to their interest to call and examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, as we will sell at WHOLESALE or RETAIL.

Soldiers' Pocket Album for 12 pictures, 75 cents.

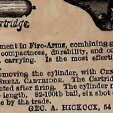
o

The West Indian Hair Curler, warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair, on the first application, into short ringlets or waving massive curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1. Address

WARD CHERRY HUNT,

o Box 2281, New York Post Office.

Vineland Lands.



Large and thriving settlements mill and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $20 to $40 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. Choice of deeded lots, 10 acres and upwards, reserved. Letters answered. Buyers going full information will busily with which the place is laid out by surveyors. Lots now for sale. Vineland, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey. be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.

From Report of EDMUND ROBINSON, Agricultural Editor of this Professor:

"If by one of the most precious forms of wealth, in an almost legal position and suitable condition for pleasure, farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

To all wanting Farms.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER

In the latest improvement in Fire-Arms, combining great power and effectiveness with compactness, durability, and convenience, both for operating and carrying. Is the most effective Pocket Revolver in the world.

In loaded, without removing the cylinder, with CENTRAL FIRE WATERPROOF COPPER BASED CARTRIDGES. The Cartridge is sure fire, the shell easily ejected after firing. Length of barrel, six-shot and weighs but 14 ounces. For sale by the trade.

GEO. A. HICKCOX, 54 Cliff Street, New York.

CERTIFICATE.

I have thoroughly tested the new "National Revolver," and find it an effective weapon, of sure fire and convenient size. At fifty yards I hit a flying quail with the first shot. I take pleasure in recommending it as a weapon very desirable. In company with Captain Scott, Provost-Marshal, and other officers, I fired this pistol a large number of times, and not one cartridge failed to explode.

(Signed) JOHN CHARLESTON, Chief of Police, Cairo, Ill.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 482—VOL. XIX.] NEW YORK, DECEMBER 24, 1864. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY. 13 WEEKS $1 00.

The State of the Nation.

THE most extraordinary spectacle of prosperity exhibited in the annals of any nation of modern or ancient times is furnished in the late annual message of President Lincoln to Congress, and the accompanying reports from the Executive Departments of the Government. There is something almost marvellous in the positive proofs thus furnished that the great loyal section of the Union, in the fourth year of this stupendous civil war, is vastly more powerful in men, materials, resources, all the elements of strength, wealth and prosperity, than at the beginning of the struggle. In regard to men, notwithstanding the enormous drainages of the war, the returns of the late national election indicate, in the loyal States and Territories, an aggregate increase of over three hundred thousand above the age of twenty-one years, or a general increase of population exceeding three millions since 1860.

Mr. Lincoln may well declare, with something of exultation, in view of this increased strength in men, that "we are not exhausted, nor in process of exhaustion," but that, still gaining strength, as we are, "we may, if need be, continue the contest indefinitely." But there is another element essential to the prosecution of the war and the maintenance of the Government, which cannot be overlooked —the important element of money. How stands the national Treasury upon this question? We are gratified to say, from the exhibits of the department, that while the national debt and our annual expenditures are much less than has been generally supposed, the receipts of the Treasury for the last year have been much larger. Mr. Lincoln sums up the year's operations as follows:

Although sufficient time has not yet elapsed to experience the full effect of several of the provisions of the acts of Congress imposing increased taxation, the receipts during the year from all sources, upon the basis of warrants signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, including loans and the balance in the Treasury, on the 1st day of July, 1864, were $1,394,796,007 62, and the aggregate disbursements, upon the same basis, were $1,298,056,101 89; leaving a balance in the Treasury, as shown by warrants, of $96,739,905 73. Deduct from these amounts the amount of the principal of the public debt redeemed, and the amount of issues in substitution therefor, the actual cash operations of the Treasury were: Receipts, $884,076,460 77, of which, loans, $865,354,067 56; which leaves a cash balance in the Treasury of $18,722,393 21. Of receipts there were derived from customs $102,316,152 99; from taxes, $558,032 09; from direct taxes, $475,646 09; from internal revenue, $109,741,194 10; from miscellaneous sources, $47,231,440 39; and from loans, applied to actual expenditures, including temporary loans, $623,445,629 19. There were disbursed for the civil service $27,522,766 46; for pensions and Indians, $7,517,930 97; for the War Department, $690,791,947 97; for the Navy Department, $85,733,269 79; for interest on the public debt, $45,285,-624 49—making an aggregate of $856,851,509 68; and leaving a balance in the Treasury of $18,945,950 71, as before stated.

THE SINKING OF THE REBEL WAR STEAMER FLORIDA, NEAR FORTRESS MONROE, NOV. 2.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, JOSEPH BECKER

ARMY OF THE SHENANDOAH—RECEPTION OF THE GOVERNOR'S THANKSGIVING GIFT TO THE SOLDIERS—TURKEYS AND OTHER VIANDS IN CAMP.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. E. TAYLOR.

The most gratifying feature in these figures is the substantial cash receipts of the Treasury, approaching in the aggregate, for the fiscal year, the magnificent sum of three hundred and sixty millions of dollars. At this rate, I assume that before the expiration of another year peace and the Union will be restored; we may further assume that the Government expenditures for the next year be reduced to not less than our present actual cash receipts; and that, with the restoration of the rebellious section of the Union, and the application of taxes of some sort to the mining districts of our new States and Territories, and from the new impulse that will be given to all branches of business throughout the country, the receipts of the Treasury shall, in the next ensuing year, afford a surplus of at least one hundred millions of dollars towards the payment of the principal of the national debt. Each successive year, with the continued development of the new sources of the whole country, we shall have an increase of receipts of many millions more for the same purpose. All these cheering speculations, however, rest upon the pronunciation that within the year before us there will be peace and reunion, and an uninterrupted reign of peace and prosperity succeeding for years to come, and the present taxations will not long stand. It is manifest, however, that, with the restoration of peace, our national debt will become a burden so comparatively easy to bear, that our present taxations may be materially diminished, instead of being increased or continued; and that "greenbacks" will be equal to gold, and that Government securities will become the favorite investments of all classes over everything else in the market.

We hold, too, from the prosperous state of the nation as exhibited in the Message and Reports of the Executive Departments, from the progress of the war, and the contraction, exhaustion and demoralization of the Davis Confederacy, that the year 1865 will be the year of jubilee in honor of a glorious peace.

New Ready, Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This annual contains a greater amount of useful and entertaining information than any publication of the kind ever issued. It is indeed the only Lady's Illustrated Almanac published. It is embellished with over 70 beautiful engravings, by the finest Artists of the day, executed in the highest style of art. It contains explanations for the parlor, hall-room, boudoir, storeroom, kitchen, garden, nursery and sick-room. In a word, in the matter's worth money, it will as the young lady's companion, and it should be found in every household. In addition to general illustrations, it contains splendid portraits of Mrs. Lincoln and Mrs. McClellan, exquisitely engraved on steel, and a Stylish Bathing Scene at Long Branch, printed on fine paper. This complete Lady's Manual—which contains more reading matter than an octavo volume—costs only 50 cents. It will be sent, postage free, on receipt of the price, either in currency or postage stamps. Address

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This valuable work is far superior to its prototype, the London Illustrated Almanac, and much cheaper. It contains Astronomical, Meteorological, Political, Statistical, Astronomical and Useful, besides upwards of 50 beautiful Illustrations by the European and American Artists, engraved in the highest style of art, and also embellished with the splendid Lithographic Portraits, printed on fine paper, of General George Sherman, Hobkirk and Admiral Farragut, from recent photographs. Price 50 cents.

Now Ready, the Januvy Number of the great comic and satirical paper of the age, Vol. XVIII., 83 of FRANK LESLIE'S BUDGET OF FUN, containing a splendid variety of the month, viz.: The Grand Union Ball; or, Butler's Wedding Garments; also, Uncle Sam Waking up from a Long Nap; Uncle Sam Throwing a storm of November, 1864, and the Snowing up of Poor Jeff Davis. Also, many numerous other humorous, pictorial, satirical, etc., by the first Artists of the day.—Bellew, Nast, Crowquill, Darley, Howard, Hunt, John Leech, Forbes, etc., etc. Price 10 cents.

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and Gazette of Fashion. Terms for 1865.

The following are our terms for 1865, which, considering the literary value of our Magazine and the superior excellence of its Fashion Department, are, we think, peculiarly favorable to subscribers:

One Copy.....$3 50
Four Copies to one Post Office.....14 00

with the additional advantage of one Extra Copy, gratis to the person sending that amount.

One Copy of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER and One Copy of FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE, to one Post Office.....$7 00

Barnum's American Museum.

IMMENSE ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Giants, Diminutive Dwarfs, Albino Children, Japanese Boy, Sleeping Beauty, Wax Figures, Aquaria, etc., etc. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 2 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under ten, 15 cents.

Beauty—Hunt's Bloom of Roses.

A charming, delicate and natural Rouge for the cheeks; it does not wash off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and cannot be detected. Price $1, 1 75 and $2 per bottle. Sent by mail from observation.
HUNT & CO., Perfumers,
123 South Seventh Street, above Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

New Map of Richmond,

Showing all of the Fortifications surrounding the Rebel Capital, together with a Description of the City and of its Forts, etc. Price only 10 cents. Liberal terms for sale 60 cents per dozen, or $3 per 100.

NEW MAP OF ORLEANS and Splendid Map. Price, 20 cents; Wholesale, $1 50 per dozen.

MAP OF PITTSBURGH, in a very desirable Map. Price, 15 cents; Wholesale, $1 per dozen.

NEW MAP OF ATLANTA. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, 60 cents per dozen, or $5 per 100.

NEW PICTORIAL Map of Gen. Sherman's March, Sherman, Shapichan, Butler, Foster, Hooker, Hancock, Meade, Sheridan, Farragut, Porter, etc. Price, 10 cents each; Wholesale, $6 per 100.

NEW PICTORIAL Map of the Seat of War. Goods—Very Desirable. Price only 75 cents. Goods sent Postpaid. Agents Wanted. Liberal terms to them.

G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Harrison Landing, Morehead City, Newbern, Fort Royal, and all other places, should be sent at full rates, by HARDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 59 Broadway. Bottles charged low rates. 6000

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,

537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 24, 1864.

All Communications, Books for review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

TERMS FOR

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months	$1 00
One copy, six months	2 00
One copy, one year,	4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	15 00
Five copies, one year - (With an extra copy gratis to the person sending the club.)	20 00
One copy of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper and one copy of Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine (the most complete Lady's Book published) for one year,	7 00

Address

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Important to Subscribers.

In renewing Subscriptions, Subscribers are particularly requested to name the number with which the New Subscription should commence, as well as the post office receiving duplicates or missing any number. It is desirable that a renewal should be received a week before the expiration of the former subscription, in order that our books may be kept properly adjusted. Attention to this will obviate nearly all the errors which annoy both publishers and subscribers.

Sherman—The Military Situation.

In a little familiar speech, made by Mr. Lincoln some days ago at the White House, he pithily pointed out the difficulties Sherman went in at, but we don't know where he will come out." We are gratified that now all doubts and misgivings regarding the success of his expedition are dispelled, and that to "coming out" all right. The gold bulls of Wall street have been fairly flanked by Sherman. We conjecture, too, that they have packed their carpet-bags, and that the Rebel Hood's wildgoose chase into Tennessee than will be realised again. Contemplated from any point of view, the situation of Hood must be a long exceedingly uncomfortable, and suggestive of very short rations, very serious difficulties, and ugly rocks and breakers ahead.

The campaign nearer Richmond, however, appears to be taking a shape indicative of the greatest results. The movements of the expeditionary column under Gen. Warren down the Weldon railroad for the North Carolina border, may simply have for its object the widening of the gap between Lee's army and his Southern lines of communication; but Grant may have had, also, the purpose in view of cutting off reinforcements from Lee destined for Wilmington, Charleston or Savannah, and vice versa. As the great game of the war now stands, there must be some tremendous battles and decisive results in Virginia, North and South Carolina, and Georgia, and in Tennessee, before any one of our three principal armies goes into winter quarters. We have an idea that the spring will dawn upon the country with the armies of the rebellion broken up, its now remaining strongholds captured, and upon Jeff Davis as a fugitive for parts unknown. So manifest are the advantages now possessed by Gen. Grant in the line of the railroads to the south of Richmond, Nashville and Savannah, and so urgent are the exigencies of the enemy, that we guess the rains and rainy roads of a Southern winter will not intervene to mar the consummation of active military operations. We may, perhaps, be mistaken, but from all present appearances at the front, in Virginia, Georgia and Tennessee, we anticipate that this year will be marked by a vigorous and decisive campaign.

A Richmond Rebel on Phosphorus.

THE Richmond Examiner turns the cold shoulder on its unfortunate rebel confederates concerned in the late attempt to make a huge bonfire of New York city. Had the incendiaries succeeded in laying the city in ashes, they would, we doubt not, have been amply rewarded by Davis and his associate ruling conspirators at Richmond; but as the catastrophe failed, the wretched vagabonds involved in it are denounced by their master. Says the Examiner, "they must be a very paltry set of poor devils, who have abandoned the service of a powerful military duty, or to spend our money, which they have stolen in the Confederate service, or to invest in Northern stocks and greenbacks the profits of their speculations among citizens. Whether any of these be the smoking felons who tried to set fire to the hotels, we care not." Next, after denying that there was a rebel plot at the bottom of this bankrupting business, this Richmond rebel philosopher says: "Let Gen. Dix be strict in registering and keeping under surveillance all the skulking Southerners that are dwelling in New York. It will be well to know where they are. He is my enemy shown to those noisy and consequential rebel adventurers who have found their way to London and Paris. They, too, are denounced as skulkers, who have run out of the country, and by various underhand and underground ways, simply to avoid the service they owe that country. They are simply deserters, and the death penalty is the proper reward for them."

In addition to these denunciations, these deserting vagabonds are threatened with all the terrors of absolution and consecration; but we dare say that the object of these protestations and yet smoking, noisy, yet "skulking leaders," will deliberately prefer all these penalties threatened to the blessings of their "Confederacy," in the shape of a rope. But, if from Richmond they are to get "more kicks than coppers" for their efforts to serve him as volunteer incendiaries among "the Yankees," they may probably be inclined to give up the phosphorus business in disgust, and become reasonably honest to escape starvation. At all events, honest men may smile when baffled felons and traitors turn against each other.

Summary of the War.

VIRGINIA.

On the 7th of Dec. a reconnoissance was made from Fredericksburg to Guinea Station, in which the enemy was felt. The intention was to ascertain if any large body of troops had been sent to operate against Sherman. The conclusion our officers arrived at was that no material force had been taken from Gen. Lee's army.

On the 8th of Dec. another reconnoissance was made. The expeditionary force was composed of three brigades of infantry and detachments from several regiments of cavalry, and under Gen. Hiles, and travelled over the same route as that taken by the reconnoitring cavalry on the previous day, going about 20 miles from Fredericksburg. They were, after some skirmishing, it drove the rebels from their intrenchments on the west side of that stream and took possession of them. The object of this assembly made demonstrations indicating an intention to endeavor to retake the works, but finally fell back about a mile and a half to another position, and the Union soldiers retained their prize. Gen. Miles's loss in the skirmishing was only 17 wounded men. And the same day our troops returned to the camps on the Rapid Ann, driving away the sharpshooters who had been annoying our workmen on the canal, establishing some rifle pits to protect them, and their work was finished.

GEORGIA.

It is announced from rebel sources, that Gen. Sherman was within 25 miles of Savannah on the 7th inst. There had been some skirmishing on his recent march, but no important engagement. It was thought, however, that a battle would be fought before Savannah. By that time, probably, that city has been invested, if not captured. The National army, under Gen. Foster, had destroyed the Pocotaligo bridge and maintained their position.

TENNESSEE.

The situation remains unchanged. Gen. Thomas has concentrated our army within the defences of Nashville, around which Gen. Hood has drawn the rebel army. The general opinion is that Thomas purposes retreating to Nashville, leaving the rebel army after him, in order to prevent Hood from following in Sherman's rear.

MISSOURI.

The accounts are very satisfactory from this quarter. With the exception of a few guerilla, there are no rebel forces in the State. Gen. Rosecrans has superseded Gen. Rosecrans in the command of the West.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

From rebel sources we learn that a battle had been fought on the 30th of Nov., near Graham's, on the line between Columbia and Savannah, between a Union force under command of Gen. Beach, although Major-Gen. Foster accompanied the expedition. Our troops attacked Broad river on the 29th of Nov., and arrived at Boyd's creek at daylight next morning, about eight miles from Honeyhill, where the battle was fought. When our troops reached Honeyhill they found the enemy occupying a strong position, which they carried after a great gallantry, and after seven hours hard fighting, were compelled to fall back about three miles, where they took up a strong position, and awaited reinforcements, which arrived during the night. The rebels were commanded by Gustavus W. Smith. The Richmond papers claim a victory, and set their loss down as 200, and ours at 700, when the real state of the case is just the reverse.

CONGRESS.

The second session of the Thirty-eighth Congress commenced on Monday, the 5th of Dec., and the attendance was unusually full, all feeling the importance of the occasion.

On the following day the President transmitted to both Houses his customary annual Message. The reports of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General were also laid before Congress. There has been no business of special importance transacted as yet, the time having been principally occupied in preliminary measures.

TOWN GOSSIP.

FIRST SNOW! Beautiful Snow! has fallen upon New York. Upon the morning of the 16th it came down, and according to the prophecy of the almanac's weather-wise men, it was to continue one winter, or one for every day of the month that sees the first fall. Of course the prophecy is true, for what old almanac's weather is?

When New York awoke upon that morning a general thrill of delight ran over her to find a mantle and housetops all dressed in their raiment of snowy white. There was an odor of Christmas about it, a dreamy suggestion of weddings and bridal trains, and of exultant grouping at jingling bells, flying horses, gracious furs, squeezed hands, merry visions, hot whiskey punches, and toddies, a feeling of hyper by anticipation, a ghastly, grand drive home and pleasant dreams for a week. But, alas! the first snow, though like the first love, should not be followed by a thaw. At daylight, and for an hour or two after, there were jingling bells along our streets, but with the rising sun and cold, and before midday the sleighs were scattered, high boots and furs and merry optimism were in requisition, and New York looked blacker than the clouds, and blessed in one breath the streets and the clerk of the weather. Nothing but the memory of the snow storm we record as one of the most serious trials to temper, boots and patience that New York has been treated with. Sometimes we wish that the whole metropolis was under one great roof, and that beautiful snow could not even dream of visiting our chimbs. Then, on the days and sometimes weeks of slush, filth and dank puddles are a terrible penalty to pay for perhaps a single day of sleighing and jollity. There is another point to be considered, whether, that snowstorm of his years in New York city did not do more damage than the celebrated storms, and four feet of snow on a level, have gone by. If New York gets 18 inches and 24 hours of sleighing she does well, and that night all to waste and dirty, it is really accounted for, and the cause is this. New York never seems to cover a great deal of ground, and within her limits a great mass of feet is concerned. The result is that the city grows warmer every day. We keep our temperature at about 70 degrees, as it suits the comfort of the great factories and foundries belching forth hot smoke night and day, all to waste and dirty, and the snow runs over the town, and help melt the snow or warm the rain before it reaches the earth, and when it does reach the earth it is not a winter's snow; for could the fact be known, we would venture a fortune on the assertion that the ground and stones of New York city are always ten degrees warmer than they did in years ago. And this is, according to our theory, the reason why we do not have more and sustained snowstorm in New York, and why, if it does come, a heavy fall of snow will not lie.

We pity the poor devil of snow we may as well say a word about ice. In a few days the Frost King will be upon us, and we shall go mad again about skating. Central Park, 5th Avenue Pond and a hundred others will be in everybody's mouth, and he or she who does not take will be voted a nobody. At the present time preparations for the coming of his majesty have already been made. A new refreshment-house has been built on the 5th Avenue pond, and, as usual, everything will be served in a conglomerated way to eat and drink; except those who have their own private refreshments at their command. The same parties will have the charge as last year, and it is to be hoped that they will not disappear as they did on the 22d day of last month, a stretch which has been defended into bringing one or two lady friends of the writer to look at the ice at their own risk.

Another of the scenes which fair to be one of the mayor New York has seen for many years, and we intend to chronicle it in our record in guides, and for the purpose of assisting in this laudable undertaking we call upon every one who is posted in the duties of fashionable life to assist us in the task.

New York goes periodically mad about something, and that something, just now, is pickelloon. Everybody is in pickelloon and pickelloon is the rather wicked rage. Pickelloon is a game. There is no calling in pickelloon that recognized society. Beyond the mere fashionable battle of the ice and, or the tulip mania of Holland, which is that these less are not to be taken of as a game, but as a sport. One hour is not in an investment in a real patroleum company, but in an unreal investment in an unreal company. The manner in which the thing is managed is this. A few bright fellows get together and by some means get money enough to lease some land somewhere in the oil districts. This done they soon make wondrous discoveries—in a horn—and on the strength of them post to New York and lay the apocryphal wealth before a few respectable and responsible men, soliciting them to become directors in a company they are about to organise, offering to set aside for them a certain quantity of stock which is not to be paid for till the cows came home. This done, they then organise a company and commence selling stock. Having pretty well feathered their own nests, it is suddenly discovered that some of their wells are too deep to be understood, and a break-up is the consequence, throwing the odium of the affair on those respectable and responsible parties who have consented to become directors, and leaving them to meet the humbugged shareholders.

This is the manner of doing up a company, and strange to say many of the bogus affairs get on positively better than those that have a real foundation, which fact we suppose is simply owing to business management, sharpers invariably being more active and wide-awake than honest men. There are at this moment not less than 500 petroleum companies under way and starting in this city, of which it is safe to say that not less than 80 per cent are hollow, and will go at the very first prick that shall let out the wind from their inflated interiors.

Last week we promised to say something more about the pictures of the Artists' Fund Society, and we proceed to the task, though in so doing, we cannot feel that the whole affair is calculated to add much to American art.

In the first gallery there is little to commend save great names. A picture by Merle, "The Sister Nurse," No. 86, deserves notice, though the whole force is comprised in the face of the sitting child. Homer has two pictures, "The Birch Swing," and "In the Hay Field," Nos. 96 and 97, both good in drawing, but having all the appearance of having been executed in half an hour, as Mr. Homer would do one of his drawings on wood for a cheap engraver. Forbes has a clever picture, No. 104, "Water from the Brook," lifelike and forcible, and giving promise for the artist's future when he shall handle better color. In the third gallery is another picture by the same artist, with the same merit and the same defect, No. 213, "A Little too Hot."

In the second gallery are some crayons deserving notice, the first of which is Darley's "Guerilla Attack," No. 136, and a beautiful flower piece, No. 144, by Pauline Girardin. In this room are three exquisite things, Nos. 155, 156 and 157, by Birket Foster, warm in color and worth lingering over for an hour.

In the third gallery we have Leutze's "Crossing the Ford," No. 81, which but for the name of the artist would be passed as among the clayey school, and as unattractive as so much canvas can well be made. No 188 is a little dash of pleasant color, by Nehlig, called "After the Wedding." No. 193, "The Letter Writer," by Muller, is good, well grouped and expressive, but heavy. No. 198, "A Lighthouse," by Poittevin, is alive and attractive. Thomas Nast has a picture here, No. 203, "The Yankee Decoy," which we look upon as one of the best pictures of the exhibition; another, No. 212, also by this artist, "The Halt," is worthy attention. Why is it that pictures with pretentious names are all marked sold, while such as these remain? Gifford has a good picture here, "The Camp of the 7th Regiment," No. 207.

In the fourth gallery there is a picture by Edwards, an old friend, but not less welcome, "Time to Go," No. 243; a charming one by Auker, No. 248, "The Knitting School;" and "The Coast of Labrador," No. 254, by Bradford—all more than good.

We hold the great fault of this exhibition to be that our artists have only exhibited their third-rate pictures. This applies in all cases except those of a few young men, who have reputations to gain, and have done the best that time allowed them to do. Haste in executive art, as in all things else, is part of American character, and the characteristic is here forcibly displayed. When our artists realise this, then we shall have better and more commendable exhibitions.

Our Amusements.

It is hard to turn the head in any direction and not see theatrical prosperity. Every house is crowded night after night, and every manager wearing a smiling face, that seems to say that he sets criticism at defiance. What cares a manager for criticism when his house is crowded nightly? Does Mr. Crummels care when he produces "The Massacred Milkmaid; or, the Red-Legged Pirate of the Southern Seas," with all the original effects, if the entire press denounce it as an immoral production, and calculated to teach the young idea to be naughty, if his house is only overcrowded every evening? Not a whit. He caters for the public, not for the press, and as long as the "Red-Legged Pirate" has a single leg to go upon he can afford to set the newspapers at defiance, and put up mammoth posters outside the box-office that say "The free list totally suspended!"

There has been no positive sensation this week in theatricals, the nearest approach to it being the legitimate and Edwin Booth as Hamlet. It is, perhaps, late in the day to say anything concerning Mr. Booth's Hamlet, but we can say something commending the management for the manner in which they have put it upon the stage, by declaring it one of the few attempts that have been successful in putting Shakespeare upon the boards in a way that is calculated to win the theatregoers of the present day. We flatter ourselves that we are sensible in our appreciation of the great bard, but we are also sensible enough to know that even with the superlative talent of Mr. Booth to sustain them, the plays of Shakespeare are not calculated, in the present age, to draw appreciative audiences, unless accompanied with all the scenic and costuming effects that can be brought to bear upon them. We do not think the New York stage has advanced in this point, and have no hesitation in declaring that nothing has been done as well since Charles Kean produced "Richard III." and "King John," at the old Park, twenty years ago. The burial scene, as given at Winter Garden, is good, and brought to our mind the night tent scene in Richard of the olden time, and in saying this we cannot conceive a higher compliment.

There is a great satisfaction in once more seeing this house crowded in every part, and we can only wonder, if they fill the house for "Hamlet," what will the public do when more popular plays are produced.

Wallack has given us during the past week "Masks and Faces," "Rural Felicity," and "To Marry or Not to Marry?" In the latter Miss Henriques has been obliged to take the part of Hester, that in which Miss Gannon made so decided a hit, the latter lady being taken suddenly ill. This week Boucicault's new play, "How She Loves Him!" will be presented.

At the Olympic this week we are also to have some Boucicault—is there no other dramatic writer in the world?—in the shape of a new spectacular drama, entitled "The Streets of New York," which we presume to be the same thing that was produced years ago under the title of "The Poor of New York." That the piece is will draw under the admirable producing of this house more than a fact, and if it has been rehashed and brought down to the requirements of the day, we see no reason why it should not be just as good as new.

Of the Broadway we have nothing to say. Mr. John Owens is going on nightly playing Solon Shingle, and the people are crowding the house to that uncomfortable degree that we feel sure the management must be disgusted to the highest degree. Through the week Buckstone's comedy of "The Happiest Day of My Life" has been given. We envy Owens the reputation he is making in New York almost as much as we envy the management the greenbacks that come in a steady stream through the box-office window.

Every American ought to go once, if no more, even though he does not understand a word of the language, to the Theatre Français, that he may know what lively acting is, and see a performance in which the very lowest performer seems to have and to show a positive interest in the business of the play.

One of the lucky ones of the day is Heller. His rooms are crowded every night, and, setting an example from which New York managers may copy, even while the old programme is drawing crowds, he changes it for something entirely new. The coming week he will present an entertainment of a perfectly novel character, being a combination of Hellerism and Ravelism, calculated somewhat to startle those who are not believers in the supernatural.

Artemus Ward is another instance of good fortune, though we can hardly call that luck which is based upon something exactly suiting the public taste. There is something about Artemus too ridiculous to speak of, and if it were only for the satisfaction of seeing his audiences laugh, we could not refrain from going, once a week, to Dodworth's Hall. On Thursday evening, the 15th inst., Artemus lectures for the benefit of Mr. E. F. Mullen, the well-known comic artist, who is very ill at St. Vincent's Hospital.

Barnum is counting everything by threes: three Giants, three Dwarfs, three Fat Girls, three performances daily, and triplets of all sorts.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—A woman, at Wilton, Me., recently drowned herself in a half hogshead of water. She carefully put on her rubbers before, going to do the deed.

—— Gen. John Pope has gone to the Army of the Potomac.

—— The Gloucester (Mass.) fishery this year has resulted well. The catch of mackerel will pay a handsome profit. Nine vessels and 78 men were lost in the cod fisheries.

—— The Illinois State Sanitary Commission has arranged to meet Sherman's army, with the released Union prisoners, on the Atlantic coast, with a large cargo of potatoes, onions, pickles and dried fruit.

—— In a speech, in New Orleans, recently, Jacob Barker mentioned, incidentally, that when Robert Fulton's machinery, for the first steamboat, came from the manufactory, in England, to New York, it was consigned to him, and it actually remained in his commission warehouse six months before the money could be raised to pay the charges of importation.

—— Monticello, Thomas Jefferson's old homestead, has been sold, under the sequestration law, to B. F. Ficklin, for $80,500.

—— Hon. James Speed, of Kentucky, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Bates as Attorney-General.

—— Mr. G. W. Childs, the eminent publisher, of Philadelphia, has purchased the Public Ledger newspaper of that city.

—— Salem, Lynn, Springfield and New Bedford, all secondary cities of Massachusetts, are to be supplied with water, just as New York, Philadelphia and Boston are—from contiguous lakes.

—— The steamer Bay State, which used to run between New York and Fall River, has been condemned and broken up. She was the pioneer of the line, on which she has served for 17 years.

—— More than 79,000 trees, shrubs and herbaceous plants were planted in the Central Park last year. The carriage drive, now completed, is about 80 miles in length.

—— A single firm, of Pittsburg, Ohio, is obtaining 160 barrels of oil every day. It sells for $24 per barrel. This is one of the most remarkable "strikes" recorded in the history of the oil excitement.

—— There are, it is said, 50,000 Chinese in this country.

—— The widow of Joshua R. Giddings died at Jefferson, Ashtabula county, Ohio, on the 15th ult.

—— A dancer in one of the Cincinnati theatres come to a sad death lately. She had been dancing, and in passing from the greenroom to the stage, drank a tumblerfull of ice-water, from the effects of which she dropped dead in full view of the audience. She was swelled past identification, in a few minutes. Her professional name was Millie Francis.

—— A Boston paper publishes the following facts and correspondence: "Mrs. Bixby, a lady in the southern portion of this city, whose case has excited much sympathy, had six sons enlisted in the Union army, five of whom have been killed in battle, and the sixth is now at the U. S. Hospital at Readville. Being in indigent circumstances, she has received assistance from some of the churches and Christian women of Boston. Her lonely abode has been made cheerful by the receipt of the following letter from President Lincoln:

"Executive Mansion, Washington,
Nov. 21, 1864.

"Dear Madam—I have been shown, in the files of the War Department, a statement of the Adjutant-General of Massachusetts, that you are the mother of five sons, who have died gloriously on the field of battle.

"I feel how weak and fruitless must be any words of mine which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming. But I cannot refrain from tendering to you the consolation that may be found in the thanks of the Republic they died to save.

"I pray that our Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement, and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and lost, and the solemn pride that must be yours, to have laid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of Freedom.

"Yours, very sincerely and respectfully,
"Mrs. Bixby. A. Lincoln."

—— Coal has been discovered at Fort Rice, in Dacotah. One vein is six feet thick. The field trends southwestwardly, and is supposed to have its outcrop in the Black Hills. A few months since an immense basin of salt, five miles square, was found near Carson river, in Nevada, not far from the locality of the silver mines. It is 14 feet thick, of pure rock salt, as white as snow.

—— The last party from Virginia City, Idaho, were obliged to dig out the coach on one occasion, and the weather was extremely cold. At Fort Halleck there was a large quantity of snow, and the weather was intensely cold. Snow was four feet deep between Denver and Colorado City on election day, Nov. 8th, and two and a half feet at Denver.

—— Gen. Butler, in an order dismissing a member of the Colored Light Artillery, from the service, says: "He was in a state of intoxication, which is reported as beastly; but that is evidently a mistake, as beasts do not get drunk."

—— The Scientific American states that, owing to the heavy tax, there is an immense falling off in the consumption of tobacco.

—— The great breach in the Erie Canal, 12 miles west of Rochester, which has caused a premature suspension of navigation, was occasioned by the boring of a muskrat. In two hours after the small leak was discovered, 50,000 square yards of earth were washed out of the bank.

—— The commandant of Libey prison issued a stringent order that Union prisoners must limit their letters to six lines. The following is a specimen of the letters subsequently written:

"My Dear Wife—Yours received—no hope of exchange—send corn starch—want socks—no money—rheumatism in left shoulder—pickles very good—send sausages—God bless you—kiss the baby—Hail Columbia! Your devoted husband. ———."

—— Nearly 600 National banks have been organized, with capitals amounting to about $109,000,000. Isn't it time to stop?

—— An army correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser says of the Dutch Gap Canal: "It will be 500 feet in length, or, including dredging, in water, 550 feet. Its breadth at the top of the cut is 125, and at the bottom 65 feet, the sides having very steep slopes. It will have 15 feet of water at low tides (those being slightly felt here). This short cut will soon save a navigation of seven miles, the Southern shore beyond that point being high and precipitous." The canal is substantially finished.

—— In a recent speech at Cincinnati, Ex-Secretary and now Chief Justice Chase said: "Now, I take no particular pleasure in being called 'greenbacks.' I don't think it is a bad name. But then greenbacks was not the end of my design by a long ways. If I were carrying out this plan, as I hope and trust it will be carried out, and as our platform pledges the Administration to do, the time will not be remote when, supported properly by Congress and the people, every dollar in greenbacks will be made equivalent to a dollar in gold. We never should content ourselves until we have brought up every paper dollar issued by Congress to a gold value."

—— There are 5,000,000 native Germans in the United States, and this year's emigration will add 70,000 to that number.

—— An association has been organized at Alton, Ill., to raise a monument to the memory of Lovejoy, the Abolitionist, who was shot there, years ago.

—— The official majority of votes cast for Gen. McClellan in Mr. Lincoln's own county of Sangamon, Illinois, is 376.

—— The Arabia, of the Cunard line of steamers, has been sold.

—— It is stated that the Secretary of War has decided that colored recruits are entitled to the same bounty as white recruits, viz., $100 for one year, $200 for two years, and $300 for three years. Representative recruits are also entitled to this bounty, without regard to color.

—— A young lady in Richmond, N. H., recently shot a too presuming gallant, killing him instantly. A free use of this sort of discipline might be beneficial to male society.

—— The resignations of the following named officers have been accepted by the President: Major-Gen. John A. McClernand, Brig.-Gen. E. A. Payne, Brig.-Gen. Neal Dow.

—— Gen. Butler has issued an order mustering out of service several officers of colored troops, for incapacity and other more disgraceful causes.

—— New molasses is sold at $1.20 cents a gallon at New Orleans.

—— Up to the 30th of Nov. last, 175,352 immigrants had arrived at New York since Jan. 1st, from foreign parts. This exceeds the immigration of last year, in the same time, by 30,000.

—— It is stated that there are, at present, between 500 and 600 deserters from the Federal army, in the immediate vicinity of Niagara Falls, on the Canada side, most of whom have obtained bounties. They are in a wretched condition. Some of them are working on the Great Western Railroad, as laborers, for very small compensation.

—— A new dramatic and musical paper has been commenced in New York. It is called the Figaro. It is edited by Mr. Greathed, of London and Paris.

—— The Musical Review will be hereafter published under the name of the Weekly Review. It will be edited by Mr. C. B. Seymour, dramatic and musical critic of the New York Times.

—— The New York Leader is to be converted into an evening paper, under the name of the Evening Leader.

—— Lord Lyons has left Washington, and sails for London this week. It is doubtful whether he will return. His Secretary of Legation will transact the business of the mission in the meanwhile. His lordship will be much missed from a position he has filled with credit to himself and advantage to both countries. He is in feeble health, caused by overworking his mind.

—— Mr. Horatio Alger, Jr., an occasional contributor to this paper, has received and accepted a call to become the pastor of the Unitarian Church and Society in Brewster, Mass.

Foreign.—During a festive gathering in Venice, consisting of the officers of an Austrian regiment and a number of ladies, an Orsini bomb fell into their midst, through the skylight. Owing to the capsule falling off, the bomb did not explode. Had it done so the loss of life would have been great.

—— The waters of the Rhone have risen nearly 20 feet, and are still rising. They are within 18 inches of the height they attained in 1840, when so much damage was done. It is said that these inundations occur four times in a century.

—— Punjaub coal has been tried in the locomotives of the Punjaub railroad, in India, and found to answer admirably.

—— A writer in the English Quarterly says, that "the reason why the French are so ill-informed is that they read only newspapers!"

—— An English justice has refused to grant a warrant, which a person of the name of Ward applied for, against the Davenport Brothers, on the charge of getting money under false pretenses, alleging that the Davenport seances were such "silly exhibitions," that no one attending them could be said to have his money taken from his pockets "under false pretences," telling the applicant "that it was another instance of a fool and his money soon parted."

—— Another enormity has been committed in an English railway carriage, this time in a third-class one. A well-dressed young man undressed himself before a number of ladies, and then pitched his clothes on to the track. He was given in charge at the next station, in puris naturalibus. He was, of course, found to be insane.

—— The lawsuit between the Hungarian families of Wusyady and Broukay, which has been progressing for 180 years, has been settled at last in favor of the Broukay family, who retain their estate. There have been only two lawsuits equal to this in period of time; one in Florence, which was also recently adjudicated, and which had been progressing 331 years, and one in England between two branches of the Seymour family, which had been 274 years in litigation. This was settled when Lord Brougham was Lord Chancellor.

—— The Duke of Somerset, accompanied by five members of the English Admiralty, has arrived at Algiers, in the Government yacht Enchantress. These gentlemen are charged by her Majesty's Government with the duty of visiting the principal ports on the Mediterranean sea.

—— Seven nightingales have arrived safely at Melbourne from England.

—— M. Auber, the musical composer, is seriously ill, and as he has passed his 85th birthday, his friends naturally begin to be apprehensive that his vigor will not share the immortality of his works.

—— An early winter is reported in Russia. Sledging began in Olentz on the 28th of September.

—— A railway is to be constructed from Vera Cruz to some port on the Pacific coast. The task of making it has been committed to M. Escandon by imperial decree. He receives a bonus of $8,000,000.

—— Adelina Patti is to sing at the French capital in "L'Elisir d'Amore," with Neudin, Delle Sedie and Scalese.

—— London is now connected with Sidon and Jerusalem by telegraph. How strange to see the old Bible lands invaded by modern improvements and inventions!

—— The Madrid correspondent of a London paper writes: "The maritime force of Spain is at a very low ebb. They have about 27 steam vessels of not more than 7,500 horse power in the aggregate, the greater proportion of these vessels being of small tonnage."

—— An English paper announces the reappearance of M. Mirès upon the financial stage. It says: "That wonderful man, M. Mirès, who is never so little in difficulties as when he is ruined, and who jumps up, Antaeus-like, the fresher from a bad fall, is now about to start a 'Banque des Etats,' capital 200,000,000 francs, and already I learn that the shares are in great request."

—— The Ecclesiastic Convention at Paris have resolved to tax crinoline—all ladies, therefore, who occupy chairs at divine worship are to pay one franc for low mass and one-and-a-half francs for high mass. Their basis of calculation is that a modern lady takes up thrice the space of one of the ancient régime. This plan might be adopted here with advantage.

—— A Hungarian boy, aged 14, has been sentenced to five years imprisonment for having on his person a book in which were written some disrespectful words about the Emperor of Austria.

PEACE OR WAR.

BY ROSENBERG.

(See pages 216-217.)

From the Lake and from the Mountain,
From the Valley and the Plain,
We have thronged to save our Country;
Which shall not be rent in twain—
With true hearts and earnest hands
We have raised the Stripes and Stars,
Facing Cannon-shot and Sword-stroke,
Daring Grave and Prison-bars!

One, our purpose—One, our Prayer—
That the Land which is our own,
Shall be ours, and be our Brother's,
Ever his and ours, alone.
We love him—but, he must not tear
Apart the soil, our Fathers made
Free, by the red blood freely shed
To British Bayonet and Blade.

Gladly would we call him to us,
With a loyal, loving heart—
Bid him share with us our homestead—
Take an Elder Brother's part.
But he shall not trample down
The Banner that our Fathers reared—
By their troubles and their struggles,
Tenfold to our souls endeared.

Let him tell us, he repents him—
Let him raise their Flag, once more,
And with opened arms we take him
To the heart he shared before.
Wherefore holds he still away, then?
Will he not in patience hear?
Does he hate us with a deadly
Hatred?—for it is not Fear.

Southern blood is frank and fearless,
Even as our own may be—
Southern Hearts are strong yet tender,
As our own are quick and free.
Why, then, comes he not to bid us
To forget?—we know we will,
For we have loved him. In God's name,
Do we swear, we love him still!

Therefore, let him hear us crying
To him, with a yearning cry—
"Brother! Hearken to our prayer—
"Let not love and kinship die.
"Come! We ask thee with an eager
"Will, and with a burning word—
"By the passion and the trouble,
"To our inmost heart-strings stirred."

If he will not heed our outcry
He deserves nor hope nor friend,
But, willing the red scourge of warfare,
Dares it to the bitter end.
"In God's name! then—Brother, hear us!
"While Time is, we call thee. Come!
"Tread not out that love whose tender
"Accent calls thee to it—home!"

THE NOVELIST A PHYSICIAN.

Some ten years ago Alexandre Dumas published a large novel, serially, in a political journal. The heroine was represented as a person suffering from consumption, the first stage of which was already passed.

Her perspiration, cough, irritability and moodiness, by turns gay and melancholy, the poetic flights of her imagination; in short, the whole category of phthisis were portrayed with that golden pen which the celebrated novelist still so defiantly holds.

One morning, as he was about to conclude his work, a distinguished person from the court of Louis Philippe called to see the author.

The Marquis de ——— was announced:

"Sir," says the marquis, "is your novel finished?"

"Entirely," was the reply.

"And what becomes of the heroine in the end?"

"You are fond of rare things, Monsieur le Marquis," says the novelist, laughing; "or else you wish to read in Arabian style—beginning at the end."

"I have," replied the visitor, "a more serious motive to justify my curiosity."

"Well, then," says Dumas, "my poor sufferer dies in the last chapter."

"She must recover in that case," said his excellency.

"But the plan has been carried out."

"Then the conclusion must be altered."

"But the dénouement is exceedingly striking."

"Another must be found, however, and you may depend upon my gratitude."

Dumas stared with astonishment at the seigneur.

"Why require this of a fictitious person?" said

"Because my only daughter suffers the same malady and the same symptoms you have described, and the death of your heroine would be a mortal blow to the morale of my poor child, who follows her adventures anxiously in every morning's paper."

The far-famed writer pressed the father's hand. He revised the last part of his novel. The heroine was miraculously cured.

Five years afterwards Dumas met a beautiful lady, of transcendent charms, in the salon of M. de Montalivet; she was the marquis's daughter, married, and in the bloom of health.

"She has had four children," said her father, in introducing her.

"And my book four editions," answered the novelist.

Human Feet.—The French foot is meagre, narrow and bony; the Spanish is small and elegantly formed—thanks to its Moorish blood, corresponding with the Castilian pride—"high in the instep." The Arab is proverbial for its high arch; "a stream can run under the hollow of it." The foot of the Scotch is large and thick; that of the Irish flat and square; the English short and fleshy. The American foot is apt to be disproportionately small. A foot, for both beauty and speed, should be arched, fairly rounded, and its length proportioned to the height of the person. The ankle, especially of woman, should be rounded and firm, and not too small.

A woman, whose husband was wont to snore loudly at night, could not sleep in his absence, until she hit upon the expedient of having a servant come into her chamber, and grind coffee in a portable mill, by the sound of which she was speedily soothed to repose.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC—SCENE AT WARREN STATION—OUR SOLDIERS RECEIVE THE PEOPLE'S GIFT—DISTRIBUTION OF THANKSGIVING VIANDS TO TROOPS OF THE 5TH AND 9TH CORPS—COMMISSARY SUTER WEIGHING OUT THE STORES.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, JOSEPH BECKER.

BOUNTY JUMPERS' PARADE, AT INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA: SUPERINTENDED BY COL. WARNER.

A NATIONAL SONG.

BY THOMAS POWELL.

WHEN driven by a despot's wrath,
Our Pilgrim Fathers, led by God,
Found o'er the billows' foaming path
A land which tyrants never trod—
On the bare deck this anthem rings,
"Life to the Freemen—Death to Kings!"

They passed the darkness of the night,
And rode through many a blinding storm,
Till sleeping in the snowdrimmed light,
A New World stretched its giant form—
Loud on the shore the anthem rings,
"Life to the Freemen—Death to Kings!"

Marshalled in battle's grim array,
A Power which shames the Roman might Marked the young Nation for its prey,
And dared it to the unequal fight—
On victory's plain the pæan rings,
"Triumph to Freemen—Shame to Kings!"

Though Treason with its demon stride
Raged for awhile throughout the land,
Soon in calm Freedom's grasp it died,
And Peace now rules with placid hand—
On hill and plain the anthem rings,
"Traitors have shared the doom of Kings."

Hail, great Republic of the west,
Thou Homestead of the brave and free,
The ready friend of the opprest,
The chosen shrine of Liberty—
Taught by thy voice, each Freeman sings,
"The Pilgrims' sons have strangled Kings!"

Long may thy glorious flag, unfurled,
Float proudly on from shore to shore,
The hope and glory of the world,
When handed Despots are no more—
Thy Stars—to cheer the struggling Free,
Thy Stripes—the scourge of Tyranny."

WHAT ANTIETAM WAS TO ONE.

BY LAURA W. LAMOREUX.

"GIL!"

The thunder must have drowned the sound of my voice, for nothing answered me. Just then a vivid flash of lightning streamed in through the crevices of the gaunt window, lighting up the great dismal room for an instant, and revealing a form stretched at full length upon the bare floor.

"Gil!" I called in a loud whisper, speaking quickly, lest another peal of thunder should prevent my being heard. The boy moved slowly, and the rope that held him by the ankle creaked over the rafter to which it was confined.

"Is it you, Lot?"

"Yes."

"Go back!" he said, almost roughly.

"Not yet," I replied, catching the deep vibrations of pain underlying his sullen words. Crash followed crash, as if the heavens were rushing to conflict in wild dismay. The house shook under the reeling thunderbolts like one to be annihilated by the fury of the storm; but we were not frightened; we were not timid children. Gilbert, at least, was little more than a child yet. Another blinding flash filled the room. Gilbert was sitting as upright now as he could. The rope was too short to let his foot rest on the floor, so he had to sit carefully, or it would chafe his ankle.

"Have you had anything to eat, Gil?"

"No."

"For how long?"

"Since breakfast."

"Oh, Gil!" I said woefully. He laughed a low, bitter laugh, such as makes one shiver.

"How long have you been here?"

"Three days and two nights."

"What for?" I asked, in low tones, the terrors of a suffering childhood creeping over me.

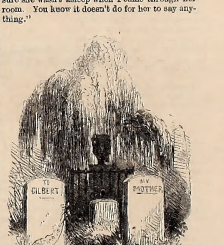
"Because I went into the streets without his leave, and he found my boots worn from kicking ball with the boys—as he would have it. I play a great deal, you know," he added, sneeringly. It was the old story. A pang smote me, to think I had been spending happy days all the time away from home.

"I've brought you some nice supper," I said, lowering my voice as the storm began to abate.

"I don't want any of his cursed victuals," was the muttered reply.

"Oh, yes, you'll eat for mother and me, you know."

He asked in softer tones where mother was.



"Hasn't she been to see you?" I asked in surprise.

"No," he said sadly.

"You don't think she doesn't want to, Gil?"

He shook his head.

"I didn't get home until after dinner," I continued, "and she has been crying all the afternoon. She told me where you were; and I'm quite sure she wasn't asleep when I came through her room. You know it doesn't do for her to say anything."

THE GRAVES OF MOTHER AND SON.

He sat munching greedily at the food I brought him. The storm was going over, and snatches of moonlight struggling in at the broken window showed how pale and ghostlike he had grown since I went away, a month before. "Why did I leave him?" I asked myself reproachfully; "him I love better than anything in the wide world, even mother." I remember how proud and happy I was years before, when he was a large, beautiful baby, and I a little girl of five, trying almost vainly to hold his chubby, struggling form in my weak arms. The great trouble then was that I could not keep him quiet and happy in my arms. What was it now? He broke in on these thoughts.

"You'd better go back, Lot, it's getting lighter, you see."

"No, not yet. I wouldn't care, anyhow, only for you. Didn't you want me, Gil?"

"No!" he replied sullenly, "I didn't want anything, only to die. How I hate him!" he said, raising his great black eyes to mine, full of bitterness and ghastly murder. "Why, Lot," he went on, "I've prayed till I'm hoarse, here in this awful storm, before you came, for God to strike him dead with the lightning. I'm like a devil, ain't I?"

He had eaten the food, and lay back wearily on the floor.

"No, no, it isn't you that is so bad," I said, the hot tears splashing over my cheeks all the while I was looking about the dim room for something to make a pillow of. At last I found an old quilt in a barrel, and rolling it up, placed it under the unpruned head.

"Now Gil, lay your head on my lap and go to sleep." He did as I bade him, and soon fell into a heavy sleep. I sat watching him until the moon went down, and the first faint beams of light began to penetrate the thick darkness that preceded the early dawn. They were laying his head carefully on the floor again, while I tore the quilt into parts, I placed a comparatively comfortable pillow under head and feet, and softly kissing him as he slept, stole quietly down the stairs, passed through my parent's apartment, and reached my own room unobserved.

THE DYING DRUMMER-BOY AND HIS SISTER IN THE SURGEON'S TENT.

The next morning Gil was released, but did not make his appearance at the breakfast table. As soon as father went out for the morning, however, he came in with a nervous air, and, walking straight up to where mother was sitting, put his arms about her neck, and kissed her passionately again and again. Then, after quick, hurried whispers, he said the good-bye we two had been dreading so long. We knew he would not bear it always. As soon as mother could speak, she said, oh, so wearily, so hopelessly:

"You are going, my child?"

"Yes, mother; I'm going where I will never see him again," he said, with slow, stinging emphasis. "And tell him for me, my good-by, mother, that he has made me hate him more than I love my own soul."

He looked fiercely beautiful, with the dark brown curls falling over his forehead, and the wild light gleaming in his eyes, as he stood for a moment facing mother and me. Then, with a low bosom again, and they held each other in a long, close embrace, and then he was gone. She covered her face with her hands, and cried aloud. I rushed out swiftly after him, and overtook him at the end of the lane. He reached out his arm without stopping, and thrust a letter at me as I came up.

"I know you would come, Lot."

"Yes. Where are you going?"

"I'm going into the new war, death, anything but this. Lot—anything but this crushing out of my life and my manhood. I've thought it all over—you know I've had time"—he added, in surcastic tone—"and I've made up my mind to go, and if I'm killed, Lot, it's a poor life that has gone perhaps in place of a better. Don't cry, child; don't reproach me; don't ask me to stay, and oh, how I'll love you," he said, looking at me with earnest, imploring eyes.

"No, no, Gil; I won't. I said, pressing the arm I held closer in my grasp.

He stopped suddenly, as if a new thought had struck him, and, with a troubled anxiety overspread his face, as he asked in low, hurried tones:

"But him! do you think he will send after me?"

I feared he would, I knew it would be terrible, and my face seemed to satisfy him as to what I thought.

"Dare you tell him what I say?"

"Indeed I dare."

He drew himself up proudly, as if in defiance of his words, and went on rapidly:

"Tell him I took money from his own drawer to take me from here, poor, and if he does not call me thief, I fling the words back in his teeth. Ask him what he has wrung from my meagre wants, that he has sapped from my cramped childhood?"

I remembered bitterly how he had taken mother's money that she was saving for Gilbert's schooling, and would not allow her to appropriate a cent of it for the purpose she desired, and my heart hardened like flint as he proceeded:

"Tell him he has robbed me of what can never be replaced, and that if he ever takes me, it will not be alive. No, Lot," he added in low, deep tones, "I will never look that man in the face again with those living eyes, for he knows how inhumanly he has wronged me."

"I will tell him, my child, Gilbert."

How could I, who knew all his sufferings, blame him? He stood a moment last in thought, his eyes resting on the house that held mother, then starting, he said:

"I must go?"

"You will see me, Gil?"

"Don't cry, Lot!"

He turned to me with a look full of that unhungry affection that for some weeks past had been a stranger to me. I felt that there came no intelligence from him after whom two hearts in that dreary household yearned so intensely. He remembered I ordered a separate box at the post office, to prevent any chance of a letter falling into my father's hands, who, I was quite certain, would destroy it unread. All of our anxiety was relieved. A worn, soiled letter, superscribed in Gil's handwriting, was placed in my hand. It was dated at Harrisburg. He said he was a drummer-boy in a Pennsylvania regiment, which was to leave their present camp as soon as their colonel—who was then on a visit—rejoined them. He was going out into the army of the Potomac. "Tell mother not to worry about me and Lot, if I am not scratched, don't put by more than to get to me, the way you did that night in the garret." How well he knew me, to divine the echoing fears that were in the solitary place that some of my barren life. Did he think to disarm me of my resolution to go to him in case of harm, when he made that weak proviso? Indeed it only served to place me more seriously on the lookout for his interest. I was reading the letter to mother, when father's step was heard at the door. She made one of her quick, frightened motions to clutch me, but I read on in the same determined voice with which I had been reading. He stood in the doorway until I was done, and was refolding the letter. I knew from the hardness of his silence that a storm was brewing, and the spirit within me rose to meet it.

"Girl!" he said sharply.

I rose to my feet, and turned towards him.

"Send that letter back, and tell the boy to mind no more such come to this house."

"I will go no such thing!" I answered, in a self, sullen tone, roused at this new evidence of his cruel tyranny. We stood facing each other, as parent and child seldom meet. If he saw in my face what I felt within me, it was no wonder that he turned pale, and left the room. Not that I was prone to be intemperate, but impulsive now as ever, and constantly to assert my own independence.

Mother, who sat quailing in her easy-chair, with a look of helpless distress on her countenance, during this little scene, recovered herself, and said, with a look of relief:

"I am glad your boy has you, Charlotte."

"Yes, mother, he has me. I have given myself to him."

"You can do better than me. You won't fail him?" she asked, in her weak way, sinking back wearily in her chair.

"No, mother, you may go easy for that."

It was settled between us now that she was dying; when we talked it was to the point. We suffered no more to appear each other by choosing feathery words.

"You'll remember all I say for him, Charlotte?" This, mother, said, with a pathetic, through weakness, say. I think your mother's heart will come to me when you are gone, and keep it all fresh."

She looked up in her feeble, confiding manner, catching the intent of my words, and a look of satisfaction and peace was driving comfort from them, overspread her face.

From that time a settled peace seemed to have rested upon our household. In spite of the unusual suffering, she died calmly in my arms.

I did not sink under this new trial, for I felt the necessity for action in my behalf more. Father started terribly when he looked at the ghastly truthfulness of death in mother's stricken form. Her cold face appalled him, and he fled as if he had been struck. It had been in its desolate life pleadings. And we stalked through the echoing rooms of the old house, two solitary, unblending existences.

Gil passed the Peninsular campaign unharmed. He spoke often in his letters of a surgeon who was very kind to him, and treated him with many privileges and favors that he could not otherwise have obtained. I perceived, and I gave me unutterable satisfaction, that he had formed a kind of appointment in a human friendship. It was one of my solitary pleasures to watch the growth and development of this friendship, and speculate on the possible good that might accrue to my brother from it.

I had never yet written to him of mother's death, dreading the effect I knew it would have on his impressible nature. I had full faith that we should meet again, and then I hoped to impart the pain. I had in a manner that would at least make the shock less abrupt. Whatever game of it in such a case, I might be, I felt sure, the bearer of his forgiveness to fear, unbearable sorrow. All the love that father's cold harshness had thrown back into the boy's bosom broke forth and overpowered me in my hour. I trembled to think how he would look at the world when he found she had gone from it. And so I let my brother him until I had time to pour out my sorrow more necessarily.

The stubborn fighting before Richmond was over, and battle after battle, in which the receding or retreating Union army had no cause to be engaged, was fought, and through them all my brother passed unscathed. I came to think he bore a charmed existence, and never for a moment slackened my diligent watch.

At last the battle of Antietam came. Those three terrible days of fierce fighting, shrieking battlefield, with its untold horrors of aggravated suffering and death, lay between two unreckoning armies, formed a scene of inexpressible anguish to me. I knew the regiment to which Gilbert belonged was in the engagement, but that was all. No word or paper had come from him since that. And could be gleaned by the most diligent search. Not name among the list of killed, wounded or missing bore the name of my brother. I felt sure that he never once was mistaken, as it seemed impossible for all to escape. My anxiety grew insupportable, and I was about to start out alone for myself if there were cause for the apprehension I could not thrust from me. Mother had passed away, and father, in his private grief, managed to reserve a portion of his usual cruelty for my return. Coming back, when it was converted into ready money, two hundred dollars of which was all that was left of the sum Gilbert had taken, gave me, charging me to keep it in readiness to use in Gilbert's behalf, in case he needed assistance. By this time, I was quite satisfied that I was in no danger, and independent of the help I would have felt justified in receiving for, had I known that he needed it, I was in a condition to go anywhere before the day on which I was to start, I told father, as a matter of justice due him, what my intentions were. He replied by asking, with a cool sneer, if I were mad, or only half-witted. Disregarding this unfeeling conduct, in my strong desire to do right in the matter, and what I felt I owed him, in case I should find Gilbert suffering or dying, he charge upon the day of my brother's departure?

I felt I had done all that the most stringent duty could require of me, and proceeded with my preparations, wondering if Gilbert and I were the only ones who would have to link bitter memories with these passing days. After dinner the next day, I walked three miles to meet the three o'clock train. My course had been so thoroughly mapped out at leisure, and every preparation that time and study could suggest was already made. I wore a dress of material that would not easily soil, and selected shoes with an eye more to strength than beauty. My other needs were all confined, with the strictest regard to economy of space, within the limits of a large-sized lady's travelling reticule. Besides the few articles of clothing indispensable to my own wants, I found room for soft woven bandages, lint, and bits of old linen, with a few small-sized towels, needlebook, scissors, twine, thread, and, indeed, all the other materials of the invalid's wardrobe, was stowed away in my pocket, in the smallest compass imaginable. Two worn skirts, suitable for small bandages and the like, I wore upon my person, without feeling encumbered. Then in a middling-sized paper-box I managed to pack a few delicacies for a sick man's appetite—a half dozen lemons, and a small bottle of brandy, all of which proved of great service and could be carried without inconvenience.

I felt satisfied, when I took my seat in the cars that I could traverse whole miles of country road in search of Gil, if necessary, and suffer but little inconvenience from my travelling accoutrements. A lady friend at home, who was well acquainted with the route I was to take, had given me the address and a note of introduction to an acquaintance in Chambersburg, who, she felt confident, would be able to assist me materially in my enterprise. To my great satisfaction I found her at home, and strongly inclined to interest herself in my behalf. She was a member of the Sanitary Association, who were sending men and supplies to the battlefield, at short intervals, and it so happened that the very morning after my arrival a wagon and attendant was ordered for my immediate departure.

As I sat waiting for the vehicle, which was a roomy one, and provided with cushions, I took my morning paper and glanced abstractedly over a portion of its contents. Suddenly my eye became conscious that there was a Gilbert on the page, for it often leaped into my vision. My gaze became fixed in eager search, and I soon found a list of heretofore unpublished casualties. Among them was a name that made my heart stop in—Pennsylvania regiment, wounded in the side, name—Gilbert Linthorne. I had only time to clasp my hands in utter grief, when the driver of the wagon, with the wagon drove up, and I sprang down the steps, impatient of delay. A lady, alone like me, going in search of a friend, who was badly wounded, formed one of the company.

Oh, these hurried journeys, when one goes prepared for the worst, only that they may reach the suffering loved ones before life or even consciousness are gone; pleading with inward fervency as they will, that they may be in time to get a word, a smile, a glance of recognition, a low, soft farewell, a tender parting pressure of the hand, something to assure the fainting heart of the fond, faithful dream, for ever starting with this sad one voice. I had said all the way, "I fear my brother is wounded or sick," but it was a shadowless fear. I had not sunset heart there lurked a secret joy, ready to spring into utterance, that I would find him living, blooming, bright and glad, and all my apprehensions a heavy hand on this delight, giving it small scope, lest it reared itself into a hope whose disappointed would leave me doubly desolate. But it was there, and there was darkness behind it. I wrung my hands in silent anguish as we drove over the undulating road, praying God that it might not all go out.

At last we were fairly within sight of our encampments. A little more delay and the first person I met was a sergeant despatched with my brother's name, regiment and other particulars requisite to ascertain his whereabouts. After what seemed to me an interminable length of time he returned, saying my brother was in Surgeon Winston's private tent, and I could see him there. I was conducted there hurriedly, until we came to a stiff tent, outside the door of which stood a man, apparently past the middle age, with a pen and writing for some one. As we came up he recognised me, and extended his hand with a few words of questioning sympathy. I thanked him courteously, that was not the surgeon whom Gilbert had spoken of as his friend so often. My forced composure gave way for the moment, as the sound of the firm hand that was holding to sustain me was withdrawn. It was very wise in him to meet me here, outside the tent, and prepare me to see my brother. Gathering my self-control, I drew me gently aside and waited for me to grow calm. I saw in this procedure, however, that there was danger in my self-control, and made every effort to recover my self-composure.

At last I was myself again, and looking at him with an imploring smile, he said I might go in, Gilbert was expecting me. He went a little in advance, saying I was there, and giving me a chance to give a longer support for the best. He did not move when our eyes met, but I would have faced dangers indescribable to read all that came and went in that sad, confiding, and clouded face, and lips, with streaming eyes. It was long before either spoke, but those deep, hungry eyes never once moved from my face. They thanked, they searched, they blessed me, and—oh, terrible!—they glimmered forth sure, swift foreshadowings of a coming separation.

At last he asked, in a vainly attempted tone of reproach:

"What made you come, Lot?"

I silenced his lips with the pressure of my own, and when I raised my head he smiled a sweet, sad smile, that said in its way:

"I know I won't ask again."

The surgeon came nearer now, and Gilbert said to him he had spoken of so often in his letters.

"He has been mother and sister to me, Lottie."

The face pale blanched whiter but it did not say father.

Did you suffer long before they brought you away, Gilbert?" I asked.

A shadow of unutterable pain passed over his face, as he said in a wild, vague way, looking up at the opening in the tent:

"Two days of burning thirst, and groans, and speechless agony. It was dreadful, dreadful," he said, murmuring in a lower tone, as if to himself and then turning suddenly to me, he went on rapidly, "And then to think they were so near, Lot, leaving us there shrieking our death cries in their accursed language, and couldn't come to us because they wouldn't ask favors of the enemy. Two armies," he continued, in a bitter tone, with a curling lip, "wouldn't ask favors of each other, for those of their own number, fighting in the same cause, who lay there dying long deaths of terrible agony. If I was a surgeon," he added, "I would think it a deeper disgrace to have my soldiers treated that way than I would to make ten thousand such accidental prisoners of defeat, as it would be to ask the privilege of relieving my suffering soldiers. But, Lot," he said, falling into the old way of his childhood, his head resting while a joyful smile, as he pointed to the surgeon, "He wasn't so. It was late who started with the first flag of truce Oh, Lot's good, Lot's kind."

The surgeon smiled at his warmth, and said warmingly, talking his white hand gently in his:

"We must be careful, you know."

We were not aware of his eyes at that, the muscles about the mouth and neck relaxed, and the uneasy head with its soft curling masses of brown hair lay upon his arm like a wounded child's, under the eye of the surgeon's calm eyes. Then he left him, and I sat by him, talking in a low, soothing voice, giving him what news I could speak, running over the incidents of my journey, and keeping up a sort of disinterested interest, until the eyelids began to droop and close slowly. When he was asleep, the surgeon was going down. He was slightly delirious, and began, as I feared, to worry about me; how and where I was going, and the like. The surgeon bade him be easy, saying he would see to all that, and assuring him he would see I had every attention, turned to the door, preparing for the first time to leave me. I could see by his countenance he could offer, and begged me to consider whatever the tent afforded as entirely at my disposal. It was just the opportunity I wanted to remain with them both, that I was capable of, and could make myself comfortable and serviceable, without infringing upon their few comforts. I went on to explain how I had my Gilbert's bedside, and there alone, I could take any rest. Even if I sat all night on the ground, I could do that as well as lie on his cot. He slept, I might need, it would be better, far better, than the weary suspense of waiting and fearing I had undergone and endure. I begged of the surgeon to let me have my way, and assured him if he wished to show me kindness, he would not place me in the position of refusing it. He left me, and I drove him from his limited accommodations. He looked somewhat surprised, but had the good sense to see that I would be satisfied and happy. If he persisted in his offers of kindness. Indeed I think, if women, always fertile in resources, would call the surgeons to their aid in ministering with them to their aid, and prove to those who love them that they can be strong in the hour of trial, as well as in the weakness of sorrow, there is many a wounded soldier, who might die in the arms of those whom he loves most, instead of breathing his last hour away alone.

We are all willing ourselves to be so weak and dependent, that they dare not send for us to come and comfort them in this terrible time? What a comfort it must be for a wife, a mother, a sister to think: "My husband wanted me before he died, but he thought I could not endure the sight of his suffering, and so let me with him." Let us teach them better.

As it began to grow dark, Gilbert spoke of the long day that had passed, and said he was sure it would be to have me where he could speak to me, now and then. He relished whatever was given him, and showed a pleasure in my care. For a moment I was overcome, and bent over him, kissing him fervently, and looked appealingly to the surgeon, who stood near by. He came at once to my relief, and begged me to be sure he might help the bedside, perplexed as he was by my sudden emotion. I tried to recover myself, and stammered out:

"She is well, dear. Don't talk now." And made my way out of the tent.

In a few moments the surgeon joined me.

"Mother is dead," I faltered by way of explanation. He looked surprised, but he said:

"I promised to give him her dying words. Will it kill him?" I asked anxiously.

He thought not, and said, questioning eyes, full of tender pity. I braced myself for the scrutiny, life dim truth. I had dreaded assuming terrible distinctness. I would know if it killed me, and he should tell me there. He read the conflict, and said in tones over which felt a death quiet:

"You must tell him soon, Charlotte."

I pressed my hands tightly over my heart. I would keep the life blood there till he died.

"He must live, sir."

In his fixed, earnest gaze I read the truth.

"How long?"

He saw I must have the worst. He said in the same voice of suppressed feeling:

"He will need all your strength, Charlotte. He cannot last more than three or four days at most."

"Oh, I must be strong. I will be strong," I said, wildly. "You will help me, sir?"

I caught at his arm for support, and he said, stroking my head soothingly, as if his hand were a mother's hand,

"Indeed, my poor child, I will do all I can for you."

There were tears in his eyes, but I could not weep.

The wounded side was dressed soon after. I sat by him, while it was being done. He seemed anxious to have the lint and cloths I had brought used in dressing it, and after it was over amused himself in pulling out from my satchel and box the things that came from home. He was very happy all day, and talked a great deal, but did not once revert to mother again. At night his side became more painful, but morphine was administered, and he rested well, calling my name now and then, or reaching his hand, to be assured I was near him. Oh, how glad I was that I came!

The next day and night passed very much in the same way.

The surgeon, Dr. Wheaton, spent as much of his time as he could with him, but duties of the same nature were pressing constantly upon him, and I realised what a long, weary succession of days and nights must be dragged through in loneliness by these sick and suffering men.

The morning of the fourth day, a coffin was carried by, and among those who followed it I recognised the lady who came into camp at the same time I did. It struck me as a sad premonitor of what was before me.

Dr. Wheaton left particular directions when he went out, on his morning duties, promising to return as soon as possible. There was a terrible meaning in his words, that the bright face on the couch seemed to belie. I hoped in spite of that thrilling undertone. The boy seemed more comfortable than he had any day since I had been with him, and when the doctor returned I looked at him with a feeling amounting almost to triumph, but he quickly averted his eyes, and sat down a little distance from the bed, with his medicine case in his hands, and his face partially concealed by the slouched hat he wore. Gilbert rallied him on this little omission of politeness, and he immediately removed the hat with a quiet smile. I began to think this dreaded fourth day would not leave me so desolate as I had feared. I noticed the feebleness of his voice, as he spoke from time to time, but did not realise what it meant. He seemed anxious to talk to his friends, who thronged about the tent, and came often as they had done, ever since my arrival, to see if anything could be done for the sufferer. These brave, good, suffering soldiers of ours! God bless them, every one! How the heart of the nation wraps them around with its holiest gratitude and love!

At last the doctor was compelled to close the door in the face of all this kindness. Gilbert was growing weaker. It was quiet for a while then. He lay, holding his emaciated hands up before his face, and looking at the light as it streamed through his thin white fingers.

"How old are you, Lot?" he asked, suddenly dropping his hand, and turning to me.

"Twenty, next month."

"How mad I used to get at you for being the oldest," he said, laughing merrily at the remembrance.

Other memories came over him. The smile went from his face, and a shadow of deep seriousness overspread it.

"You said mother was well. Didn't she send me any word, Lot?"

I saw death's sure track on his face now. I remembered the words:

"You must tell him soon," and I trembled, lest I had delayed too long.

Oh, the words she had left him; the tenderness she had breathed out with her dying, fleeting strength. I poured them in his eager ears, with the swift utterance of one who must crowd a life story into a few short moments. I forgot everything, save the one unexecuted charge, in the hurried intensity of the moment.

"Charlotte!"

The startled, rigid tones reminded me of what I had forgotten. I tried to turn away, but he caught my face between his two hands with greedy eagerness, and looking at me with great, glaring, earnest eyes, asked fixedly:

"Is mother dead?"

I could not evade that searching glance.

"Yes, Gilbert, mother is dead."

"Moth-er—de-ad!"

The hands fell helplessly on the coverlid, and the thin lips moved with a slow quivering motion, as if he were repeating the words to himself. His eyes, around which had settled dark, bluish rims, looked on—on—past the surgeon, who sprang to his bedside—past me, past all that savored of life, as if peering out through the dim vacancy of space, beyond whose boundary the living may not go. I looked in terror at the surgeon, but he did not move. I looked down at the upturned face again, but it was the same. I called his name, but he gazed on unheeding. Then there came a slowly spreading, softly stealing expression of returning consciousness. Happiness, almost unearthly, diffused itself over every lineament of his beautiful face. He raised his hands slowly, as if keeping pace with the gradually dawning joy, and clasping them together in quiet ecstacy, said in clear, thrilling tones, without moving his eyes:

"Darling, precious mother!"

Then turning to me with sudden energy, he exclaimed, a brilliant smile lighting up his face:

"Oh! Charlotte, I won't be a stranger there now, will I?"

"No, dear, no," I said, falling down on my knees before him.

"Look at me, Charlotte!"

I raised my head, and tried to look calmly in his dying face.

"It was lonely, to think of going alone."

"Yes, brother."

"You knew I would die, Lottie?"

"Yes, dear."

"You want to die for me?"

"Oh, Gilbert!"

"It's in her eyes, doctor," he said, turning quickly to him; "they're full of it. Oh, how she wants to die for me; but you can't, Lottie," he continued, childishly, looking back at me.

He was going surely, slowly. I nerved myself to be calm, that I might sustain him to the last.

"I wish I could lean on you, Lottie."

The surgeon turned the mattress carefully, till his head came against my shoulder, as I sat on a low seat by the bed. He nestled it close against me, until my cheek touched his forehead.

"There!" he said, with a look of sweet satisfaction.

I kissed his beautiful forehead, whitening under the chilly, relentless fingers.

"I'm sleepy, Charlotte."

"Go to sleep, darling."

He closed his eyes dreamily, and fell asleep.

Somebody took the heavy head from my shoulder and laid it back on the pillow, and with it went all the strength that had been given me for the time of my great need. I looked at the face where death lay stamped in lines of rigid beauty. I lifted the loose masses of rich brown hair, and let them fall heavily back. I moved my hands over the white forehead and the hueless cheek—I laid my ear down close to the colorless lips that would never smile or speak to me again, and took in the whole bitter truth. A hopeless, desolate chill went sweeping through my heart. Some one spoke my name in low, tender accents. I raised my eyes, and my brother's comforter stood looking at me with a glance of deep, unutterable pity. I reached out my hands to him in my helpless sorrow, and he gathered me into his strong arms as he would have taken a babe.

"Cry now, my poor stricken child," he said, in tones that went straight to the fountains of my heart, and for the first time since my early childhood I wept out my sorrow on a human breast.

I could not weep there always, so I drew back and looked on the couch again.

"He must be buried by mother," I said, wearily. My work was not done yet.

"Yes," he answered, gently. "We must start with him soon."

"We?"

My heart leaped into my mouth. I feared so much I had not heard aright.

"We," he replied, in his strange, comfort-inspiring way, supporting me with his arm again. "You must go no more on these weary errands alone."

How was it I could feel such joy springing up within me at this solemn hour?

A coffin was procured, the beloved form laid within it, and our sad journey begun. I tried in vain to shake off the weak, helpless stupor that was upon me. I felt impatient for constantly allowing myself to burthen one who had already taken my one great responsibility from me. I wondered at and reproached myself, and sought to rally my benumbed faculties, but the effort was useless. We both went our sad journey, dependent upon him—the dead one and I—and he said in a quiet way it was well, for he loved us both.

When we came in sight of the house I had left only ten days before, it was evident they were not expecting us. The blinds were closed, and no appearance of life visible about the premises. It must be the dispatch Doctor Wheaton had forwarded to father had never reached him. The front door was locked when we arrived, and the hearse was coming in sight down the street. I knocked loudly and repeatedly, that I might in a measure prepare my father for what was coming, before the hearse was fairly in sight. It was of no avail. When he at last came himself to open the door, a few of the neighbors, who had assembled at the gate, were already removing the coffin and preparing to bring it in. His eye took in all at a glance. A look of swift horror convulsed his face, and he shrank back cowering into the gloom of the inner hall. The bustle of removal was soon over, and the body lay in the dark parlor, in the very spot where mother's coffin had lain.

The lid of the coffin was turned back, and we stood around looking at the white, placid, reposeful face. A few of those who had known him from his babyhood mingled their tears with mine. Just then a bent form stole in past me, and gazed with shivering horror at the sight which held us all. It was my father.

Never had my heart yearned towards him as now. I would have given worlds could I have spoken a word of comfort, but I dared not approach him.

At last he lifted himself slowly, and turned to me. A look of severe agony was on his face as he grasped my shoulder convulsively.

"Charlotte!"

Oh! the tones in which that name had been shrieked in my ears.

"What, father," I answered, as best I could.

"Did he speak of me?"

I shook my head sadly.

"Am I a murderer? Speak, girl!" he said, looking at me closely, searching my face as if for condemnation.

"No, father, no!"

The past went from me in my strong pity. I looked in his blank, despairing face, and sought in vain for some word that might give him consolation. It was a dark record I went back to search. He saw it in my face, and when, hopeless of spoken comfort, I tried to put my arms about his neck, he drew them back drearily, and whispered in a hoarse voice:

"No, child, it's too late now," and went back and paced his desolate room. Why is it some homes have such chasms in them—such arctic winds for ever blowing out their lights and warmth?

At last the earth lay smoothly over Gilbert's head, and my mission of love seemed ended. I had little more to do, I felt, as I stood looking down at the two graves. It was a clear, starlight evening, and Doctor Wheaton had come with me, for his final leave-taking of the dead. He was to start at midnight for his camp duties again. He must have been thinking thoughts like mine, for he said, dreamily:

"How these graves rob life of its stimulus."

I asked him what he knew of death, and life without an aim.

It was light enough to see his sad smile as he said, softly:

"Have my sorrows schooled me to such calmness that you think I have not suffered? Child, few lives have had more joys snatched from them than mine."

"I should have known it," I said, meekly, "else you could not have given me such strange comfort."

"Have I comforted you?" he asked, looking down at me with sad, earnest eyes. "I would wade through years of pain if I might do that. Do you know I loved you in your brother, long before I saw you? that I prayed in my selfish eagerness when I saw you by his dying couch, that there might be no one else to comfort and sustain you?"

I did not speak. I laid my hand on his arm, and he drew it closely within his own, as he went on:

"Would you hate me, if you knew how that all this time you have been suffering so? I have been hugging the thought that perhaps our life discipline has been such as to fit us for each other, and that the great sorrows we have borne have been the means of bringing us together? And oh, Charlotte," he continued, without waiting for me to speak, "if I am wrong—if I have indulged a vain hope—if there is another to whom you lean—another who has a better right to dry your tears than I—I must go back, God only knows how desolate."

I clung closer to him, and said:

"In all the world I have none but you."

"Then you are mine," he whispered, in deep thrilling tones. "You say it by this new made grave we have both wept over, that you will be mine through all our lives, till we come down down here?"

He stooped over, and laid his hand on the newly turned earth.

"I say it here!" I answered, softly, kneeling down beside him.

We turned away and went towards my dreary home. He was to leave me at the garden gate. I did not try to keep back the tears as I paused to bid him adieu.

"Mine!" he repeated again, greedily, holding me tightly in his arms, and kissing me passionately. "I have a right to call you darling now, to kiss you, to press you to my heart, to weave my hopes around, to love, to bless, to live and to die for you. God will keep us for each other, precious. Good-bye—good-bye—good-bye."

In another moment he was gone, and I stood alone, looking down the street after his vanishing form, his kisses on my cheek, his words still lingering in my ears.

I am his wife now. Thus far we have been kept for each other, and I have faith to believe he will come back to me unharmed, when this dreary war is over. I wonder if it is heartless for me to be so happy when mother and Gilbert lie sleeping in the churchyard, and father walks the earth a bowed, broken-spirited man.

BOUNTY JUMPER'S PARADE.

Col. Warner, of Indianapolis, has adopted a peculiar and decidedly effective method of punishing bounty jumpers. It is illustrated in a sketch, on page 213. The offenders are lashed, two by two, to a long rope, and are thus made to march in procession, headed by a large negro, who rings a much sounding bell. Each of the rogues bears a placard upon his back, setting forth his profession and his place of origin. A line of friendly bayonets, on each side the procession, keeps back the crowds of spectators. The advance is made to the music of "The Rogue's March." A recent pageant, of this description, contained upwards of an hundred men, some of whom wore a most respectable appearance, aside from their unseemly decoration. After being thus publicly and disgracefully exhibited these swindlers are sent to the front, to take their chances under martial government.

THANKSGIVING DAY IN CAMP.

The munificent liberality of our people towards our soldiers and sailors—well deserved on the one hand, and no more than a duty on the other—resulted, on the recent Thanksgiving festival, in giving, not merely a good dinner, but a hearty token of sympathy and encouragement to our country's defenders on land and sea. "It isn't the turkey, but the idea, that we care for," said one of the soldiers in Gen. Sheridan's army to one of the agents from New York, who accompanied the poultry to its destination. This remark strikes the keynote of the sentiment with which our men have received and appreciated the gift from home, sent to them when we were all rejoicing, in order that they might rejoice with us. Every kind and patriotic heart, to which the cause of our country is dear, will be glad and grateful that such geniality exists between the people and the soldiers. It is by acts such as this that we are knit together in a common cause, superior to selfishness, and looking towards the good of the whole nation.

Elsewhere—on pages 209 and 212—we present two illustrations of Thanksgiving in the Army. The pictures almost entirely explain themselves. The first, on our front page, depicts a scene in the camp of Gen. Sheridan's army. The wagons, arriving at the Commissary's tent, are being unladen of their stores of poultry, and pies, and fruit. The inevitable guard is standing at his post, and the soldiers around are cheering the arrival of this substantial message of friendship. The second picture, on page 212, represents a scene at Warren Station, in the Army of the Potomac, the last station on the branch road from City Point. The Thanksgiving stores have arrived, and Mr. Commissary Suter is weighing them out for the troops of the 5th and 9th corps. Each of the soldiers in the background represents a detachment, large or small, and is empowered to receive the portion allotted to his constituents. It is said that very amusing incidents accompanied the distribution of the viands. On one occasion, in particular, not having enough pies and crullers, the Commissary allowed the men "a free grab," to get what they could. It is scarcely necessary to add that these delicacies vanished with astonishing rapidity.

THE SINKING OF THE FLORIDA

In the James River.

The New York daily papers, on the 29th ult., printed the following telegram, received at the Navy Department, from Admiral Porter:

Fortress Monroe, Nov. 28, 1864.

Hon. Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy:

I have just received a telegram from the commander of the prize steamer Florida, informing me that she had sunk in nine fathoms of water. She had been run into by an army steamer and badly damaged. I have not heard the particulars. I will inform the Department when I receive the written report.

DAVID D. PORTER, Rear Admiral.

Since this fact was made public, very little, if anything, has been heard in reference to the manner of the Florida's destruction. She was anchored about half a mile westward of the Rip Raps, off Fortress Monroe, and entirely out of the usual track of navigation, when she was run into by an army transport, stove near the water line, and set a leaking. The accident must have been the result of sheer carelessness—though there are not wanting those who assert that it was no accident at all. After the collision, the Florida was taken to an anchorage, a little way up the James river, where she presently sunk in nine fathoms of water. Her upper spars are visible to the passing mariner, and nobody is very sorry for her destruction. The only vexation connected with the affair is, that the singular loss of the vessel subjects our Government to misrepresentation on the part of its enemies at home and abroad. Of course, however, ample justice will be done in the settlement of the diplomatic question with Brazil.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

Speaking to Haydon, the painter, about sketching O'Connell, the Irish "agitator," Lord Plunkett said:

"If you could take his head entirely off you would do a great service to society."

Lord Plunkett, was, doubtless, one of those who considered that the best way to right "the wrongs of Ireland" would be to submerge the whole country for one hour under water.

That's a pretty bird, grandma," said a little boy.

"Yes," replied the old dame, "and he never cries."

"That's because he's never washed," rejoined the youngster.

"Who was David's grandmother?" asked a clergyman, of a Sunday school student of Scripture.

"A woman, sir," replied the student.

"I see the villain in your face," said a judge to a prisoner.

"May it please your worship," replied the latter, "that's a personal reflection."

"Parents," said a solemn lecturer, "you have children; or, if you have not, your daughters may have."

A negress, in Cincinnati, applying for a situation for her daughter, stated that she wished the latter to be instructed. "De gal," she said, "must be larned de piano and painting anyhow, and mebbe arter while readin' and writin'."

Woman's crowning glory is said to be her bonnet.

A lady, who was about to marry, was warned that her intended, although a good man, was very eccentric.

"Well," she said, "if he is very much unlike other men, he is more likely to be a good husband."

Artemus Ward confides the following "chunk of wisdom" to public keeping:

"You may differ as much as you pleaze about the style of a young lady's figger, but I tell you konfidentially, if she has $40,000 the figger is about as near rite as you will get it."

A physician, prescribing syrup of buckthorn for an old lady, wrote his prescription according to the usual abbreviation of Ramus Catharticus, "Syr. Ram. Cat." On asking her if she had taken the medicine, she replied in a great rage:

"No! I ain't going to take syrup of ram cats for anybody under heaven."

In Paris, Maine, in old times, there was a justice of the peace, who lived remote from any other magistrate. Having occasion to have certain business documents witnessed before another justice, and wishing to save himself inconvenience, he used to stand up before a mirror, and holding up his right hand repeat the oath and certify it under his own signature.

The captain of the Soldier's Rest, at Alexandria, was applied to by a colored man, who wanted employment. The captain asked him why he didn't enlist.

"Well, captain," he replied, "I jess as lif go an' fight as not if dey would treat us same as dey do white folks."

The captain assured him that Government was disposed to treat the colored troops with perfect fairness.

"Den why don't dey draff us?" exclaimed he. "Dey don't draff us in Alexandria. Dey oughter draff us same as white folks!"

The expression, so much in vogue just now, "a big thing," is said to be of classical origin, since it occurs in one of Terence's works, in these words, "Res magna est"—it is a big thing.

When you see a young man overwhelming pious,
Distressingly moral and morbidly good,
Who fervently groans for the gospelless heathan
And can't without table-grace swallow his food—
Whose prayers for his foes from the depths of his closet
Are audible clearly in basement and hall,
Who "bosses" a bible class, quotes from the sermon,
And says we're frail earthworms, corruptible all—
Consider that youth, oh, my friend unconverted,
The brightest and best of terrestrial boons,
But—while holding him up as a pattern to Tommy,
Look out for your daughter in teens, and the spoons.

A schoolmaster told one of the pupils to read the third chapter of Daniel. The boy began, but when he came to the names of Shadrack, Meshac and Abednego he stumbled. The master required him to proceed. He tried again and failed. Relenting, the master told the boy he might read the preceding chapter, and let the present one go. The boy brightened up and got on famously until he reached the last verse, when pausing, a look of consternation overcame his countenance, and he dropped the book, exclaiming in a doleful voice:

"Why, here are them three rascally fellows again."

PEACE OR WAR—THE CHOICE OFFERED BY THE NATION TO THE REBELS.—BY GEORGE G. WHITE.

THE SHAKER MAIDEN.

LIGHTLY falls the sunlight golden
On each building, quaint and olden;
And, as lightly, mantles over
All the meadows green, with clover;
Kissing now the meek-eyed daisies,
Now the kingcup as it raises
Its bright bosom, like a chalice
Fashioned for some fairy palace;
While, among them, fairer, whiter
Than the daisies, purer, brighter
Than the kingcup's cheery golden,
Stands the pretty Shaker maiden,
And each shaker brother going
Past her, onward to the morning,
Glances at her, but he dares not
Look again, lest love, which cares not
For their rigid laws, should claim him
In his wiles, and captive make him.
But the caution is most needless;
Love is reckless, love is heedless;
Broken fetters love no breaking—
Wakened love has no awaking—
And the eye that once has met her
Never, never can forget her.

THE FALL OF THE LION'S HEAD.

BY J. G. AUSTIN.

(Concluded from our last.)

BUT now! Paul had so loved her once. Could such love perish utterly out of such a heart? Would not her deep remorse, her cruel sufferings since that night, call to know them, unseal those frozen springs once brimming for her with the waters of life and hope? Could he fold remorse, which he heard the words of penitence and humility, how doubtingly he once had used for her love as a rich guerdon that no deed of his might merit, but that she might royally bestow upon him unworthily?

And this—was all this for ever gone?

She shuddered, thinking of her own heart day and night, and would have asked them of his also, but when she placed herself in his way and met his cold eyes, and looked his pale lips, that would not shed upon her tongue, her pulses grew numb and still, and she passed on without a murmur.

But at last came one desperate day, when, goaded past endurance by that remorseless Nemesis, she felt that she had come upon agony and unendured terror, when she must speak out, though she should die with the words upon her lips; and through the burning moonlight, when the blackbirds, over the crisp herbage, and in the breathless covert of the woods, she sought and found him at last lying beneath the pines, his pale arms, his dripping hair resting on his bent arm, his still eyes gazing far away into the ghostly shimmer that danced between the trees and her.

He had not heard as she rustled through the dried grass and paused beside him, but he neither moved or spoke or looked at her, until, with a wail of exceeding sadness, she sunk on her knees beside him, and, hiding her face in both her hands, cried:

"Oh, Paul, is there no pity in your heart, and shall anger endure for ever? God spared my life when I struggled with death, and will you make his mercy of no avail? Oh, you are more cruel than the grave, more pitiless than death, for to die is to be forgiven, and with you there is no forgiveness, no forgetfulness. Be merciful, and kill me, Paul! Strike me dead as I kneel here at your feet, for I can no longer endure such life as this!"

Her voice, broken with pain, ceased, died in a deep sob, that quivered upon the harsh air of the moontide, and disturbed the dim recesses of the wood with the melancholy echo of human woe.

And Paul, never starving, never moving his fixed gaze from the far horizon, slowly said:

"I forgive you, Clare. I never have felt now."

"And this!" she said, she, generous even then. "He is dead. I buried my cruelty in his grave upon this beach."

Then added silence, while Paul seemed buried again in gloomy reverie, and Clare sought vainly to satisfy her heart with the stone that had been given her for bread. And then even them still rose in the tropic moonlite a barrier of ice, impalpable to the grasp, indubitable to the instinct of love. Those words of his had not removed or lessened it, and Clare vainly tried to pass it.

With timid assurance she slipped her tiny fingers into his hand. It did not close upon them, or start, or quicken at the touch, but held them loosely, neither accepting or rejecting the caress.

Clare pushed away her hand and cried, in agony sorrow:

"Hard, pitiless, unkind! You forgive me with your lips, and your heart is like a stone toward me; you do not know what mercy or forgiveness means. You make yourself a judge over those weaker than yourself, and you forget that the Great Judge is pitiful as well as just. He has forgiven me and spared my life, and He has spared your also, that you may have hardened it. You have, in your man's pride of strength, cared for my comfort of body and you have starved my soul. You have condemned me to a daily death, to an existence whose very breath is a new torture. You know—for you are master of your cruel art—you know the mad horror and misery of a woman's heart longing for love, and you will not save it one pang, you will not vouchsafe one word or look. You condemn me to perpetual solitude even while in your daily presence; you show me that, though God's will has closed us within these narrow limits, your will is still potent to divide us—to divide us as land or sea, or Death itself could never do; for all these may be conquered by Love's might, but not your hard heart."

Again she ceased, speech wheimed in emotion too deep for utterance, and a sombre shade crept into Paul's fixed eyes. Awhile he mused, and then, with a sudden motion, he rose and looked down upon her, as she crouched, white and rigid, in the glowing sunlight. Long he gazed, and wistfully, as one who wails the coming of an angel who has forgotten him. At last he slowly said:

"No, Clare, it cannot be. I said that I forgave you, and I do, so far as it is possible in will, but I know not then, as I now know, the woeful wrong that you have wrought me. I can remember, Clare, that I was a man when to see you kneeling here, to hear such words as you have spoken, to mark the havoc of remorse and despair on your lovely face, would have crushed me to very heart with sorrow, when I should have gathered you to my heart, and lavished such tenderness upon you as a mother lavishes upon a penitent child. Yes, I remember how bright, how sweet a thing was love, and how in the olden time it filled my life with peaceful content, and glorified the very heavens with its splendor. But, Clare, that day is dead, and it is you, you in whose heart this light was quenched, who robbed it of love, and faith, and hope; and through the chambers where they should have dwelt your cruel words have sounded, and die, the answering voice. You say that you suffer, Clare, and I see that your words are true, but I have no pity left for you or even for myself, whose life you have thus smitten so sorely that it suffers, or hopes, or joys in nothing more."

And Clare, with a wail, rose slowly and went back through the sultry noon to hide herself in the lion's stony heart.

Night came, but brought no abatement of the torrid heat, until midnight, when with the rising tide came a faint pungent air. Then at last Clare slept heavily, but a wakening misery met her eyes as standing up from the northern horizon a great ball of sullen fire, red and rayless, while below him on the silent sea lay a broad wake, unbroken by any motion of the waters.

In the heavens was no fresh azure of the morning, no translucent light, but the low sky hung in clammy, thick sheet of sulphurous vapor without cloud or star.

Upon the beach great oily waves rolled heavily in and broke with a dreary moaning. In the woods the birds forgot their morning song, and timorously hiding in the thickest covert, questioned each other in sharp brief cries what might mean this portent in the air.

Trees and shrubs, surefreshed by coolness and moisture of the night, drooped and writhed now and faded flowers, and when Clare, creeping to the watercourse, would have bathed her burning eyes and lips, the water in the brook shrunk to a mere thread of turbid water.

But even so, she stooped and drank eagerly, for her very life demanded water, and the suffering in that fiery trance of earth, and sky, and sea.

After eating a few grapes, she strove to employ herself in the usual duties of the morning, but even the oppressive hangour that hung upon all her motions, she presently abandoned the attempt, and crept back to her cave, where she soon sunk into a heavy sleep.

At noon a faint breath stirred upon the waters, but it was such a breath as issues from the mouth of the mortal in the hour of fever, blasting whatever living thing it meets, and heralding a fiercer doom to such as dare the onward progress. And now toward the burnt dry rolled up great black clouds, masses of midnight rent and torn with the palpitating fires within.

The sun had left the sky, and in the west a white moon looked down affrighted upon waters that no longer obeyed her beat, then abandoning those horrible skies, the clouds, with a rushing, muttering at first, then pealing in sharp reverberations, tore through the heavy air, while tongues of lightning, like the blue sheen of swords, hissed in flaming bolts between the sea and sky.

Then with a sudden sweep fell the tempest, and before its fury, O God! what mortal could stand? Shrub, and lay cowering, long lines of foam upon his wrinkled front, and his turbulent waves crouched in a sullen despair.

And while all nature reeled about him, and the very foundations of the earth seemed shattered beneath his feet, Paul stood, with arms folded, undaunted, and raising his white face to heaven, cried aloud in the arrogance of his nature:

"Do your worst, O God! I defy you! Burn with, for it is Thine, but not the terror of Thy wrath, more than the pathos of her words, can move a son that is dead."

And even as the wild wind snatched the blasphemy from his lips and bore it into space, where a spoken word re-echoed through the universe, from heaven in anger of fire writing the answer of the Almighty, not upon the brow of the mad challenger but upon his heart.

As the fierce fire blinded his eyes, and the thunder wrapped him in bewildering chaos, Paul for the first time in all his life shrank with fear, the unbelief, the instant of his hardihood at his mood, crept cowering to his shelter, and by there silent, oppressed with dreary forebodings.

Then, marvelous, marvelous change. In that awful crash the tempest had reached its limit and now began slowly to sail over the horizon and be brought. The rain no longer lashed the trembling earth as the master's whip scourges the wild creature it has subdued, but fell in great tearful drops, solemn for some hours, and then ceased altogether.

The clouds exhausted of their lightnings began to congeal with the cold, and here and there allowed great wondering stars to peep between them, looking to see if earth and heaven still held their appointed places after this wild rebellion of nature.

Only the sea reasserting its forgotten power rose angrily as the wind died away, and called in great wails of clear green waters upon the island beach, where crashing thunderously they tossed their spray far inland, even to where the grim lion crouched warily, watching and waiting for the end as he had waited since the beginning.

The lion indeed, but the lion's head!

Morning came again in another guise from that of the former fearful dawn, and Paul Morgan, leaving his sodden shelter, stood bareheaded upon the beach and wondered at the new glory of Creation. But a dull fear was gnawing at his heart, not long to be soothed by the golden sunrise of the sunrise, the brilliant play of waves upon the shore or the fresh verdure of lawn and wood. He looked on all these things, but he scarcely turned, yet half reluctantly, to seek for Clare.

She was not in the lorn and disheveled bower, but this did not surprise him. She would be sleeping after the terrors of the night, and he climbed the hill with a rapid yet stealthy step, taking himself again and again that he should find her sleeping, yes, peacefully sleeping, safe from all harm but fright.

Reaching the cave, he raised his eager eyes and stood aghast, doubting his consciences, if this were indeed the place he sought.

The lion's form crouched before him, but the lion's head was gone, and as his eager eyes met the morning with uplifted gaze, looking sphynx-like over land and sea, waiting for the Edipus who should solve the problem of his doom, and slay him or set it free.

A blackened ruin, a splintered mass of fragments lay the lion's head, shivered by the force of the lightning that had descended upon the beast of prey that rebellious heart that not omnipotence itself had power to move him.

And then he stood as he gazed upon the ruin beneath which by hurried the past that he had hoped to reclaim, the future whose hope had that morning dawned upon him within his heart, and the present—the present lay before him, and pictured to his fancy Clare's mangled body crushed beneath those huge stones.

With a wild cry, with mad strength, Paul hurled himself upon the ruin, lifting, rolling, heaving with a power that was more than his human power until but one remained, one huge fragment imperfectly closing the mouth of the cave that had been Clare's prison enough for misery, or even a clear view of the interior of the cave.

Paul looked at it in despair, and yet with no change in his pale face, reaching his life against its inert resistance. One or the other should yield before he confessed himself vanquished or abandoned hope.

He was afraid to peer into the recesses of the cavern, afraid of the woful sight that those scattered rays might display, afraid that the strength he could might be shaken by horror. But in a voice whose hoarse tone jarred upon his own ear, he called dombingly:

"Clare!"

No answer, save the wild leap of waves upon the beach, and drawing his breath deeply, as one who has been stifled for days and shot, as in examining the position of the fragment, and considering what might be its most assailable point, he suddenly perceived a portion of a white hand gleaming in one of the slant rays that now penetrated the cave.

Hastily removing the earth at the base of the rock, until the crevice was sufficiently enlarged to admit his own hand, Paul grasped that other, and with a heart that for the first time was cold and pitiless, and lay as unresponsive in his warm grasp as his had lain upon it not a day before.

Dead! And Paul, in the heavy reaction of his hope, sank down, crushed and despairing, still holding that little hand in his, and idly toying with the fingers. There was a ring on one of them that he had given in exchange for the symbol of her ill-fated marriage. But when it was in his own hand, Paul saw that it was the antique signet, given with the words, "Love me, love me!" and in his grief had placed upon that finger on the night of their betrothal; and as he softly replaced it on the cold finger he heard a sound of that time came surging back upon his heart in a wild flood of forgotten hopes, and resolves, and longings; voices of the past, and the future, and he knew that here the innocent affection of the girl, the despairing love that the woman had laid at his feet but yesterday, and which he had spurned, the sudden deep broke up, and all the floodgates of his heart opened to that wild torrent of love and sorrow and penitence.

Bowing his head upon that little icy hand, Paul Morgan wept as only such men weep, and called upon her name.

"Clare! oh, my Clare! I love you! Do you hear me? I love you as I never loved you yet! Forgive me, Clare! Oh, my love, my love, my love, shall not leave me now! My God! my God! give me Clare, and take all the rest."

And Clare, with a long, low, loving woman, she would have stirred within her grave at the passion of that cry, the strong appeal of those words, for she heard him, and love is stronger than death, stronger than time or space.

But she was not dead, only swooning in the terror of her living entombment, as her lover's voice crept through the dulled senses and smote upon her heart, she stirred and smiled in her deep sleep.

And then, before she could even whisper his name, before she herself knew what had befallen her, Paul felt that the prayer was answered. He knew that she lived and would live, and springing to his feet, bent like a young Titan to his task, and though bone and sinew quailed and muscle gave way like superhuman effort, never paused to breathe, until the last fragment of the lion's head rolled crashing over, and Clare lay before him, pale, mangled, but with such love shining in her eyes as has served many a heart to wait and suffer, and forgive, and at the last crown itself with victory, as here had done.

* * * * * * *

"God made Himself an awful rose of dawn," whispered Clare Morgan, as she came softly behind her husband and leaned upon his arm to watch the glory of the morning broaden over the vast amphitheater at their feet. The mountain terrace on which they stood lay broad and level at either hand. Behind rose, summit upon summit, many colored hills, barren crags, and finally the solemn crest of an inaccessible mountain peak. In front the land, at the distance of the fourth of a mile, broke suddenly in a steep declivity, down whose rocky face plunged a broad torrent of sparkling waters. Hundreds of feet below lay the plain, with its sparse pine, its silk of scanty clearing and primeval forest, gemmed with lakelets and traversed by rapid rivers, until upon the opposite horizon arose another chain of bold hills, upon whose summit now rested the fringe of a gorgeous canopy of clouds, from within whose folds the sun was presently to appear.

At the broadest bend of the terrace stood a grove of gum trees and feathery mimosas, among whose branches screamed and clattered the gaudy and tuneless birds of an Australian forest. Beneath these trees rose the low walls of a primitive log-house, rudely constructed of the material of many of the appliances of civilization, but ample in its dimensions, and so buried in luxuriant grapevines, which, surmounting the roof, flaunted triumphant tendrils from the very chimney-top, that the eye of an observer would have failed to perceive many of the architectural deficiencies. At some little distance stood also a few primitive farm buildings, and eagerly nibbling the fresh herbage of their upland pasture, an immense flock of sheep sought their favorite feeding ground under charge of a stalwart shepherd and his dog.

"One should live a fuller and broader life here than in old New England with Aunt Clare," said Paul, passing his arm about his wife's waist, and drawing her close to him.

"It would be to the rather," said she doubtingly, "that such grand developments in nature dwarf the men who live among them. The Australian native is far inferior to the Aborigines of North America; and the new-comers, do you find these shepherds and gold diggers as noble as our Patriarch fathers?"

"What! faithful to your sterile hills and migrant plains, amid all the gorgeous growth, little Clare?" answered Paul, laughing. "But you are content? you do not pine for that far-off home?" asked he presently, as he searched her face for the answer.

It came from lip, and eye, and heart. "Where you are, Paul, there is my home; there am I content."

TREASURE IN HEAVEN.

FOUR doors its little baby hands—
This was a hope you had of old;
Fillet the brow with rosy bands,
And kiss its locks of shining gold.
Some where within the valley of years
Another hope may come like this;
But this poor babe is gone in tears,
With thin, white limbs, cold to your kiss.

In summer, a little harp of flowers,
In winter, a little drift of snow;
And this is all, through all the hours,
Of the promises perished long ago.
So every heart has some grave,
Close hidden under its joys and care,
Till o'er it cures of memory wave,
And leave the little headstone bare.

MEDUSA

CHATTER IV.

THE next morning, Gerald Neville watched the old serving-man out, he saw the two girls start in the direction of Kensington Gardens, and he determined once more to essay his fortune. Accordingly, he followed them, upon the little maid-of-all-work. He had not closed his eyes all night, and could not rest until he had acquired some definite information with regard to his neighbors.

He rang at the door, and Jane answered it.

"I am sure you're a goodnatured little puss," he said, giving her the halfcrown; "and you won't refuse to tell me who it was playing so beautifully on the piano-forte last night. Shadow open, and was listening all the evening; was it Miss Elizabeth?"

"Lor', no," said Jane, "that was Mr. William; he do play beautiful to be sure! I often listens myself."

"And was Mr. William, then, a visitor?"

"Why, to be sure is he," answered the girl; "he's Mr. Hannaman's own son, and he's here almost every evening."

"Oh, Mr. Hannaman's son, is he?" It was her brother, then, and he knew Jane's secret. "Must hurry over here having afterwards! Miss Elizabeth fell fast asleep in the moonlight."

"Yes, poor dear," said the girl, "that was Countess Vander, that wasn't Miss Elizabeth."

"No, no," said Edward Saville, impatiently, with a crowing of vexation. "I mean Miss Elizabeth, she fell lady in white."

"Jane!" interrupted the girl, "with all her hair down to her feet—well, that's Countess Vander's maid."

"Jane!" called a loud voice from within, and the consequence-striking tone vanished under the consequence-striking German woman, with a stern carework aspect, walked straight up to the street door, and shut it in his face.

Nothing daunted, he returned to the florist's, and having provided himself with another beautiful nosegay, left it at the house as he came back. He gave it to the old man-servant with a sovereign, and begged him to deliver it to Countess Vander, the lofty lady with the long fair hair. In about ten minutes his flowers were again returned to him, with the following note:

SIR—I must beg you to abandon a pursuit which is extremely annoying to me, and can only be productive of disappointment and unhappiness to yourself. Your attentions are not welcome to the lady to whom they are offered, and, in your own interest, I warn you not to continue them.

MARGARET HAUSMANN.

He saw that no support was to be hoped for from the old lady; but, not deterred by this severe little missive, resolved to see whether the younger woman were not more assailable, and could not be enlisted in his favor. Since the strange scene which he had been a witness to in the garden, he had returned with some degree of bitterness, and scorn of himself for his romance, to his first misgivings about the mysterious woman who had so bewitched him. The certainty of her light conduct had at last cut itself with a sharp pang into his heart; but with that certainty had slid in a much more positive hope than he had ever before ventured to indulge, and one that, as we have seen, led him to more open measures of pursuit than he had yet hazarded.

For two days he watched incessantly for an occasion of speaking to her, but in vain. The third morning brought him better luck, and he saw Miss Hausmann, at last, leave the house alone; here was the opportunity ready made for him. He took his hat and followed her at some distance; she went along the Bayswater road, until she came to the top of Oxford street, and prepared to cross over into Hyde Park. Edward Saville was close behind her now, and had made up his mind, as soon as they were in the Park, to address her. There was a tremendous double line of carts, cabs and omnibusses, and they were obliged to wait some little time in order to let them pass. At last there was a momentary opening, and Miss Hausman went across. She had not, however, perceived an omnibus which was coming down full tilt upon her.

"Go back! go back!" shouted the terrified people from both sides, who saw her danger. Bewildered by their cries, instead of going rapidly either back or forward, she hesitated fatally, and the next instant was knocked down by the pole of the omnibus. The driver, who was looking another way, was quite unable to pull up his horses in time, and she must infallibly have been run over had not Edward Saville, rushing forward, seized the bridle and violently backed the horses at his own peril, saving her from the death that, to the alarmed bystanders, had appeared all but inevitable. As it was, she was more frightened than hurt, but her ankle was badly sprained. He carried her in his arms to the first shop at hand, where she had a glass of water, and sat for a few moments to recover the shock. He then called a cab for her, and saw her to her own house.

When they arrived her foot was much worse; it gave her great pain, and she could not put it to the ground. Edward Saville had explained what had happened to the old man, who went to fetch his mistress. Great was her tribulation at hearing of her daughter's accident, but great was also her gratitude. Edward, assisted by the old man, carried Miss Hausmann into the drawing-room and placed her on a sofa, after which, laden with the heartfelt thanks of mother and daughter, he withdrew. About two hours later he received a message from the next house; Madame Hausmann wished to speak to him, if he would be kind enough to come and see her. She met him in the hall, and, drawing him into the little sitting-room, closed the door.

"You have been kind to my child, and done me a service I can never repay. You are rich, I am poor. I can never serve you but in one way only, and that is by telling you what I had thought never to tell to any soul alive. You must come here no more," she said; "forget Wanda—she is an ill-fated creature, who can but darken your young days. I have tried to warn you, but youth is mad, and won't be warned. Now listen, and judge what hope there is for you." She made him sit down, and then spoke as follows:

"We are from Bohemia. My husband was a doctor in the small town of Altheim, and we lived there till he died. When I lost him we left the town (I and my three children), and came to live again in the country, not far from the little village of Wallendorf, where I was born, and had passed all my childhood.

"We lived in a lonely cottage in a very wild spot, on the borders of a forest. Elizabeth, Francis, little William and myself. Wanda is not my daughter, she is my foster-child only. We were tenants of Count Berchtold, a rich, powerful lord, who had property all over the country. About four miles from us he had a castle, and lands, and great woods, that stretched as far as our cottage. This castle was always empty; he would come there for a day or two once in three or four years, for the shooting; but it was never inhabited except at such times. When he was in the country he lived himself in another great castle which he had, about fourteen miles from our part of the world, and about seven from the town where my husband was established.

"The count was a proud man with a heart of stone; the only thing he cared about was the greatness of his name, and the despair of his life was, that though he had been married many years, there was no heir. The countess was barren, and his great name would die out, and the property would all go to a female cousin, and so pass away from the family. He hated his wife, poor lady, and never went near her. There was no insult he did not heap upon her for this sad misfortune of her childlessness.

"My husband knew her; he had been sent for once in a hurry to attend her; she had had a fall, and broken her arm. They did say, that in one of his mad rages the count had thrown her against a marble table, and that so her arm had got broken. I don't know how that may be; he had so ill a name, and was so feared and hated, that the worst case was always made out against him; there was no need of that; he was bad enough, anyhow. What perhaps gave a color of truth to the story was, that as soon as ever she got well, she sent for her brother, who took her straight away with him to Prague, where she remained, and always after lived separate from her husband. As for him, he used to spend most of his time at Vienna, leading an awful life with companions as wicked as himself; he delighted in being surrounded with wild young men, and never rested till he had made them as godless as he was. About seven years after I married and settled at Altheim; and while the count was away, travelling about in foreign parts, the countess died. She had not been in her grave four months, when a letter arrived for Mr. Hartmann, the count's agent, who lived in Altheim, announcing his speedy arrival; he had married again, and was going to bring his bride home, and the house was to be got ready without delay. We were astonished at the news, for the count was fifty-five years old, and no one had ever thought he would have married again.

"Shortly after this some of the servants began to arrive at the castle, and by-and-bye reports got spread abroad that it was a young lady of seventeen whom he was going to bring to that dreary home. There was a great deal of talk about it; some said that it was a good thing for the country that my lord should come back, and that the castle should be inhabited; others said that he and his profligate companions and loose servants did more harm than good in the place, spreading corruption; moreover, he had no bowels for the poor, and oppressed and ground down all who were dependent upon him. But we all were sorry for the poor young lady who had come so far away from her own land, and her own people, to live amongst us.

"When my lord's secretary, Johann Wild, arrived at last to see that all was straight, he told us more about it. The young countess was a Polish lady of great family, but without any fortune; and her parents had driven her into this marriage because the count, who had fallen in love with her for her beauty, had consented to take her without a dower. Mr. Wild told me they had had sad work to bring her to it, and that she looked more dead than alive on the wedding-day, which did not please the count.

"They arrived late one night in May, and the next morning my husband was sent for up to the castle. The countess was tired with her journey, and had a slight attack of fever. Count Berchtold met him on the stairs, and took him at once into her room; she was very lovely, and quite young, as they had said. The count took him up to the bedside; her arms were lying outside upon the coverlet; he took up one of them, and while he felt it all over, said to my husband: 'Look at her! There are arms! There are shoulders!' The poor little lady colored scarlet, and turned her head away, but the count only laughed, and went on: 'See to her, doctor, see to her, and tell me what it is that ails her; if it is the son she means to give, that shall be good news for you as well as me.'

"My husband had trouble to get him out of the room, but at last he went, and then the poor child burst into tears, and sobbed as if her heart would break. She was in a frightful state of excitement, and could not be persuaded to speak for a long while; but by degrees, seeing how patient and gentle my husband was, she quieted down at last. We afterwards heard that she had not known of the recent death of the former countess, and that, on arriving, she had received a great shock at finding all the servants, assembled in the hall to meet her, clad in the deepest mourning: she told my husband besides, that coming from a smiling country, and belonging to a large family, the loneliness and desolate look of the castle had frightened her: she was evidently terribly afraid, too, of her lord; this she did not say to him, but my husband saw it.

"They had already been married more than two months, and there seemed to be little doubt as to her condition: the count was wild for joy when my husband told him this; he sent for some rare Hungarian wine, and tossed down glass after glass, making my husband drink with him to the health of the heir. My husband had seen in this short visit how nervous and excitable the timid young wife was, and tried to impress upon the count's mind that gentleness and perfect quiet were absolutely necessary for her health and for that of her child; but teach a wild beast to be gentle! The house was soon filled again with the riotous guests, and my husband was repeatedly called in to see the countess, whose senses seemed actually to be leaving her, so great was her distress at finding herself helpless and alone in such strange company. She had been taken straight out of the convent to be married, and this wild life put her beside herself with terror. Her husband, who soon had got wearied of her, angered by her refusals to join in his godless revelry, used to jeer and mock at her before his servants, and often would force her, ill as she was, to come down and assist at his orgies. Her nerves were completely shaken, and my husband began seriously to fear for her reason.

"At last her hour of trouble came. My husband was sent for early in the evening, and finding her state alarming, remained with her all night. The count had been drinking very deep, and they tried in vain to keep him out of the apartment: he would be there—opposition only infuriated him, and increased his wife's danger. After many hours of dreadful suffering, towards five in the morning her baby was born. 'Show me my son!' shouted the count, springing from his chair to the bedside. It was a feeble, puny, wailing little girl. In a paroxysm of speechless rage, he rushed at his helpless wife, and shaking her violently, dashed her back upon the bed. My husband called for help, and they forced the count away from the room. The poor thing had fainted. No nurse had been provided, for she had meant to nurse her little one herself, and there it lay, hungry, and wailing piteously, by its mother's side. My husband took the baby in his arms, and going with it to the count, asked him if he would let me have the child to nurse. 'Have her!' he said, savagely, 'yes, and keep her too—take the little screaming wretch away, and never let me see its hated face again!' And so Wanda (she was named Wanda after her mother) was brought to me, and I nursed her at the same time with my own Wilhelm, who had been born just three weeks before.

"The countess never recovered that shock. Fainting-fit succeeded fainting-fit for days together, and when at last they left her, her wits were gone. She was very gentle and harmless, but rarely ever spoke, and seemed to have gone into a kind of hopeless melancholy. I saw her once, when she was still quite young; we had been staying with my mother at Wallendorf, and we drove through the grounds and past the castle on our road back to Altheim. My husband showed her to me; she was sitting at an open window on an upper floor of the house, looking out over the long avenue and the dreary flats beyond.

"She was dressed in black, and was leaning back, propped up in her chair. She looked very fearful, like an old blighted child, with a quantity of white hair hanging down, all uncombed and uncared for, about her face and neck. I did not sleep for many a night after seeing her, for thinking of that dreadful withered child's face, with its mad, miserable eyes, and the unnatural snow-white hair. As we went by she jumped, and danced, and screamed to us, and her women had trouble to hold her. She had never gone over the threshold of the door from the hour of her confinement, and passed her whole life at that window, looking out over the long avenue to the miles and miles of level plain that stretched beyond, as if she expected to see, as a speck, from far away, the carriage coming nearer and nearer with long lost friends, who would take her from this miserable place. But she had been for some years out of the world, and no one remembered her but death. My husband saw her die—no one else was near to help her; she was taken with some sort of fit one morning, and they sent for him. He saw there was no hope, and thought it was his duty to write and warn the count, who was at Vienna, that she could not last long.

"One dreary night in December, my husband was watching with her, and so was the good Liesel, the nurse he had brought for her from the town, for she had no proper attendants, only some of the peasants belonging to the estate, to wait upon her. The count had sent no answer, and they thought he might arrive at any moment. It was just about one in the morning, when a great gust of wind rattled down all the chimneys, and the dogs began suddenly to bark and clamor, and my husband fancied he heard the sound of wheels driving up to the door. He looked round at the countess, and saw that she had heard it too, and that in some strange way it troubled and distressed her, for he could hear her heart beat, and she turned her poor eyes upon him, full of an anguish that it went to his soul to look upon. He sent Liesel down to see if any one had arrived, and took hold of the poor lady's hand to comfort and quiet her, but she was getting more and more agitated, and gasped fearfully for breath, which she did not seem able to get.

"A quick, heavy tread came up the stairs, the door was thrown open, and Count Berchtold entered. She knew him at once, though she had not set eyes on him for all those years, and in her fright and agony she flung herself wildly out of bed before they could stop her, and fell upon the floor. My husband rushed to pick her up, but she just gave one struggle and a little sigh, and with with it her dismal life had passed away. The count gave orders for a magnificent funeral, but he did not stay to see them executed. All the carriages and horses from that castle and all the carriages and horses from the other castle, near Wallendorf, came out for the occasion, and there were torches and music to carry her to the family vault in the grounds. Numbers streamed out from the town to look at the sight. I went with my husband and my brother-in-law and his wife, but we were all of us strangers as it were, and it was sad to see the long procession of mourning-coaches and family coaches going along stately and slow, quite empty. I have often wondered if any of her family ever knew the sad end she had made, so far away from them all."

"HAMLET" AT THE WINTER GARDEN.

THE memorable dramatic event of the present season in New York is the production of "Hamlet," at the Winter Garden, with Mr. Edwin Booth in the principal character of that sublime tragedy. For several months prior to its first performance—on the night of the 26th of November—this magnificent pageant was in course of preparation. Mr. William Stuart, the manager of the Winter Garden—whose taste and experience in theatrical matters amply qualify him for the difficult and delicate task—has superintended the preliminary labors. Mr. J. G. Hanley, one of the few excellent stage managers in America, has rendered efficient aid in this fascinating enterprise. The scene painters, Messrs. Thorne and Witham, the carpenters, the costumers—all have labored with energy and skill, and their labors have not been in vain. On the night of its first representation, before a large, brilliant and singularly appreciative audience, the success of the enterprise was abundantly assured. Since then the tragedy has been performed every night, with still increasing popular success. It is not too much to say that its accessories are perfect. We doubt if "Hamlet" has, at any time, or in any country, been put upon the stage with such entirely appropriate and altogether beautiful scenery. No drama affords ampler scope for artistic as well as dramatic effect; and, in this instance, no opportunity for such effect has been overlooked or slighted. The architecture of ancient Denmark, the romantic castle of Elsinore, its lofty, serried battlements without, its gorgeous tapestries and ponderous furniture within—all these are faithfully reproduced, and adroitly blended, in scenery both correct and gorgeous, satisfying at once the intellect and the imagination. Of the fourteen scenes, which are entirely new, the most impressive are the view of the Battlements of Elsinore Castle, the Grand Hall, Staircase, and Theatre in the Palace, and the Churchyard, by Moonlight. The first of these is reproduced in a sketch on page 220. It does not, of course, preserve the felicity of color nor adequately realise the contrasts of light and shade, which make this scene so beautiful and thrilling upon the stage; but it preserves the form of the original, and partakes its weird and sombre atmosphere. The action included in this scene is the interview between Hamlet and his Father's Ghost. No situation in the whole wide extent of dramatic literature is so fraught with the elements of sublimity, awe and terror. The night is cloudy and chill. The Prince, forewarned of the appearance of his father's spirit, seeks the battlements, accompanied by his friend Horatio, and by Marcellus, to confront the dread figure of the disembodied king. It is close upon midnight when they reach the appointed place. A noise of revelry is heard afar off, within the palace, heightening, by contrast, the lonesome, thrilling suspense of the watchers on the walls. A moment more, and the spectre of the buried monarch, dreadful in shadowy armor, glides across the battlements, and beckons the Prince to follow it "to a more removed ground." We may imagine the horrible struggle of nature against the terror of the supernatural, in the soul of the man of genius, already wasted by grief, prone to insanity, and now crazed by this tremendous visitation. But Hamlet is strong, even in this ordeal. He breaks away from his friends, and follows the spirit of his murdered father, till presently, face to face, they stand together, and alone, upon a distant and lonely portion of the battlements. Then, when nature can endure no more, the Prince conjures the phantom:

"Whither wilt thou lead me? Speak! I'll go no further."

It is this climax which is illustrated in the scene that our Artist has reproduced.

The acting of Mr. Booth at this point is, beyond description, intense and affecting. All the terror of the situation, softened by filial love, and restrained by manly fortitude, is expressed in his countenance, and in his nerved yet nerveless body. The Ghost also, is personated with imaginative sympathy, by Mr. Charles Kemble Mason. We do not recall a finer passage in acting. It teaches us the truth of the poet's words, in their fullest signification, that

> "By the mighty actor brought
> Illusion's perfect triumphs come;
> Verse ceases to be airy thought,
> And sculpture to be dumb."

NOVEL APPARATUS

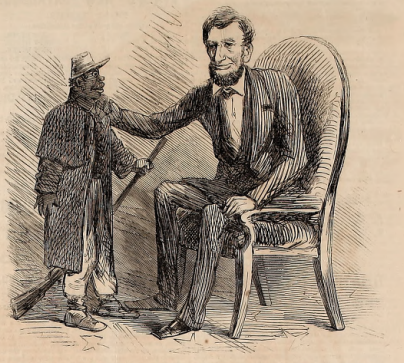
For Measuring the Speed of Projectiles.

SCIENCE, in this age, has systematized every department of war, and, for that matter, every department of peace, as well. Men no longer, as in those chivalric ages beloved of the disciples of Mr. Carlyle, go into battle, wielding the ponderous axe, and wearing iron pots upon their heads, and coats and trousers of the same unrelenting material. Nor do our warriors, like the ancient Britons, drive into the thick of the fight, in chariots, with scythe-armed wheels, to mow down their adversaries. The day of clumsy devices is past. Whatever we do now-a-days, in the way of war, is done cleanly and quickly—or, as tradesmen say, "with neatness and despatch." The evidence of this is seen in our terrible engines of war, whereby, though the immediate destruction of life is more extensive than of old, yet, in the long run, war is made less bloody, and much less continuous. In old times, when men began to fight, they seemed never to know when to leave off, but continued hacking one another to pieces, year after year, throughout a whole generation. Now they conclude their quarrels with scientific precision—and science never wastes time. One of her expedients, indeed, to economize it is the motive of these very remarks. The reader will find that expedient illustrated on page 220. The apparatus there depicted, for measuring the velocity of projectiles, is now in use at Woolwich and Shoeburyness, in England, and is found to work very successfully. It was invented by Major Naver, of the Belgian Artillery, and its special excellence consists in its power of accurate measurement of very small spaces of time. The scientific principle upon which the apparatus acts is simple and familiar, though the details of its construction are somewhat complex. The measurement is effected by means of a graduated arc, and a pendulum—the oscillations of the latter being marked upon the former. These implements are shown in our sketch. The pendulum, prior to an observation, is upheld, at the left end of the arc, by contact with a piece of soft iron, magnetised by an electric current, through an electric magnet, at the point of support. Two insulated wires are connected with this magnet, which extend to a distance of 200 yards, and join their ends, around an upright screen, 30 yards in front of a cannon, making the electric circuit complete. Another part of the apparatus, shown in our sketch a little to the left of the arc, is called the conjunctor. An electric magnet, at its top, holds a weight, suspended above a cup of mercury. This magnet is also connected, by insulated wires, with a second screen 120 feet in front of the first, or 150 feet from the cannon which is to be discharged. These wires, being insulated by gutta-percha, may be either buried in the ground, or hung on posts as in our picture.

Before explaining the operation of this apparatus, we should premise that the pendulum has a duplicate, or index, in its rear, so attached to it, by a light spring, that its motion must be simultaneous. Behind the arc, and connected with the conjunctor, is a large electro magnet, which has power to act upon this index, by attraction, when magnetised. The business of the conjunctor is to magnetise this at the proper moment.

When the cannon is fired, the shot, crashing through the first screen, severs the wires and destroys the electric current which has hitherto sustained the pendulum. This, therefore, immediately begins to fall, accompanied of course by its duplicate. The ball goes hurtling on, and crashes through the second screen, severing the wires that connect with the conjunctor. The disabled magnet, of course, drops its weight into the cup of mercury, wherein this is instantly pressed down, by a steel blade, completing an electric circuit which magnetises the large electro-magnet in the rear of the arc. The latter takes instantaneous effect upon the duplicate pendulum, and clamps it to the arc. The point thereby marked shows the time occupied by the projectile in passing through the screens, minus the time necessary for the fall of the weight in the conjunctor—which time is marked by still another part of the apparatus, called the disjunctor. The disjunctor appears in our picture at the extreme left of the operator's table. The time occupied by the projectile in passing through the screens being divided by the distance over which it travels, gives the velocity of its movement. The operation of this apparatus is almost instantaneous, and its precision is described as absolutely wonderful.

NOVEL ELECTRIC APPARATUS FOR MEASURING THE SPEED OF CANNON SHOT, OR OTHER PROJECTILES.



SCENE FROM "HAMLET," AS PERFORMED AT THE WINTER GARDEN, N. Y.—HAMLET ENCOUNTERING HIS FATHER'S GHOST, ACT I., SCENE 5.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, ALBERT BERGHAUS.

TOPICS OF THE HOUR.

NORTH AND SOUTH.

"Now, Jeffy, when you think you have had enough of this, say so, and I'll leave off."—(Vide President's Message.)

UNCLE ABE—"Sambo, you are not handsome, any more than myself, but as to sending you back to your old master, I'm not the man to do it—and what's more, I won't."—(Vide President's Message.)

AN EXPLANATION WITH BRAZIL.

UNCLE SAM (to Plenipotentiary)—"See here, my sailor boys aren't posted on matters of etiquette, I'll tell 'em how bad they've been. As to the Florida, there she lies, many a fathom deep. If her owner, Jeff, wants her, let him come here and dive for her."

DOWN IN GEORGIA—SHERMAN'S MARCH

DARKEY—"Oh, massa, dere's Sherman's army coming up to de front stoop."
MASTER—"Well, Cæsar, take this gun and keep 'em off till I'm well away."

"La, Pompey! see de way de New York white folks frizz dere hair. Fust is dey want to look like colored people."
POMP—"Yah—dat so—bimeby dey stain dere faces black out o' compliment to us."

THE FUEL QUESTION—SCENE: A TENEMENT HOUSE, N. Y.
TERENCE—"What for, Biddy, does ye want them balusters?"
BRIDGET—"Sure for making a foire. D'ye think I'd buy kindling wood while there's balusters?"

THE GOOD OLD WINTERS.—In 401 the Black Sea was entirely frozen over. In 763 not only the Black Sea but the Straits of Dardanelles were frozen over; the snow in some places rose 50 feet high. In 822 the great rivers of Europe, the Danube, the Elbe, etc., were so hard frozen as to bear heavy wagons for a month. In 860 the Adriatic was frozen. In 991 everything was frozen, the crops totally failed, and famine and pestilence closed the year. In 1067 most of the travellers in Germany were frozen to death on the roads. In 1134 the Po was frozen from Cremona to the sea, the wine sacks were burst, and the trees split by the action of the frost, with immense noise. In 1236 the Danube was frozen to the bottom, and remained long in that state. In 1316 the crops wholly failed in Germany; wheat, which some years before sold in England at 6s. the quarter, rose to £2. In 1308 the crops failed in Scotland, and such a famine ensued that the poor were reduced to feed on grass, and many perished miserably in the fields. The successive winters of 1432-3-4 were uncommonly severe. In 1368 the wine distributed to the soldiers was cut with hatchets. In 1683 it was excessively cold. Most of the hollies were killed. Coaches drove along the Thames, the ice of which was 11 inches thick. In 1709 occurred the cold winter; the frost penetrated three yards into the ground. In 1715 booths were erected on the Thames. In 1744 and 1745 the strongest ale in England, exposed to the air, was covered, in less than 15 minutes, with ice an eighth of an inch thick. In 1809, and again in 1812, the winters were remarkably cold. In 1814 there was a fair on the frozen Thames.

FIRST PREMIUM
$5 SEWING MACHINE! $5

A BEAUTIFUL PRESENT
FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Just Out. THE FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, a most Wonderful and Elegantly Constructed Novelty; is NOISELESS in operation, uses the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, sews with DOUBLE OR SINGLE THREAD. Makes the Running Stitch more perfect and regular than by hand. Will Gather, Hem, Ruffle, Shirr, Tuck, Run up Breadths, &c., &c.; requires no Lubrication or Change of Stitch—IS NOT LIABLE TO GET OUT OF ORDER, and will last a LIFETIME, and is the prettiest and most useful Christmas Gift you can buy. Read the following:

"For the Dressmaker it is invaluable; for the Household it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Ladies' Book

"At length the desideratum so long sought for, combining usefulness, speed and cheapness, has been gained The simple structure of this compact and beautiful little Machine will at once command attention, and the speed, certainty and ease with which the work is done will make it THE FAVORITE with the ladies."—MRS. ANN S. STEVENS, in N. Y. Weekly.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.

This ingenious and useful little Machine is perfect in its construction, and has none of the faults of the High-Priced Sewing Machines. No one will pay from $50 to $100 for a Sewing Machine when this one can be bought for the small sum of $5.

This wonderful Machine was awarded the FIRST PREMIUM by the New York State Fair, showing its superiority over all others.

All imitations of this GENUINE ARTICLE are liable, as infringements on the Patent.

☞Agents wanted all over the world,

Single Machines sent to any address per Express, packed in box on receipt of $5.

Address all orders to
FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
102 Nassau Street, N. Y.

A Young English Lady wishes a situation in a respectable family, to take charge of one or two young children, teach the rudiments of English and assist in plain sewing: references given. Address J. T. H., at this office.

PERRY'S MOTH
AND
FRECKLE LOTION.

CHLOASMA, or MOTH PATCHES, LENTIGO, or FRECKLES, Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion, as the discolored spots on the skin show more strongly on blondes than on brunettes, but they contribute greatly in marring the beauty of either; and anything that will remove them without injuring the skin in texture or color, would be considered a great achievement in medical science. DR. B. C. PERRY, who devotes all his time to diseases of the skin, has discovered an infallible remedy for the removal of Moth, Freckles and other discolorations, without injury to its color or texture. Prepared only by DR. B. C. PERRY, Dermatologist, 49 Bond St., New York. WEEKS & POTTER, 170 Washington St., Boston, Wholesale Agents for New England. Sold by all Druggists. Call for Perry's Moth and Freckle Lotion. Price $2 per bottle. 479-82

☞Hair Uprooted ☜

From all parts of the body in five minutes, without injury to the skin, by "UPHAM'S DEPILATORY POWDER." Mailed to any address for $1 25, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. 482-94

☞Lost Manhood Restored,☜

Speedily and effectually, by the use of "DR. LA PORTE's LIFE ELIXIR." Cure guaranteed. Price $2. Sent postpaid, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 482-94

☞Asthma Cured.☜

Relief guaranteed in ten minutes, and a permanent cure effected by the use of "UPHAM'S ASTHMA CURE." Cases of from ten to twenty years' standing yield at once to its influence. Price $2. Sent postpaid to any address, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 482-94

Holiday Presents!

Prince's Improved Protean Fountain PEN. Satisfaction guaranteed. Absolutely incorrodible; all kinds of ink can be used; the flow is perfect; once filling writes ten hours, it is compact for the pocket, and will please the most fastidious penman. Send stamp for Circular. JOHN S. PURDY & CO., Proprietors and Sole Manufacturers, 335 Broadway, N. Y.

ADVANTAGE OR MARKED
PLAYING CARDS.

I have constantly on hand and for sale every style of MARKED BACK PLAYING CARDS. These Cards, when learned, can be told by the back as well as the face. Full and complete instructions forwarded with each pack. Marked Cards, $12 per doz., $100 per gross. Single pack sent by mail for $2. Send all orders to
C. BRIGGS, Chicago, Ill.,
482-6 P. G. Drawer, 6308.

☞JUST OUT.☜

And sent FREE on receipt of stamp,

EVANS'S NEW CATALOGUE
For 1865.

(Eleventh year of the Enterprise.)

NEW BOOKS, NEW GIFTS.
NEW BOOKS, NEW GIFTS.
NEW BOOKS, NEW GIFTS.

Books for Soldiers, Books for Sailors, Books for Civilians, Books for Everybody; Historical, Biographical, Religious, Scientific, Musical, and Miscellaneous Books in every department of literature. Albums and Presentation Books, Card Pictures of all the Celebrities.

A Gift worth from 50 cents to $100 with each Book!

All Books sold at publishers' regular prices, with liberal inducements to persons forming Clubs.

Send your orders for the NEW CATALOGUE and any book you may want to the ORIGINAL GIFT BOOK SALE. (Instituted by G. G. Evans, in 1854). Orders promptly filled and satisfaction guaranteed. Address
482-5 G. G. EVANS, 630 Chestnut St., Phila.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS!

GREAT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION
OF
Superior Pianofortes, Melodeons, Gold Watches, Diamond Rings, Elegant Jewelry and Silver Ware,

Worth $500,000!

New York Gift Association,
599 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Distribution is made in the following manner:

CERTIFICATES, naming each Article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, which are well mixed. One of these Envelopes, containing the Certificate or order for some Article, will be delivered at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of 25 cents. On receiving the Certificate the purchaser will see what Article it draws, and its value, and can then send ONE DOLLAR and receive the Article named, or can choose any other one Article on our List of the same value.

☞ Purchasers of our SEALED ENVELOPES may in this manner obtain AN ARTICLE WORTH FROM ONE TO FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS FOR ONE DOLLAR, which they need not pay until it is known what is drawn and its value. Entire satisfaction guaranteed in all cases. NO BLANKS! You must get the value of your money.

Six Certificates for $1; thirteen for $2.

AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamp for a Circular. All letters should be addressed
T. BENTON & CO., Box 5567, P. O., New York.

O'DOR! O'DOR!!

DR. BRIGGS'S
GOLDEN O'DOR

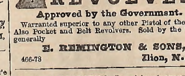
Will force a Beautiful Set of Whiskers or Moustaches on the Smoothest face in five weeks, AND NO HUMBUG!

Also, HAIR ON BALD HEADS in eight weeks.

I receive RECOMMENDATIONS most every day: Testimonials of thousands.

I will send my Golden O'Dor by mail, sealed and postpaid for $1 25. ☞WARRANTED.☜

Send all orders to
DR. C. BRIGGS, P. O. Drawer 6308, Chicago, Ill.
482-6



Stop! Stop! Stop!

Full instructions, by which any person can master the curious art of Ventriloquism in a few hours and make a world of fun. Sent by mail for 50 cents.
482-3 Address DR. FRANKLIN, Calhoun, Ill.

Gayest of the Gay!

Transparent Playing Cards, used same as common cards (52 French Pictures). Sample pack, by mail, $1 15; $10 per dozen packs. Also marked Cards, 40 kinds, $1 50 per pack. Address
000 D. HEMMETTE, 58 Liberty Street, N. Y.

REMINGTON'S

ARMY AND NAVY REVOLVER!

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
466-78 Ilion, N. Y.

$70 A MONTH! I want Agents everywhere, at $70 a month, expenses paid, to sell Fifteen Articles, the best selling ever offered. Full particulars free. Address OTIS T. GAREY, Biddeford, Maine.
479-491

Look! Look! Look!

My Golden Compound will force the Beard to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Price 50 cents or three for $1.
482-3 Address DR. FRANKLIN, Calhoun, Ill.

False Moustaches.

MOUSTACHES 50 cents and $1; GOATEES 50 cents and $1; IMPERIALS 50 cents. Sent, postpaid. Send stamp for Circulars and Great Curiosities that every one should have. Address
C. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Book of Wonders tells how to make CIDER without apples or any other fruit. It also contains the Hunter's Secret, how to catch Fish and all kinds of Game; how to make all kinds of Liquors; all kinds of Onguents and Curling Fluids; Gambling Exposed; Ventriloquism Made Easy; Information of Importance to Ladies; how to gain the Love of any one, &c., &c., &c. Sent, securely sealed, for 25 cents.
Address Box 5057,
482-5 P. O., New York.

12 kinds of Album Gem Pictures in 7 Oil Colors for 50 cents. Agents wanted.
J. L. G. PIERPONT,
37 and 39 Nassau Street, N. Y.

GOLD PENS
FOR THE MILLION!

On receipt of the following sums, we will send, by mail, or as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens, selecting the same according to the description, namely:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES,

For 50 cts. a No. 2 pen; for 75 cts. a No. 3 pen; for $1 a No. 4 pen; for $1 25 a No. 5 pen; for $1 50 a No. 6 pen.

The same Pens, in SILVER PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 No. 2 pen; for $1 25 No. 3 pen; for $1 50 No. 4 pen; for $2 No. 5 pen; for $2 25 No. 6 pen.

These pens are stamped THE IMPERIAL PEN, and are well finished and fine writing Gold Pens, with good iridium points, although they are unwarranted, and cannot be exchanged.

First quality 14 carat, Warranted Gold Pens.

Our name (American Gold Pen Co., N. Y.), is stamped on all pens of this grade, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accidents.

Second quality Gold Pens.

These Pens are all stamped THE NATIONAL PEN, with the initials of our Firm, A. G. P. Co., and are carefully made, having the same points as our first quality Pens. The only great difference being in the quality of the gold.

Gold Pens without Cases.

For $1 00 a No. 1 pen 1st qual., or a No. 2 pen 2d qual.
For $1 25 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 3 pen 2d qual.
For $1 75 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $2 00 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $2 50 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $3 25 a No. 6 pen 1st qual. For $4 50 No. 7 pen; $5 75 No. 8 pen; $10 00 No. 12 pen; all 1st quality.

The same Gold Pens, in Solid Silver Extension Cases, with Pencils.

For $2 00 a No. 1 pen 1st qual., or a No. 2 pen 2d qual.
For $2 25 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 3 pen 2d qual.
For $2 75 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $3 50 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $4 50 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $5 50 a No. 6 pen 1st quality.

Gold Pens, 1st and 2d qual., in Silver Ebony Desk Holders and Morocco Cases.

For $2 25 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $2 50 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $3 20 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 8 pen 2d qual.
For $4 00 a No. 6 pen 1st quality. For $5 50 a No. 7 pen. For $6 75 a No. 8 pen. For $12 00 a No. 1 pen; all first quality.

A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $15, if sent to one address, at one time; 15 per cent. on $25; 20 per cent. on $40.

All remittances by mail, Registered, are at our risk, to all who enclose 20 cents extra for registering. We guarantee the safe delivery of the goods.

Circulars of all our new styles, with Engravings of exact sizes, and prices, sent upon receipt of stamp, if desired. Pens repointed for 50 cents, by mail.

AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO.,
000 No. 200 Broadway, N. Y.

Dr. Talbot's Concentrated Medical
PINEAPPLE CIDER

is a PREVENTIVE of SICKNESS. The experience that Dr. Talbot has had for the last Twenty-five years convinces him that it is time the public had an article offered that will prevent sickness. The article offered is Dr. Talbot's Medicated Pineapple Cider, designed for all classes, old and young. It is not new to the Doctor, but is entirely new to the public. One quart bottle will last a well person one year. This is rather a new mode of doctoring; nevertheless it will save millions from being sick. Is it not better to pay three dollars a year to keep from being sick, than to pay ten or twenty dollars in doctor's bills, and as much more for the loss of time and the inconvenience of being sick? To prevent sickness, use as follows: Add one teaspoonful of Medicated Pineapple Cider to a tumbler of cold water, and drink the first thing after you rise in the morning, and the same before you retire at night. It will increase the strength and give vigor and action to the system. A celebrated New York merchant, who has made a thorough trial of the Pineapple Cider, assures Dr. Talbot that he gained ten pounds of flesh in one month at the first trial. He continues its use as above directed, and finds it very beneficial; says it has proved an entire preventive to sickness in his case. Also, another well-known gentleman in New York has used the Medicated Cider constantly for ten years, and has not been sick one day during that time.

Price $3 per bottle (full quart); pints, $2; half-pints, $1. One quart bottle, two pint bottles, or four half-pint bottles, sent free by Express on receipt of price. All orders should be addressed to

B. T. BABBITT, Sole Agent,
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., N. Y
474-499

CHASE'S CHEMICAL COMPOUND,

For the Beard. One bottle will force a vigorous growth of hair upon the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks. Testimonials of thousands given. Circulars mailed free. Warranted as represented or money returned. Price $1, or four bottles for $3. Sent sealed and postpaid. Address S. S. CHASE, P. O. Drawer 359, Cohoes, N. Y. 473-90

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS

BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDESMAIDS' SETS, OSTRICH FEATHERS AND PARIS FLOWERS,

At TUCKER'S, 759 Broadway.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PIERRE BIBON, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

Old Eyes Made New!

A pamphlet directing how to speedily restore sight and give up spectacles, without aid of doctor or medicine. Sent by mail, free, on receipt of 10 cents. Address
E. B. FOOTE, M. D.,
466eow 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

Hoora, Boys, Sporting Gents and Everybody else. Send 25 cents to Barry Gray and get the great Secret how to entrap all kinds of animals; also, how to draw all kinds of game into snares. Sent by HARRY GRAY, of Somers, Tolland Co., Conn.

$7 OFFICER'S WATCH. $9

Our Whole Stock of Imported Watches, suitable for CHRISTMAS and NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS, being of rich and novel designs, are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale rates.

AN ELEGANT WATCH in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases, Richly Engraved, Turned Centre, Carved Balance Bridge, English Full Plate Jewelled Movements, adjusted Regulator, Spring Bolt, Spade Hands and Fine Enameled White Dial, a serviceable article in running order, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and a Gent's Handsome Vest Chain and beautiful

MINIATURE GOLD LOCKET!

to match, with Double Cases, Box and Glass for Two Likenesses. A Beautiful Holiday Present. Sent by mail to any address for only $9.

A NEAT SILVER WATCH, especially adapted for Army use, in Heavy Double Cases, Small Size, same as the above, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and Gent's Vest Chain, Engraved Double Case Locket, etc. Sent by mail to any address for only $7.

The Imperial Watch,

Containing a Rare and Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Effects, combining within its cases and attached to its machinery a beautiful and correct working THERMOMETER, an accurately adjusted Mariner's Compass in miniature, sunk in Dial, and a Reliable Calendar, indicating day of month, week, etc., in Case, rendering this Watch a perfect STORM, HEAT and TIME INDICATOR. The beautiful machinery of this valuable Watch is encased in Finely Finished DOUBLE HUNTING, Magic Spring 19 Line Cases (the outer cases being of fine 18 Carat Gold, inner cases of Solid Gold Composite), Richly Engraved top and bottom, with Panel for Name, Turned Nerl, movable Pendant Bow, and Fancy Push Spring. Genuine English Improved Jewelled Action, M. J. Tobias movements, Polished Cap and Doome Self-acting Click, Equal Balance, Independent Actions, Fine White Dials, Polished Steel Cut Bands, and is an Exact Imitation of a $100 watch, and used by the ROYAL ENGINEERS and Officers of THE BRITISH ARMY. None Genuine unless bearing our private trade mark. Price per single one, all complete, by mail, $20.

CATELY BROTHERS, Sole Importers,
102 Nassau St., N. Y. Established 1855.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION!
250,000
Watches, Chains, Diamond Rings, Etc.
WORTH OVER
One Million Dollars!
All to be Sold for One Dollar Each!!

WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE! NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO RECEIVE!

Splendid List of Articles! All to be Sold for $1 each!

		EACH.
250	Gents' Gold Hunting-case Watches	$50 to $150
250	Ladies' Gold and Enameled-case Watches	35 " 70
500	Gents' Hunting-case Silver Watches	35 " 70
200	Diamond Rings	50 " 100
2,000	Gold Vest and Neck Chains	15 " 30
3,000	" " " "	4 " 6
3,000	Gold Oval Band Bracelets	4 " 8
5,000	Chased Gold Bracelets	5 " 10
2,000	Chatelaine Chains & Guard Chains	5 " 20
7,000	Solitaire and Gold Brooches	4 " 10
2,000	Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 " 6
5,000	Coral, Opal and Emerald Brooches	4 " 8
5,000	Mosaic, Jet, Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 " 8
7,500	Coral, Opal & Emerald Ear Drops	4 " 6
4,000	California Diamond Breast Pins	2 50 " 10
3,000	Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys	2 50 " 8
4,000	Fob and Vest Ribbon Slides	3 " 10
5,000	Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, etc.	3 " 8
3,000	Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc.	4 " 7
10,000	Miniature Lockets	2 50 " 8
4,000	" " Magic Spring	3 " 20
3,000	Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc.	2 " 8
5,000	Plain Gold Rings	4 " 11
5,000	Chased Gold Rings	4 " 11
10,000	Stone Set and Signet Rings	2 50 " 10
10,000	California Diamond Rings	2 " 10
7,500	Sets Ladies' Jewellery—Jet & Gold	5 " 15
5,000	Sets Ladies' Jewellery — Cameo, Pearl, etc.	4 " 15
10,000	Gold Pens, Silver Extension-holders and Pencils	4 " 10
10,000	Gold Pens and Gold Mounted Holders	3 " 8
5,000	Gold Pens and Gold Extension Holders	5 " 10
5,000	Silver Goblets and Drinking Cups	5 " 50
3,000	Silver Castors	15 " 50
2,000	Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets	20 " 50
		PER DOZEN.
5,000	Dozen Silver Tea Spoons	$10 " 20
5,000	" " Table Spoons & Forks	20 " 10

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, through the war having cut off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of Valuable Jewellery, originally intended for the English market, has been sent off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT ANY SACRIFICE!

Under these circumstances, ARRANDALE & CO., acting as Agents for the principal European Manufacturers, have resolved upon a Great Gift Distribution, subject to the following regulations:

CERTIFICATES, naming each article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

ALL ARTICLES SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE!!

On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewellery on our list for ONE DOLLAR, and in no case can they get less than One Dollar's worth, as there are no blanks. The price of Certificates is as follows:

One for........25 cents.
Five for........$1
Eleven for........2
Thirty for........5
Sixty-five for........10
One hundred for........15

AGENTS will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to One Dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps.

ARRANDALE & CO.,
167 Broadway, New York.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Soldiers of the Union!

Read the following Letters received from your comrades as endorsements of the

WORLD KNOWN AND WORLD TRIED REMEDIES, KNOWN AS PROF. HOLLOWAY'S

PILLS AND OINTMENT.

You will here find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country where our army of occupation is in force. SEE TO YOUR HEALTH! All of you have some one interested in your welfare, then do not delay. YOUR LIFE IS VALUABLE! Not only to yourselves, but to your Fathers and Mothers, Sisters, Wives and Brothers. Then while you may, purchase your Health!

35 cents, 88 cents, or $1 40,

Will, when expended in these medicines, bring you down to the greenest and ripest old age.

The following are a few specimens of genuine letters on file for inspection at this office. Copies sent by mail to any inquirer.

80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Quartermaster's Department, 39th Illinois Volunteers, Folly Island, S. C., Nov. 2, 1864.

Prof. Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:

Sir—Enclosed please find two dollars, for which send me one dollar's worth each of your celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please attend to this at once, for I am much in need of the above remedies.

Address Lieut. A. W. FELLOWS, Q. M.,
39th Illinois Vols.

Camp near Brandy Station, Va., Nov. 7, 1864.

Prof. Holloway:

Dear Sir—I have heard a great deal of talk about your famous Pills, and as I never was in the need of them till now, I want to try them, as Diarrhœa is very prevalent at the present time; send me the worth of the enclosed. Yours, &c.,

JOSEPH WALSH, Co. E, 5th Regt., Excelsior Brigade.

Pulaski, Tenn., Nov. 6, 1864.

Prof. Holloway:

Dear Sir—Please find enclosed one dollar, and send me the amount in your famous Pills, as I am troubled with Dyspepsia, and seek cure. Yours, &c.,

THOMAS F. TURNER, Co. I, 2d Iowa Infantry.

Morris Island, S. C., Nov. 1, 1864.

Prof. Holloway:

Please find enclosed the sum of one dollar for Pills. I have Diarrhœa, and can't get it stopped, so I want to try your Pills. Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM CHRISTY,
Co. D, 104th Regt. Penn. Vols.,
000 Morris Island, S. C.

Diaries for 1865,

From 25 cents to $3. All kinds BLANK BOOKS, PAPER and STATIONERY at moderate prices. Orders solicited. FRANCIS & LOUTREL,
Stationers and Printers,
481-4 45 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Gold $8—Silver $1 50

1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 14th, 18th, 20th, 23d

ARMY CORPS,

Showing each Division.

BY THE SINGLE ONE, 100 or 1,000.

Send for Circular.

Address
DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufac'g Jewellers,
208 Broadway, N.Y.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Samples and Catalogues sent for 25 cents. Enclose an envelope with your own name and address.
000 D. HEMMETTE, 58½ Liberty St., N. Y.

TWENTY-FOUR

CARTES DE VISITE

OF

FRENCH GRISETTES,

In different attitudes of art.

Enclose $1 25 and four red stamps.
477-80 CHAS. MANY, 84 Nassau St., N. Y.

Six Dollars from Fifty Cents.

Agents, come and examine Invention, or Samples sent free by mail for 50 cents. Retails for $6 easily. R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York.
473-524

$1 WHISKERS! $1

For $1 I will send sealed, postpaid, the GRECIAN COMPOUND, highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of hair upon the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Entire satisfaction given or money refunded. Descriptive circular mailed free. Address

E. L. SANFORD,
471-83 Lansingburgh, N. Y.

$125 A MONTH!

WANTED.—Sewing Machine Agents! Everywhere, to introduce the new Shaw & Clark $16 Family Sewing Machine, the only low price machine in the country which is licensed by Grover & Baker, Wheeler & Wilson, Howe, Singer & Co., and Bachelder. Salary and expenses, or large commissions allowed. All other Machines now sold for less than $40 each are infringements, and the seller and the user liable. Illustrated Circulars sent free. Address SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine. 479-491

MANUFACTURER'S STOCK

OF

Watches, Lockets, Chains, Rings, Pins, Bracelets, Gold Pens and Cases,

And a full assortment of fine Jewellery, to be disposed of by distribution for the next 60 days.

Certificates of all the various articles are put in envelopes, sealed and mixed, and sent without regard to choice. One certificate telling you what you can have for $1 will be sent for 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5. After seeing what you can have, it will be at your option to send and get the article, or not, and after seeing the article, if it does not give perfect satisfaction, you can return it and get the money. We also manufacture pure Silver and Gold Badges for every Corps and Division in the Army. Also Infantry, Artillery and Battery, Engineer and Pontonier, Masonic, Base Ball and Society Badges of every kind. We will send a Sample Badge (pure Silver), for any Department in the Army, with your Name, Regiment and Company handsomely Engraved thereon, on receipt of $1 50.

Agents wanted everywhere, to whom great inducements are offered.

S. M. WARD & CO.,
0 208 Broadway, N. Y.

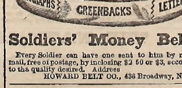
HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusel oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, anti-bilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales today are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.



Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

Prepared and Sold by

HOSTETTER & SMITH, Pittsburg, Pa.
New York Office, 59 Cedar Street.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address
tf T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing $2 50 or $3, according to the quality desired. Address
HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.

The Useful and the Beautiful Combined.

Besides Books, Albums, Pictures, Microscopes, &c., Messrs. FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y., have Busts of different sizes of Psyche, Sabrina, Apollo, Diana, Flora, Clytia, Shakespeare, Milton, Scott, Burns, Byron, Plato, Homer, Virgil, Socrates, Raphael, Schiller, Goethe, Washington, Webster, Franklin, &c., suitable for the Library, Reading-Room, Public Hall or Drawing-Room. 482-3

New Illustrated Annual of Phrenology and Physiognomy for 1865, with "Signs of Character." The Five Races of Man; Forty Engravings and an Almanac for 100 years. Newsmen have it. By first post, 12 cents. Address
482-3 FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

An Article that Every Married Lady should possess will be sent securely sealed for $1.
482-5 Address Box 5057, P. O., New York.

$7 WATCHES. $9

A handsome Engine-Turned or Plain Sterling Silver Double Electro-plated Watch, Double-cases, English Movements, fancy Steel or Gold-cut Sweep Hands, Enameled Dial, new style of Index, Chain Action, Self-acting Balance, Polished Cap. Especially adapted for Army use. A reliable Timekeeper. Price $7.

A fine 16 Carat Electro Gold-plated Watch, in Double Cases, same as above, in perfect Running Order, and a Reliable Timekeeper, sent free in a neat case for $9.

American Army Watch,

Imported by us expressly for the American Trade. In Solid Oreide Gold Composite Hunting Cases (Sandos pattern); superbly engraved or massive plain cases, being 18 Carat Gold, and the inner one Solid Gold Composite; the two combinations being known as Oreide Metal, the imitation being so faultless that it can scarcely be detected from Solid Gold, and will not change its color; and is beautifully engraved, and finished equal to a fine Gold Watch. It is particularly recommended not only for beauty but durability. It has the genuine European Jewelled Movements (M. J. Tobias, Liverpool), improved Ruby Action, Independent Balance, Sunk Seconds, plain or fancy Enameled Dial, Steel Spade-cut Hands, fancy Push-pin, Lever Cap, and is warranted for one year. A single one sent free, in a Turkey Morocco Case, with a fine French Curb Vest Chain, for $15.

Our Stock comprises over 40 different styles of European and American Watches, of the latest and most saleable styles, for Army and Home Trade.

Holiday Watch for Ladies,

In Oreide Gold Composite Hunting Cases, fully warranted, $24.

Those wishing to buy single Watches, or dealing in them, should send a stamp for our Descriptive Circular.
Address KELLEY & ALLEN, Importers,
No. 200 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELAPO, 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Great Money-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
000 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.
R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most desirable Cards ever published—including the French Dancing Girl; Venus Sporting with Love; Bedtime; Bombarding Charleston; Sinking the 290, etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 15 choice cards.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Fail not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 462-74

WONDERFUL DEVELOPMENTS

In the use of Petroleum.

WOODWARD'S Patent Self-Adjusting LANTERN (just out) has the following advantages over any Lantern yet invented:

1st—It burns with a brilliant light, and cannot be easily extinguished.

2d—The glass can be instantly removed for cleaning, or replaced when broken.

3d—It is the best made and most beautifully finished of any Lantern in use.

Sample of Lantern, including Savage & Co.'s celebrated No-Chimney Burner, will be sent on receipt of $2 50.

Send for Circular and Price List.

SAVAGE & CO.,
285 Greenwich St., N. Y.

Employment for All!

$10 to $20 a day clear. For particulars send stamp to 481-2 J. W. STEPHENS, 239 Broadway, N. Y.

Use of Tobacco, in all its forms, Cured and Prevented. Particulars free. Address
481-93o JAS. DAY & SON, New Haven, Conn.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Onguent and finding it not as represented (by informing me of the fact), can have their money returned to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address
A. C. CLARK,
458-83 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

For Nervous Debility, &c.,

Use "Cruger's Concentrated Cure." The only reliable remedy. Price, per vial, $1—6 for $5. Sent free by mail. Send for Pamphlet—sent free. Address
O. K. BLISS & CO., 705 Broadway, N. Y.
000 Sold by Druggists everywhere.

For Choice of Pursuits,

Physical and Intellectual Culture; Labor, Mental and Manual: Human Faces; "The Mad-House;" Varieties of Character; Idiocy, Insanity, Causes and Cure. See December No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL—20 cents by first post. Newsmen have it. Address
481-2 FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

☞ Sent Everywhere by Mail, Postpaid. ☜

Extension Silver-Mounted Holders,

WITH COMPOSITE

REVERSE LEAD PENCILS,

In cases of one dozen each; the boxes are finely finished and cloth lined, so that the contents can sustain no injury in transportation. Prices same as before the War.

The Holders are of the most handsome and durable construction; are heavily silver-plated, with an extension of three lengths. All are engraved, chased or engine-turned, and for beauty are not surpassed by any others. Our prices for the holders and pens, sold in dozens only, are as follows:

Size One.—When open, 5½ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $10 25; retails at $2 each.

Size Two.—When open, 6 inches in length; Price per dozen by mail, postpaid, $12; retails at $3 each.

Size Three.—When open, 6½ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $19 25; retails at $5 and upwards.

Size Four.—When open, 7½ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $26: retails at $6 and upwards.

Size Five.—When open, 8 inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $33 50; retails at $10 and upwards.

Sent to the Army and elsewhere, by mail, postpaid.

Also WATCHES AND JEWELLERY in Great Variety at the lowest prices for cash. Send for Circular. Registered letters at our risk. Orders respectfully solicited.
Address T. & H. GAUGHAN, Manufacturers,
116 Broadway, N. Y.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, Illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy," plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry whoever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps. Address
469-75 E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1526, Portland, Me

The Wonderful Cantering Horses.

Every boy and girl wants one. Prices $14 to $27. Call or send stamp for Circular.
482-3 S. W. SMITH, 498 Broadway.

Shults' Curlique, for curling the hair. Price 50 cents. Sent sealed, postpaid. Address
471-83 C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

The Brazilian Hair Curler. One application warranted to curl the most straight, stubborn hair into wavy ringlets or heavy massive curls. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address
S. S. CHASE,
471-83 Cohoes, N. Y.

THE BEST THING OUT!

Can be used the same as any other Cards, and contains

52

BEAUTIFUL SCENES.

Enclose $1 25 and three red stamps for sample pack. $144 per gross, twenty per cent. off. $12 per dozen.
T. ALLEN,
84 Nassau street, New York.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 White Street, New York.

Viele's Hand-Book.

Hand-Book for Active Service, containing Practical Instructions in Campaign Duties. For the use of Volunteers. By Brig.-Gen. Egbert L. Viele, U. S. A. 12mo, Cloth, $1. D. VAN NOSTRAND, Publisher, 192 Broadway. Copies sent free by mail on receipt of the price.

The way to make from One Dollar to one dollar and fifty cents an evening, with other information, will be sent to any one enclosing two stamps.
Address A. WOLCOTT, Cleveland, O.

C. S. Sea, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. His Celebrated "Blisses" for $5. Programme for return stamp. Sample for $1 in part for a package.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New. Patent Pin Cushion, Universal Needle-Threader, Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, Piston Pipe, Magic Tobacco Box, Gent's Vest Pocket Match Safe, Silver-plated. Send stamp for Circular. S. W. RICE & CO.,
tf 83 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Royal Havana Lottery.

In Drawing of December 2, 1864,

No. 25946	drew	$100,000
No. 17675	"	50,000
No. 11512	"	25,000
No. 17765	"	10,000
No. 13951	"	5,000

Being the five capital prizes.

Seventy-five per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. The highest rates paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOE & CO., Bankers,
16 Wall St., N. Y.

Send 25 Cents

for a Specimen Number of the

Atlantic Monthly

and a Circular showing the remarkable features of the Magazine for the year 1865. The first American writers contribute regularly. The position of the ATLANTIC is now firmly established as the

LEADING AMERICAN MAGAZINE

of its class. Terms, $4 a year, 25 cents the single number. Club rates liberal. Address the publishers,

TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.

o

MUNRO'S TEN CENT NOVEL,

No. 27,

The Giant Spy of Bunker Hill!

The only thing that need be said of this remarkable story is that it is by the author of "The Tory's Daughter" and "Zoe Sherburne, the Lumberjack Scout," which of itself speaks for themselves, and if they are not These books ought to be in every family in the United already known ought to be in every family in the United States; and all Munro's Ten Cent Novels should be with the following:

Nos. 1. The Hunters; 2. The Trapper's Retreat; 3. The Two Trails; 4. The Wayman; 4. The Hunted Outcast; 5. The Tory's Daughter; 6. The Man-Eaters; 7. Charter Oak; 8. The Trail of the Death Face; 9. The Indian Slayer; Tonquin; 10. The Forest Children; 11. The Hunter's Pet; 12. The Ocean Rovers; 13. The Tory Outlaw; 14. The Scout; 15. The Lumberjack Scouts; 16. Wrecked; 16. Zebe Sherburne; 17. The Captive Maiden; 17. The Scouts of the Ocean; 18. The Demon of the Woods; 18. Long-Legged Joe; 19. The Scouts of the Mountains; 19. The Forest The Wild Scouts of the Mississippi Valley; 20. Rattlesnake Ledge; 20. The Children of the Wigwam; 22. Rickety Dick; 22. The Two Trails; 23. The Kings of the Prairie; 24. Tom, the Rover; 25. Joe, the "Surgical;" 26. Light-Robber's Terror; 26. The Silent Spy of Bunker Hill. foot, the Scout; 27. The Giant Spy of Bunker Hill.

These books are for sale by all News Agents, and sent postpaid on receipt of price, 10 cents each.

GEORGE MUNRO & CO.,

No. 17 WILLIAM St., N. Y.

o

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, as arising from Special causes, is the only SPECIFIC and reliable treatment in Report of the NEW ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

o

"To Married Ladies and Gentlemen," and those contemplating marriage, and others, I have something useful to you all. Wives at least should not be without it. Send stamp for envelope bearing your address, and get my Circular containing full particulars, to

MRS. DR. F. HOPKINS,

Box 4586, N. Y. Post-Office.

SOMETHING NEW.

The Patent Army Pocket Pipe and Cigar Holder combined, is decidedly the best Smoking Pipe ever invented. It imparts a rich flavor to the tobacco. It is one of the elegant appearance and finish; with fine carved Meerschaum case and Amber Mouthpiece. It is easy to carry, easy to clean, and is always ready for a good smoke. Sample dozen sent free on receipt of $12.00. HOPKINS,

RICHARDS & CO.,

97 William Street, New York.

INQUIRE FOR

TUCKER'S PATENT SPRING BEDS.

For sale by the Furniture Dealers generally through the United States. At wholesale by MIRAM TUCKER, 117 and 119 Court St., Boston, Mass. 481-90

GIFTS FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

Rare opportunity to get a fine Watch or valuable piece of Jewelry for only $1. Send us 25 cents and we will send by return mail a sample chain in this great work and our Circular, which will tell you how to make $10 a day and get a watch free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,

No 5 Beekman St., N.Y.

PATENT AGENCY OFFICES.

Established in 1846.

MESSRS. MUNN & CO.,

Editors of the Scientific American,

SOLICITORS OF AMERICAN AND FOREIGN

PATENTS,

Have Branch Offices at Washington, During the past seventeen years MESSRS. MUNN & CO. have been Solicitors for more than 20,000 inventions and scientific show that nearly one-fourth of all the applications for patents annually made in the United States are solicited through the Scientific American Patent Agency. In connection with this business, and the preparation of Specifications, Drawings, Assignments, and other papers, a Full Search is made at the Patent Office, to ascertain the novelty of inventions. Preparing and Prosecuting Rejected Cases, Hints on the Sale of Patents, Rejected Cases, Infringements, Decisions and Reasons of Commissioners in Cases of the Infringement and Validity of Patents, with copies of the most useful Patents.

Patents secured in England, France, Belgium, Austria, Russia, Prussia, all of the German States, and other European countries. A Pamphlet of 24 pages, containing the Patent Laws of the United States, and full directions for obtaining Patents, sent gratis. All communications confidential. Address

MUNN & CO.,

No. 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

Shults' Oxgent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address 458-503 O. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S PIANOFORTES.

99 & 101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years.

IVORY AND PEARL BROOCHES, Ear-Rings and Cuff Buttons,

Latest Styles, $3 & $5 per Set.

Gilt Belt Buckles, $3.

Sent free on receipt of price.

WM. H. WELLING,

o 371 Broadway. (Sign of Golden Elephant.)

A QUEER THING,

Mailed everywhere for 50 cents. Get it. Address

JOSLYN BROS.,

6 Box 665, Detroit, Mich.

TREMBLE, COLUMBIA!

SCENE: OFFICE FOR THE REGISTRATION OF NON-RESIDENTS.

SMALL FOREIGNER (probably a Briton)—"Bye—I'm a Nailen and a Nenemy, and 'ound to be registered as such."

Holiday Presents.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD-PLATED WATCH, Double cases, Lever Gilt, Small Size, White Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Time-keeper, with an "Accurate Perpetual Calendar," indicating the Day of the Week, Month, &c., in blue steel. A single one sent free, by mail, to any address, on receipt of $10. A BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN, for only $5, to match the above, with the Miniature Calendar, &c., specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers,

56 and 58 Ann Street, N. Y.

o

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

GOLD MEDAL

Grand and Square

PIANOS,

BALTIMORE, Md.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, G. Satter, and other leading artists. Every instrument warranted for five years.

Price lists promptly sent on application. WM. KNABE & CO.

A full assortment of the above celebrated Instruments at J. SAUER & SON'S Warerooms, o 470-92 No. 544 Broadway, N. Y.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

STEREOSCOPES & STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,

In addition to our much increased facilities for manufacturing our Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views, we have made large additions to our assortment, including War Scenes of those we have not on hand will be supplied to order. Albums, Stereoscopic American and Foreign Stereoscopic Slides, Opera Glasses, Revolving Stereoscopes, for public or private exhibitions, Our Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of Stamp.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS.

We were the first to introduce Albums into the United States, and have always made them a specialty. Our assortment is great variety, ranging in price from $1 each to $50 each. Our Albums have the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any others in the market. Our Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of Stamp.

FINE AMBER MOUNTPIECES.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue now embraces over FIVE THOUSAND different subjects, including Portraits of Generals, Statesmen, Actresses, Authors, Historical Engravings, &c., &c., which we are constantly being made) of Fortresses, Battles, Naval Engagements, &c., &c.

Nos. 501 Broadway, and 308 Fulton St., Brooklyn.
" 591 Broadway, 180 Libby, Columbia, 249 Fulton St.
" 205 Broadway, 1 Astor House, 1 Park Row.
" 363 Broadway, 466 Canal, 1 Cooper Institute.
" 34 Maiden Lane, 49 Nassau St.
" 9 Mercer Street, 42 Fremont House, Jersey City.
" 441 Arch St., Philadelphia.

EACH AND EVERY PHOTOGRAPH

Bearing our name is guaranteed to be from the original negative. Including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, &c., in Europe and America. An order for One Dozen Photographs from our Catalogue will be filled on receipt of price, $1 per dozen; sent by mail, post-paid.

Fifteen Cents per copy, or Ten Cents per dozen; $1 per hundred; Five per cent. of the amount with their order.

Soldiers' Pocket Album for 18 pictures, 75 cents.

o

Friends.—Send a Stamp for information and my Circulars. Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.

DIAMOND PARLOR MATCHES.

These Matches do not REQUIRE A SPECIAL SURFACE TO IGNITE WITHOUT SULPHUR, NO DISAGREEABLE SMELL, and a VERY SUPERIOR ARTICLE for smokers and people with weak lungs. For sale wholesale and retail by

THE LODI MANUFACTURING CO.,

479-82o No. 62 Cortlandt Street, New York.

FREE READING!

Soldiers, Sailors, Marines, Everybody—send us your address. Will, in return, send you a family newspaper, replete with good miscellaneous reading matter. Sent Gratis.

CHAS. E. MACKEY, 81 Nassau St., N. Y.

GOLD PENS.

If you want the best Pen ever used send to Johnson for Circular giving exact size and prices. Pens from $1 to $5. No stiff very hard and pointless. Pens Repointed, by mail, for 50 cents.

E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office,

o&7tf 16 Maiden Lane, New York.

A WATCH FREE

And $15 or $25 per Day made Easy. A New Sensation. Our Great Novelty, the WONDERFUL PRIZE PORTFOLIO.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Just out and creating an immense sensation and Extraordinary Demand throughout the Army and Country; there is nothing like them. Sales Enormous; profits immenses. Each Portfolio Extra Large Size, 6 by 10, contains an immeasurable quantity of useful and valuable goods, Pocket, etc., worth Several Dollars, and sells for only 25 cents. Articles that no Soldier or Family can possibly do without. Immediate Sold Every Day. Soldiers can clear a Month's Pay in a Single Day. Agents Wanted in Every Camp and Village. A beautiful Gold or Silver Watch Present free as a Premium to Every Agent. This is the Greatest money-making Business of the Day. We Guarantee every agent $15 per Day. Premiums sent with Goods unless desired. Circulars containing Sworn Certificates of Extra Premium inducements sent by mail Free. S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y., Sole Manufacturers.

$20 to $30 per Day Profit,

Realized by "Sellers and Agents," by the sale of the 6,000 DOZEN SELF-ADJUSTING Enamelled White, from $3 to $9 per Dozen. Samples at 50 cts., 80 cts., 75 cts., $1; Four White, Linen Finished, Three-ply, Reversible and Corrugated, $1. 25, Suitable Tie, $1.

Grays' Skid Cuffs, $2.50, Ladies', $1. 20; Collar, $2. Mailed on receipt of price and "size."

J. FRANKEL, Agent for the Patentees, 76 Nassau St., New York.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

STRASBURGER & NUHN,

Cor. Maiden Lane and William St., N. Y.,

IMPORTERS OF

TOYS, CHINA AND FANCY GOODS.

o

The West Indian Hair Curler, warranted to curl the straightest hair and last. Its first application, into short ringlets or waving massive curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1. Address

WAUD GILBERT LYON,

Box 5212, New York Post Office.

Vineland Lands.

Large and thriving settlements mild and healthful climate, 50 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be secured at low prices, and on easy payments, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. This is now the most improving place East of West. Houses are settling and building. The handsomest village in the State. Full information will be given by addressing CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey. Letters should be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.

From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural editor of the Tribune:

"It is one of the most promising fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasure, farming, that I know of this side of the Western prairies."

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER

Is the latest improvement in Fire Arms, combining great power and quick action with compactness, durability, and convenience for operating and carrying. Is the most effective Pocket Revolver in use.

Is loaded, without removing the cylinder, with CENTRAL FIRE Metallic Cartridges, Copper Reboun Cartridge. In order to secure fire, the shell easily ejected after firing. The cylinder never rolls. It will throughout extreme length. Hollow ball, six shot and weighs but 14 ounces. For sale by the trade.

GEO. A. HICKCOX, 54 Cliff Street, New York.

CERTIFICATE.

I have thoroughly tested the new "National Revolver," and find it an effective weapon, of sure and convenient size. All fifty yards I think I could with this pistol kill at every shot. I take pleasure in recommending it as a weapon of reliability. Captain Scott, Provost-Marshal, and other officers, I find this pistol a large number of times, and not one cartridge failed to explode.

JOHN CHARLESTON, Chief of Police, Cairo, Ill.

o (Signed)

ATTENTION, CHILDREN!

We have just published the first number of a New Magazine for the young, called

Our Young Folks

It will be published once a month, and will contain new and pictures. It will be full of

Stories and Sketches,

Travel and Adventure,

Outdoor and Indoor Sports,

Games and Puzzles,

and all sorts of entertaining and instructive miscellany. Terms, $1.6 year for single copies; Clubs much less. More should be sent for. Send 10 cents for a specimen number and a circular to the publishers,

TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

o

FURNITURE FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

AT

FR. KRUTINA'S

MANUFACTORY AND WAREROOMS,

Nos. 96 and 98 East Houston St.,

Between Bowery and 2d Avenue.

481-4o

WARDS SHIRTS

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

French Flannel Overshirts.

Cost 36 inches long, $4 75, and $5 each. Sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 75 cents postage each shirt.

STEEL COLLARS

Enamelled White, having all the comforts of linen collars. Washed and dried in a moment. Ammonic Collar mailed free on receipt of 25 cents. Cuffs $1 to per pair. Ladies' Collars and Cuffs same price.

WHEELBARR AND LEHAIR.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,

otf No. 387 Broadway, New York.

GOLD PENS.

We will send to any address on receipt of the following prices one of our First Quality 14 Carat Warranted Diamond Pointed, Iridium Tipped Silver Ebony Lined Holder and Morocco Case, or Silver-plated Extension Holder:

No 3. Large Pen and Holder	$ 1 50
" 4. Medium " "	2 00
" 5. Engraving Bank Pen and Holder	2 50
" 6. Mammoth Pen and Holder	3 00

Send a stamp for our Circular of Engravings of all our new styles, and giving exact sizes and prices. Pens Repointed for 50 cents. Address

AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO.,

200 Broadway, N. Y.

THE UNIVERSAL PAPER COLLAR

TAINTER & JACKSON'S

Patent August 2 1864.

The Trade supplied at No. 536 Pearl Street, New York. 47

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Twelve of different powers for $1. Address

o P. E. BOWEN, Box 720, Boston, Mass. 9009

LADIES' LETTER.

FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS

The information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.

Address Box 4623, New York Post Office.

o

FOR A FORTUNE

Address FRANKLIN S. M. CO., Box 909, Boston, Mass.

To all wanting Farms.

Situated on the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be secured at low prices, and on easy payments, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. This is now the most improving place East of West. Houses are settling and building. The handsomest village in the State. Full information will be given by addressing CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey. Letters should be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.

From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural editor of the Tribune:

"It is one of the most promising fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasure, farming, that I know of this side of the Western prairies."

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 483—VOL. XIX.] NEW YORK, DECEMBER 31, 1864. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY. 13 WEEKS $1 00.

The Circle of Victories—The Development of Gen. Grant's Combinations.

WITHIN the last ten days we have had a succession of brilliant military successes, in Tennessee, Mississippi, Georgia, South Carolina and Virginia, which may be fairly and justly regarded as the development of Gen. Grant's extensive network of combinations against Richmond. We think it can be easily made apparent to the intelligent reader that all these late operations, however widely separated from each other, were still intimately connected and all directed against the rebel capital. We believe that in this view enough has been accomplished to render inevitable, and in a short time, too, the capture by a general assault, or the surrender, or the stealthy evacuation of Richmond, if possible, by the rebels, Jeff Davis, his Cabinet and Congress, archives, army and all.

First, then, touching the unity and common purpose of these late successful operations. Beginning with the crushing defeats of Hood's army near Nashville, it needs no elaborate statement of facts and inferences to show that these successes of Thomas have immensely strengthened Canby in Mississippi and Louisiana, Granger and the navy below Mobile, our position at Chattanooga, Sherman at Savannah, and Grant in front of Petersburg and Richmond. So, too, while Thomas and his heroic soldiers are entitled to the immediate honors of their splendid achievements, they were assisted materially by Buckridge and Stoneman in East Tennessee, by Canby in Mississippi, by Sherman in Georgia, Foster in South Carolina, and by the supporting investment and side operations from Gen. Grant's main army at Richmond.

The demolition of Hood's army is equivalent to the reinforcement of the Union side to the full strength of the splendid veteran army of Gen. Thomas. The fatal mistakes committed by Jeff Davis, first, in superseding Gen.

ARRIVAL OF ADMIRAL FARRAGUT IN NEW YORK HARBOR, DECEMBER 13TH—VIEW OF HIS FLAGSHIP, THE HARTFORD, COMING UP THE BAY.—FROM A SKETCH BY F. H. SCHELL.

Joe Johnston at Atlanta (who understood the weakness of his forces as opposed to ours in Georgia for offensive operations), next in giving Hood the command, and then in sending him on his feathery and disastrous adventure into Tennessee, have given us, in fact, two powerful armies, against neither of which can anything approaching an equal rebel force now be raised—the army of Thomas and the army of Sherman. The former is now at liberty, by land or water, to push southward to Mobile, or eastward to Richmond, as Gen. Grant may think best, while Richmond, no less than Charleston, after Savannah, is clearly within the grasp of Sherman, and cannot possibly escape. At the same time the combined land and naval expedition of Butler and Porter in the occupation of the harbor and the railroads centering at Wilmington, North Carolina, is completing a noble Gen. Lee from his last remaining lines of supply, reinforcement and retreat, excepting the roads and canal to that limited section of Virginia and North Carolina south and west of Richmond and Petersburg.

Such are the developments of Gen. Grant's comprehensive, harmonious and beautifully successful chain of combinations, east and west. It is not surprising that the Richmond journals are now more clamorous than ever before for peace upon the slave plantations; for "the experiment of negro emancipation itself as the last chance for European assistance and Southern independence." And well upon the black Herculean it comes too late. The game is up with "the Confederacy," and the sooner now the rebel chief at Richmond sets upon this "fixed fact," the sooner will his deluded followers be released from their sufferings, and the better will he his own chances of escape from the fearful doom that delay may bring upon him. We rejoice at the glorious prospects of early overthrow, and that the staggering blows which Sherman, Thomas, Foster and their co-operating associates of the army and navy, east and west, have given him, have also alarmed the peace party members of Wall Street. Like Jeff Davis himself, we guess they have received a set back from which they can never rally again. The dawn is already visible, and the full sunshine of the year of jubilee, the year 1865, is close at hand.

A CARD TO LADIES PARTICULARLY AND DRUGGISTS GENERALLY.

GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM

Is the most wonderful preparation for the SKIN and COMPLEXION that the genius of chemistry ever conceived or invented, and has been known, without denial or advertising, to indispensable to every lady of the Fancy Fair, and Opera generally, in the daily receipt of numerous letters from all parts of the Union and the Canadas, asking for $5, for one pot, or two bottles, to be forwarded by mail, forgetting that the postage on these packages is prepaid, and that the postage on each bottle, required to be packed in a wooden box, would amount to at least 60 cents. The writers, moreover, ask why the article cannot be purchased at the druggists in their own locality. Dr. G. replies, that it became druggists have to pay, when purchasing by the dozen, at the rate of $9 per bottle.

Dr. G. hops to inform his fair friends that, unless he receives $1 for each bottle, it cannot be manufactured for most discriminate to sell.

The ORIENTAL CREAM is the result of long and time some processes in the preparation of the various ingredients (all vegetable) which it is composed, which compels him to adopt this alternative.

Those ladies who are unable to procure the ORIENTAL CREAM from Dr. Gouraud direct may order it sent by express or by mail, (postage being 10 cents,) of druggists or milliners in their own locality will order it by or through them a most remarkable preparation. The following milliners, among others, purchase by the dozen from Dr. Gouraud:—Mrs. Ford, 8 Cleveland, Ohio; Mrs. Shaw, Ebby; Mrs. Wilson, New Haven, &c. Beware of base imitations, and order Dr. FELIX GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM from his depot, 455 Broadway, New York, or FERRY'S Old Established Italian Medicated Soap Depot.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This valuable work is far superior to its prototype, the London Illustrated Almanac, and much cheaper. It contains Astronomical, Meteorological, National, Historical, Political, Statistical, Astronomical and Useful, besides upwards of 100 pictorial illustrations by the first European and American Artists, engraved in the highest style of art. It is also embellished with four splendid Lithographic Portraits, printed on fine paper, of Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Admiral Farragut, from recent photographs. Price 50 cents.

Now Ready, the January Number of the great comic and satirical paper of the age, being No. 85 of FRANK LESLIE'S BUDGET OF FUN, containing a splendid battle-piece, entitled, "The Grand Review Ball; or, Butler's Wedding Garments; also, Uncle Sam Waiting for the Fleet; also, The Great Naval Combat, storm of November, 1864, and the Showing-up of Poor Jeff Davis. Besides numerous other sketches, comic, satirical, etc., by the first Artists of the day.—Bellew, Nordheimer, Rosenberg, Howard, Fiske, John Leech, Forbes, etc., etc. Price 10 cents.

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Now Ready,

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and Gazette of Fashion. Terms for 1865.

The following are our terms for 1865, which, considering the literary value of our Magazine and the superior excellence of its Fashion Department, are, we think, peculiarly favorable to subscribers:

One Copy.....$3 00
Four Copies to one Post Office.....10 00

with the additional advantage of one Extra Copy, gratis to the person sending that amount.

One Copy of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER and One Copy of FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE, to one Post Office.....$7 00

Barnum's American Museum.

IMMENSE ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Giants, Dwarfs, Albinos, Fejees, Albino Negroes, Famous Dog, Sealing Pond, Wax Figures, Aquaria, etc., etc. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 2 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under six, 15 cents.

Beauty—Hunt's Bloom of Roses,

A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; warranted permanent for one year. Sent by mail, Price $1. 38 cents by mail securely packed from observation. HUNT & CO., Perfumers,
600 133 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

If you Play the Pianoforte

Don't fail to have a copy of the "HOME CIRCLE," Choice Home-Music Waltzes, 2 vols. The "SILVER CHORD." Popular Songs, Ballads, etc. "THE SHOWER OF PEARLS," Polka, "The Golden Vesta Polka, with Castanet Accompaniments. "OPERATIC PEARLS," Gems from Operas. One vol. Each of the above, 60 cts., 3 vols. Price $1. 38 cents by mail, postpaid, on receipt of $2 50 full gilt, $4 by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, 277 Washington Street, Boston.

MESSRS. WM. KNABE & CO., BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.

GENTLEMEN—I have great pleasure in certifying that I have tried your Square Pianos and Grand, and find them not superior, to say in this country. Among the great qualities which distinguish them, in the evenness of tone, the easy and agreeable touch and volume of tone. Wishing you all success which you so highly deserve, I am, sirs,

Yours very truly, S. THALBERG.

Beauty—Hunt's White Liquid Enamel, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Beauty Doctress of 1847, 48 and 49, produces the same permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, which cannot be washed off, perspiration or by the application which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. Sold by druggists. Price $1. 38 cents. Removes Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of $1. 38 cents. Address

HUNT & CO., Perfumers,
133 South Seventh Street, and 13 South Eighth
600 Street, Philadelphia.

New Map of Richmond,

Showing all of the Fortifications surrounding the Rebel Capital, together with a Description of the City and of the Battles fought in the Vicinity. Price 75 cents. For sale 60 cents per dozen, or $3 per 100.

NEW MAP OF RICHMOND, Petersburg and Vicinity. Price 50 cents; Wholesale, $1 20 per dozen.

MAP OF RICHMOND and Vicinity, Wholesale Map. Price, 15 cents; Wholesale, $1 per dozen.

NEW MAP OF ATLANTA, Georgia. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, 60 cents per dozen, or $5 per 100.

MAP OF TENNESSEE, with Portraits of Grant, Meade, Sherman, Sheridan, Butler, Foster, Hooker, Hancock, Thomas, Burnside, Rosecrans, McClellan, Logan, etc. Price 10 cents each; Wholesale, $8 per 100.

NEW PACK OF ALBUMS, holding 16 Cards—Very Desirable. Price only 75 cents. Goods sent Postpaid. Agents Wanted. Address as above,

G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
271 Main Street, Hartford, Conn.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, Hospitals, and at Rail Roads, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 600

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 31, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl Street, New York.

TERMS FOR

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months	$1 00
One copy, six months	2 00
One copy, one year	4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	15 00
Five copies, one year	20 00

(With an extra copy gratis to the person getting up the club.)

One copy of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper and one copy of Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine (the most complete Lady's Book published) for one year 7 00

Address
FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

To Correspondents.

THE columns of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER are always open for contributions from good writers.

All communications will be promptly considered; and liberal prices will be paid for all manuscripts that are found available for publication.

Interesting stories, lively sketches, and poems of a high order of merit, if not too long, will be received with favor.

Short stories, brought with incident, character and dramatic effect, are always preferable to long ones.

All manuscripts should be legibly written, on good paper, and only one side of the sheets. Manuscripts written on both sides will be declined without examination.

Correspondents are requested to write their names and addresses, legibly and in full, on each manuscript that they send to this office.

An "old reader" is informed, in reply to his communication, that we have never made preparations to illustrate the subject commended to our notice, and shall do so as soon as possible.

Special Notice.

Our next number will contain the opening chapters of a new Serial story, of great interest and power, by one of the most popular and eminent novelists of the day.

The St. Albans Raiders—A Canadian Dogberry.

SOME few weeks ago a gang of rebel marauders from Canada made a dash into St. Albans, Vermont, where they robbed the banks, shot a citizen or two, stole a number of horses, and retreated with their plunder over the border. Some of the delectable gang were, however, subsequently captured, with the stolen money from the banks in their possession, and were handed over to one of the inferior courts of Montreal, presided over by a regular Canadian Dogberry, a Mr Justice Coursol. After a hearing of the evidence on both sides, and the law, Mr. Dogberry Coursol substantially decided that there was no law in Canada to meet the case, and so ordered the release of the prisoners—money and all—who were accordingly discharged.

In this notable decision the learned Coursol doubtless imagined he was reflecting the public sentiment of Canada. But he was soon undeceived. His decision was immediately followed by vehement denunciations and manifestations of public indignation against him at Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, and other places. The Canadian Attorney-General reported against Coursol. Steps were taken for the re-arrest and a new trial of the rebel bank robbers, and for the restitution of the stolen funds in their possession; and also for the repression of these rebel forays into the United States from the second asylum of Canada. The responsible authorities and citizens of Canada generally appear to have been reflecting upon their position and duties, and upon the main design of the rebel emissaries in their midst—a war between the United States and England—which does not at all strike the fancy of the Canadians, who are evidently hoping to believe that the so-called Southern Confederacy is rapidly going down; and that the day is not far distant when the Government of the United States will have two millions or more hundred thousand veteran soldiers at its disposal for the settlement of our Northern border troubles, to say nothing of volunteers in the form of militia enrolled. Reflections such as these are doubtless operating upon the Canadian public mind, and the good effects in clearing the mist from the eyes of our neighbors by the late decisions of a more honest neutrality are really gratifying.

Meantime, the recent orders of Gen. Dix authorizing the pursuit over the border by detachments of rebel marauders from Canada, although modified by subsequent instructions from Washington, have given the warning which has had the good effects intended. But, to lighten the labors of the Canadians in this business, the passport system directed in an order from the State Department, we have no doubt, will be found simply to annoy and delay the honest people coming over the border for the inconveniences which they may thus temporarily have to bear. The day is not far off when the latter border troubles will be ended in a substantial peace, and in a clear and satisfactory understanding between the United States on the one side and England and her North American colonies on the other.

Internal Revenue Report.

Mr. Lewis, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, has made a report to the public a very interesting report of the operations of his important bureau, past, present, and prospective. The receipts of the Treasury, from internal taxes of all kinds for the past three months, are set down at $61,892,200. It is estimated that, exclusive of the tax on spirits, and the five per cent. on incomes for 1865, the next year will yield $115,000,000; that the income tax, five per cent., $35,000,000, and the spirit tax, $40,000,000. According to this estimate, our revenue from excise will be about $285,000,000, for the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June next, under the existing laws. It is further estimated that from all sources the Internal revenue, with certain little modifications of the law, for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1866, will be $300,000,000. In that year, other sources of revenue and the reduced expenses of peace considered, we shall be able to pay off at least one hundred and at least one hundred millions surplus in the Treasury, towards the payment of the principal of the national debt, although the Commissioner makes no estimates in this view of the subject.

The Commissioner offers many important suggestions and modifications in regard to tobacco, manufactured goods, gold and silver assayed, cradle oils, printed books, magazines, reviews, &c., railroad iron, taxes on sales, &c. In reference to spirits especially, he shows from the fairly computed data, that the rebel Indian corn over into Canada that the distilleries there must be working up immense amounts into whiskey for "Yankee" consumption—the Canadians have no clear of our liquor taxes, and privileged, under the reciprocity treaty, to exchange whiskey for corn. In relation to many other commodities this Canadian reciprocity treaty, with its tempting inducements for smuggling, can no longer be continued without serious detriment to the Treasury and honest men. We are grateful, therefore, that the notice has been given of the abrogation of said treaty at the expiration of the six months term of notice required. But there will also be needed hereafter a rigid cordon of tax collectors and detectives along our whole northern boundary; or little will be accomplished in the way of smuggling to avoid our import duties will grow into large and systematic operations, diverting into Canada much of our foreign trade. But we are passing from our subject, which is our Internal Revenue. We recommend to our readers a careful perusal of this aforesaid report, which has been generally published in the newspapers. In the conclusion above it with this gratifying sentiment to all internal revenue tax payers, that if the war is soon brought to a close, "the present rate of taxation will be largely reduced, and still yield enough to afford every possible guarantee to the creditors of the nation." This is the best evening feature of his report.

Summary of the War.

TENNESSEE.

On Monday, 19th Dec., the Union army under Gen. Thomas attacked the rebels under Gen. Hood, and, after a severe action of nine hours, drove them three miles back, capturing several miles of their earthworks, 800 prisoners, and seven guns. The next morning Gen. Thomas renewed the attack, and drove their left from the Cumberland river, leaving them back their six miles. At this point the gunboats came into play, and did excellent service. All Hood's earthworks throughout the extent of his lines, from three to four miles on his right wing, were captured. Thomas has captured over 1,000 prisoners and 16 guns. The whole army of 30,000 men was engaged, and is said to be utterly routed and cut to pieces.

The latest reports from Gen. Thomas state that the victory over Hood's rebel army was complete, and that the Union forces were pursuing it beyond Franklin. The effect now no doubt will be to retreat of Thomas to Nashville was a strategic one to draw Hood away from harassing the rear of Sherman's army.

It is reported that Gen. Forrest, one of the most bloodthirsty brigands that ever lived, has been killed, and Gen. Price badly wounded.

SOUTH-WESTERN VIRGINIA.

A union force under Gens. Stoneman and Burbridge had rapidly advanced into North-eastern Kentucky and South-western Virginia, and captured Bristol, Salt on county. Scarcely, then entering Virginia along the East Tennessee and Virginia railroad, they took Abingdon and Glade Springs. The rebel progress seems to be that the object is to turn the bridge over the Holston river, and thus break the railroad, so as to prevent reinforcements being sent to the rebels at Saltwater, Va.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The joint land and naval expedition which moved up the Roanoke river has accomplished its object. The only obstacle now encountered by the torpedoes, which destroyed the Otsego, the steamer Bagley and picket launch No. 5. One man and a boy were killed on board the latter, but the rest saved themselves by swimming. At Plich Landing, on the Roanoke river, our forces destroyed a large quantity of rebel commissary stores and captured 80 bales of cotton. The rebel torpedoes were being removed by our men.

THE NEW EXPEDITION.

On Tuesday, a combined naval and military expedition, under command of Admiral Porter and Gen. Butler, sailed from Fortress Monroe. Its destination has not yet been announced.

LOUISIANA.

It is said that Gen. Canby, who is rapidly recovering from his wound, will soon remove his headquarters from Vicksburg, from which place a force under Col. Osband started, on the 1st, and destroyed the bridge over the Big Black river, 30 miles of the track of the Mississippi Central Railroad, 2,500 bales of cotton, and numerous rebel stores intended for Gen. Hood's army.

GEORGIA.

The following despatch confesses the campaign in Georgia a success. Savannah is now also one of our land and sea forces, and our next will doubtless announce its capture:—

OSBORN SOUND, DEC. 17—9 P. M.	}
To-day at five P. M. Gen. Hazen's division of the 15th corps carried Fort McAllister by assault, capturing its entire garrison and armament. Our troops in Ossabaw Sound, and I pushed down to this gunboat to communicate with the fleet. Before opening communication we had completely destroyed all the railroad leading into Savannah, and invested the city. The left is on the Ogeechee, at Kingsbridge.

The army is in splendid order and equal to anything. Provisions are abundant. We have utterly destroyed a dozen. Our march was most agreeable, and we were not molested by guerrillas.

We reached Savannah three days ago, but owing to Fort McAllister could not communicate; but now we have McAllister, we can go down. We have already captured five boats on the Savannah river, and prevented their gunboats from coming down.

We have not lost a wagon on the trip, but have gathered in a large supply of negroes, mules, horses, &c., and our teams are in far better condition than when we started.

We have utterly destroyed over 200 miles of rails, and numerous stores and provisions that were essential to Lee's and Hood's armies.

I regard Savannah as already gained.

Yours truly,

W. T. SHERMAN,
Major-General.

TOWN GOSSIP.

NEW YORK must always have some one great excitement; not a nine days' wonder, for nothing of a wonder lasts so long among our excitable people but a new sensation continually. The week before last it was fur, as applied by incendiaries to hotels and public places. This last week it was wax, as applied to snow and ice, and tending to best instead of coolness.

The week has been one of snow and ice, shrieking and spotting; and New York, as usual on such occasions, has gone stark staring mad over it. As long as snow was on the ground the genius and genial Pipeline, who is, as Anne Maria has repeatedly declared, "such a sweet talker and free of a dancer," dawn not after the shortest hour when he has a double X in his clothes to pay for a team or at least a jumper, and extra, to high Bridge. He may be forgiven for an omission to escort to "Don Sebastian," an omission to dash the finest of the fair, the superb Anne Maria through the avenues, and for the on the Moonlight road, would he even worn than falling to call on New Years Day, or enabling the record of the single creature's birthday.

And then one of the great luxuries of snow and ice, as consumed in New York city, and everywhere else, we believe, except the North Pole, is its uncertainty. It is captivating, and as long as it may, it will delight us. It is so delightful to contemplate the extreme probability that we may—after gigantic exertions in getting together a most respectable affair with which to delight the sweetest creature in the world, on the avenues or out on the Kosciuskoville road—be unable, suddenly in a realization of the positive feasibility of all things snowy, by finding that where a few hours before we were driving or sporting with team, or sleigh, or cutter, and that a best and pair of coils would be a much more appropriate means of navigating the streets.

And now for the fun, of which we have had but taste in life during the last week, and of which we have strong hopes of another month hats, just as soon as the cold weather comes.

Saturday, within the last few years, has become a pic-nic among the people, and it has become a necessary to do something, feel, hear, and, do it well, as it is to be able to dance. We have once never revived the sports of our grandsires, but we have been in the habit of doing well by and through at this moment we have advanced very far in the social accomplishments, for, as we said, without doubt, in the course of time, fully prevail our fair readers, who are quite capable of learning to have been the best chapters in the world.

This winter a rival revel in the means of skating about New York. To say nothing of Central Park and the Mill Rock Pond, both of which are delightful, but there is Beckman's pond, in that street, between 4th and 5th avenues, 79th street, and 100th street, and two others on the upper part of the island, all of which are free as air. Once across the East River, on Long Island side, we have the Capleton Lake, between Mercy and Gardner avenues, and easily reached by the Fulton avenue cars; the Union pond, in Bridge-street, accessible by the Jay Street cars; the Newtown pond, at Flushing, by the Flushing avenue cars; the Washington avenue pond, and the Gladstone pond, on Bushwick avenue, all of which are desirable skating places, while Jamaica, as a score of our readers remember, the same localities. Hoboken and Jersey city also have their favorite spots, of which the Crystal Lake on the first and the Hercules pond of the latter are especially worthy a visit.

At another time we shall—when the ice fairly concentrates and becomes, as to the measure, we can only say so still, get the best sun (and do not fail into the delusion that cold weather is not the most delightful sun and stand ready for Jack Frost to upon us, and at any moment we may be called to buckle on the skates and take a hand in the inevitable fray.

By the way, of skates, while speaking of Brooklyn, we are reminded of something we saw last week, which created quite a breaking forp-ical. A citizen, name we were told was Hefferly, living in Williamsburg, has applied for the candidate of a vacancy in the Board of Aldermen, which, we are told, is the best to succeed. He has, it is alleged, been in the habit of coming down to the Beekman street pier, and was there with ultimately rescued. We do not whether he would have done so much for a human being.

The arrival of Mr. Farragut has occasioned much public rejoicing; but we would throw out a hint to the citizens generally who have it in charge to the subscription "for the purpose of presenting something to the Admiral that shall bend themselves making the resident of New York," which means, if we are not mistaken, that we are called to take the form of a bond in which he can reside, the same as was given to Gen. McClellan. Now in the case of Gen. McClellan the bond consists one, as the General was comparatively a poor man, having just been unable to defend his pay, but if the subscribers to the admiral's fund will just look over the list of the favorites of the navy they will see that since the last year $7,500,000 of prize money has accrued to the officers of the navy, of this about half, or $3,250,000 will be divided between Admirals Lee, Dahlgren and Farragut. We are very desirous for believing that the share of the latter will come to the nice little sum of a million and a half, and that he can honorably compliment him on it, and wish it were double, we only hope that he may celebrate it by the same difference between the Admiral's position and that of many of our readers on the fields, and avoid the necessity of their dollars and compliments for those who need none.

Among the events worthy of chronicle was the opening of the most magnificent establishments of the kind, William Knabe & Co., at No. 544 Broadway. These gentlemen have, by long and persevering study and the instinctive belief in their instruments, determined to introduce to the public a piano-forte which has hitherto been monopolized by Baltimore. To this end they opened their new building above-mentioned, and upon one evening of last week called about them the leading pianists and musicians of the city, and submitted their manufactures.

Among the special were: Patterson, Harry Sanderson, Hoffer, Rosenthal, Mazzuca, and H. C. Watson, representing the press, and all the leading critics of the press, and under their hands and criticisms every known thing was given to the instruments to operate. After the experience of the evening and hearing the tests and critiques, we are satisfied in asserting that the finer instruments than those of Messrs. Knabe are to be found in the country. They only require a little time to become as well known and highly appreciated as those of any other maker in the country.

Our Amusements.

The week has been one perfectly free of theatrical excitement. All the houses seem at content with their successes—and why should they not?—and do not seem to be pressing for more.

The Olympic has given us "The Streets of New York," a local piece, in which, as it has little to say, and it may have and there a touch of good stage work and humor. It was as natural as it was funny.

Wallack has also given us Boucicault, another but play saved by good acting, splendid dressing and excellent stage work. It is rarely that a play having so little in it as "How She Loves Him" has so entirely depended on those who presented it. Had Boucicault always written such trash, his name would not be as familiar to us as it now is.

At the Winter Garden Booth is making a success with "Hamlet," and stamping himself on the critical public as the legitimate successor of Forrest. How York is fixed of this role—what?—he produces "Richelieu" in the course of the week.

At the Broadway that great artist, John Owens, is still doing Solon Shingle, and has given to his admirers its 100th representation in this house, proving, so far, our assertion that he is the best comedian of the day, and in so doing it so that our children and grandchildren may see him.

FOREIGN NEWS.

EARL RUSSELL has replied to the dispatch of the Confederate Commission in a letter which inmets to inquire if they have any thing to say to him, and reiterates the most determined neutrality.

David Roberts, the great English artist, is dead. He was born in Edinburgh in 1796, which was accompanied by Dr. Croly's descriptions.

Texas is in a flourishing condition. An exception, laud the thinned conduct of the American people during the recent Presidential election.

A French journal ridiculously asserts that the election, as the Confederate States, will be carried by the same hand which unscrewed, when Banks was elected Governor of Massachusetts, that a negro had been chosen for that responsible position.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—In Alexander co., Ill., there is a plantation of 200 acres, growing cotton, the average yield being a bale and a half to the acre.

—Col. J. W. Higginson, of the 1st South Carolina colored regiment, has been appointed to relinquish his command on account of physical disability.

—Mrs. Sarah Knowles, of Boston, has a remarkable parrot died in that city, lately, aged 39 years; it talked in the French and English, and recognized an old owner whom it had not seen for 24 years.

—Some idea of the state of Memphis may be gathered from the fact that a man was recently shot dead ing on a street corner in that city the other day while a fight was going on between two men. The unfortunate passenger was fired at by the brutal fellow—and killed. The soldier escaped.

—Dr. Scott, of Dublin, aged 70 years, declares that when he was a boy he went to the top of Mount Anthony from Hoosick, New York, over another hill, and from the top of that hill could see the waters that the Green Mountains are changing their level.

—Miss Sarah Jane Smith, of Arkansas, who was murdered some months since by Wm. Quantrell, a guerrilla, near Springfield, Miss., has had her sentence commuted to imprisonment for life in the State's prison. She is a bitter rebel. She is said to be insane.

—The following curious coincidence matches in four times as much as the article is worth.

—In the south-eastern part of Massachusetts there are 54 cotton factories, and 54 woolen factories.

—Miss Arvonia Jones, the popular actress, while on her way to Nashville, Tenn., to fulfill an engagement, was robbed by the bullets of the guerillas who infest the railroads of the Mississippi. She fortunately escaped personal hurt.

—Out of 10,000 prisoners confined at Florence, S.C., only 1,000 have died since May.

—A correspondent has discovered that war is "an antidote of outward and moral forces, each with each."

—The water in the western lakes is some four feet lower than it was at the same time last year, and the ports on Lake Huron, where there was formerly an depth of water, are now left high and dry by the receding of all.

—The population of Boston, by the new Corporation census, is 164,789—less than that of Chicago.

—In New York State there are 3,701 miles of railroad, which have cost $181,984,000, and in 1863 their receipts have an aggregate length of 1,620 miles, on which they have cost $181,984,000, and in 1863 their receipts were $5,418,501. The state debt is $6,566,584, and the canal debt $9,000,000.

—There are 1,609 persons on the naval pension roll. The pensions already paid, or to be paid during the last list of January next, will amount to $7,000,000, yielding a total annual charge of $2,000,000, sufficient for the payment of the entire pension roll.

—Abraham Lincoln is the first President from the State of Illinois, and the first born in the West.

—The assessed value of real estate in Philadelphia for the present year is $1,984,000, and in personal estate, $1,500,000, which is $3,312,549 more than the assessment of 1863.

—The amount of tonnage on the great lakes to transact the business of the States bordering upon them, during the year 1864, was more than double the entire commercial marine tonnage of the Atlantic States, and the commercial marine tonnage of the Pacific States, connecting the West with the seaboard are ordinarily used to transact the business.

—The Land Office has just issued a patent to Gen. Halleck for 35,000 acres of valuable land in California.

—Mr. Sargent of Southbro, Mass., has raised four pounds of cotton on an acre of land.

—A prisoner of war, just returned from the South, writes from Annapolis that, "out of 22 of my company captured with me, I am the only one alive."

—A bill has been introduced into the Legislature of Louisiana, permitting the marriage of white and colored persons.

—We see it stated that a National Convention of the Democracy will assemble in Chicago on the 4th of July next. The call for the convention alludes to "the present condition of our country, and the duty of the proper righting of those "centuries of wrong" under which the people have groaned, and which have culminated in the various Rebel "circles" to send money as well as men. And the gather from a paragraph now going the rounds of the press. And thereupon we are led to suppose that the Democratic Convention will appears to be unconstitutional association, which once unity, shrewd, and, we fear, dangerous, and trouble, and stem duties, could very well do without.

—Canadian papers discern a pronostication of war between the United States and Great Britain in the action in Secretary Welles's recent report, which reads as follows: "Instructions were given to the officers of the fleet which will attempt to direct upon our shores a course of hostile operations, to capture and destroy vessels of the Southern coast for the suppression of the rebellion." These papers also see in the recent Fenian Congress between the two countries will arise out of such judicial and international complications as will lead to a war on the St. Albans robbers and the Lake Erie pirates; but we think the Fenian Congress will have enough to attend to the conjectures of Mr. Welles.

—Mr. Wm. Cullen Bryant, whose works on Indian history, etc., are an honor to the Republic and a delight to the world, has been appointed Librarian of the Department of State at Washington. He was a good and an able man.

—Mr. W. P. Frost, an actor and a playwright, died lately, at Rochester, N. Y.

—Mr. J. W. Marshall, says an exchange, the person who first discovered gold in California, is still alive at Coloma, "a poor but respectable man." It is strange that the discoverer of so much wealth should himself possess none; but we would respectfully ask our contemporary if he be poor in necessarily to be unworthy of respect? "Poor but respectable" is as ludicrously significant a phrase as "poor but honest."

—Two new monitors, built at St. Louis, have arrived in Mobile Bay. Both are fine vessels, of light draught, and will do good service. They are named the Ajax and the Winnebago.

—The Spitz Kopfe (Mpile Ballé), a German paper, published in this city, contains the following contribution from Fort Lafayette:

"Southerners are charged with having attempted to burn down hotels. The only establishment in question is the old Gothamite. Several hundred of the Southerners lodge here, and there is no attempt to set the place on fire.

—Lafayette. 29th November."

—The library of the late Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, has been sold at auction in Baltimore. It contained several thousand valuable volumes. In one were the immortal names of Carroll who signed the Declaration of Independence, in 1776.

—Barker's famous establishment, 622 Broadway, is now open for the season. The display of fancy goods in The Cleanse with which it is filled to be remarkable, and in fact every article that can be named every article intended to ornament lovely woman here the most elegant and tasteful form. Those who choose to be little dear the world know, as it gazes with admiration at the beautiful and the tasteful, should call at once, particularly that great ornament, the Sash, is made, not only in any form or pattern, but in any length, and the art, requiring a master hand—little does the world know of the difficulties of perfection in this article. The ladies' dressing-room is a marvel for the choice arrangement of every thing that is known. From the ceiling, the whole is elegantly lined with gilt and carvings, and every article needful for a lady's toilet. The wigs for both ladies and gentlemen are really capable of a fine hair the closest observation, it being absolutely impossible to detect them from a natural head of hair.

—The statement, widely circulated of late, that Mr. Vanderbilt has been appointed President of the Harlem and Erie roads, has been stoutly denied by the Newark Advertiser, the editor of which paper has been informed by Mr. Vanderbilt that he is not a railroad company. It is a mere idle rumor.

—Mr. Wm. Kemble, of the Secretary of the command of the Department of the Susquehanah, and ordered to report to Major General Couch, Harrisburg.

—The tunnel under Lake Michigan, at Chicago, for the purpose of introducing pure lake water for the supply of the city, is progressing at the rate of 10 feet per day. One thousand two hundred and thirty feet are finished. The tunnel is the work to be present year, the miners have passed through many quarters of earth and rock, but as yet no water has been struck. The contractors have prepared a cabinet in which are displayed original specimens, affording a study for the curious. Petroleum has been found in large quantities, and several wells are now in process of boring. Sulphate of iron has also been discovered. At present the tunnel is two miles from the shore and 70 feet.

—The Penitentiary at Baton Rouge, La., was partially converted into a hospital, on account of the great increase on the part of negroes quartered in the building. Government property—horses, mules and harness—to the value of $1,000 were destroyed.

—A Western paper records an incident illustrative of the credulity and love of gambling. "A few days ago," says, a very prominent man was coming out of church, and in the street he overtakes a man who was in the act to stop progress, and it required some twenty minutes to get the former on his way. The following he resigned his office the next Sunday not a soul spoke to him as he left the church, and only a few of his former admirers had forgotten his existence."

—There is every prospect of a great skating season. Ice is already three inches thick in New Jersey. Sylvan Lake, Hoboken, was opened for the first time, on Friday, 16th inst., and was crowded with the beauty and fashion of that picturesque little place. Some of our performers are to be seen on the ice in the evening. It is the intention also of the proprietor to give a grand promenade concert and illumination.

—The 11th Col. Ellsworth relief, that attracted much attention at the Sanitary Fair, has again returned to this city, on its way to a fair, held by the ladies at All Saints Church, corner of Henry and Scammel streets. The fair is to be held on Tuesday next, 27th inst. The effigy, it will be remembered, was made by Mrs. Ellsworth, and it is to be kept before the public for charitable purposes. Photographs of it are sold at 25 cents.

—If there is any season of the year in which mutts and mattress are in high request, and of course, all the other times, it is the holiday season of Christmas and New Years, when the festivities of the time and the surroundings of life are then bright and joyous. To be in the position of selling, then, is, as a matter of course, a satisfaction of all remunerated, and we dare say that satisfaction will be all the more so, if you deal with Hilton. But in order to win enduring freshness and loveliness, we are fortunate and not fail to visit their warerooms, the various appliances for the toilet that are furnished at 214 Broadway. We visited them, and found that they keep good the best of time, and are thoroughly good. Dr. Gouraud's Italian Medicated Soap removes freckles, tan, sunburn, and every redness or roughness as soft as velvet, and gives the complexion the delicate beauty of youth. It is the best known in Europe, favored by his Oriental Cream, which prevents the skin from wrinkling, and imparts a healthy bloom to the cheek. Its effect may sometimes be judiciously heightened by a little Italian Rouge. We need not speak of the excellents of the doctor's preparations. The fame of their value is in every city of the civilized globe. One of the result's establishment, at No. 493 Broadway, is familiar to the ladies of this city, in addition to the sale of the toilette

Personal.—Says the New York Herald: "Among the passengers in the Ocean Queen, from the Isthmus, is Gen. S. B. Buckner, late Confederate commissioner to Peru, who has spent the last 14 months in a circuitous journey through the South Sea Islands, chiefly in connection with the aboriginal monuments in that region. He visited every island over a large area, miles—into Bolivia, through the great basin of Lake Titicaca to Cuzco, the ancient Inca capital, and across the Andes, to the frontiers of the savage tribes in the valley of the Amazon. We expect that Gen. Buckner's work on Peru equally extensive with works on Central America and Yucatan, which have made the present condition, the geography, resources and ancient history of that country. Gen. Buckner is no doubt well prepared for the task, and we have no doubt that the work will be written by an American observer and from an American standpoint, which will be a boon to the rest of the world that, although the United States are involved in a deadly struggle, civilization is by no means at a stand-still, and that the world has something else to occupy its attention than the affairs of the United States."

—Among the distinguished visitors whom political discussions in Spanish-America have forced to seek a temporary asylum in this country, we find the name of one who have so thoroughly won the esteem and respect of the people of the United States as the late Provisional Governor of the Republic of San Salvador, in Central America, Gen. Gerardo Barrios, who was driven from power a few months, on the 14th inst., accompanied by his beautiful and accomplished wife, with a view of taking up his residence in Costa Rica. He was driven out of San Salvador by the treachery of the Guatemalan troops, the treacherous party of his own State with the Francisco Carrera, who has succeeded him in the capacity of the usurpation of Central America to the fanciful empire of Maximilian. Gen. Barrios is a man of high character, of brave, and skill, as, indeed, also indicates have forced on him, in which case nothing is more certain than that Gen. Barrios will be enabled to organize a power for which he has no ambition, beyond the ability it may give him to benefit his countrymen. It is well understood that the Ex President has no political aspirations, and only seeks a life of repose and peace under the genial skies of Costa Rica, where his reputation and social qualities will secure him the highest recognition and welcome.

Foreign.—The Journal d'Agriculture Pratique states that the harvest in France consists of corn, 50,000,000 bushels; cattle, 40,000,000 bushels, and 3,125,000 bushels of wine. The sheep among the cattle are 30,000,000 bushels to be met with. Hemp produces 10,000,000 kilogrammes of raw wool, about a fourth of which is exported. She also produces 1,726,880 kilogrammes of honey, worth £90,000; and the sugar-beet produce of wax is from £540,000. The produce of cocoons on an average varies from 60,000,000 to 100,000,000 kilogrammes, which represent a value from £8,000,000 to £10,000,000.

—In England, in the month of Oct., 56 firms suspended, with liabilities to the extent of £10,000.

—Great Britain has paid an interest on her National debt every quarter for 200 years, which is two and a half times as much as she didn't itself.

—This anticipated that the Overland Telegraph line from Europe to America by Behring Strait will be opened in 1865.

—At the Paris theatres ladies are required to take off their bonnets, those latter structures being high, and thus to enjoy the play the whole from person who sit behind their wearers.

—Miss Mowatt, of Scotstown, Scotland, is dead, at the age of 97 years. She remembered "Harry Bradshaw," the pioneer of Lord Brougham, who was born and dear to father's knee to hear the story. He was a fine boy, and ceased to run about in petticoats.

—Gen. Sherman has appointed Brigadier-Gen. Stoneman, who is a gun carriage and a quantity of ammunition, and 1,000 rifles, to be sent to Gen. Canby at once, with orders, indicated, for rebel use against the United States.

Another Call for Troops.

The President of the United States has issued a call for 300,000 additional soldiers. We presume that a considerable time will be allowed to obey the requisition, and, if not recruited within such time, the requisite men will be drafted. We believe, in view of the circumstances, and of the patriotic spirit of National affairs, that these soldiers can easily be obtained without a draft. We approve the President in conscription and we hope that our countrymen throughout the North will spare no efforts to fill up the ranks of the National armies.

CHRISTMAS.

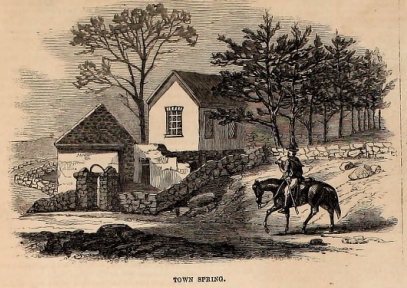
BY REV. E. H. SEARS.

It came upon the midnight clear,
That glorious song of old,
From angels bending near the earth
To touch their harps of gold—
"Peace to the earth, good will to men,
From Heaven's all-gracious King!"
The world in solemn stillness lay
To hear the angels sing.

Still through the cloven skies they come,
With peaceful wings unfurled;
And still their heavenly music floats
O'er all the weary world;
Above its sad and lonely plains
They bend on heavenly wing,
And ever o'er its Babel sounds
The blessed angels sing.

Yet with the woes of sin and strife
The world has suffered long;
Beneath the angel strain have rolled
Two thousand years of wrong;
And men, at war with men, heed not
The love-song which they bring:
O hush the noise, ye men of strife,
And hear the angels sing.

And ye, beneath life's crushing load,
Whose forms are bending low,
Who toil along the climbing way
With painful steps and slow,
Look now! for glad and golden hours
Come swiftly on the wing:
O, rest your weary hearts a day,
And hear the angels sing.

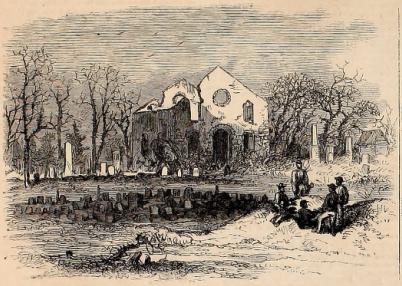


For lo! the days are hastening on,
By prophet bards foretold,
When with the ever-circling years
Comes round the age of gold;
When Peace shall over all the earth
Its ancient splendors fling,
And the whole world give back the song
Which now the angels sing.

MAJ.-GEN. GEORGE H. CROOK.

A PORTRAIT of Gen. Crook adorns our columns this week, appearing on page 226. Gen. Crook is a native of Ohio, and at the age of 33 years has already high in rank and honored in the estimation of his countrymen. He graduated at West Point in the old-fired graduate, and was a Captain in the regular army at the commencement of the rebellion. In the summer of 1861 he was commissioned Colonel of the 36th O. V. I. in September following he left that regiment to Western Virginia. Shortly afterwards he was assigned to the command of a brigade, though without the corresponding rank. After the battle of Antietam, however, in which his brigade suffered severely, he received a brigadier-General, his appointment being antedated to September. He subsequently routed the rebels in Western Virginia. He was then ordered to the Army of the Cumberland, in which he rendered signal service during the campaign of Chattanooga, and succeeded to the chief command of the cavalry department in Western Virginia, and was active and successful in a raid to Lewisburg. Gen. Crook is now on a visit to his home, and will soon be ordered to the front.

HINTS ON SMOKING.



The mouth of smoking is a matter in the habit of those who use the clean, long pipes of clay full only the effect of the tobacco is not to be lost. Short, black, bowls pipes, and pipes with glass stems, are injurious. Cigars should never be smoked to the end; otherwise they are more injurious than all. They should be used aside as soon as one-half is smoked, and always smoked from a porous or absorbent tube. Pipes are much less harmful than a cigar. The best is a long clay pipe next to this, the mouthpiece is the most wholesome. The protection of a pipe will be found in a non-resinous bowl, as amber mouthpiece and a clay stem. All attempts at pipes to condense the oil have been for failed. Every smoker should be careful of the manner in which he smokes. A good pipe pipe is very anti-shrink.

TOWN SPRING.

SHAWNEE SPRING.

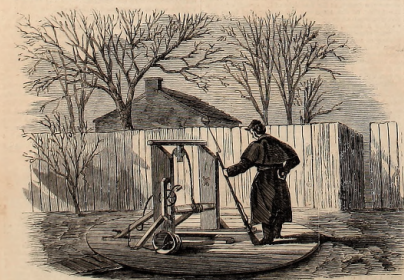
BURIAL GROUND FOR SOLDIERS—REMOVAL OF BODIES, BY FRIENDS, FOR INTERMENT AT HOME.

BAPTIST BURIAL GROUND.

VIEWS AT WINCHESTER, VA.

An entire page of our present paper is devoted to illustrations of scenery and incidents, in and about the camps of Union soldiers, near Winchester, in the valley of the Shenandoah. These illustrations are from sketches taken on the spot, by our Special Artist. The first and second of them represent two valuable springs in the vicinity of the city. The first is called "The Shawnee Spring," being named after a tribe of Indians that encamped near it on the occasion of an investment of Fort Loudon—which is near by—in Colonial times. The water of this spring, which bubbles up out of the solid rock, is remarkable for its purity and healthful qualities, and is, therefore, much used in the Sheridan hospital for sick and wounded soldiers, located at the spring. The wagons, which appear in our sketch, are employed for the purpose of conveying the water to the hospital. The "Town Spring," or reservoir, supplies the city of Winchester with water. Two pipes are laid down from the spring to the city. The large building in our sketch is the house erected by the Corporation of Winchester, to protect the spring. This has never yet been molested. The latter building, which is in ruins, was originally a spring-house, through which the surplus water passed away, and was the property of Col. McDonald, of the rebel army. It was destroyed by our forces under Gen. Milroy. All the property in this region belonged to the rebel Col. McDonald. The spring is described as jetting upwards in a powerful stream.

The third and fourth of our views are of a sad character, reminding one that the strands of life are twined in sombre as well as sunny colors. They represent the "Union Soldier's Burial Ground," and the "Baptist Burial Ground." In the former—a scene of common occurrence—friends of a dead soldier are represented in the act of removing his remains to be carried home for final interment. Sentinels are posted at various points in and around the cemetery. In the companion picture will be noticed portions of the ruins of a Baptist and a Catholic Church, as also the tomb of Gen. Daniel Morgan, of Revolutionary memory.



The fifth scene shows a portion of the Union line of fortifications near Bartonsville, occupied by the 1st Rhode Island artillery, of the 6th corps. A large oak tree, which ought to be, and doubtless is, the especial pet of the soldiers, appears in this scene. In the foreground are the band-quarters and the barber. Ingenuity is shown in the use of cedar limbs as a protection for artillery horses, while there is a flavor of mirth in the employment of cornstalks for the protection of the drum.

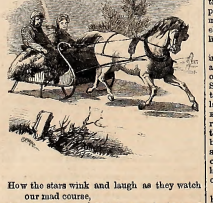
The last two scenes in this series represent the remains of Fort Loudon, and of an old well built therein, in early times, by the soldiers of Washington. This fort was constructed in the Colonial period of our country's history. Its flagstaff was planted by "Old" Washington, on the spot where now stands the arbor that is shown in our picture. The remains of this interesting antiquity are upon the estate of Mr. Wm. G. Kipey, whose residence is displayed in our sketch, next to the arbor. The old well was dug in the centre of the fortress, and cut through solid rock. It is about 100 feet deep.

It is said that the principal animal of the dairy is the ram, because he is in himself a good butter

UNION LINE OF FORTIFICATIONS NEAR BARTONSVILLE.

REMAINS OF WELL AT FORT LOUDON, DUG BY WASHINGTON'S SOLDIERS.

REMAINS OF FORT LOUDON, BUILT BY WASHINGTON.



ARMY OF THE SHENANDOAH—SCENES IN AND ABOUT UNION CAMPS, AT WINCHESTER, VA.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. E. TAYLOR.

THE SLEIGHRIDE.

BY CLAIRE CROPTON.

Over the snow, over the snow,
Like a shaft let loose from an archer's bow,
Like a deer on the foot, when the hunters are nigh,
Like a bird on the wing, when the fowler is by,
Like the rush of a stream when its frost-fetters break,
Like the surging of billows when tempests awake,
Like the crash of the avalanche quitting its place,
Like a red-streaming meteor careering through space,
Like the sweep of the whirlwind when forests are bowed,
Like the flash when the thunderbolt leaps from its cloud,
Like the swoop of the eagle as he darts on his prey,
Like the message the lightning speeds forth on its way,
With a wild sense of freedom exulting we go,
Over the snow, over the snow.

Bear away! for our comrades are drawing too near;
Be alive, man and horse! lest we fall in the rear;
To your speed, Bucephalus! the van is our place!
Hurrah! we have won! and we lead in the race.
I knew that not one of their coursers in speed
Could match for a moment our mettlesome steed.
Clear the track! is the word, as we dart on our way,
And inanimate objects the mandate obey;
The farmhouses wheel to the left and the right,
And stupidly stare as we vanish from sight;
The fences fall back, and the trees stand aside,
And make way, with a will, for our hurricane ride,
As on like a band of wild huntsmen we go,
Over the snow, over the snow.

How the stars wink and laugh as they watch our mad course,
And the moon gravely quizzes each rider and horse;
Laugh away! in your orbits celestial you go,
Much faster than we, in our planet below.
Then the girls—bless their hearts—how their sweet voices ring,
Like the gushing of bird notes that welcome the spring;
Bright-eyed! cherry-lipped! Oh, 'tis glorious to ride
With the girl that you love nestled close to your side!
While you talk in low tones—for the others are near,
And the dear little head bends closer to hear
The whisper that sets the soft cheek all aglow,
Under the rose and over the snow.

What a volume of melody surges and swells
Abroad on the air from our musical bells!
The clash of the cymbals, the clarion's breath,
The trumpet that summons to glory and death,
The peal of the organ where censers are swinging,
The harp of the minstrel through lordly halls ringing,
The blast of the bugle when squadrons are wheeling,
The strain of a lute on the charmed air stealing,
Are less sweet to the ear than the paean that swells
In the rhyme and the chime of our musical bells.
And life seems more glorious, humanity dearer,
The heart, hand and brain, warmer, firmer and clearer,
And our pulses leap time with our bells as we go,
Over the snow, over the snow.

MAJOR-GEN. O. H. CROOK, U. S. A.

Three Christmas Eves.

A STORY FOR CHRISTMAS DAY.

BY LIZZIE CAMPBELL.

CHAPTER I.

You may often have seen such girls as May. Ne Jarves, for she was not so indescribably pretty but that you may meet forms just as graceful, and faces quite as lovely, any afternoon you choose, to promenade Broadway; you may even meet Maylie herself, for she often takes her walks abroad about time, and sometimes in that direction. But whether you meet girls as pretty, or prettier, or not nearly so pretty, this you may take my word for, that never on Broadway or anywhere else can you meet anybody with a warmer, kindlier, gentler heart than beats in Maylie's bosom.

Maylie's father, who thought there never was, in any respect, such another girl in all the world allowed her to do just as she pleased in his house, of which she was the uncontrolled mistress. She kept his books, and kept them very neatly too; and she also kept a set of books of her own, labeled on the outside, "MAYLIE JARVES—HOUSEKEEPER'S BOOK." In this important ledger was a record of the use to which she each month put the liberal allowance her father made her for house and personal expenditure; and when she showed him this neat, unsoiled volume at the close of each month, it was noticeable that about the largest amount paid out during the thirty days came under the heading, "TO MY FRIENDS."

"May, my pet," said Mr. Jarves, the first time he examined the "HOUSEKEEPER'S BOOK," "who are these friends of yours that seem to have such a strong claim on your purse?"

May colored, just a little, but she answered with a sweet-toned, happy laugh:

"They are the poor people that I find around; and everybody I can do anything for I call my friend, you know."

"Do I know it, darling? I ought to, certainly, for it is like my little girl's kind heart," and Mr. Jarves kissed the glowing cheek that had blushed for its owner's goodness. "But why do you keep this account in a book devoted to housekeeping accounts, eh?"

"Oh, I don't know, papa; it's convenient, you know. Now don't say that's so like a woman. I just see the words on your lips. Give me my 'Housekeeper's Book'—there's a darling. I can't let you get critical over my little accounts and headings, and you shan't laugh at them. Now, you can't see my accounts again for a month; but you must allow that I keep your books in apple-pie order."

Mr. Jarves allowed this; and May, quite satisfied with that admission, disappeared with her account-book, and sat down to make out a list of all the "friends" she must visit that day, and make special provision for against the morrow, for it was the 24th of December, and the pretty housekeeper was not likely to forget that the next sunrise would usher in Christmas Day.

It was as yet quite early in the day, and May, having made out her little list, embracing some ten or a dozen names, dressed herself warmly and set forth on a ramble worthy of Santa Claus. She did not turn up her dainty nose, this young lady, when she found herself in localities seldom trodden by tiny feet in kid gaiters; nor did she hold aside her garments from contact with the wretched beings she met. No! Like a visitor from some better and holier, as well as lovelier world, she sought to revive, in all sad, or desperate, or bruised hearts, gentle and kindly feelings suitable to the anniversary of His birth who came into the world the bearer of glad tidings to all men. No wild eye, the mute appeal of some forlorn and haggard wretch who knew not where to look for a meal for the morrow, was turned on her in vain; no outstretched, shaking hand when bold towards her was drawn back empty; and the blessings that followed her trim little figure, and the silent thanks of quick tears that often met her glance seemed to throw a glory around her as she moved. While she stood in one dark doorway, hearing a remembrance of her visit with some special friend, a wretched, pallid, wild-eyed girl stopped a moment to look upon her, and gazing steadily on her radiant face, bent forward and laid a lean hand on May's.

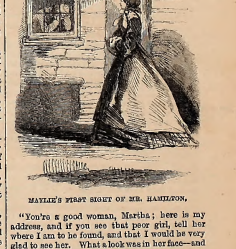
"Are you an angel?" she asked in a low, awe-struck tone.

"No," said May, with a smile. "I am only a woman.

The other started back with a smothered cry.

"A woman!" she repeated, in an awful voice; "then, O God! what am I?" And bursting into tears, she turned and fled away so fast that May felt it would be useless to start in pursuit of her.

"Do you know who that is?" she asked of the woman to whom she had been speaking.



"She's not fit to be spoken to by a lady like you," the woman answered.

"I am the best judge of that, Martha," said May, with the first sound of sternness in her voice that her listener had ever heard from her.

"Perhaps you are, miss," said Martha, humbly," and indeed if a lady like you would do anything for Sally, perhaps it might be the way to rescue her from what she herself calls 'a life worse than hell.'"

"You know her, then?"

"Yes, miss; we all knows one another, more or less, in this place, and I've often given poor Sally a corner in my room when she had no place else to lay her head in."

MAYLIE'S FIRST SIGHT OF MR. HAMILTON.

"You're a good woman, Martha; here is my address, and if you see that poor girl, tell her where I am to be found, and that I would be very glad to see her. What a look was in her face—and the sound of her voice! I shall never forget it. Good-by, Martha, and don't forget what I have told you to do."

"No, miss; I'll forget the Blessed Virgin sooner," was the fervent reply, and Martha crossed herself devoutly, with a half-formed idea that the Blessed Virgin in person, but in modern costume, had just left her.

Maylie continued on her rounds, performing the character of Santa Claus everywhere she went; till late in the evening, wholesomely tired, and with a terrific appetite, she at length turned in a homeward direction.

In passing a tumbledown, miserable building, she observed at one of the lower windows the figure of a man that at once attracted more than a passing notice. His face she could not see, for his head was partly turned away; but his form, thin and bent, suggested in some indefinable way the idea of better days having been his portion in the past. Her slow walk ceased entirely; and standing on the sidewalk directly opposite the window, she observed him more distinctly.

"That man is a gentleman," thought Maylie, and with the quick observation peculiar to women, she took in at one glance the threadbare but scrupulously neat black coat, and the snowy whiteness of the collar that appeared above it, which was tied with a well-worn black silk scarf; nor did the slender fingers of the thin hand thrust among the long gray hair escape her.

"I wish he would turn this way!" she exclaimed aloud, and almost impatiently; but either the gentleman did not hear her, or did not heed her wish, for he maintained his former position, and with a sigh of disappointment, May felt herself obliged to move forward. Very reluctantly she moved, though; and before she had gone twenty yards she suddenly wheeled round again, and walked briskly back to the house whose inmate had so interested her. She approached the door, and pushing it gently, found it unlatched, and so entered without knocking. She did not pause to consider what she was about to do, or she never could have done it; but advancing quickly along the hall she knocked loudly at the first door she came to, and being told to "Come in," she hastily entered.

THE FATHER RELATING HIS STORY TO HIS DAUGHTER.

A gentleman sitting by the window rose hurriedly at the sight of a stranger—and a lady, and came forward a few steps, then coming face to face with his visitor, he turned very pale, clutched at the chair behind him, and fell into it with a half audible moan.

May was considerably startled at the effect her appearance had caused, and blamed herself for a step prompted in part, at least, by curiosity.

"Pray, don't be angry, sir," she said, in a confused and hesitating manner, "I was very tired—I thought I should like to see you—to speak with you, and that you might not be offended with me."

"Sit down, young lady," spoke the gentleman, now recovered from his first agitation, and placing the only other chair the apartment contained for Maylie; "whoever you are, or what every our errand may be, you are welcome; for your face is that of an angel—an angel who has long been lost to me for ever."

Maylie saw at once that her appearance had awakened memories as sad as, under happier circumstances, they might have been pleasant. She hastened to say:

"Indeed, sir, I have no errand here; I merely entered because when I saw you sitting by the window I felt an interest in you, and—and—I thought I should like to know you;" and there she prudently paused, for this person whom she was desirous of putting in her list of friends was not an ordinary case; and she felt that it might be hazardous to say much.

The gentleman answered her with a sad smile.

"Yours is a harmless and not very lofty ambition, my child," and there was the faintest tinge of bitterness in his tone;" "my name is Hamilton—Rupert Hamilton. And now it is only fair that you should tell me yours."

"Maylie Jarves."

"Maylie!" exclaimed Mr. Hamilton, starting from his chair; and then slowly sinking into it again. "It seems, then, that everything about you is to amaze me, for the name of Maylie was—is—must always be a dear, a magical sound to me! Alas! dear child, what has tempted you to come here—what is it about you that revives all the dearest—all the bitterest memories in my life?"

"Oh, pray, sir, pardon me; what right, indeed, have I to intrude upon you. I have been very rude, and I never can forgive myself. I will go. Good-bye."

"No—don't go. It is like a glimpse of the heaven I have lost to look upon you. Yet you are right; it is growing dark; this is a bad neighborhood, and you are alone. Good-bye—God bless you for obeying the impulse that led you here. The sight of you has proved to me that the heart within this withered breast is not quite dead."

With strange and conflicting emotions Maylie felt her hand taken and pressed by this stranger whose acquaintance she had voluntarily sought; and in the next moment she was in the street, and hastening homeward, feeling strangely like one who had awakened from a dream.

All the way home the pale face and the brilliant eyes of the man she had left were before her; and never had she felt so keen a pang at the sight of poverty—for Mr. Hamilton was wretchedly, miserably poor; of that she had been assured by his meagre surroundings, and his attenuated, shrunken form.

"How can I serve him?" was the question she was constantly putting to herself. "He is very proud, I know; I saw that from the first; but then the proudest people must feel hungry and cold; and there was nothing on that pallet in the corner but a thin coverlid, and some old clothes, and to-morrow is Christmas Day, and I am so rich—oh, dear! What shall I do?"

All of which meant that Maylie would have given anything at that moment to the person who would have shown her the surest way to aid Mr. Hamilton without his knowledge, or without wounding his pride.

"Oh, that will do!" she suddenly exclaimed in the midst of her dinner, and without explaining to her astonished father she darted from the table, and violently rang the bell. As soon as it was answered she gave orders that the coachman was to go out, and bring in with him the first good-sized beggar boy he could find.

"Well, my darling, what is the meaning of this?" inquired Mr. Jarves.

Maylie hastily related her afternoon's adventure, and Mr. Jarves gravely shook his head.

"I have no objection to your doing any act of kindness for this man," he said, "if he really is in need of it. But I shall insist upon seeing him myself before I can allow an acquaintance so strangely begun to proceed any farther."

"Oh, thank you, papa; it will give me the greatest delight to have you see him; you will be interested, I know, and perhaps you can devise some way of materially benefitting him."

At this moment the coachman arrived, having succeeded in capturing a tolerably strong and intelligent boy of thirteen or thereabouts.

Maylie bade him take boy, who gave his name as Tom, to the kitchen, and promised to give him further orders as soon as he had eaten a good dinner.

By the time Tom had accomplished that welcome duty, and had accomplished it well, notwithstanding he had had but little practice for some time past, Maylie had made up a bundle consisting of two pairs of rose blankets, from her own well-stocked housekeeper's storeroom, and had filled a large basket with one whole turkey, a plumcake and half a dozen bottles of wine, and attached to the basket the simple message, written in pencil:

"A Christmas gift, from a friend."

With this bundle and basket Tom was dispatched, having received orders to answer all questions with but one reply:

"I don't know who sends the things; and I was told to deliver them to Mr. Hamilton."

"He also received a dollar for his trouble, Maylie being determined that every one should have a happy Christmas if she could help them to one. The coachman was then desired to follow in Tom's wake, and see that his young mistress's orders were faithfully executed. Maylie, now feeling convinced that Mr. Hamilton's Christmas dinner was provided, and that she had eluded the possibility of discovery by the above clever stratagem, for the third time seated herself at the table, and finished her dinner in peace and happiness.

CHAPTER II.

Christmas Eve again. Many were the changes that had taken place in the life of Maybe Jarves during the twelve months that had passed since she discovered Mr. Hamilton in a miserable house in one of the obscure streets of this over-peopled city. Mr. Jarves was no more; he was laid away in a quiet nook in Greenwood, and Maylie was left sole heir to all his wealth. His death had revealed a secret which filled Maylie with as much grief as astonishment; and which the reader will learn in its proper place. But none of the changes that had taken place had caused Maylie to forget her "friends." She was still mindful of their wants; and whenever occasion offered she added a new name to her list, and now that Christmas Day again approached she was out on her mission, and fulfilling the part of Santa Claus. Two, in particular, of the names she had added to her list interested her deeply; the first of these was Sarah Dalton; the girl whom Martha had called "Sally;" and whose appearance and words had so interested Maylie when she had first seen her. It was a long time before Maylie could discover Sally, and when she at length found her one day at the house of Martha, it was longer still before the poor unfortunate could be persuaded to abandon the terrible life she was leading, and return to the ways of honor and rectitude. Maylie's fine friends pronounced her mad when it came to be whispered about that she had undertaken the reformation of an abandoned woman, and had actually admitted her to her own roof, and not a few had completely dropped the acquaintance of the young heiress. Perhaps they were right—perhaps they were not; Maylie decided that she could bear the loss of their friendship, better than she could bear the sight of an immortal soul shipwrecked upon the dead sea of life, and drifting to destruction beneath her very eyes, while she perchance had but to hold out a hand to save it. Sarah Dalton was quite a young woman, but a few years older than Maylie herself, and had all the education and accomplishments of a lady; but in accordance with her own request she had entered the house of Mr. Jarves as a kind of upper housemaid, and performed her duties, of whatever kind, with the faithfulness of an attached dog. She seemed to have completely blotted from her memory all that portion of her life that had passed before the day on which she entered Maylie's service, and her sole desire, apparently, was, in every particular, to please her mistress. In time she had been promoted to the post of confidential maid to Maylie, who never had cause to regret having given her that position.

"It is very well to compassionate these unfortunates in words," Maylie had said to one of her friends, who had chosen to call in question the propriety of her conduct in the case of Sarah, "and then to hold up the hands in holy horror when it comes to putting all our fine words into action. If I had said to Sarah Dalton, 'Go mend your ways, and here is a very excellent tract that will show you how a very wicked person reformed, and afterwards became a shining light to guide her fellow-sinners out of darkness,' it is almost certain that I would have found her, a year later, more inextricably sunk in the mire than when I had first met her, for nothing can be more disheartening than the desire to do well meeting with constant discouragement. No! Let others say what they will—I prefer to do; and I am convinced that I am pursuing the true course."

And thus it came about that, when Maylie was dressing to go out on her round of Santa Claus visits, it was Sarah Dalton who buttoned her cloak and handed her the little gloves and sable furs from the dressing-table. Very different was Sarah Dalton from the girl Sally, whom Maylie had first seen while she stood talking in the dark doorway to Martha. She was a tall girl, bearing on her white face the marks of great personal beauty. Want and misery had robbed her form of the roundness and curves of beauty, but could not deprive her of the ease and grace peculiar to her. Already threads of gray were mingling with her dark hair, her eyes were unnaturally large and bright, and the hacking cough that often shook her slight frame like a tempest sent a deep hectic flush to her sunken cheek, which, fading away again, left her paler than before. Maylie sighed as she looked upon her, and then, addressing some few cheering words to her, hurried away. As she walked along her thoughts were much occupied with the second friend who interested her, and whose name was Hamilton. Mr. Jarves had kept his word, and had himself become acquainted with Mr. Hamilton; he had also been as much interested as Maylie had predicted, and had lived long enough to make himself of some substantial service to the poor gentleman. Mr. Hamilton was no longer so wretchedly poor as when Maylie had first discovered him, the position in which Mr. Jarves had placed him put him above want for the rest of his life, and he had become more attached to Maylie every time that he saw her, till at length, as the greatest mark of his esteem, he had voluntarily promised her his confidence, and had accepted her invitation to dinner on Christmas Eve.

If Maylie hurried a little through her visits that day she had neglected no one, and it was, after all, within half an hour of dinner-time when she at length arrived at home. Mr. Hamilton came n very shortly after, and she at once ordered dinner to be served, for she made no secret of her impatience to listen to her companion's story, which, she was assured, must be a remarkable one.

Mr. Hamilton did not long try her patience, his attention to the dessert was very trifling, and, pushing back his chair from the table, he remained for a few moments buried in thought, then rousing himself with a sudden effort, he spoke at once, and without preface:

MR. HAMILTON'S STORY.

At the age of thirty I was the happiest man in the world. I often said so to my wife—my dear, sweet wife!—and sometimes I said it with a feeling of dread, for I was half afraid of my own happiness, and felt the shadow of sorrow thrown forward from the dreary future. I was well-to-do in the world and engaged in a prosperous business, my wife was as lovely as she was good and gentle, and I was the father of the fairest, sweetest rosebud of a child that ever smiled and crowed beneath the glance of a delighted parent's eye. What could the heart of man desire more? Nothing; and I was content. But already the serpent was insidiously creeping into this Eden, already the canker-worm had penetrated to the heart of my perfect flower of happiness. I had a partner in my business, named Dalton——

Maylie started involuntarily when Mr. Hamilton pronounced this name, but he did not observe it, and continued:

This man, whom I had treated as a brother for years, affected to feel for me the same warm affection, and I would as soon have doubted my own truth and honor as suspected for one instant his perfect integrity. He had been married, but was now a widower, with one child, a girl of some five or six years, and he seemed to lead a very lonely and secluded life. I invited him to make my house his home, and with seeming reluctance, and after much entreaty, he at last agreed to my proposal. My wife did not approve of this addition to our family; but seeing how much I was set upon it, she did not oppose it. For the first few months of Dalton's residence under my roof everything went on smoothly and happily, and Mrs. Hamilton herself no longer expressed any dissatisfaction at the addition of Dalton and his little girl to our household. But very gradually I became conscious of a slight, almost imperceptible change in Dalton's bearing towards myself. There was a vague mingling of pity and sympathy in his manner; and sometimes, when we were alone in the counting-house together, on looking up suddenly, I would find his gaze fixed upon me with a expression of deep compassion, and not unfrequently the glitter of tears in his eyes. On such occasions he would become much confused and turn hastily away to some occupation, in which he seemed to become entirely absorbed. This went on till it affected me like a horrible nightmare, and then, from some words he dropped one day, I comprehended that this inexplicable change was caused by a suspicion on his part that my wife did not love me, and that all the affections of my heart were wasted upon a being who regarded me merely as a convenient banker, from whom she drew money whenever she required it.

Stung to fury, I turned upon Dalton like an infuriated tiger, and demanded the grounds on which he dared to form such a suspicion against my wife's honor and my own dignity.

"Mine is a thankless task," he said, with a sigh; "but I am grateful, at whatever cost, for the opportunity to unburden my mind of what has long lain upon it heavier than any words of mine can express. Let me, then, reveal to you a secret, Hamilton, the discovery of which wounded me only less deeply than it will now wound you. Your wife has a favored lover, whom she receives, on certain evenings in the week, in the little boudoir leading out of her own suite of apartments——"

"Liar!" I shouted, interrupting him, and seizing him, I yelled in his ear: "Confess that this is a base, unfounded calumny, or I swear I will choke the dastardly falsehood in your throat, and your life shall pay the penalty of this damnable invention."

He was quite as strong a man as I was, however, and exerting all his strength he shook off my grasp, and held me at bay.

"I say no more," he said, with a lofty and offended manner. "I have warned you. Take the warning, or continue to be made the dupe of an artful woman, either which you please; but you and I never exchange words again till you have apologised for your unjust language and your violent treatment of me," and so speaking, he haughtily left me.

This scene took place in our own private office; but I was no longer fit for business, and I, too, left the store and took my way home. The more I reflected upon Dalton's words, the more I was convinced either that he was the victim of a terrible mistake, or the inventor of a malicious, a diabolical slander. My wife was out when I got home, and I went to my room moody, discontented, and in no way improved in mind by meeting little Sarah Dalton, who sprang into my arms, calling me uncle Rupert, and asking for her father.

Not for one moment did I suspect my wife; but I could not but wish that she was home, and in despite of all my anger and rage against Dalton, his poisonous words were constantly repeating themselves in my memory.

In the course of the day he sent for his child and her nurse, and when my wife came in, late in the afternoon, her first words were:

"What has happened between you and Mr. Dalton, Rupert? Alice tells me that he has taken away Sarah and the nurse, and has sent for his trunks and books."

"Yes, dear, it is so," was my answer. "The fact is we have had a very serious quarrel, and it was about——"

I looked into her face as I spoke, and meeting the frank gaze of her innocent eyes, and seeing the tender, joyous smile that I so loved slumbering upon her truthful lips, I dared not repeat his gross words. I drew her towards me, and kissed the dear lips and eyes, and the sunny brow.

"Never mind what we quarrelled about," I continued, lightly; "a little girl like you has no need to know the quarrels of business men."

Dalton and myself met in the office, as usual, during business hours, but exchanged no words.

One evening, returning to my home a little earlier than usual, I ran up to my wife's boudoir, to give her some little trinkets I had bought for her, but on nearing the door, which was a trifle ajar, I was astonished to hear voices in low, apparently confidential tones; and to my horror I recognised the voice that was not my wife's as being that of a man. I was thunderstruck; every word that Dalton had spoken to me seemed to start out before me, written upon the air in letters of fire; and my blood congealed at this proof of his suspicion. I could scarcely support my weight, and involuntarily I retreated into a little niche formed by the peculiar shape of the room, and there leaned against the wall. While I remained thus concealed a man issued from the boudoir, and hurrying along the hall was soon lost to my observation. I had not the strength, even if I had had the will to pursue him; and a quarter of an hour then elapsed before I could summon up courage to confront Mrs. Hamilton. When I did enter my face must have given evidence of the conflict of emotions within me, for she exclaimed at the sight of me, and coming towards me asked if I was ill.

"No," I said; and she sank back into her seat, and seemed to relapse into a reverie from which my appearance had apparently roused her. I was stung to the quick by her preoccupied air; and swiftly sending my memory back to the past, I recalled two or three occasions when she had acted in a similar manner; but then I had thought her tired or ill—any trifling excuse had sufficed; and she had soon recovered her habitual serenity. But I now looked upon her with different eyes, and at the thought that she was deceiving—betraying me, I felt that I almost hated her—that I could have scorched up that childlike, fragile form with the fire of my indignation—and yet I could not believe it. Rather think my eyes, my ears, every sense bestowed on me by heaven had played me false, than that she had deceived me. I dismissed every evil thought with one effort of the will; and taking from my breast pocket the little casket of jewellery I had brought her I threw it into her lap, and waited for the exclamations of admiration that would follow its opening. Nor was I disappointed. She was quite as much delighted as I had expected, and overwhelmed me with caresses and pretty thanks. A dozen times I opened my lips to ask who was the man I had seen leaving her boudoir; and as often I closed them again, ashamed to own that I had even suspected her to be other than my own true wife. And so I had almost forgotten the whole thing, when one night—it was Christmas Eve, just nineteen years ago—God knows how indelibly that night is stamped upon my memory—my suspicions were again aroused and confirmed. The servants had told me that Mrs. Hamilton was in the parlor, and I stole softly upstairs to lay my Christmas gift upon a certain little stand in the boudoir, where I knew she would find it the first thing when she entered in the morning—devising expedients as I went to keep her away from that room for the remainder of the evening. My hand was just upon the door knob when, from the sound of voices within, I knew that the room was not unoccupied. Instinctively I concealed myself in the niche that had formerly served as a hiding-place, and in a few moments the door opened and my wife came out into the hall, and with him, his arm thrown familiarly about her and his hand holding hers, the same man I had before seen issue from that room.

"Remember, George," my wife spoke, "this is the last time I will consent to see you here. I can no longer take the risk of rousing my husband's suspicions. Here is money, and remember that all that I ever have is always at your service; but you must not come here again."

"Oh, Edith!" he exclaimed, "what will become of me if you forsake me?"

"But I never will forsake you, George," and the tender cadence of her voice stabbed me to the heart, "you know I have always loved you from the first; were you not my boyish lover?" and in my heart I cursed the lips that smiled on him as they had often smiled on me, "and since then, George, in the face of all your follies, crimes even, have I not been to you as a true——"

I could endure no more, and reaching her side at a single step I caught her by the shoulder and whirled her round in front of me.

"And to me, madam, what have you been?"

She shrieked, and fell forward fainting in my arms. With no gentle touch I caught her up, and carrying her into the boudoir, laid her on the sofa. But when I returned to the hall, on fire with my wrongs, burning to wreak my vengeance upon him, he was nowhere to be found. He had escaped in the single minute it had taken to carry Edith to the sofa.

I returned to her; she was partly recovered; and tottering toward me, she implored, with uplifted hands:

"Say nothing yet, Rupert; let me tell you all—I can explain everything."

But I was mad; I would neither listen nor heed. Explain! As if any explanation could satisfy me after what I had heard and seen—her words seemed a mere mockery in my ears. I will no shock you with a repetition of all that followed—torrents of blasting, scathing words poured from my lips; if she had not been so utterly overwhelmed I think I should have struck her; but sinking beneath my anger, hiding her crimson face from the blaze of my wrath, uttering hoarse, disjointed entreaties that I would but listen to her, she fell to the floor at last, and lay at my feet white and still as death, with pallid face and closed eyes, meekly begging for mercy.

There I left her. I pass over that night—it maddens me to think of it. In the morning she and the child were gone. A slip of paper left for me with one of the servants said, simply, that after the words that had fallen from my lips she could never again call me husband, and to save her innocent child from a man so unjust and so ungovernable she had taken it with her.

I will not attempt to describe my feelings on reading these words. Notwithstanding my orders that she should leave me for ever, not until she was gone did I realise that my wife was indeed lost to me. "I can explain everything," she had said; and I had refused to listen, and now—oh! I dared not pursue that thought. It was maddening. In spite of all the degrading terms I applied to her, treacherous, heartless, deceitful betrayer, I could not hide from myself that I would have given all I possessed in the world to find her—to recall her again to the home and the heart left desolate without her.

No night passed that I did not pray heaven to restore her to me—no morning dawned that I did not say, "Perhaps I may hear of her to-day;" and so weary weeks made up the months, and dreary months told out a year; and I was roughly awakened to the fact that I had entirely neglected my business by finding myself declared bankrupt, and my partner, Dalton, absconded with half a million of dollars. But all this I could have borne, and still hoped that Edith might yet return, and once more offer me the explanation I had refused to listen to, and now lived only to hear, had not this letter from Dalton overflowed the cup of my misery. I have brought it that I may give it to you verbatim:

"At last I am avenged on you. I hated you from the hour in which you became the husband of Edith Maylie——"

"Maylie! interrupted Mr. Hamilton's listener, with a sharp, eager exclamation.

"Yes, that was my wife's name; and that is why I was so affected on first learning yours."

Maylie bent eagerly towards the speaker; and searched his face for some hidden meaning in the features she had often fancied strangely familiar.

"Go on—go on!" she said, breathlessly: and the flickering color flushing her cheek, and then dying quite away, betrayed her excessive agitation.

Mr. Hamilton resumed the reading of the letter:

"I was a rejected suitor, and you my successful rival; and I took an oath to be avenged. Judge how I have kept it. Your wife was as innocent of any wrong towards you as was your infant daughter whom she carried away with her. The man whom I represented to you as being her lover, and whom you were subsequently convinced was so, never had any claim upon her more than that of a brother. He was a cousin whom her father had adopted as a son; and turning out a reprobate when he grew to manhood, was at length sent to State Prison for life, having committed murder in a street affray. He contrived to escape; and I discovered him; and from dread of exposure and in return for a handsome sum of money which I paid him, he became my tool to rouse your jealousy. He so wrought upon Edith's goodness of heart and old time sisterly fondness for him, that she received him with suspicious secresy, and did not dare to tell you. How our plot succeeded, I need hardly remind you. Nor would I now explain it, but that I have received certain intelligence that Edith is no more! That item of news completes my vengeance. Henceforward your path in life and mine lie very far apart.
"James Dalton."

Mr. Hamilton folded up this letter and put it away; and wiped from his face the cold sweat of anguish and remorse called forth by its perusal.

"After reading this letter," he continued, "there was a blank of three years in my life. When I returned to the first glimmering of reason I found that for three years I had been the inmate of a lunatic asylum, given over as a hopeless case; but I gradually recovered, and was at last discharged, cured. To give even a brief summary of my life from that time till the night, one year ago, that I first saw you, Miss Jarves, would occupy a tediously long time. Suffice it to say that I maintained existence, partly by the miserable pittance I earned in copying law-papers—in writing from the dictation of others—in a thousand other humiliating ways—even in receiving presents of blankets, turkey and plumcake from kind-hearted young ladies—don't blush, my dear child. I was not humiliated at receiving your gift. But above all, the reason why my wretched soul and body clung together was this, that I never quite abandoned the hope of finding my child—my Edith's child."

"She is found!" exclaimed Maylie, bursting into passionate, hysterical tears and sobs; and drawing from its chain about her neck a small miniature, she held it with trembling fingers towards Mr. Hamilton. "Do you recognise that picture?" she asked.

"It is a likeness of myself, which I gave my wife on my thirtieth birthday—how came it in your possession?" and with the light of a wild hope flushing all his face he caught both of Maylie's hands, and devoured her face with his eager glance.

"It was found on me," she gasped, choking, "when Mr. Jarves received me, nineteen years ago, a Christmas gift left upon his doorstep—and you are my father, my own, own dear father, whom I never expected to find;" and with a glad cry of joy Mr. Hamilton folded his child close to his heart, and felt that heaven had rewarded all his sufferings in that one moment of sacred joy.

And then when Maylie was calm enough to speak, and Mr. Hamilton was calm enough to listen, she told him that the secret revealed by Mr. Jarves's death was that of her being a foundling; that a paper pinned to her dress when found desired that she might be called Maylie, and stated that the likeness upon her neck was that of her father, and then concluded with the prayer of a wretched mother, who felt herself to be dying, that they would deal gently by the little one left to their care.

Sweet were the dreams of Maylie Hamilton that Christmas Eve, pure her thoughts as the softly falling snow without, and so sound her slumber that she did not feel the good-night kiss her father stole in to leave upon her brow, although even sleeping her rosy lips smiled upon him.

CHAPTER III.

Christmas Eve once more!

Though a steady, feathery snowstorm had continued without intermission from the late dawn till the hour when Maylie seated herself opposite her father at the dinner table, it had not detained her from her customary round of visits; and in no former Christmas of her life had she earned more grateful thanks, more heartfelt blessings from her poor "friends."

Maylie had just finished the recital of her day's visits with: "It grew dark somewhat suddenly, you know, papa, on account of the falling snow, so that I was obliged to come home before I had quite completed my round; but I am more than half glad that it did happen so, for I am determined to go and see Mrs. Elser after dinner, and you must go with me."

"And that I shall, my dear, with great pleasure. Who is Mrs. Elser—a new friend?"

"Not entirely—I have known her for some months, and furnished her with all the sewing I had on hand; but notwithstanding I paid her the largest prices I could, without exciting her suspicion that I was trying to help her, I can plainly see that she is still in want of many comforts. It is very difficult to deal with her, for she is evidently a lady, and I am in constant dread of giving offence where I mean only to be kind. Now my heart is set upon her having a pleasant—if possible happy Christmas—and I am going to ask her to come and dine with us to-morrow—that is, if you have no objection?"

"I object? My dearest child, it would ill become me, even if your friend was a very different style of person from what you describe her to be. But I know my little girl's taste too well to doubt but we will have a pleasant addition to our Christmas dinner."

That subject being disposed of, Maylie's sweet face began to show signs of uneasiness, till then hidden by animation and interest in the welfare of others. Mr. Hamilton could not but notice the shadow.

"Something troubles my pet?" he said, in a tender, questioning tone, and touching the golden sheen of her hair as he spoke, with a look and gesture of indescribable love.

"You know what I have to dread to-morrow, papa?" was her answer.

"Mr. Dahlgren?" said her father.

"Yes," answered Maylie, with a sigh.

"Has it then come to dread, my dear?" questioned Mr. Hamilton, anxiously.

"I'm afraid I must acknowledge it, papa. You know, when I first promised to become formally engaged to Mr. Dahlgren, I supposed Mr. Jarves to be my own real father; and though I did not love the gentleman in question, I was so very anxious to comply with every desire of that kind, good man that I promised to do everything I could to regard Mr. Dahlgren as my future husband."

"And you have done so, Maylie?"

"Yes, father; I have received Mr. Dahlgren's letters for nearly two years, now; and I have answered them regularly. It was an understood thing before he went to South America that when he returned I was to name the day for our marriage. He returns to-morrow; and every day since I saw him last I have said to myself: 'Charles Dahlgren is to be your husband—never let your thoughts wander from that point.' But now, oh! dear father——"

"You have let your thoughts so wander," interrupted Mr. Hamilton, in pity for the blushing girl who bent her crimson face before him, and put up one slender little hand to shade it from his view.

"Yes, father," she answered, falteringly.

"You love Albert Sanford?" said Mr. Hamilton.

"Yes, dear father," said Maylie, very low, and not daring to meet his gaze.

"Well, my dear, don't blush for that which is neither wrong nor shame. You never loved Mr. Dahlgren; and you have tried to love him well enough to betroth yourself to him—you have done your duty, as far as it was in your power. It only remains now to tell him all, and ask him to release you. What sort of man is this half-betrothed lover of yours, to begin with?"

"Mr. Dahlgren has always been considered a gentleman of unblemished character, father."

"So much the better. He shall know the whole truth; and if he is the gentleman he is supposed to be, let him prove it by acting in as frank and upright a spirit as we shall act by him. Take no more trouble to your heart, my child—all will be well."

Maylie was much relieved by her father's decisive tone and manner, and said so; and after dinner the two hastily made ready, and through the beautiful snowstorm took their way towards Mrs. Elser's humble dwelling.

It was a long distance, and the way was not enlivening, but May kept up a continual conversation, to which her father was content to listen, at long intervals putting in a word or two as his share, so that they were before the low and somewhat battered door leading into Mrs. Elser's room almost before they knew it.

Mrs. Elser was, as Maylie had said, a lady evidently; and in the midst of all her poverty a certain air of delicate refinement was visible to any observing eye. At the entrance of her visitors she rose and greeted May warmly, and without the slightest embarrassment at seeing a stranger with her. May caught her father's hand and drew him forward.

"This is my papa, Mrs. Elser, whom you have so often heard me speak of, and we have both come to try if we cannot induce you to——"

Mrs. Elser looked towards Mr. Hamilton, while Maylie spoke, and as their eyes met both turned very pale, both bent eagerly forward, and on both faces was an eager, agonised expression. At this moment Maylie observed her two companions and her little speech came to an abrupt conclusion. At first it was with a feeling of unmixed astonishment that she regarded them; but that was swiftly followed by a wild hope, which in the next moment was realised.

"Edith—Rupert!" were the words that broke the silence, and the long parted wife and husband were folded in each other's arms; and then Mr. Hamilton, sinking to the floor at his wife's feet, bent his face upon her two thin hands and wept aloud in the joy and thankfulness of his heart.

"Rise, Rupert, dearest," she said.

"Never, till you forgive me, Edith, for all my harsh, cruel injustice to you."

"That was forgiven many long, sad years ago, my husband. Nor was I entirely blameless to leave you as I did, without any clue to my whereabouts, if you should change your unjust opinion of me."

And then, before further explanations, both remembered their child, and silently, with full, joyous hearts, that sang hymns of thankfulness, Maylie was gathered close in the embrace of both her parents.

It was a long story that had to be told by Mrs. Hamilton, and listened to by her husband and daughter, of all she had known and suffered since that night when, worn and weary, sinking beneath cold and exhaustion, and a crushed, sorrowing heart, she had believed herself dying, and had left her little one to the care of strangers—strangers who, mercifully, had been more tender to the child of their adoption than many parents are to their own—how, when she had recovered and found herself tended by gentle Sisters of Charity in one of the hospitals, she had made the first use of her restored strength to search for her child. But all she knew to guide her was the house at the door of which she had left it, and on inquiry she learned that the whole family had gone to Europe, and from that time she could get no trace of them; how, after years of fruitless search, and toil, and drudgery, her heart had turned longingly towards her husband, and she resolved to answer one of the many advertisements she had been at first too proud to take any notice of, but it was too late. Mr. Hamilton had failed completely, and all trace of him was swallowed up in the oblivion that had followed his insolvency.

To tell all this took a long, long time. And it was not in Mrs. Elser's poor little room that the story was given; no, in the cosiest of parlors and warmed by a glowing seacoal fire, Mr. Hamilton and Maylie listened to the recital of the new-found wife and mother. And Christmas Eve was gone, and the hour had come when, more than eighteen hundred years before, shepherds had watched their flocks, and, abiding in their fields all night, had sung hallelujahs as the Star of Bethlehem had arisen, ere the three happiest people in all the city said "Good-night!" and in the silence of their rooms blessed the Father who ever watches the footsteps of his sorrowing, erring children, that He may lead them by paths they know not of to a haven of peace and joy.

Maylie was so very happy that Christmas that she forgot the trouble that had gathered her fair brow into a frown only the evening before, but she was reminded of it in an abrupt and startling manner.

Early in the day she was seated by the couch of Sarah Dalton, who was rapidly sinking under the hand of the destroyer; and was telling her the story of her own father and mother, so strangely reunited—telling her all, save the name of the miscreant who had caused their separation; for Maylie had learned ere then that Sarah Dalton was indeed the daughter of Mr. Hamilton's foe; but with true Christian charity and forbearance, she had kept it from the dying girl. Sarah was a little better on that day, and it was a lounge and pillows in Maylie's own parlor that formed her couch, while she lay, deeply interested, and listening, with a vague sense of hearing sweet music, to May's voice. Both were roused by a step hastily approaching the door, and May had turned her head, when she was suddenly arrested in so doing and her gaze fixed, frozen on the face of Sarah Dalton. The invalid half-raised herself, and was bending forward with a face on which death seemed already to have set his seal, but that the great dark eyes burned with a lurid light, and remained steadily fixed on some object beyond. Slowly that burning light died away, and a livid pallor yet more dreadful than her former ghastly paleness overspread her face, and she fell backward. Maylie felt that she must turn and behold this horror that had caused so sudden, so inexplicable a scene; and she did so.

In the doorway stood nothing more frightful than her own half betrothed lover, Charles Dahlgren. Whatever his feelings on first beholding Sarah Dalton, they were now under complete control; he betrayed no more agitation than a meeting with his future bride might justly have warranted. With outstretched hand, and "My own dearest Maylie," he came forward; but Maylie glanced from him to the insensible girl before her; then back again at him, and drew away with a shudder from that outstretched hand. A sudden, blinding light swept in upon her, that, for a moment, quite bewildered her. Then hastily recovering she said:

"Please go away. I will see you in the drawing-room, by-and-bye."

Mr. Dahlgren obeyed with a bad grace; a dark frown hid his beauty of face as he turned away, and he only half suppressed the exclamations of rage and disappointment that would rise to his lips.

Maylie's first care was to restore Sarah to consciousness; and it was long before she succeeded. When at last the unhappy girl recovered, her first question, asked with a nervous shudder, was:

"Where is that man?"

"Do you know Mr. Dahlgren?" asked Maylie.

"Yes, I know Mr. Dahlgren," was the answer, with a hard, dry laugh.

"Mr. Dahlgren is the man who left my soul and body to perish in the mire from which you rescued me," and the unhappy woman burst into a sudden passion of tears that seemed to shake the very breath from her exhausted frame, succeeded by a long fit of coughing that left her gasping and breathless when at last it was over.

As soon as she could speak she begged to be left alone.

"Some day, when I am strong enough to bear it—if ever I am strong enough again," she said, "I will tell you the story, Miss Hamilton."

Maylie left her alone, according to her desire, and took her way directly to the drawing-room. She spoke immediately, without giving Mr. Dahlgren time to utter a word.

"There is no occasion for you to speak, sir," she said, with immeasurable contempt. "I know of the part you have acted towards the poor, dying girl upstairs. Our acquaintance ceases from this moment; henceforward during all our lives we are strangers. Good morning."

She waited for no reply; in truth the gentleman was too completely stunned, mentally, to take up any line of defence; and as she haughtily left the room, he rose also, and blindly, burning with impotent rage and mortification, stumbled along the passages, and out into the street.

But what an inconsistent thing is a woman. Now that Maylie was rid of every obstacle that stood between her and her own true love, she locked herself up in her room, and for one good hour enjoyed the luxury of fast flowing tears.

For the loss of her lover? Well, yes; because that loss had made her so very happy that the little over-charged heart would empty itself, and for the first time she felt how unutterable wretched would have been the fate that separated her from Albert Sanford. A sun-shower of the heart that flood of tears was to Maylie; and when she left her room it was to flit through all the house more like a sunbeam than ever.

And so it happened that when Albert called that evening Maylie no longer feared to leave her hand a moment in his warm, trembling clasp; no longer dreaded that he would read the secret in her eyes, and so tempt her to break the promise given to the dead. All was changed; and Albert might read what he pleased, and ask for that little tremulous hand as soon as he chose, with every chance of receiving leave to hold it in his for ever if he wished. And of all the happy Christmas Days that Maylie had ever known, surely that one on which Albert helped her to give out the gifts from the great Christmas tree in the front parlor was the happiest. And what a motley crowd of half-grown boys and girls it was that responded to those gifts, and the kind words accompanying them:

"Merry Christmas—merry Christmas," till all the air seemed alive, and our great Saxon tongue seemed capable of only one sound, "Merry Christmas; merry Christmas," till I cannot find one other word to say myself; and must also join the universal hub-bub, with "Merry Christmas; merry Christmas; merry Christmas!"

THE GREAT NAVAL EXPEDITION UNDER ADMIRAL PORTER.

Our Fleet in Hampton Roads.

Our double page this week affords a complete and striking view of the Union fleet and army transports, constituting the great naval and military expedition under Admiral Porter and Gen. Butler, which left Hampton Roads on the 13th inst., destined to operate against an important point on the Southern coast. The army transports, which appear in our picture laden with U. S. troops, set sail from the Roads during the night of the 12th inst. The Admiral's flagship, the Malvern, and her commander, sailed early on the 13th inst. The ironclads were the first to move. Then the single turretted monitors started forth, in tow of steamers. Following these went the double-turretted monitors, which are self-propelling. Lastly the men-of-war. The wind was blowing off the shore when the fleet sailed, moving away in a southerly direction. The public will await with deepest interest the result of this mysterious movement.

ARRIVAL OF ADMIRAL FARRAGUT.

The city of New York was gladdened, on the 13th inst., by the arrival, in this port, of that gallant and honored naval hero, Admiral Farragut. He came in his old flagship, the Hartford, which left Pensacola on the 30th of November, made Key West on the 4th inst., where she delayed one day, and thence has had a pleasant pas[illegible], but for a two days' gale of wind, on the 8th and 9th. We present, upon the first page of this paper, a picture of the Hartford, sketched by one of our Artists, as she appeared when coming up the bay of New York. She is, as will be observed, a particularly handsome ship, having been built in the most careful manner by Mr. W. S. Hanscom, well known also as the builder of the Wachusett, the Canandagua, and the ironclad Monadnock. Her fame is identical with that of her brave commander, whose companion she has been throughout his victorious career in the civil war. In her he led the way to victory at New Orleans and subsequently at Mobile, the banner of the Republic and the broad blue pennant of the Admiral floating over her in glory and in triumph. Her presence in our bay with the old Admiral upon her quarter deck, was naturally the signal for patriotic enthusiasm. At the harbor bar she was met by the revenue cutter Bronx, Capt. Constable, on board of which was a committee of gentlemen, headed by Collector Draper. On coming on board the Hartford the latter officer addressed the Admiral, extending to him, on the part of our citizens, a hearty welcome to New York. To this Admiral Farragut responded briefly and gracefully. The visitors then passed a little time in examining the ship, which, though in the neatest possible condition, bears traces of the ravages of battle and of storm to which she has been exposed. On coming on shore, in the afternoon, the Admiral was taken to the Custom House, where, in the Collector's Room, and before a large assembly of persons, he was welcomed by a delegation of New York merchants, and in a spirited versified eulogium by Mr. A. J. H. Duganne. After shaking hands all round, he then withdrew, and joined his wife at No. 5 London terrace, 23d street. His presence in our city is a source of great pleasure to all who honor the cause for which he has fought, or the manliness, energy and heroism of character which he has so signally displayed. The services which he has rendered to the Republic need not here be rehearsed. They have endeared him to the national heart, and made his name illustrious in American history.

THE PRINCIPAL SHIPS OF THE GREAT NAVAL EXPEDITION UNDER ADMIRAL PORTER, LYING AT ANCHOR IN HAMPTON ROADS, DEC. 12.—FROM A SKETCH BY T. F. LAYCOCK.

GREAT NAVAL EXPEDITION UNDER ADMIRAL PORTER—SCENE IN HAMPTON ROADS, VA.—EMBARKATION OF UNION TROOPS ON BOARD U. S. ARMY TRANSPORTS, DEC. 13TH.—FROM A SKETCH BY T. F. LAYCOCK.

THE NEW TIMON.

[The subjoined verses, by Alfred Tennyson, originally appeared in the London Punch, many years ago. They are directed against Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, who had, in a poem called "The New Timon," indulged in malignant allusions to Tennyson. The verses, of course, appeared anonymously.]

We know him out of Shakespeare's art,
  And those fine curses which he spoke;
The old Timon, with his noble heart
  That, strongly loathing, greatly broke.

So died the Old; here comes the New.
  Regard him; a familiar face;
I thought we knew him; what, it's you,
  The padded man—that wears the stays?

Who killed the girls and thrilled the boys
  With dandy pathos when you wrote:
A Lion you, that made a noise,
  And shook a mane en papillote.

And once you tried the Muses too;
  You fail'd, sir; therefore now you turn;
You fall on those who are to you
  As captain is to subaltern.

But men of long-enduring hopes,
  And careless what this hour may bring,
Can pardon little would-be Popes
  And Brummels when they try to sting.

An artist, sir, should rest in Art,
  And waive a little of his claim;
To have the deep poetic heart
  Is more than all poetic fame.

But you, sir, you are hard to please;
  You never look but half content;
Nor like a gentleman at ease,
  With moral breadth of temperament.

And what with spites and what with fears,
  You cannot let a body be;
It's always ringing in your ears,
  "They call this man as good as me."

What profits now to understand
  The merits of a spotless shirt,
A dapper boot—a little hand,
  If half the little soul is dirt!

You talk of tinsel! why, we see
  The mark of rouge upon your cheeks;
You prate of Nature! you are he
  That spilt his life about the cliques.

A Timon you! Nay, nay, for shame;
  It looks too arrogant a jest—
The fierce old man—to take his name,
  You bandbox! Off, and let him rest!

MEDUSA.

CHAPTER IV.—CONTINUED.

"Soon after it pleased God to take my husband from me, and my means were much restricted in consequence; the children, too, were growing up and becoming a greater expense to me, and, as I told you, we gave up living in the town and came back to settle once more near my native village of Wallendorf. Wanda was eleven years old then, and William the same age, Elizabeth was thirteen, and my eldest boy, Francis, was fifteen. Wanda was a heavy charge to me, for the curse which had fallen upon the mother had descended to the child. She was insane from her birth. The count took no heed of her; he never came near the place, but he paid us handsomely for the care of her, and Mr. Hartmann, through whom the money passed, was exact with the remittances. She grew up to be even lovelier than her mother. There was nothing alarming about her want of reason, and only to look at her no one would have guessed that anything was much amiss with her. She did not look then as she does now; she had a brilliant color then. In her mind she remained always like a little child; she understood nothing except the simplest things, and was quite unteachable, generally docile; but if anything angered her she would take fits of silence that sometimes lasted long enough to make me uneasy, and occasionally she would have bouts of rage, in which she would beat herself against the walls, and be more like a wild animal than a human creature; but this was never often, and, with the years, grew of less and less frequent occurrence. She was afraid of me, and desired to please me, and she generally obeyed Elizabeth pretty readily too. Wilhelm she doted upon; they were always playing together, and he seemed to understand her, and to make her understand him, better than any one else. Francis was the only one she did not care at all for; she seemed positively to dislike him, and he was so devoted to her! He was not like William; he was grave and thoughtful, and did not play with her, but he worshipped the ground she trod on; I have seen his eyes fill with tears when she has said, 'Go, go, you ugly Francis!' Nothing that he could do for her ever seemed to touch her, and when he has gone long distances to get her the flowers that he knew she liked, she would take a malicious pleasure either in giving them to William or in picking them to pieces before his face. It was a very wild life while they all remained young; they passed all their days playing about in the woods, and when suddenly I felt they were all growing up and that something must be done, it seemed as if their childhood had slipped away in one single summer's day.

"Francis went back to Altheim; my husband had been an upright man, respected by his neighbors, and the boy found friends there. William had a great turn for music, and we placed him with the organist of a church at Prague, that he might study so as to make it a profession. Francis got a situation with Mr. Hartmann. Elizabeth remained with me to help me with the housekeeping. The only one of the family to whom time brought no change was Wanda; she led the same life as ever, wandering all day about the woods, making garlands, or taming the wild creatures by imitating their different cries. I have often seen her entice the owls down by hooting to them, and she had an odd way of singing in a soft low voice, that brought the lizards all round about her to listen. She ran quite wild, but we never felt anxious if she stepped out late; her deficient state was well known, the peasants were all fond of the poor child, and no one would have harmed a hair of her head. The boys came home occasionally to see us, and I began to look forward to those times with sorrow. Francis had grown into a man, and his devotion for Wanda had taken a more serious turn—he was becoming passionately in love with her. I was grieved to see my child suffer; and though I could not have thought for a moment of his marrying this poor senseless girl, I used almost to hate her when I saw how unfeeling, how wantonly unkind and cruel she was to him. He felt it so bitterly, that I was glad when his little holiday was over, and that he went back to his work at Altheim.

"One autumn time, somewhere about the beginning of September, we got a letter from Wilhelm, complaining of illness (fever and pain brought on by having sat in wet clothes), and expressing so strong a desire to see some of us, that I could not help feeling that he must be worse than he stated himself to be. It was always a matter of impossibility to leave Wanda, so, although I was full of apprehension, I determined upon sending Elizabeth to pass a week with her brother.

"The letter I got from her when there only confirmed my own forebodings: she had found him very ill, and he soon became desperately so. He had a severe attack of rheumatic fever, and Elizabeth, young and unused to sickness, wrote in alarm to implore me to go to her. I was at my wits' end to know what I could do with Wanda during my absence; at last I bethought me of an old schoolfellow of my own, who had lately come to settle in a village about ten miles distant, and on the direct road to Prague; and I made up my mind to leave Wanda there, and get my friend to take charge of her for a week or two, meaning to pick her up on my way home.

"Margaret Hentzel and I had not met alone since we were girls, but I had heard of her from time to time. She had not a happy fate; first, a bad husband, then a bad son—a handsome, worthless fellow, who had been an incessant anxiety and heartbreak to her. She was now, like myself, a widow, and her son a soldier in the Austrian service.

"It is a great shock to meet again—aged and broken with the trouble of life—those from whom one had parted in all the freshness and trust of youth. When I had last seen poor Margaret, she was a bright vigorous girl, full of hope and courage; now she was old and worn and feeble, all the bravery gone, and only thankful to be left alone to die in peace after all the misery caused by her husband and her good-for-nothing Karl, who never had anything to recommend him but his looks, and a voice of marvellous power and sweetness, but who, with those two gifts, had contrived to bring sorrow and trouble to many a poor girl's heart. He was at Vienna then, his mother told me, and little did I think, when I kissed Wanda at parting, that it would so soon be given to this man, on whom we had none of us set eyes, to work the terrible mischief that ruined us all. I was detained six weeks by the bed of my sick child, and when at last I hurried back full of anxiety—for I had had no news from Margaret for a considerable time—it was to find Wanda (then but barely sixteen) the wife of this miscreant. He had arrived suddenly soon after my departure, having gambled away every farthing that he possessed, and with the design of extorting what money he could from his poor frightened mother. He saw Wanda; he also saw some jewels which had belonged to her mother, and which I had left with Margaret Hentzel, as an earnest of payment, for her trouble; he found out that Wanda belonged in some mysterious way to great and powerful people, and from that moment he conceived the project of marrying her, and never rested until he had so bewildered the poor deficient creature with his beautiful evil face and wondrous voice, and so worked upon the terrors of his helpless old mother, that he induced them to go with him to another place some miles away, where they were totally unknown, and where, after a sojourn of a few days, they were married.

"After this he remained but two days with them, at the end of which time he disappeared, carrying the jewels with him, and leaving his hapless child-bride to her fate. I cannot describe my state of mind when I was made aware of all that had happened; indignation at the poor senseless creature's having been taken this base advantage of, and terror at the thought of her father's fury when he should learn what had befallen, alternately possessed me.

"It seems that Karl had taken leave of his wife by the brink of a lake in the woods near his mother's house, and every day the poor child went and wandered round and round the water like a reckless ghost, calling for him in the most piteous way until night set in, and we had to lure her home with lies, telling her that she would find him at the house, or by the way, or under a tree in the garden waiting for her, deluding the simple creature with hopes never to be fulfilled.

"Margaret Hentzel was too much paralysed by all that had occurred to advise or to oppose, and I got my darling Wanda home to Wallendorf as soon as possible; the change of scene and return to the old life seemed to sweep all latter events entirely out of her memory. She never mentioned Karl's name again, but she fell into a kind of melancholy stupor. She would not utter, she ate next to nothing, and was worn to a thread; the child looked bewitched; she then gave up going out altogether; she seemed too weak to move; she lost all her color, and would sit for hours playing with some dead forget-me-nots she had brought away with her from that lake of ill fortune, and which, no doubt, her wicked husband had given her.

"About this time my son Francis obtained a secretary's place with a nobleman at Prague; it was not a very great affair, but still an advance upon his former position. William was quite settled at Prague, so that the two brothers would be together again; and I was glad of that—but most of all I was glad of anything that would remove him entirely away from Wanda.

"The Sunday before he was to leave for Prague, Francis came out to Wallendorf to bid us goodbye. For some time before that last disastrous circumstance he had avoided Wanda as much as possible; her usual greeting had been, 'Go—go—I hate you—you ugly Francis!' and though he was half broken-hearted by it, he bore her no ill-will; he knew the poor half-witted creature could not help anything she did—the only misfortune was, that her lovely looks undid her unkind words, and he could no more help loving her than she could help hating him. This evening he came in, and kissed Elizabeth and me as usual; Wanda was sitting at the little table in the window, looking at her dead forget-me-nots. He did not go near her, but just said: 'Good evening, Wanda!' and, passing on, came and stood by the fire. The day had been cold and damp, and we had thrown on a few fagots to make a blaze. Wanda gave him no answer, but looked steadily at him in silence.

"At last she rose up, came slowly across the room to where he was standing, and putting both her arms round his neck, laid her little thin white face against his cheek, saying in her sweet childish way, 'Poor Francis! poor Francis!' It was almost more than he could bear—she had never kissed him in her life before. We were all ready to cry, or it seemed as if some dumb grief at her heart had made her know at last what he suffered; but this new tenderness was the worst thing that could happen for my poor boy, and I looked with impatience to the end of the evening. Early next day he left us.

"We had hardly been settled a month in our old home, when I got a letter from Margaret Hentzel acquainting me with the sudden and awful death of her son. One night, while in a fit of drunkenness, he had fallen from his horse, and struck his head violently against a stone, and had been taken up a corpse. I fell on my knees, and thanked God for what seemed to me an issue out of all our troubles. The count need never know—Wanda would forget—we would bury her terrible secret for ever in a sealed silence—and all might yet be well.

"By degrees Wanda recovered her health and strength, but an extraordinary change had come over her. A sort of soft splendor (I have no other word for it) seemed to rest upon her; there was something new and angelic about her that I had never seen before. Every day she grew more beautiful; her skin so much fairer, her eyes with such a soft tender haze over them! Elizabeth was as much struck with her appearance as I was, for one night she suddenly exclaimed, "Mother, what ails our Wanda? She has human eyes!' A remark which had its significance, sir, for until then Wanda's eyes had been like the bright, clear, piercing eyes of a bird, and entirely without any touch of human warmth in them. She hardly ever spoke; but though this might not seem to indicate a change much for the better, when she did say anything I was amazed to see how often now there was something that looked almost like a followed-out thought. She became very gentle and caressing, too, which she had never been before, and instead of running wild as she used, she would now try and imitate Elizabeth about the house. At first it was like a little child playing at housewife; but by degrees she got really to do things handily, and to help, and it was pretty to see the poor silly thing try so hard to do her best. When she succeeded, we patted her and praise her, and said, 'Good Wanda!' and she was so happy and so proud! One day at dinner, Elizabeth put a plum down beside me on the table, which a neighbor had left for me. There had been fruit of which the girls had eaten, and this was a small plum which could not be divided; so, while I was talking to Elizabeth about the friend who had sent it to me, I ate it up. I had just finished the last morsel, when Wanda suddenly made a savage spring at me, and struck me a violent blow. At first I thought she must be in play; but when I saw her face, I saw it was no play—it was in a state of convulsion. In the same instant, an awful, nameless fear flashed into my mind, and took possession of it. It was too well founded. In due time, my innocent child, my poor unconscious Wanda, became a mother. On a bright morning in May she brought a lovely boy into the world. Oh, her face of ecstacy when, after those hours of mortal agony, I laid her baby on her breast!

"Luckily, Count Berchtold was still abroad, and I did not know where to write to him. I do not think I should ever have found courage to do so. As for Wanda, heaven wrought a miracle upon her through her love for her little one. She nursed him with the most doting tenderness, and was never tired of rocking his cradle, and singing and cooing to him. As she nursed him, and as the baby grew, her senses seemed to come back to her, and by the time he was four months old she was hardly different from any other people. But, unfortunately for us, of course this state of things could not endure for ever. Count Berchtold returned to the castle at last, and Joseph Hartmann, to whom I had been obliged to confide our trouble, drove over from Altheim, had an interview with him, and told him what had befallen his hapless child. He was frenzied with rage! He flew to the stable, ordered his horse, and tore off to Wallendorf; Hartmann following at full speed in the carriage, to prevent mischief if possible. Wanda had just set her boy to sleep, and was rocking the cradle and singing. I was mending up one of the baby's nightshirts in the front room; Elizabeth was in the garden, and saw them coming. She ran in to tell me, but she had hardly got the words out, when the count entered, blaspheming with passion.

"'Infamous wretch!' he shouted, 'is this what I have paid you for? Is this the way you discharge your trust? Lowborn beggar! Do you know what the honor of a noble name means?'

"At this instant Wanda appeared at the door of the inner room. She came up to him, not knowing in the least who it was. 'Do not be angry,' she said to him, and put her hand upon his arm; 'do not speak so loud. Hush! hush! you will wake my child.'

"The count seized her by both wrists. 'Be silent!' he said, between his teeth, and quivering with rage; 'your child sleeps, does he? I wish both he and you were sleeping the sleep of death in your graves!' He flung her from him, and made for the inner room. Wanda flew like lightning into the room before him, and shut the door against him, while Hartmann, Elizabeth, and I, all stood before the door on the other side, and pushed him from it. It was a frightful scene! He suddenly turned sharp round upon Hartmann: "Take the accursed little creature away from that shameless idiot!' he said. 'She shall not glory in her degradation any longer! Bring it away with you this moment, as you value your position and my favor.' With that he left the cottage, and rode off again at full gallop.

"How shall I describe all that followed? Our having to break this terrible news to Wanda, and the poor unfortunate creature's agony when at last she understood that she was to lose her child! She lay down at Hartmann's feet, and begged for mercy. He was crying his eyes out, poor man, but he had a wife and a family of little children, and his place was all he had to depend upon. He waited a long while, but at last he said he could wait no more. I whispered to Elizabeth to get the poor thing out in the garden if possible, that he might take the child while she was away; but anguish seemed to have sharpened all her senses, and she heard me. She stood right up in the midst of us, shaking like a leaf, and said: 'I will fetch my child myself—I will give him my child myself—I will only nurse him once more—and then he shall go.' She went back into her room, and we all remained where we were, talking together in a low voice; we were very miserable!

"Hartmann was a kind man, and had a baby of his own—it went to his heart to take the child away—but he promised us to ask the count's leave to bring it up with his own, and we thought that, so, the poor mother would often have a chance of seeing it when the count was away. I got up, and went to look what the poor thing was doing; she had got her baby at her breast, and was singing to him as she always did. She looked up and smiled at me as I opened the door. Any amount of sorrow would have been less dreadful than that awful smile. We sat for about another quarter of an hour, and then Hartmann got into his gig, and desired me to fetch the child.

"I was just going for it, when Wanda came into the room with her baby in her arms; she had wrapped him up in a large shawl, and he was sound asleep. She looked so terrible that it made us speechless; she was as white as marble, and her lips as deathly pale; she walked straight out of the house, looking neither to right nor left, and down the little garden to Hartmann, who was waiting in his gig at the gate. She handed the child up to him, and he laid it carefully down on the seat by his side. 'Tell him not to wake my child,' she said, with a little laugh, that made my blood run cold. I was standing behind her, and I made a sign to Hartmann to drive off, for I wanted to end this horrible tragedy as fast as possible. He drove away, and Wanda stood as if she were made of stone; when he came to the turn in the road, and went out of sight, she dropped down as if she had been shot.

"We got her into the house, and put her into bed; before next morning, raging brain-fever had set in. We had sent for the doctor from the village, but he had been called up to attend some one already, and was out. At last I heard wheels, and ran to the door hoping it was he; it was Hartmann, with a face as white as ashes, and I knew something more dreadful was yet to come. My presentiment was unerring. When he had arrived at the castle the day before, and took the baby in his arms, it was cold and dead. The count had sent him now to hunt us out of our home, and out of the country, but we could not go then, for Wanda could not be moved. For weeks she lay between life and death, and, dearly as I loved her, I often prayed God to end her miserable days, and take her to himself; but it was not to be. She recovered her health at last, but she has always remained of the same ghastly hue that she was when she gave her dead baby into Hartmann's arms, and not one gleam of reason has ever since come to lighten the darkness in her soul. She is quite harmless, but it irritates her if she thinks we watch her; so when she wishes to walk alone, I pretend that I want a drive, and follow slowly in the carriage, so as just to keep her in sight without annoying her; and if she has a fancy to hear music—of which she has always been passionately fond—Elizabeth always takes a place some way off from her, but where she is able to command a view of her, and look after her from a distance. As soon as she was well enough to be moved, we came to England with William; he has got a very good situation as organist at the Catholic chapel close by, and has plenty of lessons besides. The count provided very amply for poor Wanda as long as he lived; and since he died, which is now about four years ago, his heirs have continued the remittances, so I suppose he remembered to mention her in his will."

The old woman's dismal narrative was finished, and she got up to go and see after her daughter. Edward Saville sat like one petrified; the terrible history had stunned him. Presently Madame Haussmann returned, and taking Mr. Saville by the hand, led him into the next room. It was a very own sleeping apartment, and divided from another room beyond by a glass door, which had a certain green blind to it, to hide the sight, and to bring him close to it, drew aside a corner of the curtain. Elizabeth Haussmann was lying on a sofa with her head on a pillow, and not far from her, on a footstool, sat Wanda, crooning in a low, soft voice, and rocking a cradle in which lay a tiny frock. "Lullaby, baby, lullaby, my little son!" was the continual burden, repeated over and over again.

"She was much agitated when she saw Elizabeth carried in this morning," said Madame Haussmann, wiping her eyes; "but we can always quiet her by putting the baby's frock into the cradle, and setting her to rock it."

THE BOYS IN BLUE.

I crass my pen
To write of the men,
The valiant soldiers true!
A rousing cheer
For the heroes dear,
Our own brave boys in blue!

They leave their wives,
They leave their lives,
Stern duty's part to do.
To each man in the ranks
A million of thanks
We honor the boys in blue!

Great God above,
In infinite love,
Protect and lead them through!
From pain and grave
We pray thee save
Our gallant boys in blue!

THE STORY OF THE HOUSE IN CARDEN REACH.

LESLIE SUTHERLAND and I had gone out to India together, and became fast friends on the way. We were both going to the Bengal civil missariat. Leslie's abilities were not considered better than mine, neither was his connections, but the fellow had better luck. I cannot say whether it was owing to his appearance, for he was tall and handsome, or to his manner, which was thoroughly frank, the fact that he was born in Scotland, which, they say, helps a man; but certain it was that, before we had been two years in Calcutta, Leslie was a prize in matrimonial lottery—namely, the only daughter of a retired opium agent, with beauty, accomplishments and a thundering dowry—all sterling, besides further expectations at the old man's decease, including a splendid house he had at Garden Reach.

People in any degree acquainted with Calcutta will know this suburb as one of the noblest my town can boast; a continuation of mansion and villa stretching for miles along the banks of the Ganges, each surrounded by its own garden and pleasure-grounds, from which circumstance the place derives its name. Here reside the grandees of the Indian capital, the high officials of the Indian government, all in short, who have made their fortunes, and wish to enjoy or enhance them, prefer to spend them where they were gathered, build their stately places of retirement there. The house, or palace rather, which my friend Leslie looked forward, neither was one of the oldest nor one of the newest of these. Mr. Perdyce, the bride's father, had purchased it almost twenty years ago. He did the East India Company's opium business in times when fortunes were made more quickly than at present, and did therefore retire early. But his wife had died the year after he took possession; and there were floating tales to the effect that the latter lady's temper had not a little to do with his great house was not free from blot and blame, till his daughter, Miss Matilda, came home from finishing her education in England; when the old gentleman having about the same time met with an accident, and some said, heard a missionary's sermon, became proper reformed, and henceforth became an example of all the virtues to Garden Reach.

Those who thought Leslie Sutherland lucky in securing the heart and hand of Miss Matilda Perdyce, had still more occasion to envy or congratulate him on the subject of his father-in-law. Death stood Leslie's friend as well as Cupid. He had not been six months a Benedict, when the opium agent died, left a narrow house, and the sum master of the mansion he had built, and the rupees he had gathered. I must say Leslie sustained his character under the extreme weight of equanimity than his friends could have expected. The most critical could never discover that it had turned his head, or caused him to make himself too proud to acknowledge his old companion, though I was still but a clerk. He invited me to the wedding; I was one of the party who came down the bridal tour—by the way, it was made in palanquins to the hill country; and when he was established in Perdyce Lodge, I was among the first of his guests, and shown over the whole house by Mr. and Mrs. Sutherland. It was a fine specimen of the British suburban dwelling; its large rooms with their lofty ceilings and marble floors, their painted walls and windows of lattice work, looking into wide verandahs full of flowers; the surrounding garden rich with eastern bloom, lovely with shady walks and bowers, and cool with fountain and grotto—all were fitted for the Land of the Sun. But the furniture, plate and pictures—let me also add, the wine in the cellar—had been supplied from far-off Europe, and it is but justice to old Perdyce's memory to say, that they showed taste as well as wealth.

After seeing all, it was my conviction that Leslie ought to be a happy man. Mrs. Sutherland, however as her bed-room was not over-carbuilt, I have said she was a beauty. What rich man's only daughter is not, in Calcutta or anywhere else? Without compliment, my lady had a considerable share of what are called attractions; could play and sing, dance and talk, dressed well, for expense was not a consideration, and if she had been a thought beyond these matters, it was, that herself and Leslie were two of the greatest people alive. I believe Leslie learned from her to think so too, notwithstanding the sense he showed in not dropping me. But as the mighty calf would not sleep because of a crevice in his palace wall, so Leslie, Mrs. Sutherland told me, could not per mit her fortunate partner to enjoy that blessing, on account of an old quilt and a half-case of pale sherry, stored in a corner of their establishment. The old woman's name was Zulu, a regular Bengalee. She might have been darkly beautiful in her day, but that passed away from the Hindu woman. At what we call middle age, the face grows wrinkled, the figure scraggy, the black hair gray; and so it was with Zulu, when I saw her at Perdyce Lodge. She did not call the girl her mistress, but she served her as none but the most devoted of Indian ayahs would have done. There was no hour too late or early for Zulu to attend upon her, no wish too unreasonable for Zulu to gratify; and when Leslie came to be Mrs. Sulu's eyes, if not her feet, followed. The girl's name was May. She was allowed to be of half caste, and from the many of Indian race there, May was singularly beautiful—slender, but elegantly formed, with a clear brown complexion and luxuriant black hair reaching, when let out, to her soft and dark, and rich jetty hair, long enough to have served her as a mantle. Her great delight in the early days of her marriage was to attend to care for, was to dress herself before a large looking-glass, braiding her long hair, and putting on gowns of muslin and chintz, which she had a great numbers, although she always wanted new ones. Beyond this, the girl seemed to have neither pleasure nor pain. She was contented, her mind was simple and slow. Notwithstanding her European name and descent, she had the indolent habits and relishes of a native. Eating was sweet. May would lie for hours on a cushion in the corner of the back verandah, with old Zulu rubbing her feet, or combing out her hair. It was a strange character to meet her anywhere, in house or garden, the girl's first thought was to cover her face. The servants said their old master had employed two slaves for her, both Hindus and native, but none of them ever succeeded in teaching May to read. Indeed, the only thing she had ever learned, besides dressing her hair and painting her eyelids, was to play on the guitar.

Mrs. Sutherland's account of May was, that she had found her a present from a native, who was over arrival from England, and believed the girl was an orphan, whose papa had broken into the house for the Perdyce servants, and in which way she was retained in the young people's establishment, said nothing. But true Asiatics, till they were closely questioned, will tell a falsehood rather than one that extracting process, found out that the Sahib Perdyce had brought the woman and child with him on his return from one of his visits to the hill country which he made every summer; that Zulu was supposed to have been the wife of a muslim servant, who died on the road, and left the girl together with several children; and that, in the Sahib's time, she had ruled over the entire household from Europeans to grooms, and which was very popular among them. Indeed, the harmless and inactive life which both Zulu and her charge led in the house, and the latter's extraordinary beauty, tend to say, with any degree of certainty. Perhaps she was aware that her own Saxon face looked pale by the comparison, which deeply pained poor May. Perhaps her mistress thought the girl did not braid her hair and pin on her muslin gowns to her own fancy, and not according to the old man's suspicions. Her maid had come with Mrs. Sutherland from England, and was believed to be devoted to her mistress. Be that as it may, from the evil doings she detected in May and her ayah, furnished sufficient cause for Mrs. Sutherland's dismissing the girl immediately; and Leslie thought it all whims and fuss; but where is the man who can stand against a woman's resolution? Mrs. Sutherland made up her mind that the two should go up the country, into Calcutta; in short, anywhere they pleased, so long as they went out of the house, and from an allowance of ten rupees a month, on her first week's account; but as her house they should not stay; and Leslie, having the fear of his wife before his eyes, endorsed the arrangement like a dutiful husband.

The intended emigrants were not so easily managed. Especially could no objection to her own departure; but with an eastern woman, to announce to the four walls in which she had been used to rule, May absolutely refused to leave the house. Reasoning and remonstrance, threats and promises, were tried, without effect. Though some of the Hindu or other western thinking, the Asiatics can be most composedly obstinate, in every endeavor or arrangement for her removal. May listened quietly, covered her face, and replied, in the low, soft tone peculiar to herself, "I will not go."

Zulu was asked to persuade her; but whether the old woman could not or would not do so, May remained immovable, and nothing could induce the ayah to stir one step with—to leave her. Leslie had a terrible time of it. I don't know exactly what Mrs. Sutherland insinuated, because he would not have the refractory pair turned out of door or window, she did not care which; but at last he hit on an expedient for getting rid of his Indian difficulties. May and Zulu were one morning waited on in their accustomed corner of the back yard, and solemnly assured, on the faith and honor of the master of Perdyce Lodge, that if they did not make up their minds and packages to depart on the following day, they should be carried off, bound and hagging, to the hill palanquin, which happened to be a large one, and deposited in the most public street of Calcutta. Zulu felled her husband, and May made her usual answer. Leslie once more assured them he would keep his word, and probably, under the exhortations of his lady, it would have been kept; but either from fear of the threatened expulsion, or from natural cause, poor May fell sick the same evening. The sickness rapidly became a fever; the operations of that destroying sword are always swift in India; and before Mrs. Sutherland, her maid and her husband could be brought to believe that the whole was not a trick to delay the palanquin business, the poor girl died one sultry night, with her head resting on the lap of her faithful ayah.

They gave her a decent funeral, with shroud and coffin, hearse and mutes. The old woman mourned her as the Hindus do on the Ganges, where but Mrs. Sutherland would hear of no such heathenish doings, and Zulu made no further opposition to the Christian ceremonies. She disappeared, stood at a distance, and with veiled head, till the turf was laid above the child she had long tended; then she went back to the house, gathered the few garments and trifles belonging to herself, and departed without demanding or asking wages. She left the woman's west, or how she intended to live, nobody could tell. Mrs. Sutherland said she was sorry they had not been able to get rid of her; and there was all. Leslie published a manifesto to the effect that Zulu would get all her clothes and a hundred rupees on the day she left the house, and that if return to claim the peace-offering, the lady's-maid had some hopes of becoming sole heiress. She made inquiries, and found out, and quietly—particularly after the Hindu tailor (who does all manner of needlework wanted or worn in India) had brought home the gown she had ordered, he had taken to make for poor May some months before Perdyce Lodge got its new master. Many a Hindu woman, on the contrary, where the tailor lived, regarding that muslin dress. Its nonarrival had been one of the alleged reasons of her mistress's displeasure. Now it was put away among the rest of May's finery in the sandalwood chest, still kept in the corner of her room, which Mrs. Sutherland had not the heart or the moral might have come into possession but for an event, which was related to me by Leslie himself—and, it is more than probable, by no one else—in confidence.

One night, about a month after May's death, Mr. and Mrs. Sutherland suddenly awoke, neither could say why, out of a deep sleep. There chamber was a large and handsome one, fitted up with all manner of luxuries, and among them was even a large mirror opposite the foot of their bed, with a pair of wax lights burning on a marble table behind it. They had been awakened by a noise, when a rushing sound in the room made them both look up, and through the mosquito curtains of the splendid bed they saw, dimly reflected in the great looking-glass, the little figure and unmistakable face of the buried May! She was arrayed in the fine muslin dress which the tailor had brought home. They knew it at once, for the pattern was remarkable, and she seemed to be sitting in an easy chair, and combing her hair. Sutherland uttered a wild scream of terror and fainted. Leslie said he could not help covering his eyes with the bed-clothes, and when he looked up again there was nothing in the room but themselves.

The servants were roused, and the doctor was sent for. Mrs. Sutherland went out of one fit and into another for the rest of the night. The house was searched and the premises examined, but no sign of anybody had been playing a trick, but nothing could be discovered to throw light on the strange occurrence, or account for which deeply-grieving mystery—the Dacca muslin had been taken out of the chest, though May's room remained fast locked, and the key could not be found. Leslie and Mrs. Sutherland heard that news next morning, she positively refused to sleep another night in the house; and as her husband had by now grown as willing to leave it. The end of the matter was that they broke up their establishment, and left Perdyce Lodge for the interior of the East India Company, who, I have heard, did not like it much during the last years of his tenancy as at first. The Sutherlands went to Agra in Upper India, but left it within three weeks, they said, on account of seeing the muslin once more fitted on. Then they went up the country, and Mr. Perdyce's old opium quarters, and established themselves as a first-rate bungalow. But it appeared the muslin was the wearer like them there, and in less than a month they came back to town, put their affairs in the hands of an agent, and sailed for England.

The pair were so altered when I took leave of them on the quay, that one would have thought twenty years had passed since their marriage, yet they had not been three years. I never heard of them after their arrival in England, I heard they went about from one watering-place to another, sale, restless, and haunted by what never should be to be troubled by anything worse than their own humors. They had no children, looked after their time, and both died early, though Mrs. Sutherland survived her husband three years, and was speculated on to no purpose by the fortune-hunters of Bath.

The cause of their leaving India was never made public, but it became known to me a little before their departure. Business had taken me to what is called the Native Town of Calcutta; there is nothing quietly transacted in India, and a fire is no rarity. It happened to be the Hindu festival of Siva the Destroyer, which always begins at midnight, with a noise of drums and rattle-boxes sufficient to wake the Seven Sleepers, and numerous processions burrying at such headlong speed that they are said to transact business all in their way. I heard the crowd coming when fairly in the midst of one of the dark and narrow streets; my only refuge was the recess of a neighboring door. I squeezed myself in, and on they swept, a living flood of men, women and children, with a flare of torchlight and a fearful clamor. Then the decorations, of all ages, and in all manner of Indian costumes, appeared, but with frantic gestures and black faces, that looked terrible by the darkness. I caught sight of two that seemed wilder and blacker than the rest, and I have never forgotten them: one was the old ayah Zulu, and the other—I could have taken my oath to it—was May, dressed in the Dacca muslin. I saw them but for an instant, and confess that my blood ran cold with terror when I did so, but the next moment they were lost in the hurrying crowd. It swept past, and I got home without further accident, but no inquiry or investigation of mine could ever obtain any subsidence of the pair, or clear up the mystery which hung over that sight in the looking-glass.

Little did I expect at that time that this mysterious matter would ever have to be mentioned by me personally. When Sutherland died, however, I found that even at the last he had not forgotten poor old Perdyce, for he bequeathed the house, or sum of money at that time; and upon the death of his widow (who had no relations of her own), I, as old friend, and many other friends, were left the house in Garden Reach. Finding the then tenant very ready to give up the remainder of the lease, I went to live there myself, and chose for my own sleeping-apartment the room opening on the fire-door verandah, and formerly occupied by Mrs. Sutherland. It is unnecessary to enter here into details, which are distressing to me; but upon that first night, and every subsequent one that I slept in that room, I woke in the early morning to see poor May standing before the pier-glass and trying on her Dacca muslin. I never got a wink by there for the whole night. Perdyce Lodge is useless upon my hands; I cannot let it, even if it would be just to do so, and I would not sell it myself for ten times the sum which should represent its rental.

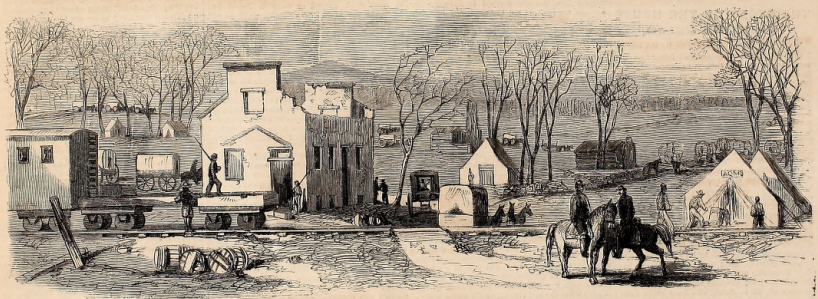
GEN. FESSENDEN'S HEAD-QUARTERS.

AN exceedingly picturesque sketch, by Lieut. S. S. DAVIS, A.D.C., 3d regt., 1st div., 19th army corps, accompanies the following representative portraits of Gen. J. D. Fessenden, at Camp Russell, near Newtown, Va. Gen. Fessenden, who is the son of the Secretary of the U. S. Treasury, and brother to gallant Gen. Frank Fessenden, who lost a leg at the battle of Cane river, has commanded a brigade in Gen. Dwight's division of the Army of the Shenandoah. This division occupied, early in December, and, we presume, still occupies, the extreme right of the army under Sheridan. Gen. Fessenden's brigade, we are told, occupied the left. The General's headquarters are not more sumptuous than his subordinate colleagues to some. The huts shown in our illustration are typical of the whole camp. The interior, however, would seem to be very pleasant, sheltered as they are in the edge of the woods. Gen. Fessenden is a young officer—only 28 years old—and his promotion has been rapid. Capt. T. F. Ogden, 152d N.Y., A.D.C.; Capt. Wm. Winthrop, 1st U.S. A.A.Q.M.; Capt. Randall, A.C.S.; Capt. E. Hoffman, 165th N.Y., Ins.-Gens.; Lieut. C. Hall, 50th Mass., Ordnance Officer; Lieut. S. S. Davis, A.D.C., and J. Fielding, Ambulance Officer. The regiments composing the brigade are the 152d, 165th, 162d, 165th (Zouaves) N. Y. Volunteers, and the 30th Maine.

INTERIOR OF A SLAVE SHANTY.

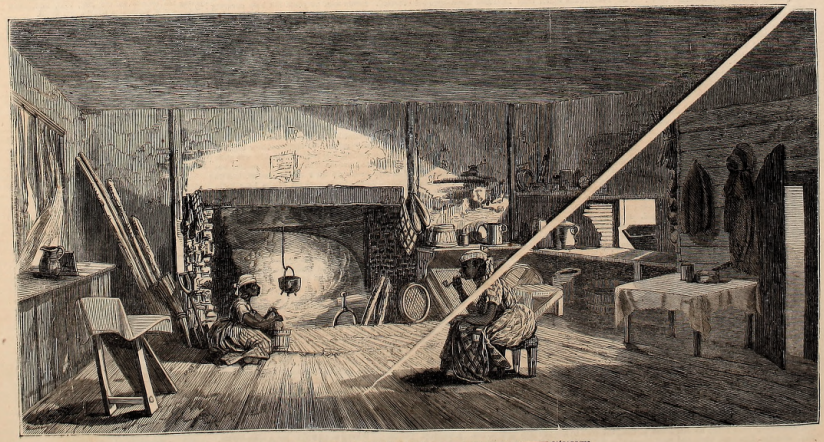
On page 236 will be found a sketch, representing the interior of a slave shanty, near Petersburg, Va., drawn by our artist, Mr. Andrew McCallum, and it affords a suggestive view of the domestic life of the blacks in Virginia. Its details are simple and explain themselves. One negress is making her pipe; another is cooking their dinner. The surroundings are of the most unpretentious. Yet, though it be packs poverty, this scene is not suggestive of a life entirely destitute of comforts. The popular sentiment, that "there's no place like home," and the maxim that "no place like home," and doubtless these poor creatures find much truth as deeply as those who "dwell in marble halls."

THE NEW YORK PILOT-BOAT H. CRINNELL.



AMONG the appliances for the better security of commerce none, certainly, is more important than the pilot-boat, and the pilots who man them. In the highest sense, both utilitarian and romantic. He must be a skilful navigator, that is, channel and bay and the shoals of danger; and, in every weather, he must be ready to tempt the perils of the sea, either to lend assistance to those in distress, or to meet the harbor of destination, or to rescue the helpless survivors of shipwreck. Our city, whose commercial interests are world-wide, is famed for the bravery and speed and seaworthy qualities of her pilot-boats, and for the general energies of her pilot service. A sketch, on page 237 of this paper, depicts one of her most famous pilot-boats, the H. Crinnell, called, of course, after the honorable name of her owner, and not after his Christian name. This staunch and handsome little craft has often left veritable sea-wings behind unrivaled sources and passages, and has always reflected credit upon the guild to which she belongs.

In Oxford (N. H.), is a tombstone, with the following epitaph upon it:

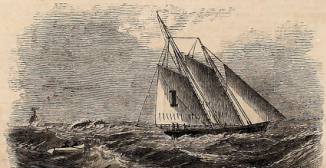


"To all my friends I bid adieu,
A grave-stone you can never know;
As I was leaking the old mare to drink,
She kicked, and killed me quickly's wink."

ARMY OF THE SHENANDOAH.—VIEW OF GEN. J. D. FESSENDEN'S HEADQUARTERS, CAMP RUSSELL, NEAR NEWTOWN, VA.—FROM A SKETCH BY LIEUT. S. S. DAVIS.

ARMY OF THE SHENANDOAH.—VIEW OF THE RUINS OF STEPHENSON'S DEPOT, DESTROYED BY FIRE, IN FREDERICK CO., VA.—FROM A SKETCH BY J. E. TAYLOR.

INTERIOR OF SLAVE SHANTY, NEAR PETERSBURG, VA.—SKETCHED BY ANDREW M'CALLUM.



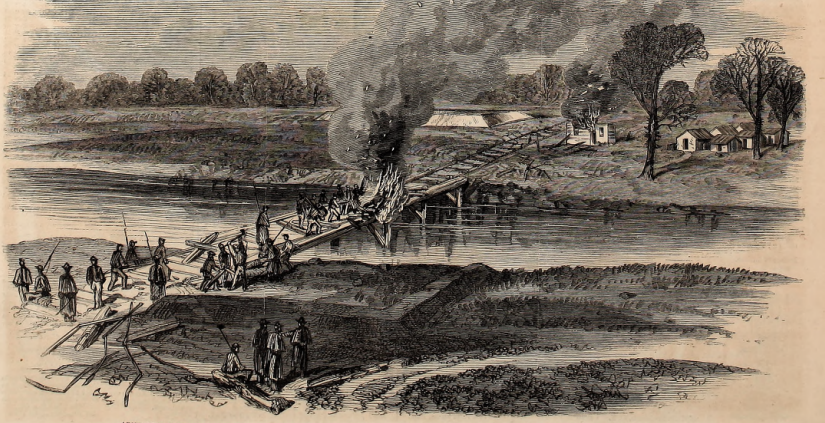
SCENE AT CALCUTTA, EAST INDIES—TERRIBLE EFFECTS OF THE HURRICANE OF OCTOBER 5TH.

RUINS OF STEPHENSON'S DEPOT.

THE RAVAGES of war in the valley of the Shenandoah are illustrated in our sketch, reproduced on page 236, representing the ruins of Stephenson's Depot. This is a post-office point, in Frederick county, Virginia, and not very far from Winchester. It is one of the places that have suffered under the severe but necessary discipline of Gen. Sheridan. Our Artist has depicted its remains, under guard of Union soldiers. In the distance, empty supply wagons are seen coming in. We present the scene, as calculated to bring directly to the minds of our readers a salutary realization of the havoc that is wrought by war, which should teach the more urgent necessity for sparing no efforts to conquer a speedy peace.

TERRIBLE HURRICANE AT CALCUTTA.

WE illustrate, on page 237, the effects of the terrible hurricane at Calcutta, on the 5th of October. It was one of the species of hurricanes which occur at certain specific intervals, and is therefore denominated the Cyclone. It extended over 120 miles of territory, and devastated the land and the sea. Not a house in Calcutta was left uninjured. Hundreds of lives were destroyed. In the open country the huts of the natives were swept away. Trees were uprooted, and all manner of vegetation was despoiled. Ships were wrecked in the river Hooghly, and over 100 vessels were driven ashore, in one tangled mass of confusion. Churches were blown down, and buildings unroofed. In short, the hurricane did all manner of mischief, enfolding ruin and sorrow upon a large and hitherto prosperous community. It is said that much heroism was displayed at the time of this disaster, in the efforts that were made to rescue imperilled seamen from foundering ships. One person, an English sailor, named Edward Cleary, especially distinguished himself in this heroic service. Our illustration, from a foreign source, reproduces, with graphic distinctness, the terrors of this unmerciful disaster.



THE PILOT BOAT M. H. GRINNELL.

BURNING THE WELDON RAILROAD BRIDGE

Over the Nottaway River.

Despite Gen. Lee's dispatch, announcing the return of the Union expedition, under Gen. Warren, consisting of the 5th corps, with Gregg's cavalry, and the 2d division of the 2d corps, it has achieved its principal object. So at least says Gen. Grant—a principal object. So at least says Gen. Grant—a further authority than the rebel scarecrow their ranch Sir or Doc. the Union forces commenced their march along the Jerusalem road—reaching a point 10 miles from Petersburg, they diverged and struck the Weldon road still to the right, where they reached the Nottaway river, which they crossed, and, after encountering and Cornfuhlous, the enemy's cavalry entirely across the Union back to where the Weldon road crosses the Nottaway, and after a skirmish with the enemy, who Nottaway, in a skirmish with the destruction of the rebels.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC—BURNING OF THE WELDON RAILROAD BRIDGE, OVER THE RIVER NOTTAWAY, DEC. 8—FROM A SKETCH BY O. F. WILLIAMS.

FIRST PREMIUM
$5 SEWING MACHINE! $5

A BEAUTIFUL PRESENT FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Just Out. THE FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, a most Wonderful and Elegantly Constructed Novelty in noiseless in operation, uses the strongest Needle and Thread, and will do more WORK in LESS TIME than any Running Stitch more perfect and regular than by hand. Will stitch, Hem, Fell, Tuck, Bind, Braid, Embroider or Quilt Beautifully, &c., &c.; requires no Instruction or Lessons of Address, and is adapted to use of any person, and will last a LIFETIME, and is the greatest and most useful Christmas and New Year's present. Send the following:

"For the Dressmaker it is invaluable; for the Housekeeper it is a treasure."—Godey's Ladies' Book.

"At length the deliderandum long sought for, combining security, speed and elegant finish, has been gathered in the construction of this compact and beautiful Rose The simple, elegant, and attractive exterior of this Machine will at once attract attention, and the work it does will certainly not disappoint the fairest."—Sun. "We consider it THE FAMILY GEM in the fullest."—Sun.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily managed that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.

This ingenious and useful little Machine is perfect in its construction, and has none of the faults of the High-Priced Sewing Machines. We will pay for the $5 or $100 for a Sewing Machine when this one can be bought for the small sum of $5.

This wonderful Machine was awarded the FIRST PREMIUM by the New York State Fair, showing the superiority over all others.

All Imitations of this GENUINE ARTICLE are Habit, as infringements on the Patent.

Agents wanted in all the world. Single Machines sent to any address per Express, prepaid in box on receipt of $5.

Address all orders to

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
162 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Published this Day.

HAZELWOOD;

OR,

THE BLACK MONK'S CURSE.

BY COUSIN MAY CARLTON,

(Jane Marsh),

Author of "Silver Star," "Evamie," "Victoria," "Syril Compbell," &c., &c.

EIGHT FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS, BY DARLEY.

PRICE TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

This is one of the most charming and fascinating stories that has ever been published. Let all who wish to read a pure intellectual treat, "Hazelwood" would enjoy a rare intellectual treat, "Hazelwood."

Mailed free of postage on receipt of price.

FREDERIC A. BRADY, PUBLISHER,
No. 32 Ann Street, New York.

Good Manners;

Gentility of Temper; Hints to Preachers; Christian Courtesy; Gospel Machinery in Conversation; Dr. Bedell's Rules; Reason and Faith; A Christian Gentleman; My Grandfather's Pew; Pew Rents; and No. PRESBYTERIAN JOURNAL; 20 cents, or $2 a year. Please address

FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

Hair Uprooted &c.

From all parts of the Body in five minutes, without injury to the skin, by "LYDIA'S DEPILATORY POWDER." Mailed to any address for $1.25, by G. O. GRAHAM, 23 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. 482-4

Lost Manhood Restored, &c.

Speedily and effectually, by the use of "Dr. La Roche's Liver and Kidney Preservative." Price $5. Sent postpaid, by S. O. PHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 482-24

Asthma Cured.

Relief guaranteed in ten minutes, and a permanent cure effected by the use of "UPHAM'S ARABIA CURE." Cure sent free to any person inclosing 25 cents to pay postage. Price $1. Sent postpaid to any address. S. O. PHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 483-24

ADVANTAGE OR MARKED PLAYING CARDS.

I have constantly on hand and for sale every style of MARKED HAND PLAYING CARDS. Also, a Device which can be sold by the back as well as the face. Full and explicit instructions, forming part of each. Sent, Marked Cards, $10 per deck, $100 per gross. Single pack sent by mail for $2. Address

C. BRIGGS, Chelsea, P. O.
Drawer 6036.
482-4

Butlers, Agents and Soldiers, send 15 cents for New Soldiers' Pocket Light.

E. P. CLARK, Sole Maker,
Northampton, Mass.
483-4

WONDERFUL DEVELOPMENTS

In the use of Petroleum.

WOODWARDS' Patent Self-Adjusting LAMPS (just from the Factory) following advantages over any Lamp yet invented:

1st—The glass can be instantly removed for cleaning, or replaced without delay.

2d—The Patent Match Safe attached, and with the celebrated Saw-tooth Lock. No Chimney Burner gives a better light than any other Lamp.

3d—It is the best made and most convenient Lantern in use.

Send for Price List with Engravings. Liberal terms to the Trade.

SAVAGE & CO.,
280 Greenwich St., N. Y.

JUST OUT.

And sent FREE on receipt of stamp.

EVANS'S NEW CATALOGUE

For 1865.

(Eleventh year of the Enterprise.)

NEW BOOKS,	NEW GIFTS.
NEW BOOKS,	NEW GIFTS.
NEW BOOKS,	NEW GIFTS.

Books for Soldiers, Books for Sailors, Books for Civilians, Books for Farmers, Books for Mechanics, Biographical, Religious, Scientific, Musical, and Miscellaneous Books in every variety of Literature. Albums and Ornamental Stationery. Cloth, Card Pictures of all the Celebrities.

A Gift worth from 50 cents to $100 with each Book!

All Books sold at publishers' regular prices, with Rebate of Postage to purchasers. Send for the NEW CATALOGUE and any book you want to the ORIGINAL BOOK AND GIFT SALE (founded by G. G. Evans in 1854). Orders promptly filled and satisfaction guaranteed. Address

G. G. EVANS, 630 Chestnut St., Phila.

"Science of the Soul."

Interblending of Minds; Unity of Souls; Nature of Sin; Communion of Saints; Philosophy of Prayer; and the Doctrine of Atonement, given in No. January Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Nowman have it. Only 20 cents.

ODOR! ODOR!!

DR. BRIGGS'S

GOLDEN ODOR.

Will force a Beautiful Set of Whiskers or Moustaches on the Smoothest face in two weeks, and no humbug!

Also, HAIR ON BALD HEADS in eight weeks.

I never Testimonials most every day! Testimonials of thousands!

I will send any Golden O'Dor by mail, sealed and postpaid for $1 25. NO WARRANTED.—ED.

Send all orders to

DR. C. BRIGGS, P. O. Drawer 6036, Chicago, Ill.
482-6

Stop! Stop! Stop!

Full instructions, by which any person can master the curious art of Ventriloquism in six hours and make a cent of it. Sent by mail for 25 cents.

482-3 Address DR. FRANKLIN, Calhoun, Ill.

Gayest of the Gay!

Transparent Playing Cards, used same as common cards (@ French Pictures). Sample pack, by mail, $1 25. Agents wanted. Packed Chicago, Ill. 24 packs, $1 50 per pack. Address 000 D. HEMMETER, 88 Liberty Street, N. Y.

Susanna Wesley,

Mother of Rev. John. Portrait with sketch of she' reader, in Jan. Pictorial Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Only 20 cents. Nowman have it.

FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS!

GREAT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION

OF

Rosewood Pianos, Melodeons, Guitars, Music Boxes, Elegant Work-Boxes, Gold and Silver Watches!

Diamond Rings, Breastpins, Sleeve Buttons, Opera Glasses, Florentine Mosaic, Jet, Lava and Cameo Ladies' Sets, Gold Pens with Gold and Silver Extension Holders, Sleeve Buttons, Sets of Studs, Jack Chains, Vest Chains, Plated and Chased Gold Rings, Gold Lockets, Silver Spectacles, Silver Castors and FINE JEWELLERY of every description, all to be Given Away in Sums to Suit,

WORTH $500,000!

New York Gift Association,

599 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Distribution is made in the following manner: TICKETS, WITH AMOUNT each Article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, and thoroughly mixed. On receipt of order for a Ticket or Tickets, one of each, or more for some Article, will be delivered to the purchaser, or sent by mail to the party at his request, as to choice, on receipt of 25 cents. On receiving one, you obtain the particular article named, and the Gift it calls for, which may be FROM ONE TO FIFTY DOLLAR and receive the Article named, or can choose any other Article of the same value, as per scale below.

NO BLANKS. You must get the value of your money. We will send by mail or express, as you may select the purchaser may draw. Entire satisfaction guaranteed in this Certificate of Gift. Circulars sent free.

AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamp for a Circular. All letters must be addressed to

T. BENTON & CO., Box 5067, P. O., New York.

Franz Muller.

Portrait, Phrenology and Physiognomy. "The Best Medium." Also, Charles Dickens. In Jan. Pictorial Double No. A Sectional, 132 pages (@), in January Double No. Illustrated PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL—20 cents.

Gold Pens 30 cts. to $2. Pens in Silver Extension Cases $2 to $5. Send stamp for Circular. GEORGE F. HAWLES, Manufacturer, 64 Nassau St. Also for sale by every periodical dealer in the country. 482-8

$70 A MONTH!! I want Agents everywhere, at $70 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Patent Articles the best selling articles known. Address STILES & DARBY, Biddeford, Maine. 517-417

Look! Look! Look!

My Golden Comparoid will force on the Beard to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days, or no charge, or money refunded. Free 50 cents or three for $1.

482-3 Address DR. FRANKLIN, Calhoun, Ill

12 kinds of Album Gem Pictures in 7 Styles, by Color Comparoid. Agents wanted. Sample of 12 Samples mailed, postpaid, for $1; 12 Assorted Toy Books for 50 cents, $2 50 per gross. Address Toy Book Depot,

J. L. G. PERRONY,
37 and 39 Nassau Street, N. Y.
483-6

A Beautiful Christmas Toy!

The Magic Wheel, Price $1 50.

This is the most original delusion ever invented, and is equally attractive to young and old.

JOHN BRADBURN, Successor to M. Doolady,
483-6 49 Walker Street, N. Y.

Ready To-Day,

SYRIA THE JEWESS;
SYRIA THE JEWESS;
SYRIA THE JEWESS;
SYRIA THE JEWESS;

or,

THE MAGICIAN OF TOLEDO,
THE MAGICIAN OF TOLEDO,
THE MAGICIAN OF TOLEDO,
THE MAGICIAN OF TOLEDO,
THE MAGICIAN OF TOLEDO,

BY LOUIS LEON,
BY LOUIS LEON,
BY LOUIS LEON,
BY LOUIS LEON,
BY LOUIS LEON,

Author of "The Silver Ship" and "The Step-Daughter's Fortune."

The heroine of this magnificent romance is a Jewess, one of those accursed nations of the east who think the heart and fascinate the eye of the observer. Whoever reads her thoughts or traces her actions will be reminded of the beautiful Rachel and Ruth, and other Jewish heroines of the Bible, as well as Walter Scott's glorious creation, the beautiful Rebecca. Indeed, she has the sweetness of Queen Esther, blended with the strength and dignity of Sarah, and the angel-like purity and truth of Ruth herself. The only child of Rabbi Israel, the money-lender of Toledo, in the days when this city was the capital of Spain, and when her people were subjected to persecution and wrong, this record of her career is full of lofty faith, of dauntless heroism, of truth and affection, and of the most thrilling events which belong peculiarly to her sex.

This graphic story is not merely heroism and womanly gentleness and affection is now running through the columns of the

NEW YORK WEEKLY,
NEW YORK WEEKLY,
NEW YORK WEEKLY,
NEW YORK WEEKLY,
NEW YORK WEEKLY,

the favorite family journal of America. The old and young, every lady and gentleman—indeed, the whole universal public—will be captivated and delighted with it.

NEW YORK WEEKLY

is ready to-day and for sale by every News Agent throughout the Union.

Alfred Tennyson.

His Portrait, Phrenology and Physiognomy given in the Jan. Double No. Illustrated PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Only 20 cents.

CHASE'S CHEMICAL COMPOUND.

For the Beard. One bottle will force a vigorous growth of hair upon the smoothest face in from 20 to 40 days. Bald heads in eight weeks. Testimonials of a thousand every day. Warranted to do all we say or no charge. Sent postpaid on receipt of price. $1, or four bottles for $3. Sent safely by mail. Address S. A. CHASE, P. O. Drawer 309, Cohoes, N. Y. 478-26

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, for Collectors. Also, for Book and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.

000 PIERRE BIDON, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

Valentine Price List:

144 Spicy Comic Valentines, postpaid	$1 00
A Neat Sentimental Valentine	1 00
1 Pretty	1 00
1 Handsome	3 00
1 Elegant	5 00
1 Superb	10 00
1 Lot (assorted for retailing)	5 00
1 "	10 00
1 "	20 00

Any of the above sent in a box by mail nicely packed on receipt of the Price.

Liberal discounts made to all persons buying to sell again. Send for Circular. Address all orders to

HENRY N. HAMILCOCK,
Valentine Headquarters,
4 Chatham Street, N. Y.

PLAYING CARDS!

The American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards, National Emblems.

They are the prettiest cards made, and sell the superior class. The suits are Eagles, Shields, Stars and Stripes; Colonial Dame, Revolutionary Battery for Queen, and Major for Jack.

All the games can be played as readily as with cards bearing foreign emblems. Each pack is put up in a neat Morocco case, with a Union Scene on the Trade.

A Dealer that ALL dealers may have an opportunity to sell these cards, a sample box of twelve packs will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
NO. 4 CHATHAM STREET, N. Y.

Greatest Warriors of the World.

Hannibal, Cæsar, Pizarro, Charles XII., Frederick the Great, Cromwell, Wellington, Napoleon, Scott, in No. 12 Jan. Pictorial Double Number PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. 20 cents. Nowman have it.

FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

If you want to Know, &c., read

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

A curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. Price $1 50. To be had at all News Depots. Copies sent when ordered from

DR. E. B. FOOTE,
No. 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.
483-6w

General Sheridan.

Portrait, Character and Biography, in Jan. Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL. Ask your Newsman for it, or send to Messrs. FOWLER & WELLS.

The Book of Wonders tells how to make CIDER without apples or any other fruit. It also teaches the Rumsey Secret, how to catch Fish and all kinds of Game; how to make all kinds of Liquors; all kinds of Cements, and Curing Fluids; Gambling Exposed; Yuntylequish Made Easy; Information of Importance to Ladies; how to gain the Love of any one, &c., &c. Sent, securely sealed, for 50 cents.

Address Box 607,
482-5 P. O., New York.

$7 OFFICER'S WATCH. $9

Our Whole Stock of Imported Watches, suitable for Christmas and New Years Presents, being of rich and novel designs, are now offered at reduced prices. Silver Watches at Wholesale rates.

An Elegant Open Face Solid Silver Plated Double Case, Richly Engraved, Turned Centre, Carved Balance Bridge, Duplex and Plain Escapement, Jewelled Regulator, Spring Bolt, Spade Hands and Fine Enamelled White Dial, a reversible article in running order, with Key, Case etc., complete, and a Gent's Handsome Vest Chain and Locket.

ALL FOR $7.

MINIATURE GOLD LOCKET!

to match, with Double Chain, Box and Glass for Two Dollars. Beautiful Holiday Present. Sent by mail to any address for sixty cents.

A Splendid Watch, especially adapted for Army Officers, Silver Hunting Cases, Small Size, easy of use, in Heavy Double Cases, complete, and Gent's Vest Chain, Engraved Double Case Locket, etc. Sent by mail to any address for $9.

The Imperial Watch,

OF BRITISH ARMY OFFICERS' TIMEKEEPER, combining a Rare and Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Effects, combining within its case a Watch, Chronometer, Compass, Thermometer and correct working Time-Keeper, in a beautiful and compact form, adapted to the requirements of Officers in the field. A Handy Calender, indicating, with its Hands, the Day of the Month, including the exact day of month, week and Time ENDORSE. Open Face, Solid Silver Hunting Cases, Stem Winder. Weight, 4 oz. The beautiful machinery of Double Hunting, Maple Spring 19 Line Case (the finest movement made), Gold Dial, Gold Pens, Compensation Balance, Gold Seconds Hand, Richly Engraved Cap and Bottom, Crystal and Fancy Pearl Spring Rim, Gentleman's Size, Hunting Case, M. J. Cahen Express English Improved Levers and Doome Self-acting Click, Improved Lever Escapement, Compensation Balance, Equal Balance, Independent and in an Exact Imitation of a Gentleman's Gold Watch. Price, One Hundred and $100 watch, and used by the British Government. Price of watch running same. Nine Gemmine unless hearing the private trade mark. Five Jewels, $5 extra. All complete, in velvet, silk lined Cases.

CATLEY BROTHERS, Sole Importers,
162 Canal St., N. Y. Established 1853.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION!

250,000

Watches, Chains, Diamond Rings, Etc.

WORTH $500,000!

One Million Dollars!

All to be Sold for One Dollar Each!!

WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE! NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU ARE TO RECEIVE!

Splendid List of Articles! All to be Sold for $1 each!

250 Gents' Gold Hunting-case Watches	$10 to $70
250 Ladies' Gold Hunting-case Watches	$5 to $70
500 Gents' Hunting-case Silver Watches	$5 to $75
200 Diamond Rings	20 to 100
2,000 " Gold Vest Chains	4 to 8
2,000 " " Pencils	4 " 6
5,000 Gold Vest Pencil Breastpins	4 " 8
5,000 Chased Gold Pencils	6 " 10
5,000 Gold Engraved Pencils	6 " 10
7,000 Solitaire and Gold Brooches	4 " 10
7,000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 " 8
5,000 Coral, Opal and Emerald Brooches	4 " 8
5,000 Jet, Lava and Florentine Sets,
Sleeve Buttons,	4 " 8
7,000 Gold, Opal & Pearl Sleeve Drops	4 " 8
4,000 Cultivated Diamond Breast Pins	2 50 " 10
5,000 Gold Hunting-case Vest Watch Keys	2 50 " 8
4,000 Fob and Vest Ribbon Slides	3 " 10
5,000 Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons,
Studs, &c	3 " 8
3,000 Gold Thimbles	2 " 4
10,000 Miniature Lockets	2 50 " 8
8,000 Gold Pens	2 " 5
2,000 Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc	2 " 3
5,000 Plain Gold Rings	2 " 11
2,000 Chased Gold Rings	4 " 11
5,000 Gold Engraved Wedding Rings	2 50 " 10
10,000 California Diamond Rings	2 " 10
7,000 Sets of Gold Studs, Sleeve Buttons	3 " 10
5,000 Sets Ladies' Jewellery — Cameo,
Jet, &c	4 " 15
10,000 Gold Pens, Silver Extension-holders and Cases	4 " 10
10,000 Gold Pens and Gold Mounted
Pencils	3 " 8
5,000 Gold Pens and Gold Extension
Holders	6 " 10
5,000 Silver Goblets and Drinking Cups	3 " 20
5,000 Silver Castors	5 " 20
2,000 Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets	20 " 50
	FREE GIFTS.
5,000 Dozen Silver Tea Spoons	$10 " 20
5,000 " " Table Spoons	20 " 40
5,000 " " Forks	20 " 40

In consequence of the great starvation of trade in the Southern districts of Kentucky, through the war suspending the culture of cotton, a large quantity of Watches, Jewelry, Clocks, &c., have come to the Eastern Cities for sale, and we have purchased, for cash in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT ANY SACRIFICE.

Persons sending Orders, Addresses, ARBANDALE & CO., solicit as Agents for the principal Orders. Persons sending Orders, Addresses, ARBANDALE & CO., solicit as Agents for the principal Orders. Gift Distributors, subject to have their names published.

The following regulations:

Persons ordering each article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, and thoroughly mixed. One envelope will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 60 cents.

ALL ARTICLES SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE!

On receipt of the envelope you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your option to buy the dollar or take the article offered. Purchasers may pay their obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any other article on the list for $1. Agents wanted, and in no case can they get less than One Dollar's worth for their services. The price of Gold Watches is as follows.

One for	50 cents.
Five for	1
Eleven for	2
Thirty for	5
Sixty-five for	10
One hundred for	15

Agents will be allowed ten per cent. on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittances amounts to one Dollar. Agents will collect 60 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us for the same, in cash or postage stamps.

ARBANDALE & CO.,
167 Broadway, New York.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.

Worth $300,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and description, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
No. 209 Broadway, New York.

"Cold Feet!"—"Hot Heads."

Both Cured by Using Big Bonanza—Did Specific—Try to prevent them—Mental Hygiene—Sad Results—Are We Degenerating?—It's Will or Way of the Universe—Sun, Double No. FRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL—20 cents, or $2 a year.

Soldiers of the Union!

Read the following Letters received from your comrades as endorsements of the

WORLD KNOWN AND WORLD TRIED REMEDIES, KNOWN AS PROF. HOLLOWAY'S

PILLS AND OINTMENT.

You will here find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country, where our army of occupation is in force. SEE TO YOUR HEALTH! All of you have some one interested in your welfare; time do not delay. YOUR LIFE IS VALUABLE! Not only to yourselves, but to your Parents and Friends, Sisters, Wives and Brothers. Then while you may, purchase your Health.

35 cents, 88 cents, or $1 40,

Will, when expended in these medicines, bring you down to the present cost repair old age.

The following are a few specimens of genuine letters on file in my office at this date. Copies sent by mail to any inquirer.

60 Maiden Lane, N. Y.
QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT, }
20th Illinois Volunteers, }
Folly Island, S. C., Nov 2, 1864.

Prof. HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:

SIR—Some months ago I bought your Pills, for which send me one dollar's worth each of your celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please attend to this at once, for I am much in need of the above remedies.
Address Lieut. A. W. FRAZIER,
20th Illinois Vols.

CAMP NEAR BRANDY STATION, VA., Nov. 7, 1864.

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR—I have heard a great deal of talk about your famous Pills and as I never was in the need of them until I was struck by them, and therefore I was prevented at the present time; send me the worth of the enclosed.
JOSEPH WALSH, Co. E, 5th Regt. Excelsior Brigade.

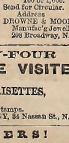
PULASKI, TENN., Nov. 6, 1864.

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR—Please find enclosed one dollar, and send me the amount in your famous Pills, as I am troubled with Dysentery, and seek cure. Yours, &c.,
THOMAS F. TURNER, Co. A, 2d Iowa Infantry.

MORRIS ISLAND, S. C., Nov. 1, 1864.

Prof. HOLLOWAY:



Please find enclosed the sum of one dollar for Pills. I have Diarrhœa, and can't get it stopped, so I want to try your Pills. Yours, &c.,
WILLIAM CHRISTY,
Co. D, 104th Regt. Penn. Vols.,
900 Morris Island, S. C.

"Psychology."

Wesley and Swedenborg—Christ-Seeing. Interesting Facts in Clairvoyance, in Sun. Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.

Diaries for 1865,

From 25 cents to $3. All kinds BLANK BOOKS, PAPER and STATIONERY at moderate prices. Orders solicited. FRANCIS & LOUTREL,
Stationers and Printers,
483-4 48 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

1 R 51 B
st. 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th
7th, 8th, 11th, 12th,
14th, 18th, 20th, 22d

ARMY CORPS,

Showing each Division.

BY THE SINGLE ONE,
100 or 1,000.
Send for Circular.
Address
DRAWER 2 MOORE,
Manufacturer of Seals,
No. 20 Broadway, N.Y.

TWENTY-FOUR CARTES DE VISITE
OF
FRENCH CRISETTES,
In different attitudes of art.
Enclose $1 25 and for red stamps.
CHAS. MANN, 24 Nassau St., N. Y.

$1 WHISKERS! $1

For $1 I will send sealed, postpaid, the GRECIAN COMPOUND, highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of hair on the smoothest face in 30 days, or return half-dozen in eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Single samples given out—only 10 cents. Descriptive circular mailed free. Address
A. J. SANFORD,
483-8 Lansingburgh, N. Y.

$125 A MONTH!

WANTED—Seven Machine Agents! Every-where to introduce the new Shuttle & Chain Elastic Sewing Machine, the only low price machine in the country which is licensed by Grover & Baker, Wheeler & Wilson, Howe, Singer & Co., and Bachelder. Salary and expenses, or large commission allowed. All other Machines now sold for less than $40 each are infringements, and the seller and buyer liable. Illustrated Circulars sent free. Address GRAY & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine. 479-81

MANUFACTURER'S STOCK
OF
Watches, Lockets, Chains, Rings, Pins, Fine-cut Gold Pens and Cases,

And a full assortment of fine Jewellery, to be disposed of by distribution, for the next 10 days.

Certificates of all the various articles are put in envelopes, sealed and mixed, and sold without regard to choice. One Certificate tells you what you can have for $1, will be sent for 25 cents; five for $1, seven for $2; three for $5. After seeing what you can have, it will be at your option to accept any article, or not, and after seeing the article, if it does not prove perfect satisfaction, you can return it and get the money. We also manufacture pure Silver and Gold Plated Spoons for every Steamboat, Hotel and Restaurant, Regiment, Artillery and Battery, Engineer and Zouave Company, Brass Band and Society Military Uniform. We will send a Sample Badge (pure Silver), for any Department in the Army, with your Name, Regiment or Company handsomely Engraved thereon, on receipt of $1 60.

Agents wanted everywhere, to whom great inducements are offered.

S. M. WARD & CO.,
o 209 Broadway, N. Y.

Prof. Silliman and Lyman Cobb.

Portraits, Character and Biographies, in Jan. Double No. ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.

GOLD PENS
FOR THE MILLION!

On receipt of the following sums, we will send, by mail, or as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens, selecting the same number from the Numbers named:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 50 cts. a No. 2 pen; for 75 cts., a No. 3 pen; for $1 a No. 4 pen; for $1 25 a No. 5 pen; for $1 50 a No. 6 pen.

The same Pens, in SILVER PLATED EXTENSION CASES WITH PENCILS,

For $1 No. 2 pen; for $1 25 No. 3; pen; for $1 50 No. 4 pen; for $1 75 No. 5 pen; for $2 No. 6 pen.

These pens are stamped THE IMPERIAL PEN, and are well finished and fine writing Gold Pens, with good medium points, and they are warranted, and cannot be exchanged.

First quality 24 carat, Warranted Gold Pens.

Our name (American Gold Pen Co., N. Y.), is stamped on all pens of this grade, and the points are warranted for six months from date of purchase.

Second quality Gold Pens.

These Pens are all stamped THE NATIONAL PEN, with the initials of our Firm, A. G. P. Co., and are carefully made, and warranted as a very good every quality Pens. The only great difference being in the quality of the gold.

Gold Pens without Cases.

For $1 00 a No. 1 pen 1st qual., or a No. 2 pen 2d qual.
For $1 25 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 3 pen 2d qual.
For $1 50 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $2 00 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $2 50 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $3 25 a No. 6 pen 1st qual. For $4 50 No. 7 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen; $10 00 No. 10 pen; all 1st quality.

The same Gold Pens, in Solid Silver Extension Cases, with Pencils

For $2 00 a No. 1 pen 1st qual., or a No. 2 pen 2d qual.
For $2 25 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 3 pen 2d qual.
For $2 75 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $3 50 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $4 25 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $5 50 a No. 6 pen 1st quality.

Gold Pens, 1st and 2d qual., in Solid Silver or Gold-plated Boxy-Desk and Slide-and-Screw Holders.

For $2 25 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $2 50 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $3 00 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $4 00 a No. 6 pen 1st quality. For $5 00 a No. 7 pen 1st quality. For $7 50 a No. 10 pen 1st quality. For $12 00 a No. 1 pen; all first quality.

A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $15, if sent to one address, at one time; 15 per cent. on $30; 20 per cent. on $50.

All remittances by mail, Registered, are at our risk, to all who enclose 20 cents extra for registering. We guarantee safe delivery of all sent by mail.

Circulars of all our new styles, with Engravings of exact sizes of pens, and with prices, sent free by mail, if desired. Pens reported for 50 cents, by mail.

N.B.—The American Gold Pen Company's Pens are now being used extensively throughout the country by commercial and Businessmen and also by many Government Departments, and have given universal satisfaction, which alone is a sufficient guarantee of their merit. Owing to its immense demand for our goods we have been obliged to increase our manufacturing facilities, and we are now prepared to execute orders with any size promptly.

AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO.,
900 4823 No. 209 Broadway, N.Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and win the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This Simple, Mental Science is fully explained, governing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cents; together with a correct Delineation of character from an engraving of the head, of great interest. Third edition, over 100,000 copies already sold. Address, at once, T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Marrying for Show.

In love with the Races—Mrs. Grundy and Our Girls—American Y. S.—Exercise Ladies and Beginners—Horse Courtships—Family Intercourse—Hints to Husbands and Wives, in Jan. Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL—20 cents.

Six Dollars from Fifty Cents.

Agents, come and examine Invention, or Samples sent free by mail for 50 cents. Retails for 25 cents. Address H. L. WOLCOTT, 191 Chatham Square, New York. 478-84

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Every Pen Warranted!

Read these prices of a few of our many styles:

A fine 10 karat Pen in Solid Silver Extension Holder:

Size No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.
$2 50	$2 75	$3 00	$3 50	$3 75

10 karat Pens in Ebony Slide Holder:

Size No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.
$3 00	$3 50	$4 00	$4 75	$5 00

10 karat Pens with Rubber Reversed Holder:

Size No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.
$2 75	$3 00	$3 50	$4 00	$4 50

12 karat Pen in Gold Plated Telescopic Extension Case. The Best Pocket Pen, Case and Pencil, ever made.

Size No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.
$2 50	$3 00	$3 50	$4 00	$4 50

8 karat Pens, with Fancy Holders (in Morocco Cases), or in Silver Plated Extension Case with Pencil:

Size No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.
$1 each, $10 per doz.	$1 25, $12 do.	$1 50, $15 do.	$2 00, $20 do.

No. 4, $2. $22 per doz.

14 karat Pens, with any of the above Holders, only 50 cents extra.

Pens requested for 50 cents each.

Fine Gold Tipped Screwed Pencils $2 each.

All other sizes and styles on hand.

Parties wishing to act as Agents or to purchase large quantities, should send for Circular.

Sent all goods sent by mail postpaid.

GEO. ALDEN & CO.,
No. 25 John Street, N. Y.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite.

4,000 different Kinds. Catalogue for 6 cts. Celebrated 100 VICTOR DELARD, No. 5 Mount St., N. Y.

The Great Money-Making Article.

Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail for 25 cents. Address
R. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in from 20 to 30 days. Perfectly safe. Without stain or injury to the skin. Free from dirt by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of 50 cents. Order
R. G. GRAHAM, 169 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Physiognomy Illustrated."

Alexander, Prince of Wales, Miss Sally Muggins, Mind and Body, and Spirit—Love—Self—"SHINGLE CHARACTER," and how to read them, in Jan. Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL—20 cents, or $2 a year. Address Messrs.
FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N.Y.

"Album Gems"—Something New, Gay and Pure. A collection of Comic Cards ever published—including the French Dancing Girl; Various Sporting Scenes; Love Declaring; Fancy Characters; and many the 200, etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 15 choice Cards.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
900 No. 10 Spruce St., Newark, N. J.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S CONCENTRATED—A Powerful Stimulant. Each package contains 50 Pills, and is the best set of Whiskers or Moustaches in 30 days upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using the Organic Stimulating Pills as represented by inducing a growth of hair on the smoothest face or forfeiting to them sixty times the amount paid for the article. Sent sealed and post-paid to any address on receipt of the money.
A. C. CLARK,
488-93 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

For Nervous Debility, &c.,

Use "Crowe's Concentrated Cure." The only reliable remedy. Circular sent free. Sold by all druggists. Sent free by mail. Send for Pamphlet—sent free. Address
C. R. CROWE & CO., 209 Broadway, N. Y.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.

Royal Havana Lottery.

In Drawing of December 2, 1864,

No. 22,046 drew	$250,000
No. 17,776 drew	50,000
No. 11,215 drew	25,000
No. 17,600 drew	10,000
No. 12,951 drew	5,000

Being the 5th capital prize.

Seventy-five per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest rates paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
16 Wall St., N. Y.

Superstitions,

Signs, Wonders and Tokens. All you desire to know about the Moon, Weather, Lucky Days, Births and Fortune-Telling. Fairies, Fasts, Stockings—Sin, Cold, Dark Cloth, Shoes, Sneezing, Bridal Dresses, Mortuary Rites, &c., &c., in Jan. Double No. of NATURAL PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL—20 cents.

New Illustrated Annual of Phrenology and Physiology for 1865. "Signs of Character." The Five Races of Man; Forty Engravings and an Allegorical Picture. Sent free to any Subscriber for 12 cents. Address
FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

An Article that Every Married Lady should possess will be sent securely sealed for $1.
482-5 Address Box 5067, P. O., New York.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen—Samples and Catalogues sent for 25 cents. Inclose an envelope with your address written on it.
909 D. HEMMETTE, 3346 Liberty St., N. Y.

JOMINI'S GRAND

Military Operations;

Or, A Critical and Military History of the Wars of Frederick the Great, as contrasted with the Modern System; together with a few of the most important Principles in the Art of War. By Baron Jomini, General-in-Chief and Aide-de-Camp to the Emperor of Russia. Translated from the French by Col. S. A. Hornbuck, U. S. A. Illustrated with an Atlas of 40 Maps and Plans. 2 vols., 8vo, and Atlas, 4to, cloth, $12. This day published by D. VAN NOSTRAND, 192 Broadway. Copies sent free by mail on receipt of price.

Sent Everywhere by Mail, Postpaid.—a Extension Silver-Mounted Holders,
WITH COMPOSITE

REVERSE LEAD PENCILS,

In case of one dozen each; the boxes are finely finished and elegant. Each pencil contains an extension no battery to transportation. Prices same as before No. 1 to 6.

The 6 Holders are of the most handsome and durable description, and are finely silver-plated, with an extension of three lengths. All are engraved, chased or engine-turned, and by means of the extension any size pen can be used.

Prices Complete, as follows:

Size One—When open, 6½ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $12; retails at $2 each.

Size Two—When open, 6 inches in length; Price per dozen by mail, postpaid, $12; retails at $2 each.

Size Three—When open, 6½ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $15; retails at $2 50 each.

Size Four—When open, 7¼ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $20; retails at $3 50 each.

Size Five—When open, 8 inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $24; retails at $3 50 and upwards.

Size Six—When open, 8 inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $30; retails at $4 50 and upwards.

Sent to the army and elsewhere, by mail, postpaid.

Also WATCHES AND JEWELLERY in Great Variety at the lowest prices for cash. Send for Circular. Registered letters at our risk. Orders respectfully solicited.
Address T. & H. GARHAM, Manufacturers,
116 Broadway, N. Y.

Bashfulness,

Diffidence, Self-Consciousness. Causes and Cure. Why one person is self-possessed and another bashful. How to acquire Confidence. See January Double No. Illustrated PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL—20 cents, or $2 a year.
Address FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N.Y.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy," plainly showing how any person may fascinate, win the affections, and surely wheedle any wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by return mail, post paid, for two red Stamps. Address
Box 76, P. O. LUCLE & CO., Box 1325, Portland, Me.

Shults' Curlique, for curling the hair. Price 50 cents. Sent safely, mailed, for 50 cents.
477-83 C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

The Brazilian Hair Curler. One application warranted to curl the most straight, stubborn hair like wavy ringlets or heavy natural curls. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address
S. S. CHASE,
477-82 Cohoes, N. Y.

"The Human Head."

A Poem, by William Ross Wallace. Phrenology in its Application to Practical Life. Sexual Physiology. "Made Whole by Faith." Varieties of the Human Species in Detail, in January Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.

THE BEST THING OUT!

Can be used the same as any other Cards, and contains 50

BEAUTIFUL SCENES.

Enclose $1 25 and three red stamps for sample pack. $14 per gross, twenty per cent. off. $18 per dozen.
484 34 Nassau street, New York.

Matrimony.—Why every woman should marry. Why every woman should not marry. Best time to marry. Directions for Married Life. Science and Skilful Advice, by W. FAHNESTOCK, M.D., 200 pages. Mailed free everywhere on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 White Street, New York.

C. S. Sea, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. His Celebrated "Bureau" for Sale. Prescription for return stamp. Sample for $1 in part for a package.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New. Patent Pin Cushion, Darning Needle Threader, Indelible Pencil, Pocket Corset Cornet, Fluter, Pins, Magic Tobacco Box, Gentle Vest Pocket Match Safe, Silver-plated. Send Stamp for Circular.
S. W. RICE & CO.,
477 13 Nassau Street, N. Y.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail for $1 00. Send for Circular. Agents wanted to sell to the quality desired. Address
HOWARD BELT CO., 439 Broadway, N. Y.

The Useful and the Beautiful Combined.

Bridal Books, Albums, Pictures, Microscopes, &c., &c. Messrs. FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y. have Books of different sizes of Psyche, Bashful, Apollo, Juno, Flora, Cybia, Shakespeare, Milton, Scott, Burns, Byron, Folio, Romeo, Virgil, Socrates, Raphael, Schiller, Goethe, Washington, Webster, Franklin, &c., suitable for the Library, Reading-Room, Public Hall or Drawing-Room. 483-5

HARRIET BEECHER STOWE

will contribute a new series of Domestic Papers, with the title of "The Chimney Corner," to the

Atlantic Monthly

for the year 1865. Mrs. Stowe's "House and Home Papers," printed in the ATLANTIC for 1864, were among the most valuable papers ever published. "The Chimney Corner" will be equally interesting and instructive. Mrs. Stowe will write in every number. Subscriptions begin with January. Price $4 a year, 35 cents a number. The January number sent as a specimen for 25 cents. Liberal reduction made to Clubs.

o TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both sexes—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. o

---

SOMETHING NEW.

The Patent Army Pocket Pipe and Cigar Holder combined, is decidedly the best Smoking Pipe ever invented. It imparts a rich soothing flavor to the Tobacco; is of elegant appearance and finish; with fine carved Horn Mouthpiece and Cigar Holder. It is easy to carry, easy to clean, and is always ready for a good smoke. Sample dozen sent free on receipt of $2 50. Address

RICHARDS & CO.,
o 97 William Street, New York.

INQUIRE FOR

TUCKER'S PATENT SPRING BEDS.

For sale by the Furniture Dealers generally through the United States. At wholesale by HIRAM TUCKER, 117 and 119 Court St., Boston, Mass. 481-9o

---

PATENT AGENCY OFFICES.

Established in 1846.

MESSRS. MUNN & CO.,
Editors of the Scientific American,
SOLICITORS OF AMERICAN & EUROPEAN PATENTS,

With a Branch Office at Washington. During the past seventeen years MESSRS. MUNN & CO. have acted as Attorneys for more than 20,000 inventors, and statistics shew that nearly ONE-THIRD of all the application for patents annually made in the United States are solicited through the Scientific American Patent Agency. All business connected with the Examination of Inventions, Preparing Specifications, Drawings, Caveats, Assignments of Patents, Prosecuting Rejected Cases, Interferences, Re-issues and Extensions of Patents, and Opinions of the Infringement and Validity of Patents, will receive the most careful attention.

Patents secured in England, France, Belgium, Austria, Russia, Prussia, and all other foreign countries where Patent Laws exist. A Pamphlet of "Advice How to Secure Letters Patent," including the Patent Laws of the United States, furnished free. All communications confidential. Address—

MUNN & CO.,
No. 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

Shults' Onguent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address
453-83o C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S PIANOFORTES.

99 & 101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. 473-84o

---

IVORY AND PEARL BROOCHES,

Ear-Rings and Cuff Buttons.

Latest Styles, $3 & $5 per Set.
Gilt Belt Buckles, $3.

Sent free on receipt of price.
WM. M. WELLING,
o 571 Broadway. (Sign of Golden Elephant.)

Ladies, use no more Rouge for your complexion. It can deceive no one, no matter how well applied. If you would have sparkling eyes, rosy cheeks, a complexion of dazzling beauty, follow my directions.

Address, enclosing $1, C. L. BARING,
483-6o Box No. 5588, N. Y. P. O.

SELPHO'S PATENT LEG and ARM

510 BROADWAY.

The most perfect substitutes for lost limbs ever invented. ESTABLISHED 25 YEARS. Send for a Pamphlet. SOLDIERS SUPPLIED FREE by order of the SURGEON-GENERAL. 483-4

HOLIDAY PRESENTS
FOR SMOKERS!

The most suitable present for Gentlemen is undoubtedly a genuine Meerschaum Pipe, sold at reduced rates by POLLACK & SON, Meerschaum Manufacturers, o 692 Broadway, near 4th Street.

Soldiers and Sailors!

The Reveille newspaper is out for December. Send us your address. Will return paper Free. Free to the above only. M. A. GILBERT & CO., 36 Ann St., N. Y.
o

THE UNIVERSAL PAPER COLLAR

TAINTER & JACKSON'S PATENT, AUGUST 2ND 1864

The Trade supplied at No. 536 Pearl Street, New York.
tf

Terrible sensation produced at the Tontine Hotel by the arrival of our Special Artist, whose phosphorescent appearance and black leather travelling valise suggested a general conflagration.

Holiday Presents.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD-PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, White Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, with an accurate "Miniature Calendar," indicating the Day of the Week, Month, &c., in back case. A single one sent free, by mail, to any address, in neat case, WITH A BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN, for only $10.

A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with the Miniature Calendar, &c., specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers,
o 38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

GOLD MEDAL Grand and Square PIANOS,

BALTIMORE, Md.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, G. Satter, and other leading artists. Every Instrument warranted for five years.

Price lists promptly sent on application. WM. KNABE & CO.

A full assortment of the above celebrated instruments at J. BAUER & CO.'s Warerooms,
No. 544 Broadway, N. Y.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO., Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

In addition to our main business of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we are Headquarters for the following, viz:

STEREOSCOPES & STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,

Of these we have an immense assortment, including War Scenes American and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Statuary etc., etc. Also, Revolving Stereoscopes, for public or private exhibition. Our Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of Stamp.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS.

We were the first to introduce these into the United States, and we manufacture immense quantities in great variety, ranging in price from 50 cents to $50 each. Our ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any others. They will be sent by mail, FREE, on receipt of price.

☞ FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER. ☜

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue now embraces over FIVE THOUSAND different subjects (to which additions are continually being made) of Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., viz: about

100 Major-Generals,	100 Lieut.-Colonels,	550 Statesmen,
200 Brig.-Generals,	250 Other Officers,	130 Divines,
275 Colonels,	75 Navy Officers,	125 Authors,
40 Artists,	125 Stage,	50 Prominent Women,

3,000 Copies of Works of Art,

including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statues, etc. Catalogues sent on receipt of Stamp. An order for One Dozen PICTURES from our Catalogue will be filled on the receipt of $1.80, and sent by mail, FREE.

Photographers and others ordering goods C. O. D. will please remit twenty-five per cent. of the amount with their order.

☞ The prices and quality of our goods cannot fail to satisfy.

Soldiers' Pocket Album for 18 pictures, 75 cents.

o

Friends.—Send a Stamp for information and my Circulars. Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.

DIAMOND PARLOR MATCHES.

These Matches are the BEST IN THE WORLD. SURE FIRE WITHOUT SULPHUR, no DISAGREEABLE SMELL, and a luxury and comfort to smokers and people with weak lungs. For sale wholesale and retail by

THE LODI MANUFACTURING CO.,
479-82o No. 56 Cortlandt Street, New York.

FREE READING!

Soldiers, Sailors, Marines, Everybody—send us your address. Will, in return, send you a large family newspaper, replete with good miscellaneous reading matter. Sent Gratis.
480-3o CHAS. E. MACKEY, 81 Nassau St., N. Y.

GOLD PENS.

If you want the best Pen ever used send to Johnson for Circular giving exact sizes and prices. Pens from $1 to $5, to suit every hand and pocket. Pens Repointed, by mail, for 50 cents.

E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office,
o478-90 15 Maiden Lane, New York.

A WATCH FREE

And $15 or $20 per Day made Easy. A New Sensation. Our Great Novelty, the WONDERFUL PRIZE PORTFOLIOS.

FOR THE HOLIDAY TRADE.

Just out and creating an immense sensation and Extraordinary Demand throughout the Army and Country; there is nothing like them. Sales Enormous; profits immense. Each Portfolio, Extra Large Size, 6 by 10, contains an innumerable quantity of useful and valuable goods, PRIZES, etc., worth Several Dollars, and sells for only 25 cents. Articles that no Soldier or Family can possibly do without. Thousands Sold Every Day. Soldiers can clear a Month's Pay in a Single Day. Agents Wanted in Every Camp and Village. A Beautiful Gold or Silver WATCH Presented free as a Premium to Every Agent. This is the Greatest money-making Business of the Day. We Guarantee any agent $15 per Day. Premiums sent with Goods same day the order is received. Catalogues containing Extra Premium inducements sent by mail free. S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y., Sole Manufacturers. o

---

$20 to $30 per Day Profit,

Realised by "Sutlers and Agents," by the sale of the

AMERICAN STEEL COLLARS PATENTED
APRIL 19TH 1864

5,000 DOZEN SELF-ADJUSTING Enameled White, from $3 to $9 per Dozen. Samples at 30 cts., 50 cts., 75 cts., $1; Snow White, Linen Finished, Illusion Stitched and Corrugated, $1 25; Suitable Tie, $1.

Gents' Steel Cuffs, $2 50; Ladies', $1 50; Collar, $2. Mailed on receipt of price and "size."

JEANERET, Agent for the Patentees, 78 Nassau St., New York.

The West Indian Hair Curler, warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair, on the first application, into short ringlets or waving massive curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1. Address

WAUD GILBERT LYON,
o Box 5251, New York Post Office.

LADIES' LETTER.

FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS

Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.
o Address Box 4652, New York Post Office.

Our Young Folks

Is the name of a New Magazine for Boys and Girls, published in Boston. The First Number is just ready, and a specimen will be sent for ten cents.

CAPTAIN MAYNE REID

writes for every number. Every number is illustrated with first-rate pictures.

Price only $2 a year.

☞ NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE. ☜

Get a specimen number and form a Club, and you will get your subscription considerably less.

Send ten cents for a specimen, or $2 for a year's subscription, to o TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.

WARD'S PATENT FRENCH PRINTED PAPER COLLARS
387 B'WAY, N.Y. & ALL GENTS FURNISHING STORES.

Send 20 Cents

For January No. ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, containing Portraits, Biographies and Characters of Poets, Philosophers, Warriors, Civilians, Murderers, the good and the bad, the high and the low. To secure the PICTORIAL DOUBLE NUMBER, with PHYSIOGNOMY, ETHNOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY and PSYCHOLOGY, send at once. Single No. 20 cents. For the year, $2. Please address

Messrs. FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.
483-4o

FURNITURE FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

AT

FR. KRUTINA'S

MANUFACTORY AND WAREROOMS,

Nos. 96 and 98 East Houston St.,

Between Bowery and 2d Avenue.
481-4o

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 TIMES, mailed to any address for 50 cts. THREE of different powers for $1. Address
000o F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

FOR A FORTUNE

Address FRANKLIN S. M. CO., Box 302, Boston, Mass.

Use of Tobacco, in all its forms, Cured and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
481-93o JAS. DAY & SON, New Haven, Conn.

GREAT CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY!

And receive a Watch FREE, by selling our great

NOVELTY AND NATIONAL PRIZE PACKETS,

New Packets just issued for the Holiday Trade. Each package contains over a Dollar's worth of valuable Stationery and Jewellery—besides one Certificate in the great sale of $650,000 of Watches, Diamonds and Jewellery. Thousands of these packets can be sold.

We want an Agent in every town and camp, thus making a profitable business for a smart man in each place.

SPLENDID GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES

given to our Agents. $17 will obtain 100 Packets and a fine Silver Watch. Circulars mailed free. Sample Packet and Certificate sent on receipt of 50 cents.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
483-4o No. 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.

MACMILAN'S NEW YORK

CLUB SKATE

With Brady's Patent Sole Fastening without Straps. All sizes for Gentlemen and Ladies.
o 702 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Vineland Lands. To all wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlements mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $25 to $35 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufactories and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.

From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural editor of the Tribune:

"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER

Is the latest improvement in Fire-Arms, combining great power and effectiveness with compactness, durability, and convenience, both for operating and carrying. Is the most effective POCKET REVOLVER in the world.

Is loaded, without removing the cylinder, with CENTRAL FIRE WATERPROOF COPPER SHELL CARTRIDGE. The Cartridge is sure fire, the shell easily ejected after firing. The cylinder never fouls. Is but 7 inches extreme length, 32-100th ball, six shot and weighs but 14 ounces. For sale by the trade.

GEO. A. HICKCOX, 54 Cliff Street, New York.

CERTIFICATE.

I have thoroughly tested the new "National Revolver," and find it an effective weapon, of sure fire and convenient size. At fifty yards I think I could with this pistol kill at every shot. I take pleasure in recommending it as a weapon in every way desirable. In company with Captain Scott, Provost-Marshal, and other officers, I fired this pistol a large number of times, and not one cartridge failed to explode.

JOHN CHARLESTON, Chief of Police, Cairo, Il.
o (Signed)

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 484—Vol. XIX.] NEW YORK, JANUARY 7, 1865. [Price 10 Cents. $4 00 Yearly, 13 Weeks $1 00.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—VIEW OF FORT M'ALLISTER, ON THE OGEECHEE RIVER, GA., CAPTURED BY GEN. SHERMAN, DEC. 18—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—GEN. SHERMAN RECEIVED BY GEN. FOSTER, ON BOARD THE REVENUE CUTTER NEMAHA, IN THE OGEECHEE RIVER, GA., DEC. 14.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

Special Notice.

THE New Year presents a fitting opportunity for subscribing to FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, the oldest, the best and most interesting Illnetrated Papor on this continent, and even excelling the London Illustrated News in its enterprise and general attractions. Not contout, as other Illnstrated Papers have been, to roly upon volunteer and chance contributors, we have a trained corps of tho first artists, foreign and American, who accompany every expedition, naval and military, with orders to forward their sketobes at every opportunity and without refsrenco to expense. We have had, since the commencement of the wsr, over 80 artists in the field, and have published over 3,000 pictures of battles, sieges and other military operations. At the present juncture, when so many important movements are in progress, it is especially essential that the public should be correctly informed; and to accomplish this object, FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER has Special Artists with Grant, Butler, Sherman, Sheridan, Porter, Farragut and Thomas, ss well as with all other armies now in the field. It is also tho only Illustrated Paper in America whose contents aro purely original, its stories not being copied from European periodicals, but written for it by the most popular authors of the day. Every number contains an original poem, appropriately illustrated—an original story with two illustrations, besides shorter original stories, &c.

TERMS FOR

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months	$1 00
One copy, six months	2 00
Ono copy, one year	4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	15 00
Five copies, one year	20 00
(With an extra copy gratis to the person sending a club of five.)
One copy of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper and one copy of Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine (the most complete Lady's Book published) for one year	7 00

Address
FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Beauty.—Hunt's Bloom of Roses,
A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and cannot be detected. Price $1. 18 cents by mail, securely packed from observation. HUNT & CO., PERFUMERS,
000 133 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

Beauty.—Hunt's White Liquid Enamel, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enameler. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address
HUNT & CO., PERFUMERS,
133 South Seventh Street, and 41 South Eighth
000 Street, Philadelphia.

New Map of Richmond,
Showing all of the Fortifications surrounding the Rebel Capital, together with a Description of the City and of all the Forts, etc. Price only 10 cents per copy; Wholesale 60 cents per dozen, or $5 per 100.
NEW MAP OF MOBILE. A Splendid Map. Price, 20 cents; Wholesale, $1 20 per dozen.
MAP OF PETERSBURG, a very desirable Map. Price, 15 cents; Wholesale, $1 per dozen.
NEW MAP OF ATLANTA. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, 60 cents per dozen, or $5 per 100.
CARD PHOTOGRAPHS of Gens. Grant, Meade, Sherman, Sheridan, Butler, Foster, Hooker, Hancock, Howard, Gilmore, Farragut, Lincoln, McClellan, etc. Price 10 cents each; Wholesale, $6 per 100.
NEW POCKET ALBUMS, holding 16 Cards—Very Desirable. Price only 75 cents. Goods sent Postpaid. Agents Wanted. Catalogues sent free.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!
All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 000o

HOLIDAY PRESENTS!
GREAT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION
OF
Rosewood Pianos, Melodeons, Guitars, Music Boxes, Elegant Work-Boxes, Gold and Silver Watches;
Diamond Pins, Diamond Rings, Gold Bracelets, Coral, Florentine Mosaic, Jet, Lava and Cameo Ladies' Sets, Gold Pens with Gold and Silver Extension Holders, Sleeve Buttons, Sets of Studs, Neck Chains, Vest Chains, Plain and Chased Gold Rings, Gold Thimbles, Lockets, Silver Baskets and FINE JEWELLERY of of every description, of tho best make and latest styles,
WORTH $500,000!
New York Gift Association,
599 BROADWAY, N. Y.
Distribution is made in the following manner:
CERTIFICATES, naming each Article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, which are well mixed. One of these Envelopes, containing the Certificate or order for some Article, will be delivered at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of 25 cents. On receiving the Certificate the purchaser will see what Article it draws, and its value, which may be FROM ONE TO FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS, and can then send ONE DOLLAR and receive the Article named, or can choose any other one Article on our List of the same value.
NO BLANKS. You must get the value of your money. We will send by mail or express the article which the purchaser may draw. Entire satisfaction guaranteed in all cases. Six Certificates for $1; thirteen for $2.
AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamp for a Circular. All letters should be addressed
T. BENTON & CO., Box 5567, P. O., New York.

Barnum's American Museum.
A MERRY CHRISTMAS!
A SEASON OF LUXURIOUS ENTERTAINMENT!
After months of preparation, a new and gorgeous Holiday Spectacular Romance will be performed every AFTERNOON at 3 and EVENING at 7¼, and on CHRISTMAS DAY (Monday) Dec. 25, almost every hour, entitled, the RING OF FATE; or, FIRE, AIR, EARTH AND WATER. New and Magnificent Scenery, Wardrobe, Appointments and Effects. WOODROFFE'S BOHEMIAN GLASS-BLOWERS will exhibit at all hours TWO GLASS STEAM-ENGINES in full operation. THREE ENTERTAINMENTS DAILY; Morning at 11. Positively the last week of a magnificent moving Panorama, GULLIVER'S TRAVELS IN LILLIPUT; O-KE-NA-WA-KAS TRIBE OF INDIANS, in their Customs, War-Dances, &c., Morning, Afternoon and Evening; W. B. HARRISON in Comic Songs; MISS JENNIE STONE, the Scottish Queen, 18 years old, and only 24 inches high. Three Fat Girls, Three Giants, Two Dwarfs, Albino Boy, Grand Aquaria, Living Otters, Kangaroos, French Moving Figures and a million other curiosities,
Admission, 30 cents; Children under ten, 15 cents.

ALBUMS FOR THE
ARMY AND NAVY,
For 20 Pictures, and sold at ONE DOLLAR, is the cheapest and best Pocket Album ever offered to the public. Sent by mail to any address, postpaid, on receipt of One Dollar. CHAS. HUGHES,
Photographic Album Manufacturer,
102 Centre Street, N. Y.

FURS! FURS!! FURS!!!
WILLIAM S. BURKE,
IMPORTER AND MANUFACTURER OF
FURS,
208 Broadway, cor. Fulton St., N. Y.,
has a large and handsome assortment of every description of Furs, of the newest and most approved styles,
AT THE LOWEST CASH PRICES.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.
This annual contains a greater amount of useful and entertaining information than any publication of the kind ever issued. It is indeed the only Lady's Illustrated Almanac published. It is embellished with over 70 beautiful engravings, by the finest Artists of the day, executed in the highest style of art. It contains directions for the parlor, ball-room, boudoir, store-room, kitchen, garden, nursery and sick-room. In a word, it is the matron's vade mecum, as well as the young lady's companion, and it should be found in every household. In addition to general illustrations, it contains splendid portraits of Mrs. Lincoln and Mrs. McClellan, exquisitely engraved on steel, and a graphic Bathing-Scene at Long Branch, printed on fine paper. This complete Lady's Manual—which contains more reading matter than an octavo volume—costs only 50 cents. It will be sent, postage free, on receipt of the price, either in currency or postage stamps. Address
FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Almanac fo 1865.
This valuable work is far superior to its prototype, the London Illustrated Almanac, and much cheaper. It contains valuable information, National, Historical, Political, Statistical, Astronomical and Useful, besides upwards of 50 beautiful Illustrations by the first European and American Artists, engraved in the highest style of art. It is also embellished with four splendid Lithographic Portraits, printed on fine paper, of Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Admiral Farragut, from recent photographs. Price 50 cents.

Messrs. WM. KNABE & CO., BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.
GENTLEMEN—I have great pleasure in certifying that I have tried your Square Pianos and find them equal, if not superior, to any in this country. Among the great qualities which distinguish them, is the evenness of tone, the easy and agreeable touch and volume of tone. Wishing you all the success which you so highly deserve, I am, sirs,
Yours, very truly, S. THALBERG.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 7, 1865.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

To Correspondents.

THE columns of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER are always open for contributions from good writers.

All communications will be promptly considered; and liberal prices will be paid for all manuscripts that are deemed worthy of acceptance.

Interesting stories, lively sketches, and poems of a high order of merit, if not too long, will be received with favor.

Short stories, fraught with incident, character and dramatic effect, are always preferable to long ones.

All manuscripts should be legibly written, on good paper, and on only one side of the sheets. Manuscripts written on both sides will be declined without examination.

Correspondents are requested to write their names and addresses, legibly and in full, on each manuscript that they send to this office.

Savannah.—The Christmas Gift of Gen. Sherman to the Nation.

ANOTHER of the most important of the strongholds of the rebellion has fallen. At eight o'clock on the evening of Sunday last (Christmas day), the inspiring news came flashing over the wires from Washington, including the following brief but comprehensive dispatch from Gen. Sherman:

SAVANNAH, Ga., Dec. 22, 1864.

His Excellency President LINCOLN:

I beg to present you as a Christmas gift the city of Savannah, with 150 heavy guns and plenty of ammunition, and also about 25,000 bales of cotton.

W. T. SHERMAN,
Major-General.

Accompanying this beautiful little report of one of the greatest events of the war, came a dispatch from Gen. Foster, who had been cooperating with Gen. Sherman on the South Carolina side of the river, giving us the additional details that the rohel Gen. Hardee, anticipating the contemplated assault, had "escaped with the main body of his infantry and light artillery, by crossing the river to Union Causeway," on the Carolina side; that the rebel ironclads had been blown up and the Navy Yard burned; but that the rest of the city was intact, with its twenty thousand citizens, quiet and well disposed; that our capture, with the city, "include one hundred and fifty cannon, thirteen locomotives in good order, one hundred and ninety cars, a large supply of ammunition and materials of war, three steamers (river transports we infer), and thirty-three thousand bales of cotton, safely stored in warehouses."

Savannah, therefore, as a Christmas-box to the President in behalf of the loyal States and people of the Union, is a present to be proud of. By a happy coincidence, too, this magnificent offering from the army and navy to the country came in on Christmas Day; so that hereafter, as the Fourth of July will be for ages associated with Gettysburg and the surrender of Vicksburg, so will the 25th of December recall the splendid "Christmas gift" of Gen. Sherman to "Old Abe" for many generations to come.

The value of this great success to the Government and the National cause, however, is not to be estimated by the capture of the ordnance, ammunition, warlike stores, cotton and other spoils secured; for, though in the aggregate they may reach the sum of twenty or thirty millions of dollars, the strategical advantages gained with Savannah are worth infinitely more. In securing the Savannah river, navigable to Augusta, and for some distance above, Sherman cuts off, in a military view, the States of Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi from Richmond as completely as the "trans-Mississippi Department" is cut off by our occupation of the whole line of the Mississippi river. All the railway lines running southward from Virginia, North and South Carolina, cross the Savannah river at Savannah or Augusta; so that in occupying those two points all those roads are cut off at the Georgia boundary. The only remaining railway line between Richmond and the cotton States is the great road which passes through south-western Virginia to Knoxville and Chattanooga; so that, in holding those two places, we have now reduced the vital forces and resources of the Confederacy to the southern half of Virginia and the interior portions of North and South Carolina.

We have no definite news of any operations of the Wilmington expedition; but, believing the capture of that last refuge of the blockade-runners to be inevitable, and that the event is close at hand, we can hardly entertain the shadow of a doubt that before the end of the winter we shall have the end of the rebellion. We shall probably next hear from Sherman in the neighborhood of Charleston.

The Last Trip of Jeff Davis to Georgia, and its Consequences.

THE most disastrous journey in the whole career of Jeff. Davis, as the chief of the so-called Southern Confederacy, was that last September trip of his to Georgia. The veteran army of Gen. Joe Johnston, from the north-western corner of the State, had been pushed out at the point of the bayonet, or flanked, from river to mountain, and from mountain to river, until driven across the Chattahoochee, and into tho fortifications of Atlanta. Then arose a "hue and cry" against the retreating policy of Johnston, a wise and masterly policy under the circumstances, but which, not being comprehended by Davis, had chafed him from the beginning. Believing in the clamor raised against Johnston, and that a "fighting man" would save Atlanta, the bravo and daring but shallow-brained Hood was appointed for this work, and Johnston, whose only superior among rebel Generals is Lee himself, in a spirit of undisguised contempt, was set aside. Hood, in command, instantly assumed the offensive, and persisted in assailing the heavy lines of Sherman, and in feeble attempts to cut off his communications, until Atlanta was lost, and the army left by Johnston was half destroyed.

These disastrous results of the "fighting" policy of Hood would have satisfied a cooler and clearer-headed man than Davis of the gravity of the mistake committed in Johnston's removal. But Davis, in his rage and disappointment, was incapable of cool reflection. He hurried down to Georgia, and giving vent to his wrath, his prejudices, his personal dislikes and his revenge, he boasted to the astonished people of Macon, of "the manly blows" struck by his foolish man Hood for Atlanta, and of his purpose forthwith to move Sherman "to the right about," and to make his return to Tennessee "another retreat from Moscow." The attempt to carry out this promise was promptly made. The army of Hood, though reduced to less than half the strength of Sherman, was moved around to Sherman's rear. The chase commenced. Hood was pushed out of Georgia into Northern Alabama; but still intent upon the grand design of "drawing back the Yankees into Tennessee," he still continued moving in that direction. This was a more disastrous mistake than his "manly blows" for Atlanta. Sherman saw his opportunity. He saw that he could leave a sufficient force to give employment to the doomed army of Hood, and still retain the larger division of his own forces for other enterprises. His plans were speedily adopted. Turning over to Gen. Thomas two army corps and a division of cavalry, Sherman left to him the important duty of taking care of Hood; and next was disclosed one of the most beautiful and successful strategical operations in the records of modern warfare. With an army of some fifty thousand men, Sherman turned his face again southward. Reaching Atlanta, his surplus stores and army materials, his railway rolling stock, &c., were sent back to Chattanooga. The railway then between that point and Atlanta was broken up. Atlanta itself, by fire, as a military base of operations, or railway centre, was next rendered useless and untenable. Next, with his preparations completed, and destroying all the railroads along his line of march, Sherman, with twenty days' subsistence in his wagons, for a journey of three hundred miles, struck out boldly for Savannah and the seaboard.

The country before him was rich in all the articles of subsistence required by a large army; there was no opposing army in his front to rob him of these supplies by removing or destroying them. Jeff Davis and Hood had given him a carte blanche to the whole State of Georgia; he was free to move west, south, or east, to take his own time, and appropriate everything in his progress, such as corn, horses, mules, wagons, cattle, pigs, sheep, poultry, and "contrabands." Thus this expedition of Sherman was to his sturdy veterans a holiday excursion; his army, men and horses, waxed fat upon the luxuries of their journey. The military results are—another division of the "Confederacy" by the line of the Savannah river, the certain and speedy capture of Savannah and Charleston, a new base for Sherman, from which, if called for, be may move at once to the support of Grant at Richmond; while, in the meantime, the destruction of Hood's army in Tennessee leaves Thomas at liberty also to strengthen the Army of the Potomac to the extent of twenty or thirty thousand veteran soldiers.

Such are the consequences, accomplished and clearly foreshadowed, of that memorable visit of Jeff Davis last September to Georgia. The capital blunders he committed on that occasion have resulted to him in the loss of Georgia, in the loss of Hood's army, and in liberating the army of Sherman and the army of Thomas for immediate service, if demanded at Richmond. In short, the results of that September journey of Davis have rendered it altogether probable that he will be utterly overthrown, and in captivity or in exile before the return of spring.

How to Bring Down Gold and High Prices.

FINANCIERS in Congress and out of Congress, and in every variety of remedial measures through the public press, continue their philanthropic labors in behalf of the Treasury, the national credit and the national currency. There is no end to the financial reforms presented, which if adopted would bring down gold to its legitimate value in "Greenbacks," and bring down the prices of provisions, coal, drygoods, &c., to reasonable and permanent rates. But the one thing needed to secure these most desirable results is still the suppression of the rebellion. The recent grandly successful accomplishment of Sherman's important expedition through the heart of Georgia to Savannah and the seacoast; the crushing defeats administered by Gen. Thomas to Hood's army in Tennessee, and the arrival at Beaufort, N. C., of the great expedition of land and naval forces under Gen. Butler and Admiral Porter destined for Wilmington, are events which have staggered the gold jobbers, and keep them staggering, in spite of all their powerful combinations to "bull the market." Let us have the final victory over Jeff Davis in the capture of Richmond, and there will be a fall in gold and a decline in the prices of all the essentials and luxuries of life, and in all the raw materials of manufacturers, and in labor, and in everything, which will astonish the wisest financiers in Wall street or Washington.

The overthrow of Jeff Davis and his toppling Confederacy, in reducing the expenditures of the Treasury from a thousand millions to less than five hundred millions a year, will so far simplify the duties enjoined upon the Department, and so far relieve the pressure upon the national credit, as to bring down gold, prices and taxes, and to widen the area of our national currency and the channels of trade, including Southern cotton, sugar, tobacco, &c., that men will wonder how it was that gold could have been carried or kept so long above

Summary of the War.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The expedition which sailed from Fortress Monroe on the 13th Dec. was in sight on the 21st at Fort Fisher, but the weather was then too rough to enable for any offensive demonstrations. The fleet had weathered a heavy storm, in which one of the monitors had a narrow escape of foundering.

TENNESSEE.

The retreat of Gen. Hood's defeated and shattered army continued, the rear being closely pressed by the victorious army of Gen. Thomas. The remnant of the army was said to be, on the morning of the 23d of Dec., at Pulaski, Tenn., 75 miles south of Nashville, with the National cavalry pursuing. Somewhat more than one-third of the men were without arms, everything which could impede their flight having been thrown away. The rest had just escaped the cavalry at the Boeing army. It is calculated that, since the battle of Franklin, Hood has lost over 20,000 men and three-fourths of his artillery—one account stating that he had captured 61 out of 64 pieces, and another 51.

VIRGINIA.

All is quiet before Richmond and Petersburg, with the exception of occasional artillery duels on the neighborhood of the Dutch Gap. The weather was very cold, and as many furloughs had been granted to the officers, it was supposed that no military operations would be attempted at present.

LOUISIANA.

Gen. Davidson and his division of Union cavalry had arrived safely at Pascagoula, from Baton Rouge, which place they left 27th Nov. They moved through the southern counties of Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama, and also the western portions of Florida, meeting with little opposition, and doing all the damage they could to the enemy.

SOUTH-WESTERN VIRGINIA.

The rebel papers say that Gen. Breckinridge has defeated the Union forces at Glade Springs, and compelled them to retreat towards East Tennessee.

TEXAS.

A Matamoras paper says that the Union troops at Brazos Santiago, number 2,000, having been recently reinforced—1,500 of these are colored. Frequent skirmishes occur between the Union troops and the rebels. The neighborhood of Brownsville, with varying success.

GEORGIA.

Immediately after the storming of Fort McAllister, Dick Taylor had an interview with Gen. Foster on board the Flagship Nemsha—which is illustrated in another part of our paper.

Gen. Sherman reported his position, Dec. 21. His dispatch, communicating the news, is couched in terms of mingled terseness and pleasantry.

Special Notice.

Our next number will contain the opening chapters of a new Serial story, of great interest and power, by one of the most popular and eminent novelists of the day. This was promised last week, but is deferred to make room for another Christmas Tale.

TOWN GOSSIP.

Bayonne this sheet is in the hands of its half million of readers, Christmas will have come and gone, with all its merriments and bright renewals of our youth and our manhood.

We can all observe that, with each succeeding year, the festival of Christmas is better kept. Among our Puritan ancestors it was almost obliterated, and since the War of Independence has been loosed on as too much of a Romish custom to meet with favor in American eyes. But as we advance in education and enlightenment, we discard many of our prejudices, and we have gradually revived the keeping of Christmas, until it approaches somewhat the festival of the olden time, though much abbreviated, and stripped of its stern religious aspect. It has become the day for presents and gaiety, for jolly dinners and family meetings, and for the advent of glorious old Santa Claus, the mythical friend of our youth, who has free access to all chimneys, public and private places, and a supposable privilege over all stockings, from the humble creeper of a few years since to the well grown master or miss, who, while almost repudiating the merry Saint, are not a little wish to be gifts.

The great trouble with the great American people is that they have too few holidays, and what they do have are crowded too closely together. Christmas, July 4th, Christmas and New Year's Day, all within a month, is satiety, while all the rest of the monotonous year is broken only by the Fourth of July, which is really no holiday stuff. Who is there that would not give a large slice from his year to once more renew the happiness of eight years old; the waking on Christmas morn; the wild rush for the close stocking; the tumbling out of the remembrances of Santa Claus, and the open-mouthed wonder and delight over the contents, that made the day one grand round of happiness, such as every year makes less, and all the graspings of ambition cannot compensate for?

We have often thought how strange it is that with all the associations, charitable and practical, that this great city brings forth, not one has ever been thought of for the purpose of giving Christmas pleasure to poor children. Think of it! Think of the thousands in the great mass of matter, children of every age and size, who, from Christmas to Christmas, have no Santa, in the keeping of Christmas; who would look upon the mere fact of receiving a cooking-stove, and a holiday dinner as something that has fallen directly from above. Isn't there a single man in the whole range of our city has fallen only of late. The children of those who have fallen in the fiery ordeal of the past year spend from life within the pest-pen and left the little ones unprovided for. Why not this matter instituted, and especially hard, because the money is with them. Wealth flows into the hands of the few, and those who want to protect them from the cribs of want passed by. Can no War Relief Agency be found for such Christmas Association?

Here, then, is room for a benevolent movement made in New York but some demagogue arose to take advantage of the anti-rebellion feeling, and to turn it into a financial hoaxist. As a powerful one in view, we cite the great Sanitary Fair, which, by the ingenuity of a scoundrel, for supplying the poor with food and dress at a small cost, was made the vehicle for the most unblushing robbery of the individual and the state, who were excessively anxious to sell the poor at a high price, and to buy them at a low price. Only a few of those bogus associations respectable citizens have been allowed to put their names and money into their cash, in the hope of achieving some good, but have found to their sorrow that they were only the tools applied to start some enterprising rascal in business. Then, the wonderful success of the scheme, the bringing a low rate and sold, even though cheaply, so that large profits with the thousands of contributors, left the one who got up the affair, and by him is pocketed unblushingly.

If there is any one thing that delights the philanthropist, it is to see the poor helped by the rich with honesty, and going slowly towards the millenium. The Sanitary Fair simply proved a curse to the land. But we have wonderful inventors, worth millions, which they are willing to sell to the poor at a low price, and to start enterprising persons. They have situations which they will bestow on many worthy souls, who have no occupations a successor, and are willing to appoint him for the sake of the good he can do. They offer to publish, gratis to start some enterprising rascal in business. They have valuable business yielding $25,000 per annum, which they will let to any one who proves to be fresh from the country, free from city vices, and possessed of the virtues of honesty. They are willing to impart information that will secure a fortune to the recipient, for the ridiculous sum of three cents in postage stamps. The list of their benevolence is overwhelming, and whoever possesses the means to give to the bestowal of that best best gift to man, for only 10 per cent. on the capital invested, should not miss the advertisement of one good man, from a daily paper.

"MARYMOSSA.—To marriageable ladies and gentlemen—A gentleman of wealth, who is in union I will send "my proposed arrangement for mutual benefit" to any such lady or gentleman. Address, Box 1,000, Post-office."

Why should we suffer when we can enter upon a "proposed arrangement for mutual benefit," and that only "to Christian parties," for only 10 cents and a stamp?

Another strong man, who has the dawning and possibilities of the uptown parties in his own way, have become terribly exercised with a certain species of charity—Christmas dinners. Now, we are not up to the extent this winter. They are positively being fed by the family friends in a very large way. We have followed the spirit-stirring drum to the field. It has been no mean task for some of us to be called upon to league together in a charitable movement, the purpose of which was to empty the pockets of those dancing, shrieking young men. To the unmarried portion of the community, and, indeed, object of charity, not caring whether it be a person or an institution, such a dinner is a delightful affair, and then puts down her name for a certain sum, which is to be paid in a week or so, a period which, in the belle danseuse, or some other fête. These tickets, by the fascinating young men, are disposed in a manner to add to the nice young men or their acquaintance. There is no doubt but the tickets are sold, but they must be sold and they are. When this is achieved, the sum for which the tickets were purchased have subscribed is paid over, and of course they receive all the profits, which are generally quite enough to satisfy the poor bleeding victims of their duplicity. In addition to this, there is a large list of names of nice young men; but taken into consideration the fact that the subscription will be paid, and the turkey, leather boots and gloves, the matter really becomes quite a serious one, and we have not yet discovered an eligible parties to retirement.

Among the associations worthy of encouragement is the "Theatrical Workingmen's Union," a body of carpenters, scenemakers and other mechanics of the theatres. It embraces the workmen of all the theatres, and is chiefly beneficiary. It has a fund of nearly 6,000 acres of land in Pennsylvania, on which to make a home for aged members and widows. It has a library of 600 and they are about to have a benefit, from each member of which it will draw twenty dollars, and for a ball, on the 18th of January, to further the same end.

Our Amusements.

There has really been a most unusual recording during the week in the way of novelty. The theatres all seem to have struck a fortunate vein, and crowds are crowding their houses nightly with it.

Booth, at the Winter Garden, continues to make the most serious mark on public attention, and has been for two weeks remaining "Richard III." unapproached in New York. Any critique of his rendering would be superfluous, as the public have already formed a proper moment on its quality.

At the Academy we have had the long-promised production of "En Diavolo," to crowded and really brilliant audiences. The scenery and the stage-grouping are given as almost as new, being a revision by the author; and the costumes and appointments are pronounced to be the richest points of the opera. Miss Kellogg as Zerlina, and to the opera-goers, is always a host in herself, and only excepting her desire for too great embellishment, is delightful in the character. Her singing on this stage on we have ever heard. Lotti, Brienzi and Harrison also do justice to their parts, and with a full chorus and orchestra, the first only looking serious and the latter as though he were in a trance, the opera could as hardly to be worth mention as applied to an inside affair.

Heller has introduced his new programme, growing out of the success of his "Magic Clock" and other advances. His performing, though somewhat on ballet-ic, is very clever, and his "Drifting About" is quite new, and is astonished, and brings back our days of admiration for the wonderful and changeful modern wonder at their wondrous skill and changeful ways.

Wood's Minstrels are doing a rushing business, and become every such people, the first only looking serious and the latter as though he were in a trance, the opera could as hardly to be worth mention as applied to an inside affair.

Stephen Massett, Jessie Pipes, of Pipsville, according to the Chicago papers, is getting on to be one of the rather a summary manner, considering the cold weather, with his "Drifting About." Among his novelties is anything to eat, or any light place to get into, or get out of. Col. Pipes manages to get into it, to eat it, and we believe in the present case, get out again, the right place in the position being a convenient drifted about Connecticut, and so drifted around the Colonel, that of one Miss Mary was the child whether he would be found and extricated before spring. It is a long time since any lecturer has had the success that Mr. Massett is now reaping, over-crowded houses being his fortune wherever he goes.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The President has issued a proclamation pursuant to the new position of Vice-Admiral, recently created by act of Congress.

The Tribune says that the best understanding prevails between the Quebec and Washington Governments. Immediately after Gen. Dix issued his ultimatum, Lord Lyons sent by Mr. Secretary Seward a note of a confidential agent to Canada, who has returned, stating that the Canadian authorities have consulted with Judge Counsel and the Chief of Police Lamothe are both Fenians, and that they are getting up a quarrel between the British and American Governments.

—The last lot of exchanged prisoners were delivered to us at Annapolis on Monday. At once in less than four hours.

—Some Secession papers from the rebel States is disgust; he closed a very severe speech on Jeff. Davis with these words: "And now, gentlemen, set up your standard and rally around; now I wish to say to this audience that I am a Union man, here and everywhere, has been recently, such that I shall deem it a duty which I have to keep myself from any sympathies, which I have heretofore steadily maintained, to withdraw from the Union Government. I love the Union, and the preservation of freedom and I do not mean now to be misled by any party. The Emancipation Proclamation I have adopted in secret session of this body, which my whole soul shrinks from with an unbreathing confidence. This, as I have already said, is perhaps the last time that I shall address you, and I shall not be detained here under consideration. I shall withdraw to some place where I can enjoy a little longer the peace and freedom from taxation. I disturbed in my retreat by the hand of violence, I will seek in foreign climes that freedom and happiness which I consider are denied to me here."

The negroes, out of gratitude to the President for his emancipation proclamation, have named their new church edifice in Washington City, Lincoln Church, 18 little coatchmands were christened Abraham, 17 Lincoln, and 1 Abraham Lincoln Washington, and for baptism as "Abraham," the reverend gentleman refused to perform the ceremony.

The Wisconsin State prison is at present unoccupied, and the Governor has pardoned all its inmates.

—A Greenland and was shot last week, opposite Ottawa, Canada.

—Mrs. Sarah Vandegrift, who died, in Trenton, on the 30th November, was one of the young ladies who took the oath of allegiance to the United States, April 19.

—Dr. Winslow, the well-known American missionary, died at Cape of Good Hope on 22d Oct. aged 70. He was born in Boston, and was active worker in India.

—The new frame building in the Park, to be occupied for the accommodation of the soldiers of the Shot, New York, has accommodation for 1,000 darks. It was commenced on the 1st of May, and finished in June.

—Barnum lectured on the 3rd of Dec. at the Father Matthew Institute, Hartford, on Temperance, to a great effect. His hits at fresh-water were full of wit and force. A very fortune many of his audience seem disposed to the pledge.

—Congress has decreed to levy $2 a gallon on all distilled spirits after the 1st of January.

—The new 50 cent currency has been issued, although they will not be issued in much larger sum than the present, being four inches long, and nearly two inches deep.

—A Naval Court of Inquiry is now in session, on board the Colorado, at Fortress Monroe, having for its object the conduct of Capt. Craven, in the disaster connected with the sinking of the Florida.

—The "Confederate States Home," at the capital of South Carolina, announces to the members of the rebel Congress that board, lodging, fuel, lights, eggs, corn meal, molasses, beef, pork, chickens, etc., will be given in payment for board bills, at full market rates.

—A Catholic church, mostly completed, in Belville, Ill., fell, last week, with a terrific explosion, the crumbling dust of the explosion of a steam engine. Fortunately no persons were killed.

—A Western paper furnishes the following shocking account of a horrible feed consigned in that neighborhood. Two children, aged 3 and 11, respectively, died in consequence of eating poisoned food left for destruction. Deliberately said a drunken man's son of with an old rusty musket, and the children found the powder and shot, ate the liquor at the time, and it is reasonable to suppose that the food left for the rats. Terrible was the agony of the victims and the several days before her suffering. His thought he will recover.

"P. Kenedy" is the new London spy.

—The editor of the San Francisco News Letter, a young Irishman, has challenged Starke to fight a duel. Mr. Bulkeys, of New York, who went out to fill the pulpit of Rev. Mr. Scudder, while the latter was in Europe, is the latter says: "May you bow, Bulkeys until death ends your days, and may no curious eyes behold you after death, cut you open to see where it all came from."

—The U. S. Navy consumes 500,000 tons of coal annually.

—The National debt is stated at seventeen hundred and forty millions six hundred and ninety thousand, four hundred and twenty-four dollars, and forty-nine cents.

—The Newburyport, Mass., Herald states that two cases of spontaneous combustion have occurred in the same town, in the same week, within 36 hours, both of them women, given to constant indulgence in liquor. One of them was found burning on the kitchen floor, which proceeded from her mouth and nostrils; the other was found in bed, with the clothes burned off, walls of the room and the furniture were covered with a thick coat of soot. The whole house being pervaded with an intolerable stench.

—A Democratic editor in Iowa promptly says his party is the party of the people of A. D. 1865, and "Licked Like the Devil!"

—The Richmond Whig says that Congress is subject to two disorders—Grab and Gab.

—Kossuth, it is said, has three nephews, who are officers in the army of the United States.

—The potato rot is said to have appeared in Ohio.

—The Gloucester, Mass., Telegraph says that, in Georgetown, Essex County, in that State, there is a large society of Mormon believers, who adopt the full Mormon idea, and who have recently added to their membership by baptism, and have services every Sunday.

—A petition has been presented in the United States Senate, praying that it be the duty of one of the Governments, as well as the country, would be received by the Government of Foreign paper would free from tax or duty.

—The Gulf Stream of Nevada is so called from the old Castilian word "nieve," meaning snow. It is the snow-line.

—Gen. Burnside deposed, before the Congressional Committee now sitting to investigate the Fredericksburg disaster, that his command was defeated by Gen. Hooker, and before the assault, that he was unable to carry out the plan. Gen. Burnside is a New Yorker, and has been thoroughly neither of the two.

—The Richmond Enquirer says that one of the members of the 10th Connecticut regiment has just got back from Andersonville. His weight was formerly 160 pounds. He and captivity have reduced him to 66 pounds—he is almost a skeleton.

—The number of deaths in New York city for the week ending 24th Dec. is 451—being 8 less than the corresponding week of 1864.

—There were 2,453 emigrants landed here last week.

—Our navy consists of 671 vessels, built and building, carrying 4,610 guns.

—Fine cut tobacco, so popular with chewers, is made up 10 per cent. pastead for per cent tobacco. Peat is the name given whitestone lime, "slaked meal."

—A Society is now formed in Berlin having for its object the suppression of dueling scenes.

—The venerable manager and excellent actor, James W. Wallack, died at his residence in this city, on Sunday, Dec. 25th, at the age of 70 years. He departs in the fullness of years and honors.

Foreign.—Three small tribes had arrived at Cyprus with 1,000 Circassian refugees on board—they started from the Black Sea they numbered 3,700—but the hardships and the sickness on board 2,700 out of these 300 were more dead than alive.

—In Saxony the number of mortality caused by fevers has for a long time been calculated at one man a day.

—Mr. Dayton, our Minister at Paris, died suddenly in that city, on the 4th Dec., of apoplexy. He was 58 years of age.

—The London Times has an elaborate review of Earl Russell's translation of Horace, which is highly complimentary. The specimens presented indicate a very —Prussia has given great offence to the rest of Germany, by M. Bismarck's overbearing conduct in the Danish question. There was some probability that a war might ensue.

—Belgium has made with Austria a treaty on finance.

—Garibaldi has accepted the yacht presented to him by the Duke of Sutherland.

—The question of the marriage of priests is beginning to agitate the French mind.

Miscellaneous.—Schiller was sold less than $150 each for "Mark Strait," the "Jungfrau von Orleans" for $100, and "Don Carlos" for $50. "Wilhelm Tell" William Tell" he appears to have received about $200 from Schengel, received $10 for translating and arranging "Hamlet" for the German stage, and $200 each for his writings for "Wallenstein" and "Juliet."

As the reward of villainy, some men are hung, some crapped and hounded, others elected to office.

A contemporary, criticising the style of writing in short sentences, says that it is all very well enough for the press, says that it is copied from Julius Cæsar. He was a great writer, and Julius Cæsar himself has written, chiefly in long paragraphs. The style is French, and not proper for the English press.

—There is a physiological reason for calling this a "fine day." It is that the human system is invigorated from seven to ten throbs in a minute, over that of "bad weather."

—"Ich habe es gethan" Were Müller's "reported" last words. He might have said (and been misunderstood) "Ich habe es gethan" (I have done it) for which would have meant the exact contrary.

—The pen we have, the law we say. At death a man arrives at immense knowledge, and doesn't open his mouth.

—A censorious man is a disagreeable companion. Nobody likes the society of one, who, like doomsday, is always finding fault with what is much good.

—The term "Brother Jonathan," which is applied to the people of America, originated many years since in the war. Connecticut possessed, during the Revolutionary war, a Governor named Jonathan Trumbull. Gen. Washington found him always prompt, and when difficulties arose in a difficult way, he was accustomed to say, "We must consult Brother Jonathan on the subject." In course of time the phrase became a popular one, and Brother Jonathan is now consulted by pretty nearly the whole world.

—The following persons are requested, by a country paper, to keep away from the next Lyceum lecture: the boy who is always hooking books, for he will read them; the boy who brings peanuts, the girl who giggles, the girl who whispers, the young man who "hems" and "haws" when he goes out before the lecture is ended, the boy and girl who "spark" in the front of age, and the man who always applauds in the wrong place.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A procession of one of the colleges of Montreal a few days since, was passing through the purpose of making. A little boy, ten years of age, not having learned that the grandstand was to be kept in the school-room all day, while his companions were out enjoying the fun. The patience of the child was intently studying his lesson, came to him and asked:

"If you can write me a sentence of four words, each word containing one letter, I will bet you go and play with your companions."

The teacher, after the little boy showed his master the following phrase:

"I see a cow in a small state."

The teacher was so much pleased at this presence of mind, that he immediately gave him his liberty.

At the recent McClellan meeting in front of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, some one in the crowd, recognizing Gen. Scott, exclaimed, "There is old Fuss-and-Feathers!" "Hurrah for little Mac!"

"Mother, I want a knife, in a much louder key, cried:

"Hurrah! for a jackass!"

"That's right," said the first speaker, "you call for the available, and I'll call for mine. It's a free country."

An old lady who imagined that the sea must be very deep, because so many got bathed in it, was consoled on being informed that it washed upon the shore very much.

A WESTERN paper chronicles as follows the recent explosion of a steamboat, on one of the great rivers:

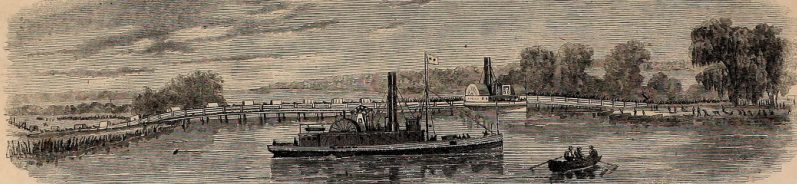
"The captain swam ashore. So did the chambermaid. She was insured for $10,000, and landed with one."

There is a very prevalent belief—as erroneous as it is prevalent—that "seeing is believing," and to a person who the eyes are shut that when they are open.

The head of a turtle, for several days after after its separation from the body, retains and exhibits considerable vitality. Its eyes will wink, its tongue protrude one, and some days afterwards its mouth will open and shut when irritated. Not unlike the head of a lawyer.

A lady who saw the press-drug exclaimed:

"Why, gracious! that man's head is dead!"



"So he is, indeed, but the captain's not a subtle of it."

A wise old gentleman, who knew all about it, on entering from business, gave the following sage advice to his son, who was about to enter upon the business of life, and is likely of business—except love-making.

The surgeon of an English ship of war used to prescribe salt water for his patients, in all cases requiring active medicine, even in a party of pleasure, he happened, by some misfortune, to be drowned. The captain, who had just learnt of the disaster, asked one of the crew that day if he had heard anything of the doctor.

"Yes," answered Jack; "he was drowned last night, in his own medicine chest."

At a festive meeting a married man proposed: "The ladies—the beings who divide our sorrows, double our joys and treble our expenses!" Upon which a lady proposed, "The gentlemen—the beautiful individuals who divide our time, double our cares and treble our troubles."

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—KINGSBRIDGE, GA., HEAD OF NAVIGATION OF THE OGEECHEE RIVER, DESTROYED BY REBELS, BUT REBUILT BY GEN. SHERMAN'S FORCES, IN THIRTY-SIX HOURS.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

SHERMAN'S

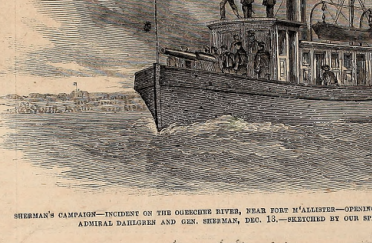
Grand March Through Georgia.

We publish to-day some most interesting sketches illustrating the brilliant progress of Gen. Sherman's army through Georgia.

Fort McAllister.

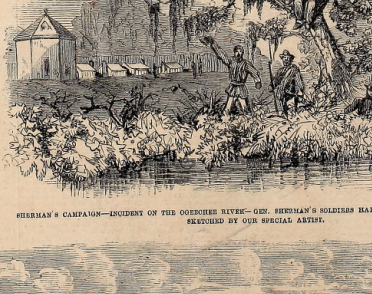
This celebrated fort, which had resisted two previous attacks, fell on the 13th of Dec. before the assault of our troops; the correspondent of the New York Herald thus describes it: "The fort was constructed in the early part of the war by a rebel officer named McAllister. On the river front the fort mounted two 32-pounders; three 10 inch guns of 128-pounders; two 64-pounders; a mortar; and several 24-pounders, making in all 24 pieces. The garrison consisted of 200 men, under the command of Major Anderson. It has three half bastions, and two curtains. The howitzers were so placed that they swept the approach with deadly effect. The trenches were very deep, and filled with abattis and chevaux de frize. There was also a line of buried torpedoes—over which our gallant fellows had to charge, but the disastrous results were almost entirely avoided by compelling the captured rebel pickets to walk before the advancing column—and point out where the torpedoes were buried.'

After a desperate resistance the fort was stormed sword in hand—our loss was 23 killed and 42 wounded—the rebel loss was 14 killed and 21 wounded. The wreck of the rebel steamer Nashville, sunk by Capt. Worden, still lies in the Ogeechee, off the fort.



Meeting of Sherman and Foster.

The meeting of those two renowned warriors took place on board the U. S. revenue cutter Nemaha, Gen. Foster's flagship, and our Artist says was a most interesting event. Gen. Foster, who is still very lame, and compelled to use a crutch, was standing on the deck, when a a small boat was seen coming, with two officers in it. "What boat is that?" inquired the lookout. "Sherman!" was the welcome response. The great leader stepped on board accompanied by Gen. Howard, and the greeting between Foster and them was as may be imagined very cordial. Sherman remained on board till two o'clock in the morning, during which time he wrote several dispatches.



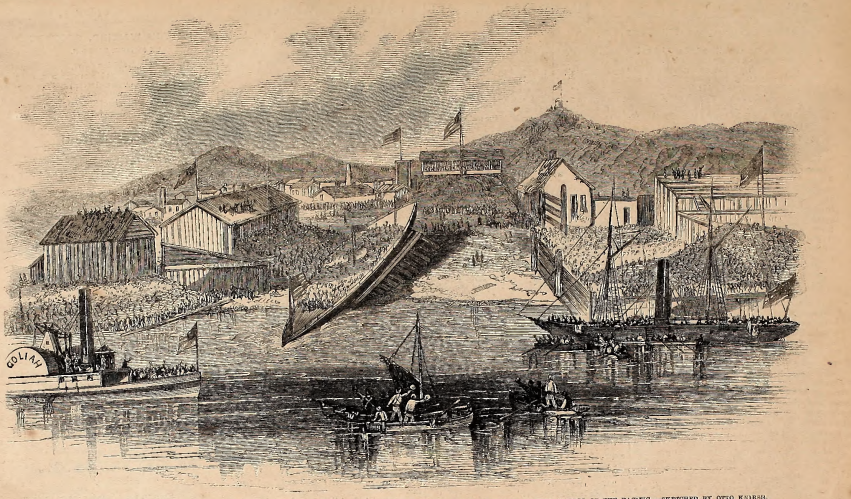
Kingsbridge.

This bridge, which crosses the Ogeechee, is on the Savannah and Gulf railroad, and was burnt by the rebels some few days before. It was 600 yards in length and is strongly constructed. It has been rebuilt by Capt. Reese, Chief Engineer o Howard's wing, in 36 hours—an unparalleled feat under the circumstances. We also publish sketches of Sherman's troops opening communication with Foster's army.

Our Artist, Mr Crane, requests us to thank Major-Gen. Foster and staff, as well as Capt. Warren of the Nemaha, for many facilities and attentions he received from them.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—INCIDENT ON THE OGEECHEE RIVER, NEAR FORT M'ALLISTER—OPENING OF COMMUNICATION BETWEEN ADMIRAL DAHLGREN AND GEN. SHERMAN, DEC. 13.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—INCIDENT ON THE OGEECHEE RIVER—GEN. SHERMAN'S SOLDIERS HAILING GEN. FOSTER'S FLAGSHIP. SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.



CITY POINT, VA.

WE present on this page a view of City Point, a place that often figures in military operations and war dispatches. It is situated on the James river, at the mouth of the Appomattox, in Prince George county, Va. It is 34 miles from Richmond, and 12 miles from Petersburg. The Army line railroad terminates here, by which, among other channels, communication is maintained between Washington city and the Army of the Potomac. Our sketch represents the terminus of this line, together with Government storehouses, and in the offing U. S. steamers and other craft. Steamers sail daily from City Point to Fortress Monroe. No place evinces greater warlike activity than this, through which troops and supplies are constantly passing to our armies besieging Petersburg and Richmond.

PETROLEUM WELLS.—The action of petroleum wells is ingeniously explained by Prof. Evans, of Marietta, Ohio. According to his observations, this oil is contained in cavities or fissures of rocks, in connection with both water and gas. These are arranged, of course, according to their weight, the water at the bottom, the oil floating thereon, and the gas (often strongly compressed) fills the upper part of the cavity. If such a cavity runs obliquely from above downward, a well, when bored, may strike either the water or the oil, or it may enter the gas chamber. In the first two cases, if the gas be compressed, as it usually is, there will be a spouting well, the water or oil, or both together, being thrown out of the mouth of the boring. When the tension of the gas is exhausted resort must be had to pumping, until the cavity is pumped out. But, in some cases, a series of cavities communicate by small openings or crevices, in which case a well may flow intermittently for a long time, as it is replenished by percolation of oil through these channels. It is not uncommon for intermittent wells to throw out as free 500 or 600 barrels a day, or 5 or 6 daily, in all, as much as 20,000 barrels. They sometimes run two or three years before exhaustion. The productiveness of the Phillips well, on the Little Kanawha, greatly exceeds these figures. Where there is little or no gas, or where, from the gas-chamber being tapped, the gas is lost, pumping has to be resorted to from the first. Oil wells commonly vary in depth from 100 to 400 feet. Oil coming to the surface in springs is not a reliable sign of oil cavities in the immediate neighborhood, for it often has carried a long distance by the current of the subterranean streamlets by which the springs are fed.

VIEW OF CITY POINT, VA., TERMINATION OF THE ARMY LINE RAILROAD.—SKETCHED BY HENRY BRYANSON.

LAUNCH OF THE U. S. MONITOR CAMANCHE, AT SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., NOV. 14TH—THE FIRST IRONCLAD EVER LAUNCHED IN THE WATERS OF THE PACIFIC.—SKETCHED BY OTTO REIMER.

OCEAN BRIDES.

BY HENRY GATES.

"I am lonely," saith the sea,
"Keeps the earth a bride for me,
Born my passion to control,
By the queenhood of her soul?

"Many brides my lips have kissed—
Ruby set on amethyst—
Loved, deserted, left my breast,
Heaving for a deeper rest.

"First Phœnicia's eastern art
Purpled through my azure heart,
Oh! beloved! he my wave
Silent by thy nameless grave!

"Carthage, child of southern skies,
Wooed me with her burning eyes,
Won, and passed for evermore,
Like the ripples of her oar.

"Genoa, fair, proud and free,
With a bride's love gifted me;
Centuries have passed away
Since she on my bosom lay.

"Then Venetia's form divine
Stirred the pulses of my brine;
But on memory is the sweet
Pressure of her flying feet.

"Scandinavia's stormy soul
Brought my wild heart love's control;
Bound her icy cage I moan
In my desertness alone.

"Lovely, passionate, cruel Spain
Filled me with sweet human pain;
From my soul her golden dream
Faded like a sunset gleam.

"Then Britannia's earnest look
All my crystal being shook;
Isles of empire! not to ye
Kneels again the queenless sea.

"Who shall share my mighty throne,
Rule by inborn right alone,
Bid my mystic moon-force be
Handmaid of her royalty?

"Ah! I feel my life-stream surge
By Columbia's eastern verge,
And a light is on her hair;
Can my crown be settling there?

"Yes! her spirit calms my breast,
Comes at last the deeper rest,
Comes the changeless bride to be
Queen for ever of the sea!"

MARRYING FOR HATE.

BY E. W.,

AUTHOR OF "THE SERPENT WOMAN?" "THE LAST HAZARD," &C.

CHAPTER I.

I was making my way through a crowd in r
by-street, which I supposed had collected for the

AN AGREEABLE SURPRISE.

contemplation and enjoyment of some trifling and contemptible disturbance, but into which at the time I was not in the mood to inquire, when my course was arrested by a pair of beautiful large black eyes under a lady's veil, which met mine with a mute appeal that I could not, for a moment, resist.

THE MYSTERIOUS FAIR ONE.

"What is the matter?" I demanded at once of the possessor of the bright black eyes.

A remarkably sweet voice replied.

"I have ventured to interfere in behalf of a child I saw the people abusing, but I am afraid that, without some assistance, my efforts will be unavailing."

"We wasn't abusing it," cried several rough voices together. "She was only fighting with little Mike, and she'd a got the best of him, too, if you'd let her alone."

"It is quite enough," said the lady with spirit, her splendid eyes flashing as she spoke, "that your sex should disgrace itself in this way. I shall not allow mine, especially such a little creature as this, to make a savage brute of itself, if I can help it."

"You are right, madam," I said. "The man who would see your sex dragged into the prize-ring must have little respect for his own mother. You are Quixotic, however, to assume the duties of the child's natural Protectors. Where are its parents?"

"Dead," cried three other little children in chorus.

"Where—how does this little girl live, then?"

"She lives with Miss Fanny Flink, and does errands for her."

"What sort of a person is she?" inquired the dark-eyed lady.

"She dresses finer than you do, ma'am," replied one of the female bystanders, "but she is not exactly the person to bring up a child in the way it should go, as she has strayed a long way out herself."

The pointed truthfulness of this remark raised a laugh among the acquaintances of Miss Fanny Flink.

The lady, in the meantime, had not let go her hold on a half-shall, sturdy little girl, whose face was flushed with passion and discolored with blood, dirt and tears. She stooped down to her now, raising her evil, and said:

"Little one, if you will go with me, I will find you a good home. You shall have nice clothes, enough to eat, and be taught to read and write. What do you say?"

The sweetness and beauty of the lady's face surprised the child, and she seemed to be overpowered by her gentle influence, and replied:

"Yes, ma'am, I will go with you anywhere."

At this moment a policeman arrived on the spot, and the lady at once addressed herself to him, explaining the case, and shortly afterwards she walked away, leading her little charge, escorted by the guardian of the peace. Although much pressed for time, I lingered to look after her till she turned the corner, for never had I seen a face that seemed to me half so lovely as hers, and it haunted me ever after.

I had, however, at that time, too many troubles of my own to afford time to look after those of others. A very long and most expensive lawsuit had exhausted the once handsome fortune that had long kept my family in so enviable a position, and left me nothing but fallacious hopes and illusive expectations. My father died during the slow progress of the litigation; the lawyer, who had commenced and so long conducted it, also deceased; but the profession never resulted, and it appeared too probable that my mother, too, would pass away without the satisfaction of knowing that so many years, thought, anxiety and suspense had not been entirely thrown away. She was very ill, and I foresaw with certainty that the shock of a decision held her to this life she would snap, if the final decision in our cause, which it was believed would soon be rendered, should be against us, for it would necessitate the sale of all that remained to us, and leave us little better than beggars. It was our last stake, upon which all our means and credence had gradually concentrated, and if that were lost we had nothing more to lose—nothing but blank despair to encounter, and which to anticipate.

The lawyer who, at the time, conducted our suit was an old friend of my father's, successful, rich, independent man; and, as he had first undertaken the case more from friendly than pecuniary motives, did not attempt to disguise the truth; and proffered from me; but I could not, would not look forward to anything but triumph, and chose rather to regard his discouraging tone as a mere artful spell to enhance the value of his services in achieving success. He was a good man at heart, that old lawyer, and his pomposity was the result of habit he was not apt to spoil his medicine by oversweetening it, and my pampered palate rebelled not a little against the nauseous dose, but mistook me bitterness.

I had a long hunt after an important female witness, whom I found at last in a garret, dying of consumption, and unfriended I and, sitting like a ministering angel at her bedside, but the beautiful black-eyed lady whom I had lately met, the champion of the little abandoned orphan girl.

"It is in such places as this, where a good angel is most needed, and not in the circles of gaiety and fashion, that I must seek you, Lear," exclaimed I, gazing upon her with irrepressible admiration.

Her lady blushed deeply; and, as soon as she had recovered from her momentary confusion, observed, quickly, that she was simply performing a duty to which an old friend of her mother's was fully entitled.

While obtaining the deposition of her patient, I had several opportunities of conversing with the excellent beauty, and her modest elegance and graceful ease captivated my soul.

One evening, I entered, just to accompany her in her search for an omnibus, and, as I had resolved to express my sentiments freely to her on the first available occasion, I was, as is usual in such cases, much embarrassed when it presented itself.

"Your patient is dying, I fear."

"She is conscious of the approach of her deliverance; and as such she regards it."

"It is an angel's office you fill in smoothing her path to her grave."

"Do not flatter me, sir. It is but little I can do, and that very seems to me to make that little less than nothing."

"I assure you I express my admiration in most virtuous terms, and I hope you will not call I think and I might indeed surprise you."

"Then be content your forbearance."

"It is unkind, perhaps harsh, in you to forbid the utterance of a heart so sincere and full as mine."

"It is my kindness and my consideration for you that induce me to check this excessive laudation, because I know you will repent it."

"Impossible! I not only admire you more than any being I ever saw, but feel that you are worthy of my worship, and that I love you."

"Say no more, I entreat. If you knew who and what I am you would confess the folly of which you are guilty. You tell me you are unfortunate and unhappy; I pity you—but there is a gulf between us, and you would only render yourself more wretched by attempting, vainly, foolishly, to cross it."

"Are you married?"

"Do not ask. Here let our acquaintance cease. You have my permission to visit my patient, and you surely would not deprive her of the presence of her last remaining friend, as you will do, if you persist in intruding upon her. Here then let us part, and for ever."

She stopped a stage, allowed me to help her alight, and left me in search of a cab, gloom. She had crossed my dark path, like a heavenly apparition, and her disappearance rendered everything about me hopeless and dreary as despair.

CHAPTER II.

THE treacherous law, after having lured us on to ruin, decided against our claims, and extorted the last remnant of our property to pay its costs. To communicate the fact to my mother would have been like inflicting her deathblow, and, after meditating long upon the subject, I found myself unequal to the painful task, and went once more to our old lawyer, to ascertain whether there was no possibility of compromising the matter so as to postpone the evil day and leave my mother awhile in possession of her home and comforts. I met a lady descending the stairs, who had just come out of his office, whose physiognomy was of that unusually repulsive character which imprints itself indelibly on the memory, and never alters, in dreams and reveries, in sleep and in wakefulness, rises from time to time to our mental vision with horrible distinctness, shocking us with the fullest sense of the infernal ugliness of human malformation. I thought of the wonderful contrast between this unfortunate and the delicate beauty I loved in vain, and it seemed almost impossible that both could be the work of the same hands and emanate from the same Creator. Yet why so contrasted He that made them alone can tell.

The old lawyer was in, and grasped my hand with sympathetic cordiality. I stated the object of my visit.

"Well, my young friend," said he, "I have anticipated your wishes, and have just been talking with the successful party. She is by no means reasonable; but, to tell you the truth, there are no grounds for any further action left. You have lost all that the widow has won all. If she accords you anything, it will be simply a donation—nothing more nor less."

"Is there no resource left by which I can, for the time, ward off this fatal, and to my mother, a fear, fatal blow?"

"You do not know"

"In what then?"

"In yourself."

"How in myself?"

"In your person. You are young and handsome. I don't say so to flatter you, but to make my meaning clear."

"Well?"

"Well, marry the widow."

"Marry the creature!"

"Horrid! I see your taste and mine differ; but they say there is no disputing on such matters, and you must not let your heart's desires upon the subject. As I apprehend, you came to me for some possible resource in your extremity, and I've put the very cure of obtaining a matchless beauty."

"True, but——"

"Allow me. I mention this as the only resource left you. Be reasonable. If the lady be not perfection, so much the better, as it improves your chances. If you are not in love with her you can and beggary by no one but a Venus, you are much too nice a gentleman for me to counsel, and had better study yourself alone. If you will follow out the nine Muses, instead of a blunt, matter-of-fact old lawyer like myself."

"Marry her! I would rather hang myself at once."

"You should know best how fit you are to die. I am afraid your education and habits have totally unfitted you for suicide, and starving."

"But this marriage is absurd, impossible."

"I am not in the habit of proposing absurdities and impossibilities. If you will authorize me to act, you will find it no such thing. Will you do so?"

"Not for the world!"

"Understand that I have not urged this matter on you behalf, but for the sake of your mother whose happiness I have much at heart, and for whose life you pretended a moment ago to feel an amount of solicitude that would enable you to commit suicide."

"For the moment I did not think of them."

"It is time you did. Since my counsel is so very unpalatable, I no longer you will condescend to inform me what you propose to do."

"Anything else, but this is too horrible."

Then I left him. His chair swung round, and commenced writing at his desk as coolly, rapidly and correctly as if he had been an ingenious machine invented for the purpose of writing. I thought on his proposition till I grew sick and faint. The recollection of the consummate charms of her I loved added a horror to the aspect of hate, such as she wore whom I was invited to make my own, and I could not bring my heart or lips to say yes to such a destiny. I rose and approached him.

"I will call to-morrow and give you my decision."

"Very well," replied the old man, without turning his head or ceasing to write.

CHAPTER III.

IT WENT home and attempted to prepare my mother for the blow that had befallen us, but in approaching the subject found that it was more than she could endure, and relinquished the effort in despair. To my sister I ventured to tell the truth, and she wept bitterly, not for herself, but for our only parent, whom she assured me would not survive the change from affluence.

"Is there nothing on earth that you can do, Edward, to prevent this?"

"Yes."

"And won't you do it?"

"I cannot bring my mind to it."

"Is it dishonorable?"

"N—o; I don't know that it is, but very repugnant to my feelings."

"I am sure I would do anything for mother."

"Would you marry the man you abhor?"

"To save mother's life—yes."

"Then, Clara, I will not be outdone by you in filial affection."

"What do you mean, Edward?"

"I will tell you to-morrow. In the meantime, cheer up. I will save mother and you, but at great sacrifice—heaven only knows how great."

My sister flung her arms about my neck, kissed me affectionately, called me by many endearing names, and I felt as if I almost deserved them, exaggerated as they were.

I communicated my decision to my lawyer the next day, telling him that, since I could not marry for hate, he might for love. He uttered a sort of grunt, and replied:

"Few marriages begin in that way; but with too many love is merged in antipathy as soon as the honeymoon is over. Your prospect of connubial happiness is the brighter, as it cannot change but for the better. If you know the lady as well as I do, you would entertain no misgivings on the subject."

On the second day after this interview I received Mrs. Bagshawe's card, and a written request from my lawyer that I would call upon her without delay, as he had settled the preliminaries in the most satisfactory manner. I did not cry on the wings of love to the stately mansion of my bride elect, as there had been little choice in the matter, but strolled slither like a man who had voluntered to be hanged. On my arrival I was ushered into a handsome drawing-room, in which I was kept waiting for nearly a quarter of an hour, when, at last, the lady appeared. She did not look handsomer than when I met her on the stairs leading to my lawyer's office. On the contrary, the relation in which she now stood with respect to myself, and the flurry she had plied upon her person rendered her, in my eyes, more hideous than ever. I responded to her salutation, and remained silent for a few moments. She appeared desirous of manifesting a certain measure of modesty coyness, and I was not indisposed to allow her all the leisure she required for the performance of the part. When she had assumed the rôle to her satisfaction, and lest a little pâtisnee, she opened upon me with the voice of a dying screechowl, that made me shudder:

"Well, Mr. Ingleton, the object of your visit is, I presume——"

"Yes, madam, it is as you say, to propose for your hand and heart; they are conventionally supposed to go together——"

"My hand and heart!" she exclaimed, laughing.

Mamma, god of mirth, what a laugh it was! A hyena's cachinnation, a jackass's bray, and the serenade of a starving cat combined were music to it.

"Yes, madam; and does this appear so absurd to you?"

"Extravagantly so."

"My lawyer has been authorised by me to make a formal proposition, which he has given me to understand has been favorably received. Has no received you?"

"Not at all; but you have made a slight mistake in the person."

"This is very ridiculous. Shall I have the pleasure of seeing the right lady?"

"In a moment. She sent me to prepare you for her coming."

"I do not see the necessity."

"I presume not. I will explain, although the subject is a very delicate one to handle: a betterhearted girl than my niece Clara never lived, but she has some personal defects which, perhaps, only the eye of love can overlook. I mean to say, for instance, that she does not enjoy the same personal advantages as myself."

I looked at her face for a moment in amazement, and an involuntary groan escaped my lips.

"It cannot be possible! Is she deformed?"

"Oh, no; not deformed, but shaped as I am."

"Indeed! What is it, then?"

"A slight obliquity of vision, which adds a puzzling and peculiar charm to her eyes. Her hair is of that color against which there is a very unmerited prejudice, but, for myself, I think I never saw a more brilliant red. With these exceptions, there exists a strong family likeness between us, especially as respects the width of the mouth, the elevation and height of the shoulders and the size of the feet."

What an image of horror was conjured up before me.

"Say no more!" I exclaimed, wildly. "This suspense is too dreadful. Let me see the woman herself, though the sight of her kill me!"

"Then turn and look upon thy death!" cried a sweet voice behind me, in a mock tragic voice, followed by a silvery ring of laughter.

I turned, and, to my inexpressible delight, beheld my adored black-eyed beauty.

"And you—you are——"

"Not Miss Bagshawe, that was my maiden name, but Clara Barrington, widow."

I fell at her feet, half disposed to worship her, covered her with kisses and tears, and, finding no resistance offered, sprang to my feet and clasped her in my arms.

"Clara Barrington, will you become Clara Ingleton?"

"In what excellent practice you are! We shall have you proposing to the entire family. You have begun bravely, first to the aunt and then to the niece within five minutes. Aunt has fled, as well she might, from the dangerous a creature. What would have become of her had I not rushed to the rescue, heaven only knows! I promise you I shall be dreadfully jealous of her and the superior personal advantages she enjoys."

"Oh, you have been playing a rare game with me."

"A fair one. I won your love fairly, and learned at the same time that there was right on your side as well as on mine; and I will be my own agent hereafter, and play a more even-handed game than the law."

"May I not praise you now?"

"No, but you may——"

"Do what——"

"Love me just as much as you please."

ARE YOU WAITING, GEORGE?

BY ANNIE J. TARRICE.

On yon distant, shining shore,
Where bright flowers bloom evermore,
Just across the "fearful river,"
Where the golden sunbeams quiver
Through the boughs of the fair tree,
Are you waiting there for me?

Are you waiting at the portal
Of the beauteous gate immortal?
Waiting for the love I've enter
'Round whom all your hopes did centre?
Where all things are pure and free,
Are you waiting, George, for me?

Are you kneeling at the throne,
Asking God, to bless your own?
Guide her through this starless night
To a purer, holier light?
Lead her by your hand so fair?
Are you waiting for me there?

Does the glory of your sphere,
All undimmed by sorrow's tear,
Chase earth's low-light from your view
Like the sun at noonday dew?
No, too near akin to heaven
Is the love to true hearts given.

Can the spirit in its change,
From this world to heaven's broad range,
Far forget the love it bore
For its kin on earthly shore?
No, it cannot, cannot be,
George is waiting there for me.

Oh, what hope the thought inspires!
Blasted all earth's fond desires,
I will turn my thoughts to heaven,
Where love grows not riven,
Ever wait, dear George, for me,
I am coming unto thee.

MEDUSA.

CHAPTER V.

EDWARD SAVILLE woke from his dream another man. It was not that he loved Wanda less, he loved her more; but a strong feeling of humanity, the most devouring compassion, had been awakened in his heart, and now colored the selfishness of his passion; he loved her in another way, and the manifestations of his love were consequently quite different to what they had been before. He sought to win Madame Haussmann with nearly the same assiduity as he had formerly courted Wanda, and at last his disinterested zeal disarmed her. In answer to his anxious inquiries on the subject, she told him that her eldest child, who had already had a consultation of eminent physicians upon Wanda's state in Prague; but that her opinion was that the case was a hopeless one. Mr. Saville found, however, that no advice had yet been taken for her in England, and he persuaded Madame Haussmann to allow him to bring the best men in London to visit her. But to no purpose; they considered her mental condition as incurable.

When first he became admitted familiarly into the house, Wanda used to be afraid of him. She would not sit down in the room with him, and never would speak while he was there; she fretted about much as a frightened bird does, and his presence seemed to agitate and make her restless. Luckily, one day, he remembered the adventure of the lines of the valley, and brought some fir trees to the house, keeping him continually, and always receiving from him the flowers she was fondest of, tamed her, and she became accustomed and attached to his company.

One morning, Edward found Madame Haussmann busily engaged in reading a letter from Germany; it was from Francie Haussmann, and gave her the account of two wonderful cures that had lately occurred at Heidelberg, he is to pass the winter at Naples, and will not return to Berlin before next spring."

"Poor Francis!" said his mother, "he is never tired of hoping, and in his patient devotion he forgets that all these useless journeys and great doctors cost a fortune of money that we cannot well afford to waste."

"Why don't you sell Wanda's trinkets, mother? Her fairy diamond coronet alone would pay for all the expenses of the journey," said Elizabeth; "she, poor thing, neither knows its value, nor their existence, and would gladly put a common gilt one in its place, and she would probably like it all the better, for being something new.

"Sell Wanda's trinkets!" cried Wanda; "those trinkets belonged to her poor mother, and as long as there is a penny left in the house, they shan't be sold."

"But, good God!" exclaimed Edward Saville, "why don't you make use of my wretched money? Or what could be the use of it, except at the hands of a mother? Whom does it profit? And why wait for Doctor Wrangel's return to Germany? Whatever doctors can do for her at present, should be done with as little delay as possible. Why not go at once and seek the doctor at Naples?"

The women were quite bewildered by this sudden proposition, and seemed to consider this long immediate journey to a foreign land as a project attended by almost insuperable difficulties; the more so, that it was impossible for William Haussmann to throw up his situation and go with them. But when Edward told them that of course he intended to accompany them, the thought of having him to manage and interpret for them smoothed away much of the difficulty; and he argued so long and so earnestly, that at last he argued successfully, and carried his point.

They got to Naples by the end of July, and upon inquiry found that Doctor Wrangel had left that town for Sorrento, where he had established himself for the summer; thither they followed him without loss of time.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Brande had gone on constantly writing to her cousin, and receiving answers that were but little satisfactory to her; she had an undefined apprehension that all was not going well with him, and at last determined upon coming to town for a month to look after him. As soon as she had settled this little plan with her husband, she wrote up to Edward to take a house for her, and was much surprised, after some days, at getting no answer; but she thought he had perhaps not yet found anything to suit, and that she should hear in a day or two, so she waited patiently. At the end of a week, however, she wrote again, and, still receiving no reply, sent off a line to a friend of his to inquire of his whereabouts. The friend informed her that Edward Saville was not in London. Judge of her astonisment when the post brought her the following letter from Italy:

Hotel de la Sirene, Sorrento.

Dear Harty—The date of this will surprise you. Don't be angry with me, dear. I was too well aware of your sisterly anxiety for me to confide to you a project which I felt sure could meet with but little sympathy or encouragement from you; and so, to avoid the pain which would have been caused to us both, by your unavailing efforts to prevent me from putting what you will consider my Quixotic plan into execution, I have been silent.

Harty, my sister, my dear friend, pity me! The woman to whom my life has been devoted for the last six months is insane, but not hopelessly so, I will trust. There is a famous man here at Sorrento, whom I have brought her to consult; we are to see him to-morrow, and I will let you know the result. Meanwhile, don't let your kind heart be troubled about me; remember how few interests there were in my disjointed homeless existence; even if this venture fails, I am sure you will agree with me, that my idleness and my money could not be better employed than in the service of a fellow-creature so grievously afflicted.

Yours ever affectionately, E. S.

Upon arriving at Sorrento, Edward Saville's first care had been to find out where Doctor Wrangel was domiciled. By a piece of great good luck, there was an apartment to let in the same house; he took it at once, and immediately established Wanda with the Hausmaims in it, remaining himself at the Hôtel de la Sirène, which was close by. Doctor Wrangel had an interview with Wanda the day after her arrival, but would give no opinion about her until he had seen more of her. She was very quiet, and seemed perfectly happy; her great delight was to sit the whole day long by the seaside, and in the evening they often went out in a boat; Wanda liked nothing so much. The monotony seemed to calm and soothe her, and the place altogether agreed well with her. Their boatmen on these excursions was a fisherman of the name of Benedetto; he had a wife and a child, for whom Wanda had conceived a violent affection.

One evening, soon after their arrival, on their return from one of these boating expeditions, they found Stella sitting on the shore playing with her child. When they landed, she got up to speak to Benedetto with the boy in her arms. He was a magnificent fellow, nearly two years old, and the whole party surrounded him, and began noticing and admiring him, to the great delight of the young mother. Madame Hausmaim and Elizabeth both offered to take him, but he would go to neither, and suddenly stretched out his arms to Wanda, who was still standing looking into the water, which seemed to have an eternal fascination for her, and not heeding him. Stella took him up to her, and put him into her arms; the weather was very warm, and she wore a low dress with a light shawl just thrown over her shoulders; in taking the child her shawl fell off, and the little fellow, whose mother had not yet weaned him, instantly pressed his tiny fat hands upon the fair uncovered breast, and, after patting it two or three times, put his little face down and kissed it. Some strange echo out of the past was suddenly awakened by the touch of those small fingers, and the poor thing fainted dead away. From that hour she was quite devoted to the little Aniello; she seemed unable to live out of his sight, and they passed whole days together playing on the shore, the kindhearted Stella never grudging her darling to the poor bereaved creature who had attached herself to him so passionately.

In about a fortnight after the receipt of the letter we have already mentioned, and which had thrown Mrs. Brande into a state of considerable anxiety, she received another epistle from her cousin, which caused her the deepest distress; it was as follows:

Dearest Harty—Doctor Wrangel has now seen my poor Wanda continually during a whole fortnight, and from his knowledge of her antecedents, and after the most patient and constant scrutiny, his opinion is that she might possibly recover if she were to marry and have children. It is the only chance, but it is one. Don't be frightened, dear. I am not married yet, and it is still quite uncertain if I ever shall be; at all events, I give you my word that I will do nothing precipitately, or without letting you know beforehand.

Yours ever affectionately, E. S.

Harty Brande carried this letter in floods of tears straight to her husband.

"William, is going to marry that mad woman; you must take me to Naples to-morrow," said she; and, though they did not go the next day, they did the next week, and the week after that saw them safely landed at Naples, from which place Mrs. Brande immediately dispatched a note to her cousin telling him of their arrival, and desiring him to be quite enchanted with this little surprise, and to show his delight by coming off early the next day to see them.

The first thing the next morning Edward Saville set out for Naples. On his way, he stopped at the Hausmaims' door, and saw Elizabeth.

"I shall be back by six o'clock at latest," he said, "so wait for me until then; but if by any impossible chance I should be delayed, don't balk Wanda of her boating. Isn't she up?"

"She is up," answered Elizabeth, laughing, "but not dressed yet. Yesterday, she saw you kiss the little gray stocking I work at, and we can't persuade her to put on her own this morning. When, after a thousand useless entreaties, I attempted to slip on the white one, she whisked it out of my hand so cleverly as she once did that nosegay of yours, and flung it right out of the window. I ran to pick it up, and when I came back again I found her trying hard to get her foot into my work in the midst of all the needles, and saying to herself all the time, 'Edward loves you, little stocking!'"

His color rose slightly.

"Do you believe that she really cares at all for me?" he asked.

"In her incomplete way she does," was the reply. "I am sure she will miss you more than once to-day, for instance; but she is so uncertain. I don't think she has what may be called a settled, dependable affection for anybody in the world except my mother and Stella's boy. She perfectly dotes upon Aniello; if anything were to happen to the child I think it would kill her. The doctor says that hers is the most remarkable and powerful development of maternal instinct that he has ever come across, and he is quite delighted at it; he declares that in things which concern the child he has already observed a decided reawakening of her intellect, and has desired that she may be with the boy as much as possible; he thinks it likely to have a very beneficial influence upon her mind."

"I am sorry not see her," said Edward; "I had thought just to bid her good-bye."

"And so you shall. Wait a minute, and she shall bid you good-bye out of the window."

She ran upstairs, and presently Wanda's fair head appeared at the casement.

"Say good-bye to him, dear, prettily, he is going away," said Elizabeth, who was just over her shoulder.

"Good-bye, dear Edward. Don't go away, dear Edward!" said Wanda.

"I shall be with you again before six," said Edward Saville from below. "Good-bye, my darling!"

"Good-bye, my darling! good-bye, my darling!" she repeated, in her child's voice.

As she leaned out to look at him, a full-blown rose that was in her bosom, bruised against the window-frame, fell in a shower of fresh leaves upon his face.

It had been a cloudless day, and was a heavenly evening. Towards half-past six o'clock a fresh breeze had sprung up, and Benedetto's boat might be seen dancing along upon the crisp sparkling wavelets. Edward Saville had not come back, and Stella, Wanda and the boy put out to sea, to enjoy the delicious change in the weather. Elizabeth Hausmaim declined accompanying them; she was always ill unless it was a dead calm, so they left her sitting on the shore under the shadow of a great rock, knitting away indefatigably at the gray stocking. Wanda had been fidgety and restless the whole day; they did not know if she missed Edward Saville, but something seemed wanting to her. When she got into the boat, she said "Good-bye, good-bye," once or twice to herself, and looked disturbed; to quiet and amuse her, Stella put the child into her arms, and she began her usual game of trying to hush him to sleep. "Lullaby, my little son!" she sang to him, and nestled him in her bosom, but the boy was full of life and spirits, and would not be put to sleep at any price. He got at her comb, and, pulling it out, let all her long hair loose. It was pretty to see them romping, and kissing, and struggling together, this dark, rosy Hercules of a boy and the gentle pale lady with all her fair hair streaming. Stella was trying in vain to imprison the little hands, which were making desperate clutches at Wanda's hair, while Benedetto lay on his oars and laughed to see them; and the boat danced gaily over the short wavelets that had become crimson under the crimsoning sky, and Capri loomed in the distance like an island of Paradise in the glory of that evening sunlight. Presently, Wanda lowered her hand into the water and sprinkled the boy to make him leave go; his mother held him by his frock, as, with a shout of delight, he hung over the side of the boat, and dipping his little, round, firm, brown arm into the sea, dashed a handful of sparkling water up into Wanda's face; it soon became a pitched battle. The little fellow was in a state of frantic excitement, laughing, shrieking, and splashing them all, when suddenly he made a violent, unexpected spring, the frock slipped from between his mother's fingers, and he fell into the water. Uttering one wild sharp cry, Wanda plunged in after him.

"My child! my child! Oh, holy mother of mercy, save my child!" screamed the agonised mother.

Benedetto made at once for the floating body, seized it just as it was sinking for the second time, and swam safely back with it to the boat.

The sun had gone down, when a dusty carriage drove up to the door of the Sirena, and a lady jumped out assisted by Edward Saville.

"How lovely it has been," said a pleasant-toned English voice, and how sorry I am William couldn't come. Just run in, Edward dear, will you, and arrange with the man for me; a bed-room and a small sitting-room is all I shall want, and I'll wait down here till you come back. I positively must see her to-night."

See her!

As Harty Brande stood looking up the street, a woman came wildly running past her, weeping bitterly, and followed by two or three half-naked urchins; some way further on, under the deep orange and purple of that solemn southern twilight, a crowd of people were hurrying along, vociferating loudly, with excited gestures, and pale, awe-struck faces.

"Ah, povera signorina! Ah Madonna mia! Che disgrazia!" cried the women.

Mrs. Brande saw that something dreadful must have happened; but she did not understand Italian, and waited impatiently for her cousin to come out to her. Suddenly, from the midst of the shuffling, irregular footsteps of the rabble, the rhythmical tramp of men walking in step together could be distinguished. She pressed forward—in the centre of the crowd, stretched on a litter borne by four men, lay a slender woman's body; the face was covered with a handkerchief, the body was swathed in long masses of dripping fair hair. One of the two men who passed nearest to her, bearing this sad burden, was a tall, brawny fisherman, who had evidently just come out of the water, and who was sobbing as if his heart would break. Hurrying after him came a little scared mother, holding a rosy boy pressed tight against her breast, from whose short, coal-black hair, soaked into points, large bright drops of water kept falling.

When, after saving his child, Benedetto had had time to think of Wanda, it was too late—life was extinct.

One evening, when Edward Saville was a little better, his cousin had his sofa wheeled out on the terrace overlooking the sea. He was still very weak, but all danger was over; he had now only to get strength, and as soon as he had managed this, they had all settled to go on to Malta and pay his sister a visit.

Mr. Brande was busy over his Galignani, Harty had got her sketchbook, and Edward was looking out upon that cloudless sky and waveless sea, and thinking of the strange storm that had passed over his life. The Hausmaims had gone back to Germany, the sea that had robbed him of his beloved was lying without a ripple at his feet—it was all gone like a dream. Waking up from the dead blank of his bed of sickness, he might almost have thought it one, but for two or three withered rose-leaves which hung in a tiny black case round his neck.

Harty saw where his thoughts were wandering, and brought her sketch for him to look at: he took it, and laid it down listlessly beside him.

"You must positively be shaved to-morrow, Edward," she said to him; "I think I have acquitted myself wonderfully in the arrangement of your hair" (she had washed his face and combed his hair for him, herself, before he had come out), "but shaving is more than I feel competent to undertake. There," she continued, unfastening a looking-glass from the lid of her workbox, and giving it to him, "what do you think you look like?"

He took the glass, and looked at himself in it.

"Almost like a man with a story," he said, with a sad smile, as he gave it back to her. "Harty, did it every occur to you that if I had not chanced to misread a word of four letters in one of your notes, none of this would have happened?"

From Malta they went on to Egypt, carrying with them young Mrs. Monckton, Edward Saville's sister: she was a true-hearted, affectionate little woman, and was very good for him to have her about him. By degrees his wounds healed, and life closed over his great grief as the waters had closed over the body of his beloved, covering the ruin with an untroubled surface. He is not perhaps so happy as Mrs. Brande—but few people are. On the whole, I dare say he is as contented as most of us.

THE END.

NAVAL ARCHITECTURE & NAVAL WARFARE—PAST AND PRESENT.

The progress that has been made in marine architecture, and in the method of conducting naval warfare, has enabled us, at last, to produce war vessels of peculiar strength and symmetry, and largely to economise in the use of human life. But sea-fighting is no longer the romantic business that it used to be. Cooped up in iron chambers, Jack has no longer the opportunity that he used to have for the display of gallantry in action. Yet our brave captains and sailors, in even this age of iron armor, have found means to show themselves worthy to rank with the old kings of the sea. Our Worden and Farragut and Foote and Cushing Porter and Dahlgren will be remembered with the naval heroes of history. Nor will it be forgotten that, whether fighting within wooden walls or walls of iron, the American sailor has always acquitted himself with honor to the service and to the Republic.

Our double page, this week, not only commemorates several of the most important naval exploits of the war, but illustrates with the aptness and strength of vivid contrast the difference between ancient and modern styles of naval architecture and warfare. Grouped around a central picture, in which is depicted that old style of sea-fighting, in which Nelson and Collingwood and Hull and Decatur, and other brave captains, won their fadeless laurels, appear ten smaller sketches, representing modern inventions and incidents of our war, which cannot fail to please and instruct the careful student.

The first of these lesser pictures recalls the attacks that were long ago made on Fort Moultrie, by the U. S. ironclad frigate, the New Ironsides. The fort is a relic of the Revolution of 1776, and was named after the gallant Gen. Moultrie, who fought for liberty, in that illustrious contest. Its evacuation, by Major, now General Anderson, when he removed his command to Fort Sumter, will be recalled by every reader. It proved troublesome, when Gilmore was attacking the defences of Charleston, and so the New Ironsides was deputed to silence it, which she did, after several severe conflicts. This vessel is built of wood, but iron plated on the sides, and, at the ends is protected by iron bulkheads. It is a remarkable and agreeable fact that no man was ever killed on board of her.

The second sketch depicts our wooden fleet, passing the forts in Mobile Bay. This was one of the achievements of stout old Admiral Farragut, who has demonstrated that wooden ships are still mighty, if guided and governed by an iron mind. His attack on the forts in Mobile bay, it will be remembered, was made August last, on the 23d of which month Fort Mor surrendered. He had previously, in the same fearless manner, led his wooden fleet past the forts below New Orleans, and the batteries before Port Hudson. Another of this series, the seventh, represents the attack made by his flagship, the Hartford, and her coadjutors, upon the rebel iron-clad Tennessee, in Mobile Bay. There was something comic as well as daring in this unprecedented victory of wood over iron. The Tennessee was one of the strongest rams in the rebel fleet, but she was on this occasion surrounded by wooden vessels, and so butted, first by one foe and then by another, that she could not hold a direct course towards anything—in which plight she was sorely battered by the Admiral's guns, and at last conquered.

Sketch No. 3 shows the style of mortar boats, used more extensively in the earlier part of the war than at present, to aid in reducing rebel batteries on the Western rivers. These mortar boats are large wooden rafts, the gunners on board which are protected by suitable walls of defance. They were, we remember, used with especial effect in the bombardment of Island No. 10.

Several other styles of Western war vessels are represented in the 4th sketch, which preserves the most popular models of Western ironclads, and shows how these "dogs of war" are "let slip" in combat. Such vessels are technically described as case-mated river gunboats.

In the early part of the war, or when the iron fever began to rage in naval architicture, two steamers, the Queen of the West and the Monarch, were straightway converted into rams, and were so handled, before Memphis, as to win great advantages to the Union cause. Our 5th illustration represents one of these improvised rams attacking rebel gunboats in the Mississippi river, off Memphis, Tenn. The rebel gunboats had advanced to protect that city, and were immediately attacked and beaten back by the U. S. fleet, under Admiral Foote. Our force subsequently occupied Memphis. This victory was one of many similar incidents which marked the victorious progress of our naval forces down the Mississippi, to meet and co-operate with Farragut.

A different and a sadder incident is commemorated in the next picture, which shows the fate of the U. S. frigate Cumberland and other vessels, which were destroyed in Hampton Roads, on March 8, 1862, by the rebel ram Merrimac, which came out from Norfolk to do her work of ruin, but which, when penned up at last, and liable to capture, was destroyed by her rebel owners. The victories achieved by this ironclad first demonstrated the superiority of iron over wooden walls.

The torpedo boat, depicted in sketch No. 8, is, we believe, a rebel invention, and is designed, not only for launching torpedoes, but for removing obstructions from channels. The practical working of the torpedo boat is illustrated in our 10th sketch, which shows the destruction of the Housatonic by a rebel torpedo. The incident is a memorable one in the history of the war. The Housatonic was employed on the blockade of Charleston, and occupied an inside position. Under cover of the darkness, three corageous rebels put forth in a little torpedo boat, and succeeded in launching a torpedo beneath her, which blew up and destroyed her. Two of the adventurers made their escape, and were duly fêted by their comrades in Charleston. The other was captured. Our readers will recognise, in this exploit a similarity to the recent daring achievement of Lieut. Cushing in blowing up the Albemarle.

A particularly interesting sketch, which points the contrast between the old and new styles of naval warfare, is that numbered 9, representing the combat between the U. S. monitor Weehawken and the rebel ram Atlanta, which took place, nearly two years ago, in the waters of Georgia. The Atlanta had sailed out, accompanied by two steamboat loads of ladies and gentlemen of the rebel persuasion, to witness the discomfiture of the Yankees. She was met by the Weehawken and another monitor, and so speedily disabled by the former that the latter had not time to join in the fray. The spectators carried back the news of her surrender to the rebels.

The completeness and accuracy of this series of illustrations will be recognised at once by the critical observer, who will herein be enabled to appreciate, at a glance, the condition, peculiarities and efficacy of the most perfect navy in the world.

LAUNCH OF THE U. S. MONITOR CAMANCHE.

We present, on page 245, a sketch of the launch of this vessel, the first ironclad, we believe, ever launched in the waters of the Pacific. It is possible, indeed, that Peru may have set afloat a gunboat; but we incline to the belief that California is first in the field—of ocean. The Camanche was launched on the 14th November, at the foot of 3d street, in San Francisco. An immense concourse of spectators, on the adjacent wharves, and on board yachts and other vessels in the stream, witnessed the exciting spectacle. Bands of music were, as usual, in attendance, and altogether the occasion was one of agreeable festivity. The Camanche was built at San Francisco, of materials shipped thither, in the Aquila, from Jersey City, which vessel sunk in the harbor of the Golden City, in a heavy gale of wind. The pieces of the Camanche, however, were, of course, recovered, and she now floats in stately beauty over what was once her watery grave.

A Wise Woman, and Timely Repentance.—In the life of Dr. Raffles, just published, the following story was told in connection with a preaching journey in 1814. On our way from Wem to Hawkestone we passed a house, of which Mr. Lee told me the following story:

"A young lady, the daughter of the owner of the house, was addressed by a man, who, though agreeable to her, was disliked by her father. Of course he would not consent to their union, and they determined to elope. The night was fixed, the hour came; he placed the ladder to the window, and in a few minutes she was in his arms. They mounted a double horse, and were seen at some distance from the house. After a while the lady broke silence by saying:

"Well, you see what a proof I have given you of my affection; I hope you will make a good husband."

He was a surly fellow, and gruffly answered:

"Perhaps I may, and perhaps not."

She made him no reply, but, after a silence of several minutes, she suddenly exclaimed:

"Oh, what shall we do? I have left my money behind me in my room."

"Then," said he, "we must go back and fetch it."

They were soon again at the house, the ladder was again placed, the lady remounted, while the ill-natured lover waited below. But she delayed to come, and so he gently called:

"Are you coming?" when she looked out of the window and said:

"Perhaps I may, and perhaps not;" then shut down the window, and left him to return upon the double horse alone.

In allusion to the appointment of Hon. James Speed, of Kentucky, to succeed Attorney-General Bates, an exchange asks if Speed in the cabinet will hasten the termination of the war.

1. New Ironsides attacking Fort Moultrie. 2. Wooden Fleet passing Forts at Mobile. 3. Mortar Boats. 4. Western River Ironclads. 5. Improvised Ram, made of a Western Steamboat. 6. The Merrimac Sinking the Cumberland, off Newport News. 7. The U. S. Hartford fighting the Rebel Ram Tennessee, at Mobile, Ala. 8. Torpedo Boat removing Obstructions. 9. Fight between U. S. Monitor Weehawken and Rebel Ram Atlanta, off Savannah. 10. Rebel Torpedo Boat blowing up U. S. Sloop-of-war Housatonic. 11. Old style of naval warfare. Wooden ships in action—yard-arm to yard-arm. Boarding.

NAVAL ARCHITECTURE AND NAVAL WARFARE, PAST AND PRESENT.—By F. H. SCHELL.

ON TRANSLATING THE DIVINA COMMEDIA.

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.

GET have I seen, at some cathedral-door,
A laborer, pausing in the dust and heat,
Lay down his burden, and with reverent feet
Enter, and cross himself, and on the floor
Kneel to repeat his prayer nor more nor less;
Far off the noise of the world without;
The loud vociferations of the street
Become an undistinguishable roar.
So, as I entered here from the profane day,
And leave my burden at this minster-gate,
Kneeling in prayer, and not ashamed to pray,
The turmoil of life dies dim and remote
To inarticulate murmurs dies away,
While the eternal ages watch and wait.

Atlantic Monthly.

THE PAINTED ROOM AT BLACKSTON MANOR.

IT was four years ago, during the Christmas of 1859, that I received my nephew's invitation to pass a month with him at Blackston Manor. Blackston Manor is in Gloucestershire; and the old house and he old estate had been long the property of my nephew's family. I was at Brighton when my nephew's note, enclosed in a much longer letter from his wife, Mrs. Berkeley, reached me; and I long hesitated as to what answer I should make. I had not long returned from a sojourn of two years on the continent, and I enjoyed the quiet comforts of my own house at Kemp Town too much to be very desirous to leave it. However, I felt a sincere affection for Arthur Berkeley, who had once been a fine high-spirited boy, and the torment of my existence, and he was, after all, my nearest living relation. Allie Chilworth, my own stock, were dead and gone, leaving me a lonely old maid—rich, but solitary. The nephew of whom I was now to pay a visit was a married man, and it was no secret that I had made my will in favor of his two daughters, my godchildren, Lucy and Jane, my own name losing the carriage of the estate nearer to my kin, and conveyed myself, my maid and my trunks to the Manor, which lies about eight miles off among the hills.

It was Christmas Eve—as well as I can recollect, about an hour before dinner—that I arrived at my nephew's home. I was pretty enough received; but it was an unpleasant surprise to find that the house was very full of company, that my room—the one in which we always spoken of as Aunt Chilworth's room—was occupied, and that the greatest perplexity prevailed as to where and how I should be lodged.

"It was all that unlucky letter of yours that went astray, which misled us, aunt," said my nephew, laughing. "The post office authorities or little was now-a-days, that I am certain they thought your big seal, with the Chilworth quarterings, covered something worth the taking. At any rate, we feared you had thrown us over; and it was lucky that, when your note arrived to-day, I chanced to be here to send off the carriage to meet you. All the rest were out, not returned yet from the dancing déjeuner, as they choose to call it, at Lord Hawkhurst's; and in fact, they have not been back above half an hour or so."

On her side, Mrs. Berkeley seemed really distressed at the contretemps that had occurred. "Dear Miss Chilworth," she said, as she pressed me down into the warmest seat by the fire, "how sorry I am, to be sure, that we should not have had your letter. What can he done? The Padmores have got your room; and old Lady Padmore is so dreadfully fidgety and chimney, and the room has a south aspect, and how to get her out of it now—G Lucy, do come to the rescue!"

And Maria called her eldest daughter, who is the cleverer of the two, and who was passing by that moment, to the help I had long since formulated conference, of which only one or two broken expressions reached me.

"The vinaigrette downstairs, too."—"Never heard of it."—"The very person of all others."—"The only thing I can think of."—"North-west; I can see the smoke from the keeper's house where I stand."

All these scraps of speech were uttered by my great niece and godchild, Lucy Berkeley, who was evidently urging something that her mother seemed to entertain with considerable repugnance. Presently Lucy, who was getting impatient, as I could tell by the quick tapping of her pretty foot on the floor, spoke again.

"Northwest, and on Tuesday the Padmores go, and you could move her. And for my part, I believe it's all a pack of nonsense; and there's the first dressing-bell."

And off went the active girl like a fawn. Mrs. Berkeley came back to me, and with a profusion of civil speeches and smiling regrets, rather awkwardly delivered, told me that she had thought of a room which I would, perhaps, kindly consent to occupy until Sir Joseph and Lady Padmore should depart. This room was a large and not uncomfortable one, but it lay in an out-of-the-way part of the house, and was not often used. It had a northerly aspect, but luckily the weather was warm for the time of year. Gray—that was the housekeeper—would be most careful that every article of bedding should be well aired, and so forth. In the midst of which excuses, Maria conducted me to the apartment of which she spoke. A housemaid running quickly up to light the fire, and my maid Jessop following.

The room was in the west wing, the oldest portion of the manor-house, and that which was surmounted by the clock turret. It was shut off by a great iron door from the rest of the house, so that I doubt if I had ever explored it. It contained only storerooms, and linen presses, and limestone, and had been boldly modernized as the new proposed that I should occupy. A large and handsome room, after all, with three deep, old-fashioned bay-windows, looking out over the park and the wild hills beyond. I was pleased with the appearance of the room, and could scarcely comprehend the necessity for the annoyance which we had been made for pleasing me in quarters so comfortable. It faced the north to be sure, but I was no consumptive lady, to dread a few northern exposure, and there was no other drawback that I could perceive.

"I ought to say—to mention," said my nephew's wife, speaking in a low voice and in a hesitating manner, "that—that the room has rarely been occupied since—since—that it has got a silly prejudice against it. But if you do not object"—

"Of course not," said I decisively. By this time the fire, piled with logs of wood, gave forth a great wood fire, with brass and irons terminating in heads of ovenes, the Berkeley crest; and Jessop had unpacked my dressing-case and the room I had chosen. Jessop knew my ways, and was well aware that I should stay where I was. I am one of those who hate change of countenance, and more than once it has been my fortune to occupy some room which the owners of the house considered as haunted, and which I was also like, nor had my slumbers ever been in the least disturbed in consequence of my temerity. Those apartments had been large, gloomy, cadaverous chambers, with huge fourpost beds, enclosed by a mass of funereal draperies, and heavy, gloomy furniture, suggestive of nothing but death. This was a pretty room, panelled with a shining foreign wood of a light color, and with a ceiling on which some allegory in fat Cupids and clouds was dimmed by time, had been painted. On the walls were two or three Venice mirrors, that would have fetched a high price at a London auction; and several family portraits, very carefully executed in the style of Loly, and perhaps by one of that courtly artist's own pupils. The bed was very roomy, and high off the floor, and rose so low, being rather small, claw-footed, and made of ebony, carved with much patience and toil; while the curtains were of a rich, dull, crimson silk, elaborately embroidered with embossed flowers and scroll-work in silk of many hues.

"What a pretty room!" I could not help saying; "and indeed the whole of the furniture shows marks of Parisian taste in the Louis XIV. style. But I wonder why it is that I have been about to be misled; and here is some gold-leaf still untarnished on the tester of the bed. I am certain this room was fitted for a lady, and for the same bride of former days. It bears the stamp of a lady's taste."

To my surprise, my harmless remark only seemed to increase Maria's nervousness.

"I believe so; I believe it was as you say," she answered, absently. "How can we think about lady Padmore! But it is only for a few nights. Here come the men with your luggage, and Jessop will not wait—and—and—Dear me, there is the second dinner-bell!"

Mrs. Berkeley really seemed glad of the excuse for getting away. She left me to my own reflections, and has been long in my service, and therefore knows that I do not approve of being entertained with the idle gossip and reports from the still-room and servants-hall. It is not often that I encourage her to talk; but on this occasion, as she was laying out my dress, and I sat before the dressing-me for dinner, I could see by her compressed lips that she was eager to communicate something, and that only my presence could leave. Just as I drew on my gloves, I happened to say:

"By-the-bye, Jessop, where are you to sleep? Near me?"

"Heaven forbid!" burst from the woman's lips (Jessop's against me, well, I am sure; but she begged my pardon most humbly the instant after; and as the dinner-bell was now clanging noisily on the third floor, I took no further notice of her singular remark, and hurried downstairs, where already most of the company had gathered in the great drawing-room of Blackston Manor, very brilliant of guests, and very different people they were to the steady old family friends whom I had left there on my visit to Brighton.

The Padmores, and one or two of the old set, came forward to greet me; but most of the visitors were perfect strangers—county families, clergians, London dandies, women of fashion, and high-spirited lively girls, whose very talk and laughter made quite a change in the rather dull old house.

It was a gay party indeed that my nephew had gathered about him; and the last Christmas that he had been to London for the last season, and to dorman balls and English bathing-places for his numerous circle of friends, and a number of fashionable friends, some of whom, with young Arthur's brother-officers, had consented to come down and celebrate Christmas.

For my part, I preferred old fashions and well-remembered faces, and I felt myself rather bewildered when suddenly launched into the midst of this frolicsome company. Arthur was attentive to his old aunt, and tried to make her feel at ease; but I could see that he was warned me of the change that had come over the old manor-house.

"You see, aunt Lucy," said Arthur to me, when he came into the drawing-room after dinner, and walked up to the little table where I was turning over the pages of an album, "you see, last time you were down here, the girls—Lucy and Jane—were children, and Arthur had not put on scarlet; but now we're bound to see more company, and knock about the world more. I'm the children's sake, than we did. Maria and I would never have cared for all those new dances, you know, but for them."

It could not help smiling as I told Arthur that in my opinion he enjoyed the merry-making quite as much as his son and daughters. My heart softened towards him as I remembered his bright and joyful face when I used to tease me, and how he came to me whenever my mood occurred, or was in a scrape, with, "Oh, aunt Lucy, do help me!" I loved him as my own baby sister's only child—very dearly; and his children should have had all I have to leave, but for what I am going to relate.

There were to be amateur theatricals, the next week, in the great library—a fine room that Arthur had built—and Lucy, the elder, had added to the house, and which was now in the possession of sundry carpenters and a few stage-manager from London. And on this particular evening, Christmas-eve, a "dress rehearsal," as they were pleased to call it, was to take place. Of these theatricals I had heard something from the actors retired to dress for the rehearsal. It was late before the rehearsal took place, and when it was over I was glad to go to bed.

The bedroom—the Painted Room they called it, on account of its ceiling—looked still prettier and more habitable than before, with a good fire of wood fire, and the gleam of the wax lights on dressing-table and chimney-piece. It was a relief to me to have escaped the Babel of chattering tongues below; from compliments to my niece Lucy on her performance, or to Jane on her dashing Spanish dress, and the flirtations going on, and, above all, from hearing half-a-dozen young ladies simperingly praise Captain Spurrier's capital acting. Upon the latter point I could not agree. I believe—was my aversion; a big, bold man, with a handsome ruby face, and no small opinion of himself. Jessop, by the by, had remarked, and said to be in league to spoil the captain, and to make him vaster in the way, by commending his riding, which displeased me, and was out of place. He was the star of the amateur stage at Blackston Manor; his acting was rewarded by rears of laughter and applause, and I had a fancy that he was not peculiarly attentive to my eldest niece, Lucy, who was the best of the lady performers, as he of the gentlemen. I had not been long downstairs before an instinctive dislike to that sort of man, whose free-and-easy manners contrast so forcibly with the shy and retiring gentleness of which I had led the fashion in my young days, or it may have been because I rather fancied the person in question was paying court to my favorite niece, but in any case I felt how disagreeable it would be to me if Lucy were to become Mrs. Spurrier.

I had placed the lamp at the side of this, and of much more, for although I had been one of the first to retire from the gay scene downstairs, I was not sorry for the party to go to bed. I am long in a great armchair, dressed in my night-cap, with its thick logs, glowing red and white, the fire at about one, its heaps of crimson embers, its dark rose of bitter coal, which the tongues of flame coiled like subtle serpents, and the fanshey hearthrug of white ashes that encircled all. My reflections made the most delightful kind of gold, and as the glare rose and fell, the wyverns' heads actually seemed to be alive.

My fancy was pleased to wander off to the odd behavior of Jessop, my maid. I had said nothing particular to her while she was brushing out my hair, and had left her, as usual, after I had had a good-night to those below. Nor had she—Jessop —volunteered any explanation of her very singular and impertinent remark, and never before, during when I had asked her if she was to sleep near me; but she had a contrite air, and was unusually attentive to my wishes, and to make amends for what had occurred. Nor did I demand the motive of her remark. I am not a hard mistress, though I am particular, and I expect obedience; and as Jessop was a good servant, and had carried my good opinion, so I preferred to pass over a little slip of the tongue than to scold her. But though Jessop was as mute as woman could be, I once or twice caught sight of her face in the mirror when she was not aware that I saw her, and was almost startled at the curious pitying looks with which she was eyeing me by stealth. As soon, however, as she perceived that the reflection of my eyes, all her pression faded out of her face, and she went about her duties with the silent regularity of an automaton. When my hair was done, Jessop hovered about the door, fidgeting in an odd way, and apparently anxious to speak, but not venturing to do so unless asked, in a subdued and modest manner, if that was all I wanted, her voice was broken and tremulous, and she lingered in an unusual way. I told her that I had no wish, and her slope go slowly, reluctantly, dragging along the passage, and then I heard the soft closing of the green baize door that shut off the west wing. Not another living creature slept there but myself.

Now, I am not a coward, though no braver than most women are. I have been one of those most timid women who are frightened, so to speak, at their own shadows, and I required to be face to face with a living danger before I could summon faith in its existence; and yet I confess, that when Jessop left me alone in that room, a sick fear of something unknown, before I could see or me, like the contact of some noisome reptile, and I half rose from my chair, and was on the point of calling for Jessop to come back. But shame restrained me. I was angry with my own weakness for being thus afraid, when no cause for fear had as yet existed. I would rather have had that than a sense of shrinking, a craving and need for human companionship, which I had never before felt so strongly, coupled with a repugnance to the Painted Room, such as I had never experienced towards any other chamber, however mean or incommodious. I was ashamed to call out, and vexed with myself for wishing to do so, and yet I listened regretfully to the sound of my maid's footfall as she passed down the short corridor, and started afresh as the heavy baize door shut with a muffled sound, cutting me off from the world, as it seemed.

What, after all, was amiss with the room? It was a pretty room, as I had said when first I saw it. It was warm, and there was wood enough within reach of my hand to keep the fire up almost until breakfast-time. The bed was certainly not damp; it had been most carefully aired under the personal supervision of the painstaking old housekeeper. And as for the solitary situation, what, after all, mattered it? I was but stranded beneath the same roof with sixty or seventy persons. I had but to ring the bell, either that at the bedhead, or one of those beside the fireplace, and some servant would quickly answer the summons. I was no worse off in the west wing of Blackston Manor, than at home at Brighton, as far as security went.

Then I picked up a candle, and made a fresh survey of the apartment. What elaborate work, in some forgotten stitch, the dainty embossed leaves and flowers of the hrocaded curtains presented! I pitied the eyes and fingers of the unfortunate lady who had wrought them, whose eyes, over which the lids were closed long ago—supple fingers, that had moulded to dust generations since. And as I held the candle to the pretty spoiled child of a bride, whatever were her name, or the date of her wedding, for whom this costly bower had been prepared, I heard a low moaning. I wondered, or had also lived to be old, and gray, and wrinkled, like myself; and I glanced aside at the mirror, and was at once struck by the ghost of my own young face; and I sighed again, and continued my inspection of the room. The pictures, I knew, were by Loly, and represented, as I had guessed dim like the sprawling allegory on the ceiling, but were fresh and distinct. One was the portrait of a young and handsome woman of eight or nine years of age, with a kitten in her arms; two represented handsome young women in white satin dresses, and with powdered heads. Was one of them the bride? I wonder. In any case, they were much alike, save in the color of the hair; and both in the full bare dress of the carmine lips, the peachy cheeks, the ringlets, the soft, soulless prettiness that pleased the taste of the ladies Elizabeth Priscilla, I could see much smaller picture, but one which I gazed upon with an interest that surprised myself.

It was a boy painting; what the French call a "pastel," set in an oval frame. I expressed a boy, a mere stripling, with a graceful face shadow of a fair, young beard, a Spanish hat, and a Spanish face, one would have said, to match, with its peculiar expression of pride and power; but the rest of the dress was English, the plain dress and gabled roof in the background were English too. It was, as I have said, a boy's likeness, and so the form was less developed, the arms of the hand less marked than would have been the case in after life; but there was plenty of individuality about it. The swarthy cheek, the dark eyes, the full lips, the proud and haughty curves of the mouth, told their own tale of strong passions and stern nature. So my surprise, this portrait seemed to be familiar to me. It was a face that I had never seen it before, and yet I knew the face, though not as one seems to know and recognize the countenance of a friend. After a thought and thought, cudgelling my brains with a pertinacity such as we more often display in trifles than in those of real moment, I at last remembered that the portrait resembled another and much larger picture, that hung in the yellow drawing-room at Kemp Town, and which I had frequently seen in my poor sister's lifetime, and more rarely during my subsequent visits. That, too, was a family portrait, and I had never known to which of the dead Berkeleys it belonged; and it represented a handsome, melancholy-looking boy, who had brought up as the ward of King Charles's or King James's lifeguards. It was just such a face as would have been that of the boy painted in the smaller picture. It was a skilful artist had limned it in a more conventional style. And once I had heard my brother-in-law Berkeley speak of the portrait of some old cavalier had once been high-sheriff of Gloucestershire, it seemed—but that was all I knew about the matter.

Why the identification of the stripling, whose likeness hung on my wall, with the remote ancestor of the Berkeleys, whose portrait hovered from the canvas below stairs, should have discomposed my unsteady nerves still more, I cannot tell. But I was so. I had a strange emotional process, connecting my strange dislike to the Painted Room with the smouldering coal picture. I had a fancy that I should follow my nerves, and, as the phrase is, "get out of myself," and if I could do so, the ghost of a good portrait are apt to do, and they appeared to convey a more than human expression of scorn and malignity to the large, dark face. Half angry with myself, I averted my own eyes, and tried to turn my thoughts into some other channel. I stepped from the fire, opened a trunk, took out my desk and a book; drew forth from the desk several letters, as yet unanswered, and, having dipped the pen in the ink to supersue and answer this budget of correspondence. An hour or two passed thus, but my efforts were not very successful. It is true that I succeeded in guiding my thoughts to scenes far, far away from the Manor-house, but of what I would, read or write, my meditations soon returned to the Painted Room. Why did I loathe it? as I now owned to myself that I did. And why had my first impression of entering the room been pleasurable, changing into vague dread and dislike when Jessop left me? At last the idea flashed upon me, that it was when I was first left alone in the Painted Room, without human companionship, that the repugnance which I felt had fallen upon me like a shadow.

Alone! Was I a child, to shun solitude? I had never before felt what I felt then. The scratching of my pen on the paper, the ticking of my watch and that of the French clock on the chimneypiece annoyed me. The stillness and hush of the dead, deep night, at the hours when sleepers slumber the soundest, were upon Blackston Manor, and there was nothing to be heard but the low sobbing moan of the wind without, the rustle of the pages which I kept turning and folding, the tick of the timepiece, and the feeble crackling of the waning fire. I looked up often from my writing in a nervous, sudden manner; now peering at the mirror, as if I expected to see a ghastly face reflected in its blank surface; now glancing over my shoulder into dark corners, where the curtains fell in heavy folds. Always I looked reluctantly at the portrait, and always the menacing eyes seemed to watch me. I got up at last, and turned the picture round, face to the wall, and then I retired to rest, first locking my door, then—I am almost ashamed to own it—going round the room, tapping every square foot of wainscot for secret doors and sliding panels, and doing my best to discover if any means of ingress existed, unknown to me. But I found nothing; the old woodwork appeared guiltless of harboring any private device of the kind I half feared, half hoped to discover.

As I had expected, sleep did not come at once. I lay long, as it seemed to me, listening to the faint sound of the cooling embers, as they faded from scarlet to pink, from pink to yellow, and then fell tinkling into heaps of white ashes. As the firelight diminished to a mere flicker of pale radiance, I remember twice glancing at the tall Venice mirror, as if I more than expected to see on its black surface the reflection of the nameless fear that lay heavy on my heart. But I saw nothing. Presently sleep came, a light, perturbed sleep, full of uneasy, broken dreams, from which I awoke suddenly, and with a cry, or a struggling, gasping effort to cry aloud, such as we are all sometimes conscious of when suffering in the helpless torture of dream existence. I awoke—awoke to find the the fire, that had smouldered to the lowest pitch before I slept, burning brightly, so brightly as to fill the whole chamber with a blood-red light, that crimsoned the walls, and made the portraits quiver and stir, in appearance, as if the pictured forms were about to come down from the canvas and tread the floor, as the originals had done, centuries ago.

But it was not the firelight, ruddy and leaping, that made my heart bound up like some terrified thing in presence of a pitiless foe, and then stop its beating for an instant; it was that, as I looked out between the curtains that nearly closed at the foot of the bed, I saw a dark form between me and the blazing logs, seated before the hearth, watching the fire. The figure of a tall and powerful man, muffled, rather than wrapped, in something ample and dark, but bareheaded, and sitting in an attitude of moody carelessness, with his head resting on his hand, and his elbow on his knee, his face towards the fire; that was all I could see. No statue was ever stiller. He did not move in the least, but sat more like an effigy of a man carved out of stone than a creature of flesh and blood. And yet there was something in this immobility that alarmed me more than tongue could tell, for I felt that the Presence before me was the embodiment of the fear and hate which I felt towards the room in which such a midnight visitant appeared.

Gradually I rallied my courage and faculties, and with a silent prayer to heaven, in case the form before me should really belong to the powers of evil, I gazed long and steadily at the intruder. I closed my eyes, and reopened them, to test the fact whether I were still asleep or not. No, I was broad awake, and the room was bathed in lurid light, and there sat the creature, fiend or man, or shadow of what was once a man, before the fire. All I could see was the oak-backed chair, the loose blackness of the muffling garment, the outline of the figure, the head stooped forward and resting on one hand, in the attitude I have described before. How I trembled as I glanced at the Venice mirror, fancying that in it the averted face of the intruder might be visible. It was not so; and I could see nothing on the dark smoothness of the glass but a glow as of a carbuncle, where the firelight fell upon it. I should think an hour must have passed thus.

What my crowded hurrying thoughts and sensations were during that hour, I scarcely care to remember. Strange to say, I never for an instant apprehended personal harm from the swart, shadowy figure between me and the blazing fire. I felt sure that to inflict actual bodily injury upon a human being would be beyond the power of the most malignant thing that ever haunted human dwelling. But I dreaded the moment when the Figure should turn and show me features—who knew how terrible or hideous; perhaps a face of blasted beauty, scarred by the lightning, and writhing with baffled passions; perhaps a countenance monstrous and foul in lineament and expression. Or should I merely have to encounter the livid face and stony eyeballs of a dead man? The Figure sat like a stone.

As the fire sank and the light lessened, a new idea seized me. I might be the victim of a trick; a base, cowardly, heartless trick, no doubt, but one which some unscrupulous persons might have found a cruel sport in practising. Perhaps this dark form was merely that of some masquerading reveller of the merry party gathered in the house, and his confederates, for aught I knew, were laughing over the result of the wager in some distant room. I remembered that I had seen Lucy and Captain Spurrier, and two or three more, giggling and whispering together in a corner, as they looked towards me; and I began to suspect that a plot had been hatched to frighten the old maiden aunt by a mock apparition, and that I had been placed in that room on purpose that my nerves might be more easily shaken. Certainly the form before the fire bore no slight resemblance to the stalwart figure of Captain Spurrier himself; it had the same height and martial breadth of shoulder, the same careless grace; and the dark curled locks, dimly seen, might well have been the captain's.

The idea that Captain Spurrier, in some theatrical garb or other, had been encouraged to enter my room by some secret door that had escaped my research, but which was known to the household, to excite my terrors for the diversion of the jest-loving younger members of the company, and notably of my nieces, had the effect of changing my chilly dread into hot anger. I started at the notion, and was about to address him in no indulgent manner, when—when I suddenly remembered that a lady, under the circumstances of the case, could scarcely speak with dignity.

It was not alone the fact of wearing a nightcap which caused the indignant words to die away on my lips: it was not even the recollection that, though I do not dye my hair, a portion of it is—well, is due to the friendly aid of Mr. Truefitt, and that at night my appearance might differ from what it usually was by day—it was not, I say, these reflections that made me give up my purpose, though they certainly made me hesitate to speak, when suddenly all desire to upbraid passed away from my mind; for the Figure, motionless hitherto, stirred at last, and half rising, with a heavy sigh, began slowly to pile wood upon the sinking fire.

Horror! it was the original of the portrait; there was no mistaking the identity. Even the loose, heavy outer garment which he wore, and which seemed to be what, in the Stuart days, was called a horseman's coat, could not conceal the supple strength of the frame it covered. The proud, well-set head, with its dark curls, was now distinctly visible in the red glow of the firelight. My anger died away, a chill shiver ran through me, my brain reeled, yet I did not faint, but gazed steadily at the figure before me. There was no indication that the intruder knew or cared for my presence. Slowly, and in a moody way, he proceeded to replenish the fire. The strong, cruel-looking fingers of the white hand grasped the logs one by one, poised them for a moment, and then tossed them, like victims to a holocaust, upon the red-hot embers. There is much character in hands; they tell tales of their owner, when the face has been drilled into a mere mask; and those muscular white hands were just such as I could fancy closing, murderous, on the slender throat of a young wife—just such as I could imagine would gripe hard upon the hilt of a dagger—cruel, soft hands. The fire burned up, and the hands were beheld no more; there was nothing to be seen but the dark cloak and the dark curls of the stately head, bowed under a weight of thought. Hours passed thus. Once or twice the Figure stirred; and then it seemed to me that I could hear, with an ear sharpened to a painful intensity of sensation, twice repeated, the faint ring and clash of a spur-rowel, once the harsh clank of a sword. But I saw nothing more than the loose blackness of the mantling garment, and the red glimmer of the fire on the black curls of the bent down head.

What I suffered, while the fire crackled and hissed as if it mocked me, and while the red carbuncle glowed like a goblin eye in the midst of the smooth dark oval of the Venice glass, I scarcely like to think of, even now. There were times when I could have shrieked aloud, have called for aid; anything, anything to make that impassive form move again from its dreary attitude of sullen brooding patience; anything to cause the awful face, with all its pride, and gloom, and bitter anguish of remorse, to turn and front me, so that I might know the worst, the very worst, and die or go mad, if so it must be, of sheer terror, but not wait longer in the suspense that was worse than death. But the Figure never turned, never stirred, save slightly, and then I heard the low sounds of spur and sword clanking and rattling on the hearthstone—that accursed, mournful hearthstone, that had witnessed the evil deeds done in the dim past.

And then I slept. I had felt the drowsy stupor coming on; I had striven and fought against it; my very fear of being helpless in the room with the Thing before the fire had resisted, passionately resisted, the weight that pressed upon my weary eyelids. But the dull, blank force of sleep at length overpowered me.

Quickly after, I awoke with a start and a cry of blind fear; but in the next moment, I remembered all. Fearfully, my eyes sought the hearth. The cold gray morning light was stealing feebly in through the unshuttered windows. The chair was empty; the Figure was gone. Timidly, agony-stricken, I looked around, but there was nothing to be seen. I sprang from my pillow; but instantly afterwards, I fell back with a deathly thrill of faintness. Was he, was It lurking in some shadowy corner of that hateful room? and should I meet the face of my Fear, did I dare to trespass on its domain? I waited, and waited. How slowly did the sickly, pale winter's morning become day! The room was still half dark, when, by a great effort, I contrived to rise; and throwing on a wrapper that hung near the bed, lit a candle, and explored every yard of the room. But no grim vision confronted me. All the relics of my nocturnal terror were the displaced armchair, the pile of wood diminished to a few scattered logs, and the fire, a few faint red sparks of which gleamed among charred stumps and mountains of feathery white ashes. Yes, one thing more, a footprint, the print of a man's heavy boot, stamped among the white ashes that lay, powdery and delicate, on the hearth!

How I stared at that footprint, and with what quick alarm I glanced over my shoulder, as if I feared to see the dark haunter of the chamber at my elbow, I remember well. But fear soon gave place to anger, as I thought of Captain Spurrier, of my niece's mischievous laughter, of the polite ridicule of the suspected conspirators. A trick, a trick—cruel, selfish, inhospitable, but cunningly devised. Captain Spurrier! And I was to be their butt, then, the object of a jest, such as has cost life or reason to many. They were to enjoy my terrors, my confession of fear; to receive my story with mirth and derision, or perhaps hypocritically to condole with "dear aunt Chilworth." Yes, the traitors had contrived all very nicely; but—

A knock. Jessop with the hot water. She was surprised to find the door locked; and she almost screamed as she caught sight of my ghastly white and haggard eyes, when I admitted her. But my voice did not tremble much when I bade Jessop instantly go to the village, and hire a chaise, a fly, anything, to come as quickly as the horses could be harnessed to the manor-house, to take me away to the D—— Station.

"What! this morning, ma'am? Christmas Day!" faltered the woman.

"Instantly! Do you hear? Instantly!" was all I could say, as I sank down in a chair, and waved her away, as she sought to approach me with some common-place regrets and fears that I must be ill. Jessop saw that I would be obeyed, and she left the room; but I suppose a carriage was hard to find, for it was an hour or more before she came back. I was dressed, and came down at the first sound of wheels, with my wraps on, ready. But some rumor of my strange resolve had spread over the house, for Maria and the girls came running down while I was still in the hall. Mrs. Berkeley and her daughters had evidently hurried their toilet; but the fly-door was open, and my foot on the step, before Lucy bounded out and caught me by the hand. Her hair was loose; there was a look of wonder in her eyes, and she said quite breathlessly:

"Oh, aunt, aunt Lucy, what is all this?"

But I was not going to be duped again. I could not believe my niece innocent of gross cruelty and disrespect; and I did not, and could not forgive her that night of torture and terror. By this time Jane and her mother had come up, loud in inquiry and protest. I gave them no other answer than a cold reproachful look, and a few stiff words of thanks for the hospitality of Blackston Manor, of which I had experienced enough, and on which I would no longer trespass; and shaking off the hands which, with mock friendliness, strove to maintain me, I got into the fly, while Jossop mounted the box, and the driver made the best of his way to D—— Station. The last words that I heard were spoken by Jane:

"I told you how it would be, Lucy. Didn't I, mama? She's seen the ghost; and look! the wind has changed: it's due south, and—"

But the fly was in motion, and I heard no more. I went home to Brighton, and for many days was under the doctor's hands; for though I bore up bravely at the time, my nerves had been fearfully shaken, nor have I ever thoroughly recovered my repose of mind and body.

I sent for my lawyer, destroyed my old will, and made another, properly and formally executed in every detail. None of the Berkeleys will touch a sixpence of my property under that will, nor will I ever alter the present disposition of what I have to leave. My nephew Arthur was at Brighton eight hours after me; but I was much too ill to see him, nor did I choose to grant him an interview during the days he remained in the town, having neither strength nor wish for a painful scene. The squire, Mrs. Berkeley, and Lucy all wrote me long letters of explanation and affected regret. The burden of them all was the same—namely, that the Painted Room—that in which the wicked sheriff murdered his young wife, on a suspicion, just or unjust, that she was false to her vows—was reputed to be haunted; but the apparition was reported, traditionally, to be only visible when the wind was southerly. The wind, when I arrived, had been north, and likely to remain in that quarter. I was ignorant of the legend; the superstition was only half believed in; the house was crammed with guests; and hence—so they said—the unfortunate selection of that chamber for me. They should always regret and deplore, &c.—the rather that my distress and departure had thrown a gloom over the manor-house at what should have been a time of especial happiness, just when an engagement had been concluded between dear Lucy and Captain Spurrier, eldest son of Sir Percival Spurrier. I had no patience to read more. The dowries of Lucy and Jane Berkeley will never be derived from any bequest of her they have insulted and trifled with—their Aunt Chilworth.

Eastward from Atlanta.—From Atlanta to Augusta by railroad is 171 miles. From Augusta to Charleston, 137 miles. From Atlanta to Macon, 101 miles. From Macon to Savannah, 191 miles. From Augusta to Savannah, 120 miles. The country from Atlanta towards Augusta is quite rolling, and in places, rocky, with plenty of small streams and springs, and abundance of wood and forage for an army. It is a well settled farming country. There are but few swamps, and the roads generally are good. The country between Augusta and Charleston is not as good as towards Atlanta. Part of it is inhabited by poor "sandhillers," and part of it is very sparsely inhabited. From Branchville—the point where the railroads from Augusta and Columbia unite—to Charleston, 62 miles, the country is very flat, with a good deal of swamp, and in summer time is so miasmatic that settlements are sparse, though there are some large plantations, and when cotton was king there were a great many slaves kept at work upon all the dry spots of that swampy region. Immediately around Charleston the land is very flat, sandy or swampy. The road from Augusta to Columbia, the capital of South Carolina, is "across the ridges," which are generally low, sandhills, and over small streams, the borders of which are cultivated by small cotton planters and farmers, who keep a good deal of stock and have plenty of grain and sweet potatoes. The Congaree river, at Columbia, is a respectable sized mill stream, and so is the Wateree, eastward of it, and so are the two Pedees. The whole way is a good country for an army to march and subsist in. The distance from Augusta to Columbia is about 80 miles, and from Columbia to Wilmington, N. C., about 200 miles.

CAPT. SPEKE'S ADVENTURE WITH A BOA CONSTRICTOR.

At the earliest possible moment after our camp had been pitched a hunt was set afoot, and Capt. Grant, myself and some attendants were soon making our way to "the path." There were no animals there when we arrived, except a few hippopotami, and we were, therefore, obliged to wait the coming of some more palatable game. Our patience, however, was severely taxed; and after a long delay, we were about to "bag" a hippopotamus, when one of our attendants, perched in a tree about half a mile distant, began waving his blanket. This was a signal that game was approaching. We immediately drew into cover, and awaited the coming of the latter.

We were not delayed long, for presently a long column of animals, from the elephant to the hoo-doo, appeared in view, trotting at a good pace to the river. Their flanks were soon presented to us, and each selecting his object, fired. McColl shot a fine young buffalo cow, while Capt. Grant was equally successful with a hoo-doo, and several spears, cast by our attendants, stopped the career of one or two different animals of the herd.

At this juncture, however, occurred an unexpected adventure that finished our sport, at least for that day. I had sprung forward, immediately after firing, in order to obtain a fair shot at a huge elephant that I wanted to bring down on account of his immense tusks. I got the desired aim and pulled the trigger of my second barrel. At the moment of doing so a wild cry of alarm, uttered by one of the blacks, called my attention. Glancing round, my eye chanced to range up into the foliage of the tree beneath which Capt. Grant and myself had lain for several hours previous.

My feelings may possibly be imagined, as I beheld an enormous boa constrictor, whose hideous head and neck, projected some distance into view, showed that he was about to make a fatal spring. His direction was certainly towards me; and, as he flashed from his position like a thunderbolt, I gave myself up, for, ere aid could reach me, fold after fold of the monster would have crushed my strong frame into a quivering pulp. I fell, seemingly caught in a whirlwind of dust, and a strange indescribable scuffle ensued.

In the midst of this terrible strife, I suddenly became conscious of the presence of a second victim, and even after the time that has elapsed since then, I still recollect with what vividness the thought shot across my mind that this second victim was Capt. Grant, my noble companion. At last, after being thus whirled about for several seconds, each second seeming to be interminable, there ensued a lull, a stillness of death, and I opened my eyes, expecting to look upon those unexplored landscapes which are seen only in the country beyond the tomb. Instead of that, I saw Capt. Grant leveling his rifle towards me, while, standing beside and behind him, were the blacks, in every conceivable attitude of the most intense suspense.

In a moment I comprehended all. The huge serpent had struck a young buffalo cow, between which and him I had unluckily placed myself at the moment of firing upon the elephant. A most singular good fortune had attended me, however, for instead of being crushed into a mangled mass with the unfortunate cow, my left forearm had only been caught in between the buffalo's body and a single fold of the constrictor. The limb laid just in front of the shoulder at the root of the neck, and thus had a soft bed of flesh, into which it was jammed, as it were, by the immense pressure of the serpent's body, that was like iron in hardness. As I saw Grant about to shoot, a terror took possession of me, for, if he refrained, I might possibly escape after the boa released his folds from the dead cow; but should he fire and strike the reptile, it would, in its convulsions, crush or drag me to pieces.

Even as the idea came to me, I beheld Grant pause. He appeared to fully comprehend all. He could see how I was situated, that I was still living, and that my delivery depended on the will of the constrictor. We could see every line on each other's face, so close were we, and I would have shouted or spoken, or even whispered at him, had I dared. But the boa's head was reared within a few feet of mine, and the wink of an eyelid would perhaps settle my doom, so I stared, stared, stared like a dead man at Grant and at the blacks.

Presently the serpent began very gradually to relax his folds, and after retightening them several times as the crushed buffalo quivered, he unwound one fold entirely. Then he paused. The next iron-like band was the one which held me a prisoner; and as I felt it little by little, little by little, unclasping, my heart stood still with hope and fear. Perhaps, upon being freed, the benumbed arm, uncontrolled by my will, might fall from the cushion-like bed in which it lay. And such a mishap might bring the spare fold around my neck or chest, and than farewell to the sources of the Nile. Oh, how hardly, how desperately I struggled to command myself! I glanced at Grant and saw him handling his rifle anxiously. I glanced at the negroes and saw them still gazing, as though petrified with astonishment. I glanced at the serpent's loathsome head, and saw its bright, deadly eyes, watching for the least sign of life in its prey. Now, then, the reptile loosened its fold on my arm a hair's breadth, and now, a little more, until half an inch of space separated my arm and its mottled skin. I could have whipped out my hand, but dared not take the risk.

Atoms of time dragged themselves into ages, and a minute seemed eternity itself! The second fold was removed entirely, and the next one was easing. Should I dash away now, or wait a more favorable movement? I decided upon the former; and with lightning speed, I bounded away towards Grant, the crack of whose piece I heard at the same instant. For the first time in my life I was thoroughly overcome; and sinking down, I remained in a semi-unconscious state for several minutes.

When I fully recovered, Grant and the overjoyed negroes held me up, and pointed out the boa, who was still writhing in his death agonies. I shuddered as I looked upon the effects of his tremendous dying strength. For yards around where he lay, grass, and bushes, and saplings, and in fact everything except the more fully grown trees, were cut clean off, as though they had been trimmed by an immense scythe. This monster, when measured, was 51 feet 2½ inches in extreme length, while round the thickest portion of his body the girth was nearly three feet, thus proving, I believe, to be the largest serpent that was ever authentically heard of.

A TRIP TO THE OIL REGIONS OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The ride from Salamanca had seemed endless, the rain and fog through which we had travelled during the day had turned to a bitter wind, mixed with snow and sleet, the car had grown colder and colder, and the crowd, impatient of the distance, vented their spleen against the innocent proprietors of the Atlantic railroad in a way that was more amusing than reasonable. Another stopping-place. A man opened the door and shouted "Corry!"

Off we tumbled, a fresh shriek from the engine, the train shot away, and there we stood on the platform, with the wind and sleet cutting to the very bone, and a darkness overhead and around that was much more than Cimmerian, a lantern that had flashed in our eyes for an instant having vanished as suddenly as if its holder had disappeared in the earth, like one of Aladdin's unpleasant genii. Some mercifully-disposed creature called out: "This way to the hotel!" and we followed, more by the sense of feeling than sight, along a narrow plank walk, at the end of which gleamed a single lamp, winking, in a malignant sort of way, as if quite accustomed to luring reckless travellers on to their ruin, and thoroughly enjoying its mission.

SCENES IN THE OIL REGIONS OF PENNSYLVANIA.—Sketched by our Special Artist, F. H. Schell.

ARRIVAL AT OIL CITY—ENTRANCE TO OIL REGIONS.

A PETROLEUM COOK.

We reached the hotel at last, and crowded into the little bar-room, which was already much fuller than the most exaggerated idea of its original capacity could have contemplated.

The sharp-eyed book-keeper, without a doubt born expressly for the post he held, and as insensible to any claims of sleep or fatigue as if he had been a human boring-machine, declared that everybody should be attended to and satisfied; so during the time that must elapse before we could reach the coveted beds we amused ourselves by taking a survey of the motley throng, whose very appearance would have been enough to prove the fact of our having at last reached the great field which gave entrance to the famed oil region.

Men in every imaginable style of dress, solitary or in groups, talking loudly, about him, and determined to stay with his wits perfectly about him, and determined to keep them so. A bench ran along one end of the room, on which reposed a group of men, evidently waiting for some train to take them beyond the limits of the new El Dorado, who more fully realized one's idea of the old story of the Seven Sleepers than anything I ever saw. They were plugged against each other in the most marvellous manner, the whole knot shaken each time any member of it stirred in his dreams, the old story of either end of the bench wearing, even in sleep, a look of care and resolution, as if painfully conscious that upon their solidity depended the safety of the entire mass, while the countenances of most of the others possessed a divine contentment by way of contrast. One man, in particular, so closely wedged into the centre of the group, that how he got there was a marvel, only to be surpassed by the possibility of his getting out, had his head comfortably pillowed on a neighbor's shoulder and a blandsmile on his parted lips, from which gushed a strain of unpremeditated melody, evidently keeping him with the comfortable conviction that his company were only desirous he should be quite at ease in every way, and determined, at all hazards, to gratify them.

There was a heavenly study of a man, shaved, occupying two chairs, regardless of expense and other people's comfort; a side bit of an Irishman with his head pillowed on a pickaxe, and a rear view of a fat party deliciously asleep all over in the most uncomfortable attitude, and no end of effects, amusing even to drowsy book-keeper.

At last our turn came; the sleepless book-keeper, with an odd look of the Ancient Mariner about his face, only with more reckless ferocity, expressive of a capability of shooting any number of albatrosses, indifferent to consequences, bowed us upstairs, flung open a door with an air of complete satisfaction, exposing a room about the size of a teatray, containing a window and two beds, one bed for my companion and myself, the other owned and possessed by a couple of men, who were a full orchestra in the way of snoring, an orchestra whose instruments were very wheezy and much out of tune.

A clear bright morning, with a temperature which had just returned from a visit to the North Pole, showed us Corry in the full glory of its forest surroundings, and the merriest breakfast was over we made our way towards the depot, under the supposition that the train was to start without loss of time.

The term is doubtful, and perhaps we did not lose any time, but we certainly waited two hours in the shanty, pushed, elbowed and trampled by a crowd who labored under a pleasant insanity that the locked-for cars had every moment come. There would be a rush towards the door—a new disappointment—then the throng swayed back towards the stove, each man apparently animated with the idea of getting closer to it and yet keeping near the door, and when the feat was attempted by at least a hundred at once—it is not difficult to imagine that a standing-place became about as unenviable a thing as a station on the tail end of an earthquake.

When the final rush did come all the human "light weights" were sent whizzing through the air like small meteoric stones thrown off from some eccentric planet suddenly shooting into space, neither regarded or missed by the body general.

We were wedged into the cars at last, and away we sped through the woods on our journey of 25 miles to Titusville, where the real operations of the oil region commence.

BAR-ROOM OF HOTEL AT TITUSVILLE—GRAND ARRAY OF CARPET BAGS.

STREET SCENE AT TITUSVILLE—CARTING OIL.

SCENES IN THE OIL REGIONS OF PENNSYLVANIA.—Sketched by our Special Artist, F. H. Schell.

THE OIL SEEKER—HE SEEKS AND FINDS.

THE OIL SEEKER—HE SEEKS AND DON'T FIND.

At the depot of that town we found a fresh crowd waiting for a train to take them back towards Corry, and stood for an instant to enjoy their sufferings by way of a little revenge for our own.

The more impatient members of the party seemed to be a "lot o' fellows" inquiring their way to the lands and properties of the "New York and Liverpool Company," which seems to have sprung into vigorous existence, and to have special and extraordinary attractions. We did not stop to listen, but made our way into the town over frozen ruts which gave one an idea of what the earth might have looked like when it first began to harden.

We had dinner at a house where the landlord is celebrated for opening the window on the backs of guests who linger too long over their meals, but which was nevertheless crowded till the very window sills of the bar-room formed uneasy perches for all sorts of odd-looking birds.

Prominent among the throng was a burly mass of humanity, who had been accommodated with a chair close to the stove, where he sat tilted back in glorious ease, surrounded by an admiring throng, who hung upon his finger-pointed periods with breathless attention—one could have understood without being told that he had just made a "heavy thing," and was to be respected accordingly, as any man who seeks and finds ought to be. In a little nook by the window sat a man curled up in an impossible position, his hat pulled over his eyes, his whole attitude and attire, down to his very boots, expressing utter disgust of the universe in general and the mundane sphere in particular—a recent loser, somebody said, going back to civilization empty in pocket and with no hopes of retrieving his fortune, unless by starting a company out of the oil on his over-coat, and the crowd glanced at him with about as much sympathy as a party of jungle tigers might be expected to regard a sick relative.

STARTING FOR OIL CREEK—THE RUSH TO THE CARS.

In one corner of the room was an appalling array of black carpet bags, that looked as if a host of Southern incendiaries had come thither with the dire intention of exploding the whole Petroleum region—bags of every size and peculiarity possible—old, knowing-looking fellows that had seen life in every quarter from Nevada Territory to the mouth of Oil Creek—fresh, dainty chaps that shrunk from their neighbors in an exclusive way, and yet realising all that lay before them in their onward journey—indeed, one might have fancied he could have made a shrewd guess at the character of half the men in the room just from the looks of that legion of life-supporters.

Having been sufficiently edified by the discourse of the successful man, we made our way into the busy street once more.

On the flats below the town several wells are being sunk, though the lands have been regarded as a somewhat doubtful investment until lately, but as the Continental has begun pumping oil at the rate of 60 barrels per day, the lands all about the flats are beginning to go up in due proportion.

While we were crossing the fields the wind increased to a regular, or more properly a very irregular tornado, the snow began to fall in great flakes, and in a few moments became a blinding storm.

Tremendous windstorms appear to be no uncommon event in Titusville, for they told of a tornado last summer coming up in the most unexpected way at a time when one might have expected the elements to behave in a reputable and consistent manner, flattening several derricks, upsetting a brick house, and indulging in a variety of little eccentricities of that sort; and I can only say that after our experience we were prepared to believe that no account of it could be exaggerated.

Knowledge under such circumstances soon became as profitless as an empty well, and one could not have been induced to accept it on any terms, so we made the best time possible back into the town and sought shelter in a saloon that stood at the junction of two streets, thrusting its muzzle down the main avenue in the most delightfully impertinent manner imaginable.

NIGHT SCENE IN TITUS HOUSE—THE SEVEN SLEEPERS OF CORRY.

The announcement of "shell oysters," which struck our eyes, caused us to explore the eating-room, where we found a darksy cook indulging in a siesta after his labors in the kitchen, who convinced me at once of the truth of the doctrine that souls have numberless lives to wear out in varied fleshly shackles.

His height was wonderful, but you forgot to wonder at it when you saw his breadth, and the best of it was, if he suddenly turned his face from you, there was only a slim man visible. I hope that is delicately and yet broadly expressed, in which case it covers both sides. His white apron and round paper cap finished up his costume in the most picturesque manner, and his conversation for half an hour would have made capital for one of Dickens's best chapters.

In answer to a question concerning oysters in the shell, he waved his hand magnificently, and replied:

"No, sir; ours belong to a superior family of oysters—they goes without their shells kase they can!"

On the whole, we decided that Titusville ought not to be missed, although, as far as actual working operations were concerned, there was very little to prove that we had reached the charmed territory of King Petroleum.

FIRST PREMIUM

$5 SEWING MACHINE! $5

A

BEAUTIFUL PRESENT FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Just Out. THE FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, a most Wonderful and Elegantly Constructed Novelty; is NOISELESS in operation, uses the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, sews with DOUBLE OR SINGLE THREAD. Makes the Running Stitch more perfect and regular than by hand. Will Gather, Hem, Ruffle, Shirr, Tuck, Run up Breadths, &c., &c.; requires no Lubrication or Change of Stitch—IS NOT LIABLE TO GET OUT OF ORDER, and will last a LIFETIME, and is the prettiest and most useful Christmas Gift you can buy. Read the following:

"For the Dressmaker it is invaluable; for the Household it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Ladies' Book.

"At length the desideratum so long sought for, combining usefulness, speed and cheapness, has been gained. The simple structure of this compact and beautiful little Machine will at once command attention, and the speed, certainty and ease with which the work is done will make it THE FAVORITE with the ladies."—MRS. ANN S. STEVENS, in N. Y. Weekly.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.

This ingenious and useful little Machine is perfect in its construction, and has none of the faults of the High-Priced Sewing Machines. No one will pay from $50 to $100 for a Sewing Machine when this one can be bought for the small sum of $5.

This wonderful Machine was awarded the FIRST PREMIUM by the New York State Fair, showing its superiority over all others.

All imitations of this GENUINE ARTICLE are liable, as infringements on the Patent.

☞ Agents wanted all over the world,

Single Machines sent to any address per Express, packed in box on receipt of $5.

Address all orders to

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
102 Nassau Street, N. Y.

☞ Lost Manhood Restored, ☜

Speedily and effectually, by the use of "DR. LA PORTE'S LIFE ELIXIR." Cure guaranteed. Price $2. Sent postpaid, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 482-94

ADVANTAGE OR MARKED PLAYING CARDS.

I have constantly on hand and for sale every style of MARKED BACK PLAYING CARDS. These Cards, when learned, can be told by the back as well as the face. Full and complete instructions forwarded with each pack. Marked Cards, $12 per doz., $100 per gross. Single pack sent by mail for $2. Send all orders to

O. BRIGGS, Chicago, Ill.,
482-6 P. O. Drawer, 6308.

THE PERUVIAN SYRUP

Supplies the Blood with its LIFE ELEMENT, IRON, infusing STRENGTH, VIGOR and NEW LIFE into all parts of the System. Thousands have been changed by the use of this Remedy, from Weak, Sickly, Suffering Creatures, to Strong, Healthy and Happy Men and Women (the proof of which will be sent free by mail), and Invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to try it.

Depot, 491 Broadway, New York. J. P. DINSMORE.
For Sale by all Druggists. 474-84aw

O'DOR O'DOR!!

DR. BRIGGS'S GOLDEN O'DOR

Will force a Beautiful Set of Whiskers or Moustaches on the Smoothest face in five weeks, AND NO HUMBUG!

Also, HAIR ON BALD HEADS in eight weeks.

I receive RECOMMENDATIONS most every day: Testimonials of thousands.

I will send my Golden O'Dor by mail, sealed and postpaid for $1 25. ☞ WARRANTED. ☜

Send all orders to

DR. C. BRIGGS, P. O. Drawer 6308, Chicago, Ill.
482-5

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Fail not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 462-74

GOLD PENS FOR THE MILLION!

On receipt of the following sums, we will send, by mail, or as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens, selecting the same according to the description, namely:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES,

For 50 cts. a No. 2 pen; for 75 cts. a No. 3 pen; for $1 a No. 4 pen; for $1 25 a No. 5 pen; for $1 50 a No. 6 pen.

The same Pens, in SILVER PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 No. 2 pen; for $1 25 No. 3 pen; for $1 50 No. 4 pen; for $2 No. 5 pen; for $2 25 No. 6 pen.

These pens are stamped THE IMPERIAL PEN, and are well finished and fine writing Gold Pens, with good aridum points, although they are unwarranted, and cannot be exchanged.

First quality 14 carat, Warranted Gold Pens.

Our name (American Gold Pen Co., N. Y.), is stamped on all pens of this grade, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accidents.

Second quality Gold Pens.

These Pens are all stamped THE NATIONAL PEN, with the initials of our Firm, A. G. P. Co., and are carefully made, having the same points as our first quality Pens. The only great difference being in the quality of the gold.

Gold Pens without Cases.

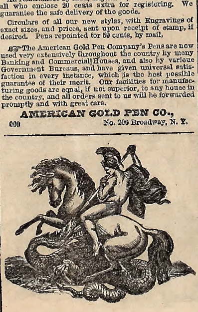
For $1 00 a No. 1 pen 1st qual., or a No. 2 pen 2d qual.
For $1 25 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 3 pen 2d qual.
For $1 75 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $2 00 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $2 50 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $3 25 a No. 6 pen 1st qual. For $4 50 No. 7 pen; $5 75 No. 8 pen; $10 00 No. 12 pen; all 1st quality.

The same Gold Pens, in Solid Silver Extension Cases, with Pencils.

For $2 00 a No. 1 pen 1st qual., or a No. 2 pen 2d qual.
For $2 25 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 3 pen 2d qual.
For $2 75 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $3 50 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $4 50 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $5 50 a No. 8 pen 1st quality.

Gold Pens, 1st and 2d qual., in Solid Silver or Gold-Plated Ebony Desk Holders and Morocco Cases.

For $2 25 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $2 50 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $3 20 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $4 00 a No. 6 pen 1st quality. For $5 50 a No. 7 pen. For $6 75 a No. 8 pen. For $12 00 a No. 1 pen; all first quality.



A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $15, if sent to one address, at one time; 15 per cent. on $25; 20 per cent. on $40.

All remittances by mail, Registered, are at our risk, to all who enclose 20 cents extra for registering. We guarantee the safe delivery of the goods.

Circulars of all our new styles, with Engravings of exact sizes, and prices, sent upon receipt of stamp, if desired. Pens repointed for 50 cents, by mail.

☞ The American Gold Pen Company's Pens are now used very extensively throughout the country by many Banking and Commercial Houses, and also by various Government Bureaus, and have given universal satisfaction in every instance, which is the best possible guarantee of their merit. Our facilities for manufacturing goods are equal, if not superior, to any house in the country, and all orders sent to us will be forwarded promptly and with great care.

AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO.,
000 No. 200 Broadway, N. Y.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusel oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, anti-bilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY

HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 59 CEDAR STREET.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PIERRE BIBON, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

J. TOWNSEND & CO.,

IMMENSE HOLIDAY SALE!

95,000 Watches, Chains, Gold Pens with Case, Sets of Jewellery, Lockets, Sleeve-Buttons, Gent's Pins, &c.,

to be sold for

$95,000,

and valued at $750,000!!!

all to be sold at

ONE DOLLAR EACH,

without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive.

Read this list of articles to be sold at $1 each:

500	Ladies and Gents' Gold Watches,	$50 to	$100 each.
500	" "	25 to	50 "
1,000	Hunting Cased Silver Watches,	15 to	30 "
2,500	Neck Chains	8 to	20 "
3,000	Fob and Guard Chains	5 to	25 "
5,000	Sets Ladies' Jewellery	5 to	15 "
5,000	Ladies' Gilt and Jet Buckles	5 to	15 "
5,000	Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Bars and Balls	5 to	10 "
3,000	Ladies' Onyx Eardrops	5 to	10 "
3,000	Gold Band Bracelets	5 to	10 "
3,000	Enamelled, Coral and Opal Eardrops	5 to	10 "
8,000	Plain and Fancy Rings	4 to	8 "
4,000	Sets Sleeve Buttons	4 to	8 "
10,000	Pieces Silver Ware	5 to	15 "
10,000	Gold Pens, with Silver Mounted Holders	5 to	10 "
8,000	Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Holders	3 to	8 "
3,000	Gold Watch Keys	2 to	3 "

All to be sold at One Dollar each. Certificates of all the different articles, stating what each can have, are put into envelopes and mixed, and, when ordered, are taken out, without regard to choice, and sent by mail. On receiving the certificate you will see what you can have. Then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. In all transactions by mail we charge for forwarding the certificate, paying the postage and doing the business, 20 cents each, which must be enclosed when the certificate is sent for. 6 Certificates sent for $1; 15 for $2; 40 for $5; 100 for $10. Agents will be allowed 10 cents on each certificate, when ordering to the amount of $1.

Agents wanted in every town in the United States or Canadas. Address

J. TOWNSEND & CO.,
484-8 15 John street, New York.

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE.

FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE has fully established the superiority of

Redding's Russia Salve

Over all other Healing Preparations.

It cures all kinds of Sores, Cuts, Scalds, Burns, Boils, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Sties, Piles, Corns, Sore Lips, Sore Eyes, etc., etc., Removing the Pain at Once, and reducing the most angry looking Swellings and Inflammation as if by Magic. Only 25 cents a Box; by Mail 37 cents. For Sale by J. P. DINSMORE, 474-84aw No. 491 Broadway, N. Y., and by all Druggists.

Shults's Onguent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent post-paid for 30 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.
484-97

A Beautiful Christmas Toy!

The Magic Wheel, Price $1 50.

This is the cleverest optical delusion ever invented, and is equally attractive to youth and age.

JOHN BRADBURN (Successor to M. Doolady),
483-6 49 Walker Street, N. Y.

Valentine Price List:

144	Spicy Comic Valentines, postpaid	-	$1 00
1	Neat Sentimental Valentine "	-	1 00
1	Pretty " " "	-	1 50
1	Handsome " " "	-	2 00
1	Elegant " " "	-	3 00
1	Superb " " "	-	5 00
1	Lot (assorted for retailing) "	-	5 00
1	" " " "	-	10 00
1	" " " "	-	20 00

Any of the above sent in a box by mail nicely packed on receipt of the price.

Liberal discounts made to all persons buying to sell again. Send for Circular. Address all orders to

BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK,
Valentine Headquarters,
14 Chambers Street, N. Y.

Dr. Talbot's Concentrated Medical

PINEAPPLE CIDER

is a PREVENTIVE of SICKNESS. The experience that Dr. Talbot has had for the last Twenty-five years convinces him that it is time the public had an article offered that will prevent sickness. The article offered is Dr. Talbot's Medicated Pineapple Cider, designed for all classes, old and young. It is not new to the Doctor, but is entirely new to the public. One quart bottle will last a well person one year. This is rather a new mode of doctoring; nevertheless it will save millions from being sick. Is it not better to pay three dollars a year to keep from being sick, than to pay ten or twenty dollars in doctor's bills, and as much more for the loss of time and the inconvenience of being sick? To prevent sickness, use as follows: Add one teaspoonful of Medicated Pineapple Cider to a tumbler of cold water, and drink the first thing after you rise in the morning, and the same before you retire at night. It will increase the strength and give vigor and action to the system. A celebrated New York merchant, who has made a thorough trial of the Pineapple Cider, assures Dr. Talbot that he gained ten pounds of flesh in one month at the first trial. He continues its use as above directed, and finds it very beneficial; says it has proved an entire preventive to sickness in his case. Also, another well-known gentleman in New York has used the Medicated Cider constantly for ten years, and has not been sick one day during that time.

Price $3 per bottle (full quart); pints, $2; half-pints, $1. One quart bottle, two pint bottles, or four half-pint bottles, sent free by Express on receipt of price. All orders should be addressed to

B. T. BABBITT, Sole Agent,
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., N. Y.
474-499

☞ Asthma Cured. ☜

Relief guaranteed in ten minutes, and a permanent cure effected by the use of "UPHAM'S ASTHMA CURE." Cases of from ten to twenty years' standing yield at once to its influence. Price $2. Sent postpaid to any address, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 482-94

Sutlers, Agents and Soldiers, send 15 cents for the New Soldiers' Pocket Light.

E. P. CLARK, Sole Maker,
Inquire of Sutlers. Northampton, Mass.
483-4

$7 OFFICER'S WATCH. $9

Our Whole Stock of Imported Watches, suitable for CHRISTMAS and NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS, being of rich and novel designs, are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale rates.

AN ELEGANT WATCH in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases, Richly Engraved, Turned Centre, Carved Balance Bridge, English Full Plate Jewelled Movements, adjusted Regulator, Spring Bolt, Spade Hands and Fine Enameled White Dial, a serviceable article in running order, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and a Gent's Handsome Vest Chain and beautiful

MINIATURE GOLD LOCKET!

to match, with Double Cases, Box and Glass for Two Likenesses. A Beautiful Holiday Present. Sent by mail to any address for only $9.

A NEAT SILVER WATCH, especially adapted for Army use, in Heavy Double Cases, Small Size, same as the above, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and Gent's Vest Chain, Engraved Double Case Locket, etc. Sent by mail to any address for only $7.

The Imperial Watch,

OR BRITISH ARMY OFFICERS' TIMEKEEPER, containing a Rare and Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Effects, combining within its cases and attached to its machinery a beautiful and correct working THERMOMETER, an accurately adjusted Mariner's Compass in miniature, sunk in Dial, and a Reliable Calendar, indicating day of month, week, etc., in Case, rendering this Watch a perfect STORM, HEAT and TIME INDICATOR. The beautiful machinery of this valuable Watch is encased in Finely Finished DOUBLE HUNTING, Magic Spring 19 Line Cases (the outer cases being of fine 18 Carat Gold, inner cases of Solid Gold Composite), Richly Engraved top and bottom, with Panel for Name, Turned Nerl, movable Pendant Bow, and Fancy Push Spring. Genuine English Improved Jewelled Action, M. J. Tobias movements, Polished Cap and Doome Self-acting Click, Equal Balance, Independent Actions, Fine White Dials, Polished Steel Cut Hands, and is an Exact Imitation of a $100 watch, and used by the ROYAL ENGINEERS and Officers of THE BRITISH ARMY. None Genuine unless bearing our private trade mark. Price per single one, all complete, by mail, $20.

CATELY BROTHERS, Sole Importers,
102 Nassau St., N. Y. Established 1855.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION!

250,000

Watches, Chains, Diamond Rings, Etc.

WORTH OVER

One Million Dollars!

All to be Sold for One Dollar Each!!

WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE! NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO RECEIVE!

Splendid List of Articles! All to be Sold for $1 each!

		EACH.
250	Gents' Gold Hunting-case Watches	$50 to $150
250	Ladies' Gold and Enameled-case Watches	35 " 70
500	Gents' Hunting-case Silver Watches	35 " 70
200	Diamond Rings	50 " 100
2,000	Gold Vest and Neck Chains	15 " 30
3,000	" " " "	4 " 6
3,000	Gold Oval Band Bracelets	4 " 8
5,000	Chased Gold Bracelets	5 " 10
2,000	Chatelaine Chains & Guard Chains	5 " 20
7,000	Solitaire and Gold Brooches	4 " 10
2,000	Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 " 0
5,000	Coral, Opal and Emerald Brooches	4 " 8
5,000	Mosaic, Jet, Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 " 8
7,500	Coral, Opal & Emerald Ear Drops	4 " 6
4,000	California Diamond Breast Pins	2 50 " 10
3,000	Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys	2 50 " 8
4,000	Fob and Vest Ribbon Slides	3 " 10
5,000	Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, etc	3 " 8
3,000	Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc	4 " 7
10,000	Miniature Lockets	2 50 " 8
4,000	" " Magic Spring	3 " 20
3,000	Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc	2 " 8
5,000	Plain Gold Rings	4 " 11
5,000	Chased Gold Rings	4 " 11
10,000	Stone Set and Signet Rings	2 50 " 10
10,000	California Diamond Rings	2 " 10
7,500	Sets Ladies' Jewellery—Jet & Gold	5 " 15
6,000	Sets Ladies' Jewellery — Cameo, Pearl, etc	4 " 15
10,000	Gold Pens, Silver Extension-holders and Pencils	4 " 10
10,000	Gold Pens and Gold Mounted Holders	3 " 8
5,000	Gold Pens and Gold Extension Holders	6 " 10
5,000	Silver Goblets and Drinking Cups	5 " 50
3,000	Silver Castors	15 " 50
2,000	Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets	20 " 50
		PER DOZEN.
5,000	Dozen Silver Tea Spoons	$10 " 20
5,000	" " Table Spoons & Forks	20 " 10

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, through the war having cut off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of Valuable Jewellery, originally intended for the English market, has been sent off for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT ANY SACRIFICE!

Under these circumstances, ARRANDALE & CO., acting as Agents for the principal European Manufacturers, have resolved upon a Great Gift Distribution, subject to the following regulations:

CERTIFICATES, naming each article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

ALL ARTICLES SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE!!

On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any Set of Jewellery on our list for ONE DOLLAR, and in no case can they get less than One Dollar's worth, as there are no blanks. The price of Certificates is as follows:

One for .... 25 cents.
Five for $1
Eleven for 2
Thirty for 5
Sixty-five for 10
One hundred for 15

AGENTS will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to One Dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage Stamps.

ARRANDALE & CO.,
167 Broadway, New York.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GEMS, PINS, SILVER-WARE, TOILET SETS, STUDS, ETC.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Not 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time give our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
238 Broadway, New York.

Soldiers of the Union!

Read the following Letters received from your comrades as endorsements of the

WORLD KNOWN AND WORLD TRIED REMEDY, KNOWN AS PROF. HOLLOWAY'S

PILLS AND OINTMENT.

You will have find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country where our army of defence is in force. SEE TO YOUR HEALTH! All of you have some one interested in your welfare, then you have some YOUR LIFE IS VALUABLE! Not only do not delay, but to your Fathers and Mothers, Sisters, Wives and Brothers. Then while you may, Purchase your Health.

35 cents, 88 cents, or $1 40,

will, when applied in these medicines, bring you down to the greenest and ripest old age.

The following are a few specimens of genuine letters on file for inspection at this office. Copies sent by mail to any inquirer.

80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.
QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT,
Third Illinois Volunteers,
FOLLY ISLAND, S. C., Nov. 2, 1864.

Prof. HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:
SIR—Enclosed please find two dollars, for which send me one dollar's worth of your celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please attend to this at once, for I am much in need of the above remedies.
Address Lieut. A. W. FELLOWS, Q. M.,
3rd Illinois Vol.

CAMP NEAR BRANDY STATION, VA., Nov. 7, 1864.
Prof. HOLLOWAY:
DEAR SIR—I have heard a great deal of talk about your wonderful Pills, and as I write I am in need of them till now, I want to try them, as diarrhœa is very prevalent in the regiment; send me the worth of one dollar enclosed. Yours, &c.,
JOSEPH WALSH, Co. E, 6th Regt., Excelsior Brigade.

PULASKI, TENN., Nov. 6, 1864.
Prof. HOLLOWAY:
DEAR SIR—Please find enclosed one dollar, and send me the amount in your famous Pills, as I am troubled with fever and ague. Yours, &c.,
THOMAS F. TURNER, Co. I, 2d Iowa Infantry.

MORRIS ISLAND, S. C., Nov. 1, 1864.
Prof. HOLLOWAY:
Please find enclosed the sum of one dollar for Pills. I have Diarrhœa, and can't get it stopped, so I want to try your Pills. Yours, &c.,
WILLIAM CHRISTY,
Co. D, 104th Regt. Penn. Vols.
Morris Island, S. C.

000

Diaries for 1865,

From 25 cents to $3. All kinds BLANK BOOKS, PAPER and STATIONERY at moderate prices. Orders solicited. FRANCIS & LOUTTIT,
Stationers and Printers,
42 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

481-4

TWENTY-FOUR CARTES DE VISITE
OF
FRENCH CRISETTES,

In different attitudes of art.
Enclose $1 25 and four red stamps.
CELS. MANT, 84 Nassau St., N. Y.

$125 A MONTH!

WANTED.—SEWING MACHINE AGENTS! Everywhere, to sell the new Lock-Stitch $16 Family Sewing Machine, the only low price machine in the country which is licensed by Grover, Baker, Wheeler & Wilson, Howe, Singer & Co., and Bachelder. Silver and expenses or large commission allowed. All other Machines now sold for less than $40 each are infringements, and the seller and those who use them are liable. Illustrated Circulars sent free. Address SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

479-491

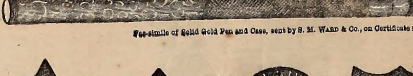
"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the mesmerist of both sexes—the strangest book ever published. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Six Dollars from Fifty Cents.

Agents, come and examine Invention, or Samples sent free by mail for 50 cents. Sells on sight. Address H. F. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York. 475-524

SELPHO'S PATENT LEG and ARM
816 BROADWAY.

The most perfect substitutes for lost limbs ever invented. ESTABLISHED 25 YEARS. Send for a Pamphlet. SOLDIERS SUPPLIED FREE by order of the SURGEON-GENERAL.



483-4

Prof. Silliman and Lyman Cobb.
Portraits, Characters and Biographies, in Jan. Boonke No. ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.

An Article that Every Married Lady should possess will be sent securely sealed for 25 cents.
483-4 Address Box 5667, P. O., New York.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. Lists different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELLAJO, 50 Nassau St., N. Y.

MANUFACTURER'S STOCK
OF
Watches, Lockets, Chains, Rings, Pins, Bracelets, Gold Pens and Cases,
And a full assortment of fine Jewellery, to be disposed of by distribution for the next 60 days.

Certificates of all the various articles are put in envelopes, sealed and mixed, and sent without regard to choice. One certificate telling you what you can have for $1 will be sent for 50 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5. After seeing what you can have, it will be at your option to send or not the articles, or not, and after examining them, if you do not give perfect satisfaction, you can return them and get the money. We also manufacture pure Silver and Gold Badges for every Corps and Division in the Army. Also Infantry, Artillery and Cavalry, Engineer and Pontooner, Masonic, Base Ball and Society Badges of every kind. We will send a Sample Badge (pure Silver, for any Regiment in the Army, with your Name, Regiment and Company handsomely Engraved thereon, on receipt of $1 50.

Agents wanted everywhere, to whom great inducements are offered.

S. M. WARD & Co.,
238 Broadway, N. Y.

$27 Sent Everywhere by Mail, Postpaid. "A Extension Silver-Mounted Holders, WITH COMPOSITE

GOLD PENS

REVERSIBLE LEAD PENCILS,

In case of one dozen each; the boxes are finely finished and cloth lined, so that the contents can sustain no injury in transportation. Price same as before the War.

The Holders are of the most handsome and durable construction; are heavily silver-plated, with an extension of three lengths. All are engraved, chased or engine-turned, and for beauty are not surpassed by any others. Our prices for the holders and pens sold in dozens only, are as follows:

Size One—When open, 5½ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $10 50; retails at $2 each.

Size Two—When open, 8 inches in length; Price per dozen by mail, postpaid, $12; retails at $3 each.

Size Three—When open, 9½ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $15; retails at $3 each.

Size Four—When open, 11 inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $20; retails at $5 each.

Sold by Agents and elsewhere, by mail, postpaid.

Gold WATCHES AND JEWELLERY in Great Variety and Low Prices. Send for Circular. Reliable investments from $5 to $500. Orders promptly filled. Letters to our risk. Orders respectfully solicited.
Address T. F. R. HOWARD, Manufacturer,
116 Broadway, N. Y.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, illustrated. Treating on the art of fascination, by which any one can become fascinate, win the undying love, and marry whomever they choose, irrespective of age or color. Sent by mail for 60 cents and two red stamps. Address
DR. B. LOUGHER & CO., Box 1625, Portland, Me.
481-3

Shults' Curlique, for curling the hair. Price 50 cents. Sent sealed, postpaid. Address
C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.
477-483

The Brazilian Hair Curler. One application warranted to curl the most straight mustache or hair into wavy ringlets or lovy massive curls. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address
E. S. CHASE, Cohoes, N. Y.

PLAYING CARDS!

The American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards, National Emblems.

They are the prettiest cards made, and suit the popular ideas. The suits are Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags; Kings of Departments, Generals of Army, Queens, and Major for Jack.

In order that ALL dealers may have an opportunity to sell these cards, a sample box of twelve packs will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of $2. Address
AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

Old Eyes Made New!

A pamphlet directing how to speedily restore sight and give up spectacles, without aid of doctor or medicine. Sent by mail, free, on receipt of stamp. Address
E. B. FOOTE, M. D.,
1130 Broadway, N. Y.

466eow

The Book of Wonders tells how to make GILDED without aplice of any kind; how to make SILVERED without acids; how to catch Fish and all kinds of Game; how to make all kinds of Incense; all kinds of Cements and Gluing Fluids; Gambling Exposed; Ventriloquism Made Easy; Explanation of Incantations; how to gain the Love of any one, &c., &c., &c. Sent, securely sealed, for 25 cents.
Address Box 5627,
P. O., New York.

482-5

Gayest of the Gay!

Transparent Playing Cards, used same as common cards (52 French Pictures). Sample pack, by mail, $1 25; $10 per dozen packs. Also marked Cards, 40 packs, $1 50 per pack. Address
000 D. HEMMETTE, 58 Liberty Street, N. Y.

JUST OUT!

And sent FREE on receipt of stamp.

EVANS'S NEW CATALOGUE
For 1865.
(Eleventh year of the Enterprise)

NEW BOOKS,	NEW GIFTS.
NEW BOOKS,	NEW GIFTS.
NEW BOOKS,	NEW GIFTS.

Books for Soldiers, Books for Sailors, Books for Civilians, Works for Everybody; Historical, Biographical, Religious, Scientific, Musical, and Miscellaneous Books in every department of literature; Albums and Concertina Books, Card Pictures of all the Celebrities.

A Gift worth from 50 cents to $100 with each Book!

All Books sold at publishers' regular prices, with liberal inducements to persons forming Clubs.

Send your orders for the NEW CATALOGUE and any Book you may want to the ORIGINAL GIFT BOOK and Medical Advertiser, No. 438 Broadway, Albany.
Address promptly filled and satisfaction guaranteed. Address
482-5 O. G. EVANS, 438 Broadway, Albany.

Gold Pens 60 cts. to $2. Pens in Silver Extension Cases $1 to $2. Send stamp for Circular. GEORGE F. HARRIS, Manufacturer, 208 Fulton St. Also for sale the only perfect Pencils in the World.
483-95

The Great Money-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with pictures, sent free by mail, for 26 cents. Address
E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.
000

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Mustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Price 50 cents by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.
B. C. CHALLIS, 110 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Album Gems"—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most desirable Cards ever published—including the French Comic Girl Verses Beautifully Illustrated. Bombarding Charleston; Sinking with Love; Matrimony; Courtship; Girl Verses Boy; the 'Phi, etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 16 different cards.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT, a Powerful Stimulant. Each package is warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Mustaches on the smoothest face or chin. Any person using without stain or injury to the skin, or responsible for its use. Any person using it can have their money returned if forming one of their whiskers three months from day of purchase. Price $1 per package, sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money.
A. C. CLARK,
458-83 P. O. Drawer 138, Albany, N. Y.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.

For Nervous Debility, &c.,

Use "Conger's Concentrated Cure." The only reliable remedy. Price $1 per bottle, sent free by mail for $1. Send for Pamphlet—sent free. Address
C. E. CONGER & CO., 702 Broadway, N. Y.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.
009

Royal Havana Lottery.

In Drawing of December 2, 1864,

No. 26046	drew	$100,000
No. 17051	"	50,000
No. 11832	"	20,000
No. 13631	"	10,000
No. 13631	"	5,000

Being the five capital prizes.
Tickets, whole, $5; fractional part for prizes. Information furnished. Highest rates paid for information furnished.
Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
12 Wall St., N. Y.

$70 A MONTH! I want Agents everywhere, at $70 a month, expenses paid, to sell Wilcox & Gibbs' Sewing Machine. Full particulars free. Address STILES, TILNEY, Biddeford, Maine.
478-91

12 kinds of Album Gem Pictures in 7 Qr Colors are 60 cents. Agents wanted.
144 Sample mailed, postpaid, for $1. Assorted Toy 144 Samples mailed, postpaid, for $1. Assorted Toy Books for 30 cents, $2 per doz., postpaid.
J. L. V. PEMBOY,
477 and 39 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Hair Uprooted

From all parts of the body in five minutes, without injury to the skin, by "Dyrsen's Depilatory Powder," Mailed to any address for $1 50, by S. C. UPHAM, 48 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. 482-94

Christmas Holidays.
ONLY COME AND SEE

Turkeys that Weigh 30 Pounds.

The Choicest Poultry ever seen, and fitted especially for our Customers. Excelsior Hams, English Dairy, Cheshire and Double Gloucester Cheese. Choice Table Butter by the Single Package, Cheap.

MOORE & LEBERTON,
Produce and Provision Merchants, No. 40 Broad St., New York.

TRANSPARENT PLAYING CARDS

THE BEST THING OUT!

Can be used the same as any other Cards, and contains Full Count.
Sample pack, by mail, $1 per pack.

BEAUTIFUL SCENES.

Enclose $1 25 and three red stamps for sample pack. $12 per gross, twenty per cent. off by express.
J. ALLEN,
24 Nassau street, New York.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 300 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address "Lake Pleasant House," Oswego, N. Y.

C. S. Lea, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. His Celebrated "Remedy" for all female complaints.
Sample for $1 in part for a package.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New. Patent Fin Cushion, Universal Needle Threader, Indelible Pencil, Syringe, Cement, Piston Pins, Magic Tobacco Box, Gent's Vest Pocket Match Safe, Sewing Machine Oil, Gent's Vest Circular. Send stamp for
S. W. MICH & CO.,
14 Nassau Street, N. Y.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing $1 50 and stating where to the quality desired. Address
HOWARD BELT CO., 486 Broadway, N. Y.

WONDERFUL DEVELOPMENTS
In the use of Petroleum.

WOODWARD'S Patent Self-Adjusting LANTERN. Call and see the following advantages over any Lantern yet invented:
1st—The glass can be instantly removed for cleaning, or for repairs, when broken.
2d—The Patent Match Safe attached, and with the convenience of a Coat's Cotton Reel, gives a better light than any other Lantern.
3d—It is the best made and most convenient Lantern in use.
Send for Price List of Sizes and Descriptions. Liberal terms to the trade.
SAVAGE & LAIRD,
288 Broadway, N. Y.

$1 Whiskers. $1

For one dollar I will send, sealed and postpaid, the "Oriental Compound," highly perfumed, which I warrant to cause a heavy growth of hair upon the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon bald heads in six weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. If it does not, I will give more money refunded. Descriptive circulars free.
Address E. L. SANFORD, Lockport, N. Y.

HOW THE CANADIAN JUDGE FAILED TO SEE IT.

(Vide Trial of the St. Albans Robbers and Murderers, at Montreal.)

THE JANUARY NUMBER
OF THE

Atlantic Monthly

is just published, with articles in prose and poetry by BRYANT, LONGFELLOW, HAWTHORNE, LOWELL, HOLMES, WHITTIER, BAYARD TAYLOR, MRS. STOWE, and several others of the First American Writers.

Every number of this Magazine during the year will contain first-class articles from the best known writers in America. Terms, $4 00 a-year, single numbers 35 cents; clubs at a liberal discount. Subscriptions begin with January. The January number will be sent as a specimen for 25 cents. Address o TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

SOMETHING NEW.

The Patent Army Pocket Pipe and Cigar Holder combined, is decidedly the best Smoking Pipe ever invented. It imparts a rich soothing flavor to the Tobacco; is of elegant appearance and finish; with fine carved Horn Mouthpiece and Cigar Holder. It is easy to carry, easy to clean, and is always ready for a good smoke. Sample dozen sent free on receipt of $2 50. Address
RICHARDS & CO.,
o 97 William Street, New York.

INQUIRE FOR

TUCKER'S PATENT SPRING BEDS.

For sale by the Furniture Dealers generally through the United States. At wholesale by HIRAM TUCKER, 117 and 119 Court St., Boston, Mass. 481-9o

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S
PIANOFORTES.

99 & 101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. 478-84o

WARDS SHIRTS

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

French Flannel Overshirts.

Cut 38 inches long, $4 75 and $5 each. Sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 63 cents postage each shirt.

STEEL COLLARS

Enameled White, having all the comforts of linen collars. Washed and dried in a moment. A sample Collar mailed free on receipt of 75 cents. Cuffs $1 00 per pair. Ladies' Collars and Cuffs same price.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
otf No. 387 Broadway, New York.

BOOTS! BOOTS!! BOOTS!!!
FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICES
AT
NEELY'S FAMILY SHOE STORE,

No. 348 Bowery, corner of Great Jones street, who has on hand the Largest, Best and Cheapest assortment of Fall and Winter Goods in the city. o

TO CONSUMPTIVES.—You will get the Recipe for a sure Cure for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, and all Lung Complaints, by sending to DR. UNCAS BRANT, P.O. Box 3,531, New York. He sends it free. Write for it. It has cured thousands. 484-5o

REMINGTON'S

ARMY AND NAVY REVOLVER!

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
466-78 Ilion, N. Y.

N. Y. S. VOLUNTEER INSTITUTE.

$50,000 Worth of Real Estate.

50,000 Highly Embellished Steel-Plate Portraits of the President of the United States, Lieut.-Gen. Grant, Gen. McClellan and the Corps Commanders of our Army will be distributed among the subscribers to the N. Y. S. Volunteer Institute, for the education and support of the orphan children of our volunteers, on Washington's Birthday, Feb. 22d, 1865. Every person sending $2 by mail, addressed to CAPT. H. R. RANDALL, Treasurer, Post-Office Box No. 4262, New York City, will receive any one of these engravings and a certificate of subscription, which will entitle the holder to one share in this property, which will be distributed as stated. For further particulars, send for Circular.
COL. W. H. YOUNG, Prest.
O. A. THOMPSON, Sec. CAPT. H. R. RANDALL, Treas. o

FOR A FORTUNE
Address FRANKLIN S. M. CO., Box 302, Boston, Mas

THE UNIVERSAL PAPER COLLAR
TAINTER & JACKSON'S
PATENT, AUGUST 2ND 1864

The Trade supplied at No. 536 Pearl Street, New York. tf

Holiday Presents.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD-PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, White Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, with an accurate "Miniature Calendar," indicating the Day of the Week, Month, &c., in back case. A single one sent free, by mail, to any address, in neat case, WITH A BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN, for only $10.

A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with the Miniature Calendar, &c., specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers,
o 38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
GOLD MEDAL
Grand and Square
PIANOS,
BALTIMORE, Md.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, G. Satter, and other leading artists. Every Instrument warranted for five years.

Price lists promptly sent on application. WM. KNABE & CO.

A full assortment of the above celebrated instruments at J. BAUER & CO.'s Warerooms,
No. 544 Broadway, N. Y.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.

In addition to our main business of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we are Headquarters for the following, viz:

STEREOSCOPES & STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,

Of these we have an immense assortment, including War Scenes American and Foreign Cities and Landscapes, Groups, Statuary etc., etc. Also, Revolving Stereoscopes, for public or private exhibition. Our Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of Stamp.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS.

We were the first to introduce these into the United States, and we manufacture immense quantities in great variety, ranging in price from 50 cents to $50 each. Our ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any others. They will be sent by mail, FREE, on receipt of price.

FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

Our Catalogue now embraces over FIVE THOUSAND different subjects (to which additions are continually being made) of Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., viz: about

100 Major-Generals, 100 Lieut.-Colonels, 550 Statesmen,
200 Brig.-Generals, 250 Other Officers, 130 Divines,
275 Colonels, 75 Navy Officers, 125 Authors,
40 Artists, 125 Stage, 50 Prominent Women,
3,000 Copies of Works of Art,

including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statues, etc. Catalogues sent on receipt of Stamp. An order for One Dozen PICTURES from our Catalogue will be filled on the receipt of $1.80, and sent by mail, FREE.

Photographers and others ordering goods C. O. D. will please remit twenty-five per cent. of the amount with their order.

The prices and quality of our goods cannot fail to satisfy.

Soldiers' Pocket Album for 18 pictures, 75 cents.

o

Friends.—Send a Stamp for information and my Circulars. Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both sexes—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. o

FREE READING!

Soldiers, Sailors, Marines, Everybody—send us your address. Will, in return, send you a large family newspaper, replete with good miscellaneous reading matter. Sent Gratis.
484-6o CHAS. E. MACKEY, 81 Nassau St., N. Y.

GOLD PENS.

If you want the best Pen ever used send to Johnson for Circular giving exact sizes and prices. Pens from $1 to $5, to suit every hand and pocket. Pens Repointed, by mail, for 50 cents.
E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office,
o478-9o 15 Maiden Lane, New York.

A WATCH FREE

And $15 or $20 per Day made Easy. A New Sensation. Our Great Novelty, the WONDERFUL PRIZE PORTFOLIOS.

FOR THE HOLIDAY TRADE.

Just out and creating an immense sensation and Extraordinary Demand throughout the Army and Country; there is nothing like them. Sales Enormous; profits immense. Each Portfolio, Extra Large Size, 6 by 10, contains an innumerable quantity of useful and valuable goods, PRIZES, etc., worth Several Dollars, and sells for only 25 cents. Articles that no Soldier or Family can possibly do without. Thousands Sold Every Day. Soldiers can clear a Month's Pay in a Single Day. Agents Wanted in Every Camp and Village. A Beautiful Gold or Silver WATCH Presented free as a Premium to Every Agent. This is the Greatest money-making Business of the Day. We Guarantee any agent $15 per Day. Premiums sent with Goods same day the order is received. Catalogues containing Extra Premium inducements sent by mail free. S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y., Sole Manufacturers. o

$20 to $30 per Day Profit,
Realised by "Sutlers and Agents," by the sale of the

5,000 DOZEN SELF-ADJUSTING Enameled White, from $3 to $9 per Dozen. Samples at 30 cts., 50 cts., 75 cts., $1; Snow White, Linen Finished, Illusion Stitched and Corrugated, $1 25; Suitable Tie, $1.

Gents' Steel Cuffs, $2 50; Ladies', $1 50; Collar, $2. Mailed on receipt of price and "size."

JEANERET, Agent for the Patentees, 78 Nassau St., New York.

Ladies, use no more Rouge for your complexion. It can deceive no one, no matter how well applied. If you would have sparkling eyes, rosy cheeks, a complexion of dazzling beauty, follow my directions.
Address, enclosing $1, O. L. BARING,
483-6o Box No. 5588, N. Y. P. O.

LADIES' LETTER.

FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS

Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.
o Address Box 4652, New York Post Office.

BOYS AND GIRLS

Should all subscribe for the New Illustrated Magazine,

Our Young Folks

MAYNE REID, MRS. STOWE, TROWBRIDGE, GAIL HAMILTON, LUCY LARCOM, EDMUND KIRKE, OLIVER OPTIC, DIO LEWIS, GRACE GREENWOOD, "CARLETON," "AUNT FANNY," and many other popular writers for the young will write for it.

IT IS FULL OF NICE PICTURES.

The price is only $2 00 a year, and much less to Clubs. Any boy or girl can form a club. The first number sent as a specimen for Ten Cents. Address
TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.
Send for a circular. o

WARD'S PATENT
FRENCH PRINTED PAPER COLLARS
387 B'WAY, N.Y. & ALL
GENTS FURNISHING STORES.

Send 20 Cents

For January No. ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, containing Portraits, Biographies and Characters of Poets, Philosophers, Warriors, Civilians, Murderers, the good and the bad, the high and the low. To secure the PICTORIAL DOUBLE NUMBER, with PHYSIOGNOMY, ETHNOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY and PSYCHOLOGY, send at once. Single No. 20 cents. For the year, $2. Please address
Messrs. FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.
483-4o

FURNITURE FOR THE HOLIDAYS!
AT
FR. KRUTINA'S
MANUFACTORY AND WAREROOMS,
Nos. 96 and 98 East Houston St.,
Between Bowery and 2d Avenue.
481-4o

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 TIMES, mailed to any address for 50 cts. THREE of different powers for $1. Address
0000 F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

A Happy New Year!

FINE LIQUORS FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

WINES AND BRANDIES from the London Docks.
IRISH AND SCOTCH WHISKEY, of that age and quality for which the Subscriber's importations are so celebrated.
DUFF GORDON SHERRIES, }
HENNESSY'S BRANDIES, } from London Docks.
OSBORN PORT WINES, }
JAMAICA RUM, }
Selected with great care, will stamp this house amongst the most reliable in the city for fine liquors.
JOHN McAULIFFE & CO., Importers,
41 and 43 Nassau street; 13 Fulton street,
Fulton Market, and Branches.
SOME RARE OLD BOURBON. o

GREAT CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY!

And receive a Watch FREE, by selling our great

NOVELTY AND NATIONAL PRIZE PACKETS,

New Packets just issued for the Holiday Trade. Each package contains over a Dollar's worth of valuable Stationery and Jewellery—besides one Certificate in the great sale of $650,000 of Watches, Diamonds and Jewellery. Thousands of these packets can be sold.

We want an Agent in every town and camp, thus making a profitable business for a smart man in each place.

SPLENDID GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES

given to our Agents. $17 will obtain 100 Packets and a fine Silver Watch. Circulars mailed free. Sample Packet and Certificate sent on receipt of 50 cents.
G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
483-4o No. 86 Beekman Street, N. Y.

Use of Tobacco, in all its forms, Cured and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
481-93o JAS. DAY & SON, New Haven, Conn.

Vineland Lands. To all wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlements mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $25 to $35 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacteries and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.

From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural editor of the Tribune:
"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER

Is the latest improvement in Fire-Arms, combining great power and effectiveness with compactness, durability, and convenience, both for operating and carrying. Is the most effective POCKET REVOLVER in the world.

Is loaded, without removing the cylinder, with CENTRAL FIRE WATERPROOF COPPER SHELL CARTRIDGE. The Cartridge is sure fire, the shell easily ejected after firing. The cylinder never fouls. Is but 7 inches extreme length, 32-100th ball, six shot and weighs but 14 ounces. For sale by the trade.
GEO. A. HICKCOX, 54 Cliff Street, New York.

CERTIFICATE.

I have thoroughly tested the new "National Revolver," and find it an effective weapon, of sure fire and convenient size. At fifty yards I think I could with this pistol kill at every shot. I take pleasure in recommending it as a weapon in every way desirable. In company with Captain Scott, Provost-Marshal, and other officers, I fired this pistol a large number of times, and not one cartridge failed to explode.
JOHN CHARLESTON, Chief of Police, Cairo, Il,
o (Signed)

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 485—VOL. XIX.] NEW YORK, JANUARY 14, 1865. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY. 10 WEEKS $1 00.

The New Year.

To the numerous readers of this journal, in the four quarters of the globe, we extend the grateful salutation of "a happy New Year, and many returns of the day." As our estimates of the future are founded upon our experience of the past, so we are hopeful of wonderful and glorious things from the year before us, because of the great things which during the year that is gone have been achieved in behalf of the suppression of the rebellion, and the restoration of the Union, upon the broad basis of a solid, comprehensive and enduring peace.

If the reader who has a file of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER at hand, for the year 1864, will turn to the month of January, and, beginning there, pass over the leaves of only half a dozen numbers, his memory will be sufficiently refreshed to comprehend where we stood one year ago and where we stand to-day. Then, our victorious grand army in the West, firmly established at Chattanooga, was preparing for those important movements, which since, under Gen. Sherman's immediate direction, have carried "the old flag" from Lookout mountain down to Atlanta, from Atlanta to Milledgeville, and thence, as on a holi-

Six hundred and fifty dead in a trench.

Forts commanding Fox and its approaches.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—THE PRISON PEN AT MILLEN, GA., IN WHICH OUR PRISONERS WERE CONFINED.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—VIEW OF THE CITY OF SAVANNAH, GA., LOOKING SOUTHWEST.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

day excursion, to Savannah, and the occupation of that pretty little Southern seaport city. Thus the great enterprises of the Georgia campaign, which to Grant and Sherman in January last were but dimly developed, and subject to a thousand contingencies, are now among the enduring records of history. This day last year, the rebel army of Virginia lay entrenched in fancied security on the line of the Rapidan river, midway between Washington and Richmond. Now, that army, shut up within the fortifications of Richmond and Petersburg, will be lucky, indeed, if it shall contrive to save itself by abandoning the so-called Confederate capital, which it was appointed to defend to the last extremity.

The reverses to the Union arms of the last twelve months, excepting the affair at Olustee, Florida, and the disastrous repulse of the Red river expedition, are trifling, compared with the long catalogue of our brilliant and substantial victories, under Grant's immediate command, under Sherman, Sheridan, Thomas, Stoneman, Burbridge and others of the army; and Farragut, Porter, Lee, Dahlgren, Cushing and others of the navy. The rebel army of Georgia under Hood has been literally torn to pieces; the "Confederacy" has been cut in twain between Chattanooga and Savannah; and from the great advantages gained and positions secured by our enveloping armies, the "Confederacy" to which Jeff Davis, in a military view, is now actually reduced lies between Richmond and the Savannah river, and is bounded on the west by the Alleghany mountains, and on the east by "Lincoln's blockade." We are also reminded, in this connection, of the fact, that including the buccaneering Alabama and Florida, the rebel rams and gunboats captured or destroyed in Mobile bay, in the Savannah river, and in the waters of Albemarle Sound, there has been such destruction of the nondescript water craft of Davis, as to make his Navy Department a mockery and a useless incumbrance.

To sum up—such have been the successes and advances of the land and naval forces of the Union during the past year, from the Rapidan to the Rio del Norte, and from the Missouri in the North-west to the Ogeechee in the South-east, and such are now our military advantages, in men, means and facilities of all kinds, in positions, and in all the signs and assurances of complete success, that we feel safe in predicting that the year 1865 will mark that new national epoch of prosperity and power which the final triumph over Davis is destined to inaugurate. This is what we anticipate during the present year from the encouraging successes and advantages gained through the year that is past.

Special Notice.

THE New Year presents a fitting opportunity for subscribing to FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER, the oldest, the best and most interesting Illustrated Paper on this continent, and even excelling the London Illustrated News in its enterprise and general attractions. Not content, as other Illustrated Papers have been, to rely upon volunteer and chance contributors, we have a trained corps of the first artists, foreign and American, who accompany every expedition, naval and military, with orders to forward their sketches at every opportunity and without reference to expense. We have had, since the commencement of the war, over 80 artists in the field, and have published over 3,000 pictures of battles, sieges and other military operations. At the present juncture, when so many important movements are in progress, it is especially essential that the public should be correctly informed; and to accomplish this object, FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER has Special Artists with Grant, Butler, Sherman, Sheridan, Porter, Farragut and Thomas, as well as with all other armies now in the field. It is also the only Illustrated Paper in America whose contents are purely original, its stories not being copied from European periodicals, but written for it by the most popular authors of the day. Every number contains an original poem, appropriately illustrated—an original story with two illustrations, besides shorter original stories, &c.

TERMS FOR

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months	$1 00
One copy, six months	2 00
One copy, one year	4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	15 00
Five copies, one year	20 00
(With an extra copy gratis to the person sending a club of five.)
One copy of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper and one copy of Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine (the most complete Lady's Book published) for one year	7 00

Address
FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

IT is asserted that the cock and the fox took the least baggage with them into Noah's ark; the one carrying only a co[illegible] brush,

Barnum's American Museum.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Performances nearly every hour, commencing at 11 A.M. The new and gorgeous spectacle, RING OF FATE; or, FIRE, AIR, EARTH AND WATER, produced at an expense of over $7,000, the most magnificent scenery, the most brilliant costumes, the most superb appointments, ever introduced upon the Museum stage. WOODROFFE'S BOHEMIAN GLASS BLOWERS, with Two GLASS STEAM ENGINES in full operation. Three Fat Girls, Three Giants, Two Dwarfs, Albino Boy, Grand Aquaria, Living Otters, Kangaroos, French Moving Figures, Wax Figures, and a million other curiosities.

Admission 30 cents; Children under ten, 15 cents.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This annual contains a greater amount of useful and entertaining information than any publication of the kind ever issued. It is indeed the only Lady's Illustrated Almanac published. It is embellished with over 70 beautiful engravings, by the finest Artists of the day, executed in the highest style of art. It contains directions for the parlor, ball-room, boudoir, store-room, kitchen, garden, nursery and sick-room. In a word, it is the matron's vade mecum, as well as the young lady's companion, and it should be found in every household. In addition to general illustrations, it contains splendid portraits of Mrs. Lincoln and Mrs. McClellan, exquisitely engraved on steel, and a graphic Bathing-Scene at Long Branch, printed on fine paper. This complete Lady's Manual—which contains more reading matter than an octavo volume—costs only 50 cents. It will be sent, postage free, on receipt of the price, either in currency or postage stamps. Address

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This valuable work is far superior to its prototype, the London Illustrated Almanac, and much cheaper. It contains valuable information, National, Historical, Political, Statistical, Astronomical and Useful, besides upwards of 50 beautiful Illustrations by the first European and American Artists, engraved in the highest style of art. It is also embellished with four splendid Lithographic Portraits, printed on fine paper, of Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Admiral Farragut, from recent photographs. Price 50 cents.

Messrs. WM. KNABE & CO., BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.

GENTLEMEN—I have great pleasure in certifying that I have tried your Square Pianos and find them equal, if not superior, to any in this country. Among the great qualities which distinguish them, is the evenness of tone, the easy and agreeable touch and volume of tone. Wishing you all the success which you so highly deserve, I am, sirs,

Yours, very truly, S. THALBERG.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,

537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 14, 1865.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

To Correspondents.

THE columns of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER are always open for contributions from good writers.

All communications will be promptly considered; and liberal prices will be paid for all manuscripts that are deemed worthy of acceptance.

Interesting stories, lively sketches, and poems of a high order of merit, if not too long, will be received with favor.

Short stories, fraught with incident, character and dramatic effect, are always preferable to long ones.

All manuscripts should be legibly written, on good paper, and on only one side of the sheets. Manuscripts written on both sides will be declined without examination.

Correspondents are requested to write their names and addresses, legibly and in full, on each manuscript that they send to this office.

Persons wishing the return of rejected manuscripts, by mail, must, in all cases, forward stamps for the prepayment of postage.

Articles that have appeared in other publications are sometimes copied and sent to this office as original contributions. This detestable species of fraud and imposition will be exposed in these columns, whenever detected, and, if possible, will be pursued and punished by legal process.

THE following manuscripts are respectfully declined, and are retained at this office, subject to the order of their owners:

"True Love that did Run Smooth:" "Ennerslie Hall:" "Chronicles of Giggletown:" "Blue Monday:" "Poor Little Hepzibah:" "Our Bud's Temptation:" "Diamond Cut Diamond:" "An Appeal:" "Church Jokes:" "Three Thanksgivings:" "First Love:" "Oskeewan the Scout:" "May Somers:" "My Heroine:" "Lost and Found:" "Poverty, a Woman's Wail:" "Harry Clare's Revenge:" "Born to be Loved:" "Lulie Montague's Mischief:" "Seeing the Service:" "The Conspiracy:" "Oakdale Home:" "Fatally Wounded:" "Sketch from Real Life:" "Story of Lima:" "Old Heads vs. Young Hearts:" "The French Doctor's Story:" "Cruiser:" "Teacher and Pupil:" "Maude's Confession:" "Seven of Us:" "Angels Love of Devereux:" "Adeline—a Tale of Old Times:" "Love of Harry Brown:" "Knight of the Peerless Feet:" "Flora Parks:" "A Romance of the War:" "Old Dan." "The Peter—Homeward Bound:" "Wishing:" "Anita Summers:" "Demoulins—a Tale of Lyons:" "Voices of the Night:" "Ida Clifton's Recantation:" "Arithmetic:" "Jessy Merlin:" "The Maid at the Foot of the Hill:" "Ashford—or the Lady in Gray:" "The Actress:" "Kitty Ransom's Troubles:" "Central Park:" "Orphan Annie:" "My Confession:" "Will Not Mind:" "Shall We Love Again?" "Chit-Chat with Ladies:" "Missing Miniature:" "Address on the War, by Obadiah Sneezehard:" "A Novel Courtship:" "Maud Leonard's Heart:" "Zelobia the Maid of Algiers:" "Afloat:" "A True Story:" "Lucretia Sherwood's Story:" "The Blind Fawn:" "Hubert's Treasure:" "Aunt Wentworth:" "Lost and Found:" "Leclure, or the Royal Election:" "Gertrude—a Tale of the Lower Rhine:" "Zerelda:" "Autumn Winds:" "The Mystic Laundress:" "The Pendletons:" "Oakland:" "An Extraordinary Dissertation:" "Sam the Pirate—a Tale of the Rebellion:" "Claude Raymond's Second Love:" "Amy Leslie; or, the Serpent's Trail:" "The Fisherman:" "The Broken Marriage:" "The Crocus:" "The Wife's Devotion:" "The Governess:" "Don't Judge by Appearances:" "Squire Mayberry's Daughters:" "Stolen from the Grave:" "Leipsic and its Fair:" "The Recaptured Colors:" "War's Votaries:" "Married Life vs. Single Blessedness:" "Prophecies:" "Twice Loving:" "Beyond:" "Waiting:" "A Cure for Snoring:" "A Leap Year Proposal:" "Cousin John:" "Clara Mayne:" "Reminiscences of an Old Fogy:" "About the time of the Dispute:" "The Broken Fan:" "The Dead of Palo Alto:" "The Bracelet:" "Game to the Death:" "Blasted Hopes—a Tale of Blood:" "A Life's Value:" "Bertha Thompson:" "Three Twilights:" "A Slave:" "Clouds and Sunshine:" "All About a Purse:" "My Heroic Aunt:" "Bitter Sweet:" "The Brother's Sacrifice:" "Portagé des Sioux:" "The Night Alarm:" "The Price of a Country." "The Poetry of Nature:" "The Soldier's Parting:" "How I got Wived:" "Forgotten:" "In the Cool of the Fall:" "The Animals in Central Park:" "Lines on a Contraband:" "Canfield:" "Hail, Soothing Pipe:" "The Incendiary:" "Popping the Question:" "Bonnet Reflections:" "Lines to a Love-Lorn Friend:" "The Dance and the Jewel:" "Stanzas to A. M.:" "Wants:" "Come to Festal Boards To-night:" "Despair:" "The Heir's Sacrifice:" "A Tale of Love:" "The Laurel Tree:" "The Treasures of the Sea:" "Sketches of the Wilderness:" "The Polish Insurgent's Story:" "A Night of Fear and Trembling:" "The Highland Wife's Prayer:" "Shadrack Birch:" "A Vigil with the Dead:" "Lover's Leap:" "I'd Have Thee Mine:" "Together:" "Work:" "Greeting to the Stars."

The Wilmington Expedition.

THE public expectations in connection with the great Wilmington expedition have been somewhat roughly shaken. The copious details given in Admiral Porter's report of the operations of his squadron, and the co-operating land forces on the 24th and 25th of Dec., lead us, however, to the impression that if Fort Fisher (an extensive earthwork) was not taken on Christmas Day, it might have been, had Gen. Weitzel and Gen. Butler only been of the same mind as the Admiral. The fort was completely silenced and kept silent under his terrible bombardment, two of its magazines were blown up, two of its guns were dislodged, and yet under the withering fire of the fleet several of our soldiers penetrated into the fort, one of them bringing off the rebel flag from the parapet, and another a horse captured from a rebel orderly inside. We share in the regret of Admiral Porter that there were not more of our gallant soldiers concerned in this adventure; for we believe with him that the fort could have been easily captured, although, like him, we do not pretend to set up our opinion against that of so brave and experienced a soldier and engineer as Gen. Weitzel. He says that the fort was not seriously injured, and suggests that, with the suspension of the fire of the fleet to enable the land forces to make a charge, the enemy would have returned to their guns and raked to destruction the assaulting column with grape and canister. In reply to this, Admiral Porter says that he could protect the assaulting column till within twenty yards of the work, a distance which surely could have been passed by our men before the enemy could have returned from their bombproofs to their guns.

We leave, however, the conflicting opinions of Admiral Porter and Gen. Butler to be settled by wiser military heads than ours, though in the meantime we find it difficult to resist the matter-of-fact arguments of the gallant Admiral. Had Gen. Butler remained with his land forces another day or two, he would have been convinced, perhaps, of the soundness of the Admiral's judgment; but it appears that the General was required by positive orders from the General-in-Chief to lose no further time in returning with his troops to Fortress Monroe. It may be, therefore, that in this apparently premature abandonment of the operations against Fort Fisher by Gen. Butler, there was a greater design in view by Gen. Grant, and that its development will afford a satisfactory explanation of the proceedings below Wilmington, which have so sadly perplexed Admiral Porter and everybody else outside the councils of the army.

The Gold Question.

WE are beginning to be apprehensive that Mr. Secretary Fessenden is in a bad way, and that the two houses of Congress, instead of putting their shoulders to the wheel in order to extricate the Treasury from its embarrassments, are looking to Hercules for a rescue, or waiting, like that model confidence man, Micawber, for "something to turn up." It is a remarkable and suggestive fact, that while the decline in gold upon the heels of a great Union victory, or a succession of victories, is now sluggish, fluctuating, and of short duration, it rebounds upward ag[illegible]n ten, fifteen, or twenty per cent. in a day or t[illegible] upon mere presumptions of a Union defeat. [illegible] instance, the terrible chastisements adminis[illegible] to the rebel army under Hood in Tenness[illegible]ough followed by Sherman's magnificent "Ch[illegible]as gift" to the Government of the city [illegible]vannah, brought down the price of gold [illegible] to 214, where it touched bottom, while [illegible] failure from a two days' bombardment to ca[illegible]ture a powerful bombproof rebel earthwo[illegible] on the North Carolina coast is followed [illegible] rapid rise in gold to 226.

Now we cannot avoid the suspicio[illegible] Mr. Fessenden's various [illegible]shinni[illegible] pedients to raise money may be a[illegible] this manifest upward tendency of gold, in spite the encouraging successes and prospects of the war. He surely cannot expect anything else than a continuous decline in the national currency, when, in addition to a new loan of two hundred millions upon a new species of interest calculated to disturb the public confidence, he threatens another chilling shower of "greenbacks." This business, in order to rescue the Treasury and the country from the dangers of an incurable depression in the national currency and credit, demands the immediate intervention of Congress. It is only through the suppression of the rebellion, and in the restoration of peace, that permanent relief can be obtained; but, in the meantime, Congress may materially lighten the burden upon Mr. Fessenden's shoulders, and so materially relieve the people of this fearful pressure resulting from the upward tendency of gold and prices of all the necessaries of life, to the embarrassment of the Treasury, and all branches of trade and industry. We desire the permanent relief of an early peace; but Congress should not play meantime the part of Micawber, while Mr. Fessenden is vainly struggling to keep his head above water. The relief of the Treasury should be the first business in order with the re-assembling of the two Houses.

Summary of the Week.

THE EXPEDITION TO WILMINGTON.

THE grand expedition to capture Wilmington, under the command of Gen. Butler and Commodore Porter, has not fulfilled its mission; the land portion having, under Gen. Butler, returned to Fortress Monroe. Omitting unimportant details, the record is this: On Friday night, the 23d of Dec., the powder-boat Louisiana, upon which so much was depended, was towed as near as possible to Fort Fisher and exploded. The result appears to have been a total failure. It neither shook down the fortifications nor fired the magazines within the fort. Early on Saturday morning the fleet under Admiral Porter opened fire upon the fort, silenced some of its guns, and was thought to have done considerable damage to it inside. During the fire, six of our 100-pound Parrott guns, on as many vessels, burst, killing and wounding several. In the meantime Fort Fisher responded very feebly. At nightfall the fleet withdrew to a safe anchorage. During the darkness of the night a portion of the army, led by Gen. Weitzel, landed above the fort, and next morning—Sunday, Christmas Day—the attack was renewed, this time by both land and sea forces. During the attack a few of our men actually penetrated into the fort and carried off the rebel flag. It seems strange that what these could do the whole could not. The plan evidently had been to storm the fort, but upon a consultation between Gen. Butler and Gen. Weitzel, Gen. Butler ordered the troops to be re-embarked and return to Fortress Monroe. Admiral Porter's report betrays considerable dissatisfaction. By the last accounts he remained off Wilmington.

GEORGIA.

The city of Savannah has received its magnanimous foe with so much apparent good feeling, that the Richmond papers are very severe upon "the large number of Northern men in that place." Gen. Sherman had sent a powerful force in a southwestern direction, but that was all that was known about it. The supposition was that it was intended for Andersonville. It was also concluded that it was his intention to advance upon Richmond by way of Columbia and Raleigh, and join his army to Grant's in a grand attack upon the rebel capital.

TENNESSEE.

A dispatch from Columbia states that Hood had succeeded in getting the remnant of his army to the south side of the Tennessee river, at Florence, Alabama. Very little fighting had occurred between the two armies since the rebels had crossed Duck river, as they were in rapid retreat, and had never once made a stand. The result was that Hood's army, which numbered 45,000 when it fought the battle of Franklin, had been reduced to about 17,000.

Later accounts throw doubt upon Hood having crossed the Tennessee river, but all accounts agree in the utter rout of his army.

SOUTH-WESTERN VIRGINIA.

Gen. Burbridge in his official report gives a very interesting and satisfactory account of the recent expedition through North-eastern Tennessee and South-western Virginia by the forces under himself, Gen. Stoneman and Gen. Gillem. They started from Bean's-station, East Tennessee, on the 12th inst., defeated the rebels under Breckinridge, Duke and Vaughn in several engagements, scattering them in different directions, killing, wounding and capturing a large number of them, taking from them many pieces artillery. Bristol, in Tennessee, and Abingdon, Wytheville, Glade Springs, Saltville and other towns in Virginia, were taken. The lead mines near Wytheville and the salt works at Saltville were left in ruins, and Gen. Burbridge says the rebels cannot place them again in working order during the war. Several engines and trains of cars, immense quantities of rebel stores and [illegible]mmunition, and all the railroad bridges and [illegible]pots were captured and destroyed, and the [illegible]oad track for miles was tore up.

VIRGINIA.

[illegible]re has been a total lull in the military opera[illegible]s in the armies before Richmond and Peters[illegible]g. It seems certain that Lee sent about 10,000 [illegible]en from his army to reinforce Bragg at Wilmington. Whether this will lead to any attack upon the rebel lines a few days will decide.

From Fortress Monroe a force was sent last week, consisting of 500 cavalry and 300 colored infantry, to Lancaster, where they captured about 50 deserters and bounty-jumpers, and 30 rebel guerillas.

TOWN GOSSIP.

THE holidays are over, and once more New York settles into apathy for a year. By this we mean that it is only once in a twelvemonth that the city loses its balance, and dismissing business, only as far as it may be connected with the period, gives way to hilarity and mirth.

In lte enjoyment of the New Year holidays, New York le a singular city, differing from any other upon the face of the earth. It makes s pleasure of its business and a business of ito pleasure. Upon the recurrence of the New Year day, Young New York professes to exchange the compliments of the season with the lady part of the congregation. This is to be done by calling upon the fair ones, wishing them a "Happy New Year!" taking a bite, drinking a glass of wine, or other fluid, chatting generally and individually for awhile, and then repeating the same in another quarter. To do this properly, according to old time method, certainly not less than half an hour should be consumed, but modern intellectual advancement has entirely altered this programme. The matter has now become an affair of business and competition, and he who can make the most calls or she who can receive the most is essentially the smartest, and has something to boast of for the rest of the season. The result is that Mr. Smith Jones rehearses especially for terseness and positive effects in condensed limits. He improvises nothing, but before starting upon his round of New Year calls he argues with himself thus:

"Now, then, Jones, it is necessary that you should make exactly 225 calls this day, and you have exactly 12 hours to make them in, or from 10 A. M. till 10 P. M. This is a period of precisely 720 minutes, or a fraction over three minutes to each call. A good team and intelligent driver, with systematic arrangement of my list will somewhat simplify the affair, but tact and business dispatch on my part, stern virtue and reticence will accomplish the rest."

Under this idea Mr. Smith Jones practises diligently for the routine. He has exactly one minute and a quarter in each house for conversation, compliments, cream, casualties and coffee, for certainly nothing stronger in the drinking way will he do, and about two minutes for transportation from point to point. He must not allow himself a waste word. He rehearses e shibholeth, and it runs somewhat in this way: "Ah! Miss Petrolia. Happy New Year! Very happy to see you. Excuse my haste, have 384 calls yet to make, and" (looking at his watch) "it is now four o'clock. How beautiful you look. Really, could spend hours looking at you, but duty—duty, you know, calls. Not a drop, not a drop! Well! Well! with you, then." Here's the old sentiment: "A Happy New Year! There's nothing better. Next year hope to find you dispensing your smiles and loveliness under another name in another domicile. Farewell! Bless you!" and exit. And all this takes precisely 52 seconds to get over, leaving 23 seconds to the credit of an entrance and exit, which can, with proper care, be gracefully done in that time.

Then there is the lady's duty. One thing is certain she can never work well alone. The gentleman can dispatch more business in a given time by himself, because of the unreliability of human nature and the possibility that his travelling companion may yield to temptation and meeting a new face be desirous of making an impression, and by such weakness create delay; but with the lady it is different. "They come like shadows, so depart," and it is necessary to systematize the thing as would be done in any great commercial establishment. There must be talking ladies, helping ladies, an accountant, whose business it shall be to have perpetual tablets in her hand, to hook calls, and reckon them up, and a general superintendent with 40 eyes to see that every customer is satisfied—charmed, and carried through in a blaze of fireworks, that shall be sufficient to take up the whizz from the last call and carry it triumphantly to the next.

Between these opposing points there is perpetual feud. The old and well posted caller prefers to come alone, because he knows he can dispatch business better, but the ladies receiving prefer to have him bring all his friends, knowing that they can dispatch a dozen in as short a time and with as little fatigue as one, and have the glory of entering that number upon their inevitable list, instead of the unit.

With various interlineations and variations this is the history of New Year's Day in New York, and yet we have been positively assured by many, on whose truth we can rely, that they really enjoy it.

Running over the variety of topics worthy of discussion we select as that deserving precedence—petroleum, and announce the important fact that "ile has been struck" within three miles of New York. This Oil Dorado has been discovered upon the farm of a certain gentleman of German persuasion, by name of Shenklebaum, as the bee flies, three miles from Hoboken. How many barrels this vein has produced to date is kept a profound secret, but so far the excitement is unprecedented, and an individual of Milesian proclivities, who retails whiskey in the neighborhood, has declared his undying faith in the indications, and on the strength of his asseverations several companies are organising, and any one anxious to go into petroleum can have a chance of doing so without feeling that their investment lies as far away as Oil Creek or Western Virginia.

Setting all joking aside, there is wondrous wealth—more than we can yet realise—in this petroleum excitement. It has a solid foundation, and any enterprise got up honestly to work it out must succeed up to the most sanguine wishes of its projectors. The only thing to fear in the whole matter is the inducements and untruths of bogus companies, without the first acre of land to sustain them, who seek only to sell their stock. There are some recently instituted companies an investment in which we would regard with as much belief in its safety as though put down in Broadway real estate, and among the first we would mention the "New York and Liverpool Petroleum Company." Their capital is $1,000,000 at $10 per share, or $5 paid, and the name of their president, the Hon. Daniel S. Dickinson, is a guarantee for the proper business conduct of the affair. They have over 2,000 acres of land in the richest districts, producing splendidly, and though an entirely new company they are already paying large dividends.

The daily press for some weeks past has been careful to inform us that our Government has, with a desire to ameliorate suffering as far as possible, entered into an agreement with the rebel Government to allow them to supply their prisoners in our hands with certain necessary articles. To achieve this we liberated one of their Generals from limbo that he may superintend the matter, and immediately, with characteristic belief in not hiding his light under a bushel, we find the said General opening a depot at No. 75 Murray street, near Broadway, and displaying a large sign, on which is displayed the gentleman's—we suppose a Confederate General must be a gentleman—name, and the further announcement that he is "Agent to Supply Prisoners of War." To our mind there is something especially odd in this, and a strong argument in favor of the European theory that we only view this war as a pastime, and that any change is a change, that, like child's play, is a change for the better.

In amusements there is absolutely nothing now, the last week's stock lasting through the holidays, rehashed and served up cold.

As connected with Wallack's, we give this item cut from the New York Herald, without commenting on its exquisite taste:

A meeting of the theatrical managers of New York was held at the Everett House, Dec. 30th, when it was Resolved: "That as a tribute of respect to the memory of James W. Wallack, who did more than any one of his time to advance and elevate the Drama, and who equally as a gentleman, a manager, and an artist, was for so many years the bright particular ornament of our profession, and also as a mark of sincere sympathy and regard for his son, John L. Wallack, the worthy inheritor of his cultivated taste and refined feeling, the managers of all the other theatres in New York will attend in a body at Wallack's Theatre, on Tuesday evening, Jan. 3d, being the occasion of the first appearance of Mr. John L. Wallack in a position in which we feel assured he will preserve the traditional honors that surround his name."

Oscanyan has opened his long promised Turkish Hall at 720 Broadway, and in giving New York an original entertainment, and one that if it does not succeed, will only argue that we lack taste and appreciation sadly. Mr. Oscanyan puts Turkish life before us in every phrase, and to the sound of good music, gives us Turkish song, and dance, prayer, siesta, shopping and domesticity. He has pretty women and gorgeous costumes, well painted scenery, and a pleasant delivery, and as a consequence fills his snug little hall nightly with a first-class discriminating audience.

NEW BOOKS.

THE "Country Parson"—the Rev. A. K. H. Boyd—has won a wide reputation in this country of late by his pleasant, thoughtful essays, which are published, in several handsome volumes, by Messrs. Ticknor & Fields, of Boston. Another volume has recently been added to this edition, entitled Autumn Holidays. It comprises essays on familiar topics—the seaside, the garden, books and men—and is marked by the same sound common sense and the same simplicity of style that have commended its predecessors.

Messrs. Ticknor & Fields, by the way, have successfully started their magazine for juvenile readers, called Our Young Folks, a handsome pamphlet, comprising many agreeable articles, by S. T. Trowbridge, Mrs. H. B. Stowe, Lucy Larcom, Capt. Mayne Reid, and other popular writers. In this periodical we discern the same spirit of enterprise which animates the famous Boston publishers in their conduct of the North American Review and the Atlantic. The January number of the latter magazine contains articles by Longfellow, Hawthorne, Whittier, Lowell, Bryant and other authors, and is one of the best specimens of periodical literature that we have ever chanced to examine.

WHIST is one of the natural recreations of a winter evening at the fireside in this holiday season, and hence Messrs. Dick & Fitzgerald have opportunely chosen their time to publish a work that has long been needed, called The American Hoyle. It describes all the games with cards that are in use in this country, giving rules for playing, and useful illustrative diagrams. It is the first complete work on the popular games of America that has ever been published; and by its comprehensive thoughtfulness and fidelity to details, it cannot fail to win its way into general favor.

Messrs. Dick & Fitzgerald have also published a neat pamphlet edition of Mr. W. H. Ainsworth's interesting historical novel, The Constable of the Tower.

FEW persons read new volumes of verse, which is a wise dispensation of nature. Critical readers, however, may possibly wish to make exception in favor of Mr. J. W. Montclair's Real and Ideal, a collection of poems, published, in very neat style, by Mr. F. Leypoldt, of Philadelphia. The real name of the author, we believe, is J. W. Weidemeyer. His poems evince scholarship, if not inspiration.

A VERY agreeable book for children is The Young Crusoe, by Dr. Harley, published in Boston by Messrs. Walker, Wise & Co. It is written in a style of clear and graceful simplicity such as we rarely meet with in works of this class, while the moral and indeed Christian tone of the work (which is by no means overdrawn) renders it an unexceptionable volume for the youthful reader. At the same time the adventures of Felix Francœur, the young Crusoe, are extremely interesting as well as sufficiently probable to justify belief. The woodcuts are also of a superior class, and merit being noticed from their general sufficiency and talent. They are from the establishment of John Andrews, of Boston, which alone might be considered a sufficient endorsement of their excellence. We cordially recommend this elegant volume as a suitable Christmas gift or purchase.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—We are much obliged to Purser W. D. Bempstead, of the S. S. George Cromwell, for late New Orleans papers.

—— A locomotive with steam up was left standing on a turn-table at Newport a few nights ago, when, by some accident, the machinery was set in motion, and the engine tore off swiftly into a neighboring field, whence it took four hours of hard labor to extricate it.

—— The Montreal Witness says there is not a single person in Montreal, except those who profited by it, who justifies the action of Justice Coursol and the Chief of Police in the case of the St. Albans raiders.

—— Gen. Butler has established a Savings Bank for Freedmen, which has received $24,000 already.

—— Mr. Shaw, of Poughkeepsie, auctioneer and appraiser, is the author of the humorous squibs signed Josh Billings. He is 50 years of age.

—— In the South Carolina Convention of 1860, Mr. Boyce, of South Carolina, uttered these prophetic words, to the verification of which events seem to be fast hurrying: "If secession shall take place, of which I have no idea—for I cannot conceive of such stupendous madness—I shall consider the institution of slavery as doomed, and that the great God, in our blindness, has made us the instruments of its destruction."

—— It is estimated that our pension list will soon amount to $50,000,000 a year.

—— The first free school for negroes in Washington was opened about one year ago. There are now in that city 20 day schools and 17 evening schools for colored persons.

—— An Ohio jury has lately awarded "one cent" damages to a man who sued the municipal authorities for being illegally deprived of his vote.

—— Longfellow, the poet, has returned his income as over $14,000, and what is more, paid the income tax upon it.

—— Judge Nye, who has been territorial Governor of Nevada since 1861, has been chosen U. S. Senator for that new State.

—— The Commissioner of Internal Revenue fixes the average consumption of ardent spirits in New York as 600 barrels a day.

—— The popular votes of all the rebel States in 1860 were 856,524—while that of New York and Massachusetts alone in 1864 was 896,210.

—— Sherman's "journey through Georgia" was on an average eight miles a day. He left Atlanta 12th Nov. and arrived before Savannah 13th Dec.

—— A company of gentlemen have fitted up a yacht and offered it to Gen. McClellan for one year's trip, paying all expenses. The General has wisely declined.

—— On Christmas Day Mrs. James G. Bennett sent sleighs in all directions, with orders to the drivers to pick up and bring to her residence, at Washington Heights, all the ragged little street children they could find. To the 150 poor boys and girls thus gathered together she gave a good Christmas dinner, and otherwise provided for their enjoyment of the day.

—— The Mississippi river, above St. Louis, is bridged by ice. At Dubuque, vehicles, as well as pedestrians, now cross on the ice.

—— The New England Society has passed resolutions eulogistic of its President, the late W. C. Noyes.

—— California has been visited by a great storm, which terminated on the 28th of November. It did considerable damage, but the good which it accomplished more than outweighed all the loss which it occasioned. Mining and agricultural operations, which had long lain stagnant on account of the drouth, were speedily renewed, with the most flattering promise of success.

—— Geo. E. Gordon, convicted of the murder of Owen Thompson several years ago at Albany, has been sentenced to be hung on the 16th of January.

—— Our Government needs all the surplus hay in the country, and has therefore forbidden its exportation. If necessary, hay and forage will be impressed.

—— A number of distinguished citizens of New York gave to Archbishop McCloskey, as a Christmas present, an excellent marble bust of the late Archbishop Hughes.

—— It is said that Sherman killed all the dogs on his line of march.

Foreign.—John Brougham and Dion Boucicault have produced their Irish play in Dublin, with great success. It is called "Arrah na Pogue."

—— Baron Marochetti has been chosen to execute the bust of Thackeray for Westminster Abbey.

—— The largest conflagration on record was that which recently occurred in Japan, when Miaco was burnt. The fire raged two entire days, laying waste 1,000 blocks, 78,000 houses and temples, and 3,700 warehouses. Five-sixths of the city were in ashes, and half a million of people were made homeless.

—— The national debt of England is about $4,000,000,000; of France, $2,000,000,000: and Italy, $1,000,000,000.

—— In Brazil there are 2,000,000 of square miles suited to cotton-growing, of which only 12,000 are cultivated.

—— A matrimonial paper is published in Paris. It is called the Nuptial Echo. Its intention is to promote the connubial habits of its subscribers. Here spinsters may hear of bachelors, etc.

—— Mr. Masseras, formerly of the Courrier des Etats Unis, and recently publisher of a newspaper in Mexico, has been appointed a Chevalier of the Order of Guadulupe, by the Emperor Maximilian.

—— Among Parisian novelties is a new ballet, with music by Prince Metternich.

—— Mr. Bunch, the new British Consul for Cuba, has arrived at Havana.

—— Sweden has officially recognised the new empire of Mexico.

—— The Nouvelliste, of Rouen, says that when the Emperor of Russia was at Hamburg this year he went into the gambling-rooms, and being tempted to try his luck at roulette, told his aide-de-camp to throw down a note of 100 roubles upon the red. But the ball had scarcely begun to roll when the croupier, with his rake, roughly pushed away the Russian paper, saying that the bank did not take that sort of money. The aide-de-camp took it up without remonstrance, and the Czar, who most assuredly was not recognised by the croupier, went away.

—— The Mémorial d'Aix announces that M. Mathieu de la Drôme's prediction of the commencement of wet weather on the 10th of November, in the greater part of France and Southern Europe, has been fully realised in that district. In Aix and its neighborhood, rain began to fall on the evening of the 9th, and continued, almost without ceasing, for three days, till the land became so thoroughly soaked as to render agricultural operations impossible.

—— A grandson of Louis Philippe lately married the eldest daughter of the Emperor of Brazil, who will be Empress of Brazil when Don Pedro dies. Another grandson of Louis is to marry another Brazilian princess.

—— The Paris papers state that a most important discovery has been made, which greatly interests agricultural interests in every country, by M. Augustin Favre, an old soldier of the Emperor and Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. He undertakes to cure the glanders and the farcy, so destructive to horses, in a few days by a new process, of which he is the inventor.

—— The great river Amazon has been found to be navigable from one end to the other; in fact, a new route has been opened between the Atlantic and the Pacific. The Morona, a Peruvian steamer which was sent to explore the Amazon, has arrived from Mayro, about 300 miles from Lima. The Morona navigated more than 2,000 miles of the Amazon proper, and 600 of the Yeayali and the Pachitea rivers, which, until then, had seen only Indian canoes. The country is, of course, inhabited by savages, but it is of wonderful fertility.

—— The various branches of the Rothschild family have sustained a severe loss in the death of Mrs. Hannah Mayer Fitzroy, widow of the late Right Hon. Henry Fitzroy, M. P. for Lewes, and for some time chairman of committees in the House of Commons. The deceased lady was the second daughter of the late Baron Nathan Mayer Rothschild, and therefore sister of Baron Rothschild, M. P. for the city of London, and Sir Anthony Rothschild.

Miscellaneous.—Elizabeth Washington, a great-grand-niece of the founder of the Republic, died in Washington last week, in her 92d year.

—— A man was arrested at St. Johnsbury under the vagrant act, the other day, and proved his identity by the editor of the Caledonian, who recognised him as one who formerly wrote poetry for that paper. The Caledonian says: "The man was at once pronounced insane and discharged."

—— The infant child of Gen. Sherman died on the 8th of Dec. at South Band, Indiana.

—— Although the rebels are within shelling distance of Nashville, there are, in that city, two theatres and a circus open every night.

—— Ezra Chappel, of New London, has recommenced his usual winter custom of supplying the poor with 3,000 loaves of bread per month.

—— A woman was burnt to death in Hartford, last week, owing to the bursting of a kerosene lamp.

—— Harding, who married Belle Boyd, was lately arrested in Western Virginia. His intention was to get his wife's sister from rebeldom to the North.

—— An exchange says that a gentleman of Wheeling recently fired at a flock of crows. The wounded one made piteous cries, whereupon his companions returned, and attacked the sportsman with such "vivacity" that he was compelled to retreat.

——Mrs. Penniman, of South Braintree, lately gathered her 13 children around her—their united ages were 879 years. She is 92, and her children range between 72 and 46. Her husband died 16 years ago, aged 77, having been married 56 years.

—— In Robert Browning's last book, "Dramatis Personæ," there is a poem called "Mr. Sludge, the Medium," which reflects very severely upon the interpreters of "spiritualism." The original of "Sludge" is said to be Mr. D. D. Hume, well known as a "medium," both here and in England.

—— A letter from one of Early's soldiers says: "We all think Gen. Early drinks too much. It is notorious that whenever he gains a victory, or meets with a reverse, he gets gloriously drunk, and often stays so for several days."

—— Count Horace de Viel-Castel, a grand-nephew of Mirabeau, and a well-known writer on art and archæology, died recently in Paris.

—— Bouquets of flowers, cut out of carrots, turnips and beets, are among the latest novelties. A rose, cut in a light tinted beet, and a dahlia cut in a turnip, are mentioned as especially pretty; but these ephemeral beauties quickly wither.

—— The French Government have a very summary method of dealing with offenders. Some time ago 29 pitmen were tried for forcing their fellow-workmen to join them in forcing up their rate of wages. They were found guilty, and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

A BUFFALO TIGER STORY.

A PAPER published in India tells the following story about an adventure there of an entomologist:

"One very hot day, shouldering his entomological net, and with his bottle of cyanide of potassium in his pocket, for the purpose of killing his specimens, he had succeeded in taking several species of moths and beetles, when, suddenly emerging on an open space, a gigantic female buffalo charged right down upon him. Quick as lightning the narrator sprang up a tree which fortunately happened to be near, and almost before he had comfortably settled down upon one of the branches a buffalo calf appeared upon the scene, and both mother and offspring sat down at the foot of the tree, directly under his position. In order to attract the attention of his friends, who were in the neighborhood, or of any native who might happen to be near, he shouted until he was hoarse. Ever and anon, by way of variation, with the vain hope of frightening away the buffalo, he awakened the extremest echoes of the jungle with his yells, and perpetrated the most hideous noises ever produced by the human voice. All was of no avail; no friendly hand came to aid him, and the brute still lay placidly licking and caressing its calf. He was about to assume a standing attitude in the tree, when suddenly his left hand, with which he had seized a branch above his head, was severely stung or bitten by some insect or animal. Starting with the acute pain, as the fear of whip or tree snakes flashed through his mind, he involuntarily loosed his hold of the bough, and, thus deprived of support, he lost his balance and fell from his place of refuge. He dropped on the buffalo's back, and in another instant was carried away at a tremendous pace through the long thick grass of the jungle. It was a difficult matter to keep his seat, when all at once the buffalo sprang into a large tank, and he was immersed up to his neck in water. Unable to swim, he was obliged to cling to the brute, which for a time swam round and round the pond at her pleasure. He only hoped his legs would not be seized by one of the alligators, of which he had seen several in the water during the day. Then, to his infinite horror, a stinging sensation in his leg made him feel sure he had again been bitten by another kind of serpent. And still the buffalo showed no signs of returning towards the land, when, just as he thought she was preparing to lie down, he dug his heels into her side and delivered random blows with his fists on her head and neck. Then striking out for the land, the brute speedily reached the shore, on gaining which she again commenced her mad gallop. A few minutes brought them to the spot from which the animal had started, where the calf was still standing. The buffalo was preparing to lie down, when seizing the branches of the tree from which he had fallen on the brute's neck, he swung himself up into his old position. He had not, however, been very long there when the smarting in his hand and legs caused him to remember that he had been bitten by snakes. The very idea of this, and the knowledge that one of those venomous reptiles was in the tree on which he was perched, caused a deadly faintness, from which it was some time before he rallied.

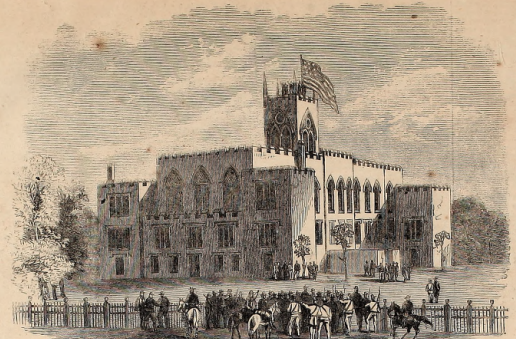
"Alternately fainting and reviving, hour after hour passed away, night darkened down upon the jungle, and the buffalo still kept watch and ward at the foot of the tree. At length, at an advanced hour of the night, he suddenly became conscious that a tremendous struggle was going on between the buffalo and some large wild animal, which he judged to be a tiger. 'The growling of the latter,' he continues, 'the groans of the buffalo, the noise of their struggles, and the incessant bleating of the calf, combined in producing a series of sounds which in the darkness of night appeared worthy of the inhabitants of Pandemonium. For full five minutes, which appeared hours to me, the dreadful struggle continued, until at length the groans of the buffalo subsided into a series of convulsive gasps and snorts, and the sounds of the struggling on the ground almost ceased. I could, however, hear the tiger growling, snarling and spitting like an immense cat. Of course the descent was now quite out of the question. I therefore determined to remain where I was until daylight, if I did not die from the effects of the snake bites before morning appeared. So strong was the interest with which I listened and strained my eyes for the purpose of learning what was going on below, that I even ceased to think of this contingency, and forgot the deathlike swoons I had previously experienced. After some time spent in listening to the noise made by the animal while enjoying his feast of buffalo flesh, the sounds ceased suddenly. I felt sure, however, that the beast had not departed, for I had kept my eyes fixed on the dark outlines, under the shadow of the tree, and the mass remained of the same appearance. I fancied I could trace the form of a tiger lying alongside the dead buffalo, and this was the shape the dark objects had assumed and retained since the termination of the conflict.'

"At length, however, succor was at hand. Seeing a light in the distance, he shouted as loud as he could, and this attracted the notice of a party who had set out in search of him. On coming up to the spot, both tiger and buffalo were found to be dead. On telling his friends he had been bitten by snakes they first examined his hand, and pronounced the wound he received whilst in the tree to have been caused by the sting of a hornet. On turning down his stocking they discovered several leeches gorged with blood, for numbers of these voracious animals had bitten him during his ride through the water on the buffalo's back. The faintings he had experienced were attributed to loss of blood from the leech-bites. They then turned their attention to the dead tiger. Not a wound was discovered about the carcase, but on slightly moving the body of the buffalo, they discovered the bottle of cyanide of potassium, which had been intended for entomological purposes, broken, and partially introduced into the wound in the neck from which the tiger had sucked the blood of his victim. While imbibing the life-blood of the buffalo the tiger had also received one of the most deadly poisons known, which in the course of a very short time had produced its usual fatal results. The position of the two animals and of the deadly bottle left no room for doubting that such had been the case. On ascending the tree in such hot haste the poison bottle and other little matters were dropped, and during the struggle between the animals the former was broken, and perhaps even cut its way into the jugular of the buffalo; thus probably assisting in the death of the latter, as well as proving so fatally destructive to the tiger. On the appearance of dawn they discovered a small wasp's nest hanging in the tree. Later in the day they had the satisfaction of superintending the skinning of the tiger, and distributing the meat to the villagers, some of whom regard it as particularly strengthening food. The absence of the bullet holes rendered the skin a valuable one."

ANTIDOTE FOR POISON.—Dr. J. Edmonds, a prominent London physician, writes as follows to the London Times: "I enclose a simple, safe and accessible prescription for the whole range of acid corrosive poisons, which, if promptly used, will almost invariably save life. Mix two ounces of powdered chalk or magnesia, or one ounce of washing soda, with a pint of milk, and swallow it at one draught, then tickle the back of the throat with a feather or finger so as to produce vomiting. Afterwards drink freely of milk and water, and repeat the vomiting so as to thoroughly wash out the stomach. Any quantity of chalk or magnesia may be taken with safety, but soda in large quantities is injurious. I may add that the narcotics are excepted. Milk is an antidote for almost all the poisons, and especially if followed by vomiting."

AN honest grazier, who had seen "Richard III." performed, in Cincinnati, waited upon the manager, next morning, to say, that if the gentleman who wanted a horse, on the previous evening, held his mind, he had got an abundance of nags, and should be happy to trade.

CHILDREN who are what is called "good," and who die young, are often held up as models, by teachers and others, but are not, as a general thing, favorite studies for the genuine boys and girls. A boy once said to a clergyman, who had described the death of a good child:



"I do hate those dead babies! I like to hear about children that don't want to die."

SHERMAN'S
Grand March through Georgia.

THE present number of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER contains several interesting sketches from two of our Artists, who accompanied the National armies in their triumphant march from Atlanta to Savannah.

Our troops commenced their "audacious expedition," as the London Times phrases it, on the 13th and 14th of November, on which latter day Gen. Sherman gave orders for the last army corps to leave. On their march they destroyed the famous foundry and machine manufactory on the Georgia State road, a little distance out of the doomed city.

Our Artist says when the final explosion took place the spectacle was very grand, the shock making all things tremble for miles around, and, although the fragments went flying here and there, fortunately nobody was hurt. On the 23d of November our forces reached Milledgeville, which they entered without resistance —being met at the entrance by the Mayor and a deputation of citizens, who informed Gen. Slocum that Gov. Brown had fled to Macon three days previously, having in vain attempted to rally the "valiant Legislature" to defend their homes. Gen. Slocum informed the Mayor, in response to his appeal for protection, that private property should be respected, and that no violence would be permitted on the well-disposed. When this was noised abroad the excitement ceased, and the "hateful Yanks" became the "magnanimous foe."

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN.—VIEW OF THE CAPITOL AT MILLEDGEVILLE.—OUR SOLDIERS HOISTING THE STARS AND STRIPES.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

The Arsenal at Milledgeville.

This is a very unpretending building, as our readers may perceive, and its contents were scarcely worth capture, there being only some 2,500 muskets and a few cannon. The most important items, perhaps, were a ton of powder, and a considerable quantity of accoutrements.

Burning the R. R. Bridge.

In accordance with Gen. Sherman's plan Col. Jones, who commanded the 2d brigade, 20th army corps, ordered the destruction of the Georgia Central railroad bridge on the Ogeechee river. It was a well constructed building, but our men are too great adepts at destruction to suffer it to give them much trouble, and in less than hour it was in flames.

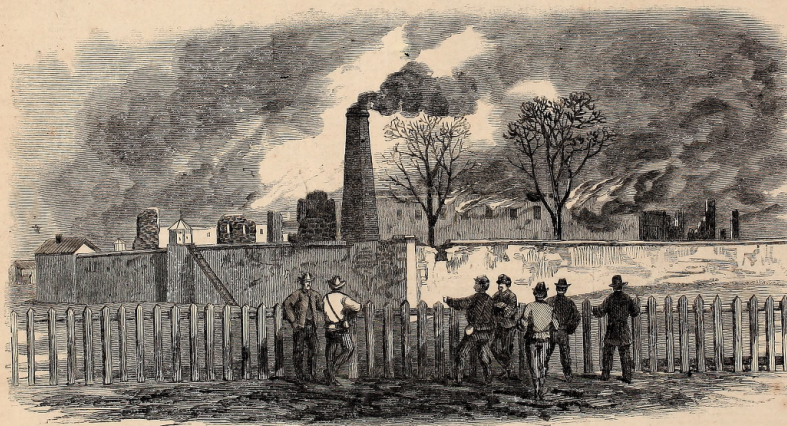
Penitentiary at Milledgeville.

This terror to evil doers was destroyed by fire, although it is not quite certain whether it was done by the orders of Gen. Sherman or the result of accident. Some curious stories are current about this, but our space precludes further particulars.

View of Savannah.

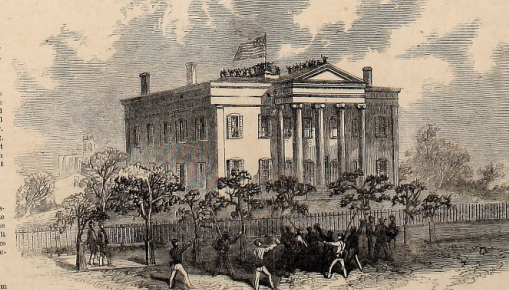
This beautiful, and, judging from the conduct of its inhabitants, only half rebel city, contains about 27,000 inhabitants, and is one of the most charming places on the continent—

The view we engrave is taken from a point some four miles above Hutchinson.



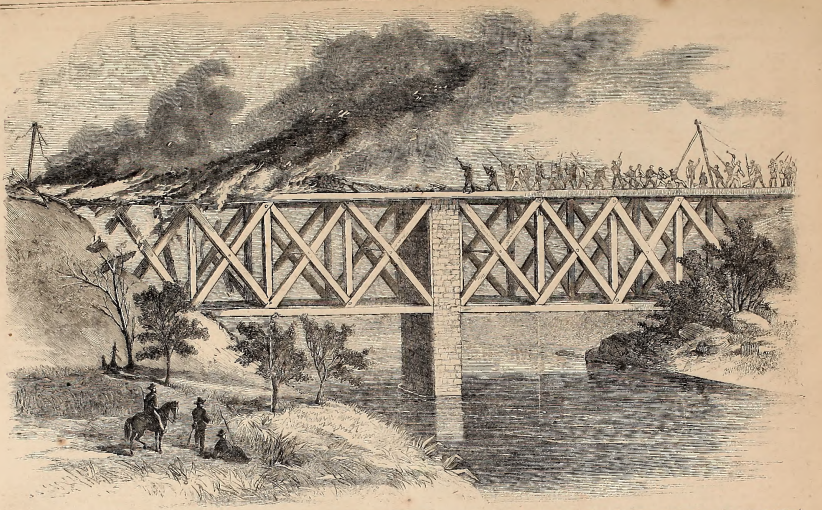
The Pen at Millen.

Unwilling as every Christian must be to unnecessarily inflame the Northern mind, it is impossible not to read our Artist's account of the dismal place where our brave soldiers were slowly tortured to death without an indignation too deep for words. Our Artist says: "The stockade was a square of 500 feet, or an area of nearly 15 acres. It was among pines, on dry rolling ground, although in a swampy region. The stockade was of pine logs, rising from 12 to 15 feet above the ground. Sentry boxes were placed along the top of the stockade, 20 feet apart, and reached from the outside by ladders On the eastern part extended a ravine, through which ran a small stream of good water. About 3,000 prisoners had been confined here. In this space were their huts, without regularity in arrangement, roofed with loose earth, supported by sticks. Several wells had been dug in the prison ground. Through the centre of the huts was a line of brick ovens which were not entirely finished. The "dead line" extended entirely around the inside at a distance of 30 feet from the stockade. It was made of narrow scantling supported on small posts about three feet from the ground. The atmosphere in the prison camp was like that of a charnel house. Three corpses of prisoners were found in the huts, and were buried by us. A short distance outside was a trench-grave, in which our dead heroes were buried. A board at the head of the trench bore the inscription, "650 buried here"—a frightful record of mortality among 3,000 prisoners, who had been penned up there but a few weeks. On rising ground, a short distance south-west of the stockade, were two forts, not yet completed, and showing no trace of having been occupied by artillery. About 200 yards distant in another direction was a smaller stockade, about half constructed.



Such are the lazar-houses into which Southern chivalry herds our gallant men, to die. If anything could add distance to treason it is inhumanity like that shown towards unhappy captives.

Milledgeville.



This beautiful city is the State capital of Georgia, and is situated on the west bank of the Oconee river, 126 miles south-west of Savannah, and 659 south-west of Washington. It contains a large number of handsome residences, and many fine public buildings. The State house, of which we present a view, is a remarkable building in the Gothic style, more resembling a cathedral in England than a city hall—there are also six churches, three of them really handsome edifices. These were of course respected by our troops. The arsenal, which we also give a sketch of, is a poor affair—but solidly constructed. When the war broke out there were six newspapers published here—pretty well for a place numbering only 4,000 inhabitants.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—BURNING OF THE PENITENTIARY AT MILLEDGEVILLE, GA., NOV. 23.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

GOVERNOR'S HOUSE AT MILLEDGEVILLE, GA.—OUR SOLDIERS HOISTING THE STARS AND STRIPES.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—BURNING OF THE GEORGIA CENTRAL RAILROAD BRIDGE, OVER THE OCMULGEE RIVER, NOV. 20TH, BY UNION FORCES UNDER COL. P. H. JONES.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

GONE HOME.

BY HANNAH MULLER.

Oh, go and call my darling, wherever she doth hide,
For I am weary waiting, watching for her every day;

You'll find her gathering wild flowers upon the mountain side,
Or wandering, singing to herself in valleys far away.

Go stand out on the hillside, beneath the hawthorn bloom—
If you hear a wild bird singing, 'tis my darling coming home.

Oh, go and call my darling, for the days are dark and sad,
And all the world seems lonely—to me so long alone—
I'm longing! oh, I'm longing for the voice that made me glad;
My heart keeps beating, out of tune, for all its music's gone.

Go, stand down in the meadow, amidst the flowering broom—
If you see the day grow brighter, then my darling's coming home.

Alas! I am forgetting, an evening calm and still,
I watched within a quiet room, and all I loved was there;
The sun was setting far away behind the western hill,
When suddenly the light was gone, which made my life so dear.
You need not go to seek her, she never more will come,
For I heard the angels singing for my darling going home.

THE ROSE OF THE GALTEES;

OR,

PAT AND THE GAUGERS.

BY LOUISA SULLIVAN.

BENEATH the deep shadow of the Galtees, its roof resting against a boulder of the dark brown rock, whose summit seemed hurled in the blue and vapory sky, stood a comfortable publichouse—yes, comfortable is the only word that can properly designate the careless dishevelled tousled air of prosperity that characterised Phil Purcell's half-farm-half-tavern-looking abode. It was a substantial building, of red sandstone, flanked on each side with a goodly row of thatched stables and out-houses, with patches of wheat and a long strip of potato ground in the rear. It is true the courtyard was rather wastefully littered with hay, which would have been better bestowed in the adjoining barn; that the ample supply of winter fuel, in the shape of several loads of turf which lay scattered around, would have looked better neatly stacked in the haggard; that a few stones from the quarry at a little distance from the house would have repaired the broken fence and mendanished the pools and sloughs in which sundry pigs, ducks and chickens were most amicably disporting. Yet the ample windows, stocked with rows of bottles and glasses, with here and there a stout pile of homemade crackers, a huge cheese, a keg of "first quality butter," strings of red herrings, flitches of bacon, &c., fully atoned to the hungry traveller for all other discrepancies.

There was a stirring, bustling air about the place, too, that was pleasant to see. Bare-legged, cherry-cheeked damsels jerked hither and thither, now helping a stray customer, now exchanging merry glances or sharp repartees with the crowd of sturdy, athletic youths, who, with the lazy nonchalance of the Irish peasant, lounged about the doorway in expectation of the arrival of the stage from Cork, Mallow or Youghal (for those were the days when railroads had not yet swept through the green lanes and mountain solitudes sacred to poetry and romance), when half-a-dozen would start forward and assist in doing the work of one.

Phil's hospitable invitation of "entertainment for man and beast," was not without imitation. A similar establishment, but on a less imposing scale, was situated a little higher up the road. But Phil's tavern was par excellence the favored one, and hardly required the huge sign painted a stormy red, which swung at the gable end of the house, to make it the general resort of the farmers, traders, grooms, huntsmen and others who might require refreshment.

Two powerful reasons may be assigned for the popularity of the "Traveller's Rest," either of which would have been sufficient. First, Phil's kept better potheen than his rival, old Lanty, whose greed for gain made him largely dilute that delectable beverage; second, he had a beautiful daughter; Ellen Purcell, or the Rose of the Galtees, as she was termed by her more ardent admirers, was indeed as fair a flower as ever blossomed in the wilderness. If eyes, soft and bright as the gazelle's, a rose-tinted cheek and a light and graceful form constitute beauty, hers might have been envied by many a highborn lady. And doubtless so thought many a rustic squire and young farmer round, whom one glance of Ellen's beautiful eyes, gazing from door or window, was enough to make him forego his homeward ride from fair or market, to linger for an hour or so at the little bar and quaff a glass of Beamish and Crawford's porter, or maybe, if the day was cold, a drop of the real stuff, mixed by the fair hands of Ellen herself.

PAT AND HIS COUSIN.

But though the Rose of the Galtees had many lovers, one only had caught her young heart. This favored individual was a poor but respectable young man, the youngest son of a widow who rented a small farm a short distance from the Traveller's Rest.

Frank Lacy and Ellen had gone to the village school together, and had conned their lessons from the same book. When poor Ellen's little head had become involved in inextricable arithmetical problems, Frank had shed a ray of light on the benighted subject. They had rambled on nutting and blackberry excursions, had romped and played too long together not to fall in love, or rather to have been always in that delightful state, for from childhood to youth the transition in their sentiments had seemed almost imperceptible to themselves.

PAT INFORMS THE GAUGER OF AN ILLICIT STILL.

But Frank was poor, and consequently little favored by Ellen's father, his salary as assistant in the widow O'Reilly's shop, in the village of Arthmore, being hardly enough to keep body and soul together; besides, his duties were as multifarious as the goods he had daily to select and display. Ellen's being pestmistress as well as dealer in drygoods and groceries, he had to work early and late to fulfil the incessant demands upon his time and attention. But a lover can accomplish what is almost impossible to ordinary mortals, and though, in his mind, Frank favor in Ellen's eyes, evening after evening saw Frank Leey strolling down the boreen at the back of the tavern. A gentle tap at the back door or window of Ellen's servant was followed or overwhelmed with the number of gossip's meet welcome response. Then a whistled chorus, a song about the green cherry fields or the mountain glen, repaid poor Frank for all the discomforts of his situation, and seat him away to his humble garret blessed with visions an emperor might envy.

But as this love matters did not progress to Phil Purcell's entire satisfaction. He was said that his tavern owed much of its celebrity to the finest potheen in the country. Those who knew anything of Ireland are aware that illegal distillation is reckoned there a very venial transgression, indeed after a very short sojourn in the country strangers become equally indulgent, particularly sportsmen, who, after hunting over mile, of mountain and bog, carry an unbridled appetite for drink, and, well-soused with hog wash, are apt to imagine a glass of poteen, pure and unadulterated, the most genial potion they ever swallowed in their lives.

Great was then the excitement when a strong pot boiling, recently erected in the back premises of Phil's dwelling and called the New Barracks, was suddenly occupied, not by "sogers," but, honor of hornets, gaugers; the government, having, it was said, got a hint of the vicinity of the illicit still. So, after eating a hearty dinner at Squire Rooney's, seize every hog in the collar and after breaking open Miss Biddy M'Dun's homemade cake and gooseberry wine, didn't he coolly kick his huge legs against the window-sill, and in spite of the quiet squatter's remonstrance, and theatrical laughter pull up the trapdoor leading down into the garden and fish up half a dozen jars containing the precious liquid, in the which he raised spirits enough to frighten the whole country.

But all as a sudden, when things were at the worst, the gaugers relaxed his vigilance, particularly towards Phil Purcell, who had almost begun to despair. The fact was Captain William, as he was called, had got the chairing Ellen, and, though somewhat on the shady side of forty, contemplated matrimony. Drawing after evening found him a guest at the Traveller's Rest, not publicly, but in Phil's confidential bar, where it said he occasionally indulged in a hot tumbler of the choicest pothreen, drank probably with the view of ingratiating himself into Phil's good graces. But still no seizures, accident even to the meanest subservience of the crafty Phil, who was not indisposed to secure so powerful a son-in-law, were of little avail with the obdurate fair one. However, after a remonstrance of the father's polite advice to give the collector time to think of it, he did not prosecute his suit with such vehemence and manner as to make him gone on very quietly, but for the unlucky pothreen. One evening, having indulged in a second potation, he abruptly rose to depart, and with an unqualified refusal. The exasperated gauger complained at once to Phil. He could not have chosen a less auspicious moment. That day two of Phil's best cows had brought next to nothing at the fair, and his rival Lasty had succeeded in securing the patronage of the Squire. Besides, it was a sore subject, Ellen always meeting it with tears. He answered pettishly. William muttered a threat, this provoked an oath, which was followed by the gauger starting up and lattoring his cosh, swearing, while his fat purple face became livid with rage, he could make him and his daughter repent before they were many days older. After this threat he beat a retreat, and in time so reconciled the new hostile which the infuriated Phil allied at his head.

Ellen did not know until say for her results had followed her father's and the gauger's rein, and her father was too ill-tempered to tell her; so that evening, when she stole out as usual to meet Frank Lacy at the trysting meadow that skirted the high road, she told him, while the tears coursed down her rosy cheeks, that she feared it would be all her father would let her marry that horrid Williams. Now, Frank Lacy was a young man whose character, in one respect, was somewhat of an anomaly among his countrymen; he was gentle and inoffensive almost to a fault. But though fallen hereditary neglect had caused him to possess more of what is technically termed pluck, there was not a boy in the barony a more general favorite. To this, perhaps, his bookishness might have contributed not a little, the schoolmaster being a character held in high estimation by the peasantry.

We think it necessary to mention these facts, that we may be able to state, in the veritable history, why Frank did not either run off with his mistress or take summary vengeance upon his rival. He did neither, but having walked and talked with Ellen until it was nearly dark, he bade her adieu, nearly heartbroken, but still swearing eternal constancy. Walking slowly along the boreen or lane that led by a short cut to the tavern, Frank was startled from a rather melancholy reverie by a tremendous slap on the back; the next moment a stout young fellow of Herculean proportions sprang over the low hedge beside him.

"Ah then, Frank, what's the matter at all? Is Ellen dead or married, or what's come over ye, we didn't see you these two weeks?"

Frank pointed out the absence of his troubles.

"And what are ye going to do, Frank dhin?"

"What can I do, Dan?" was the rueful answer.

"Well, blood's thicker than water anyhow," continued the newcomer, lighting up a pair of loose breeches, "an' I knew more for you, Frank, for having that sort of Irish way with you, that always, wive say good at takin' their own part. But it'ere wornt sister's affair at all, at all, barrin' you get her. It's the father of Ellen; shure she shall always be sweet kind true wid her, an' a smart bachelor as betther than the married man, Frank."

"What are you on, Dan?" said Frank, anxiously.

"Oh, don't be afeard," said the other, with a kind of good-hearted chuckling in his manner. "I'll take a gaff in 'till the murdering gauger, though many a poor boy would have died decently in their bed last Christmas if it hadn't been for him. Purcell sowld in that way. Live it all to me."

Pat was Frank's cousin, and his sworn champion. He was apt to speak rather disrespectfully to his face, but woe to any one else who attempted a similar freedom. Dan was, in spite of natural shrewdness, his tenderness for fighting and love and brought him to the end of a song that he "could not sing," or, as he said, screenes for Dan, his reader services among the farmers and peasantry procuring him at least a plenty of victory and whiskey. "Now, Frank, you're all present, he was able to bestow his undivided attention to his cousin's affairs.

It was a cold dismal morning in the month of January, that Patrick, or Pat O'Neill, as he was more familiarly called, had a secret conference with Dan Lacy. The gauger had just finished breakfast, and was seated in a huge easy chair before a comfortable fire of English coal, a luxury he was fond of indulging in when Pat was announced. We will not detail all the particulars of the interview. Suffice it that Pat promised, for a consideration, to bring Captain Williams and his men right to the spot where a certain Larry Heffernan had a mountain still in full blast.

Dan Lacy, as the reader will know ere he had been often duped by pretended information, and had very little faith in the good peasantry around him. He communicated his plan to the authority who declared, but for a slight grudge he owed the squireen, he'd scorn to be an informer. Morgan pricked up his ears, and, like a sagacious hound, put only channels through which any really valuable information had ever reached him, and the same night Pat Lacy was one of his black sheep; so after a few minutes' deliberation, he called for his greatcoat, and proceeded to give orders to his men.

"Och, captain dear," says Pat, seeing the party in readiness to move, "shure it's not forgetting the throuble ye are to be at, and sure if anything happens to Pat, my feet are almost dead with these cold cavalry boots."

"Hover on, sir," said Williams, "it's time enough to pay when you earn it."

"Musha, true for you, captain, but faith my heart id be lighter when I'd have the wallet boys laughin at me purse."

Williams pulled out his purse and threw him five shillings.

"Another, captain, this nd niver buy them," said Pat, reckoning the money, "do the thing dacently, captain dear, and toss us over the other crown piece for boots."

Another crown was thrown at his head, and the captain and his men moved to the door. But the prospect of a long march on foot, particularly in the present rain, formed a clough of near a foot deep on the ground, a drizzling shower, and a blast of cutting wind from the north-east, the party unanimously backed into the hall, considerably cooled their ardor. Two or three of the men even hinted to the captain that it was too desperate a day to venture out.

"Oh, by the powers!" said Pat, indignantly, "but that bates all. Why, sir, it's only a step, and a sheltered at that little sprakling yez see. Praise be to glory but it's illegant weather intirely for the same sort of work, and it's the very day for the dirty taste of some that's nursbin the crops and driving the cowld out of the air, the poor—God help the creatures!—that will be starved by it."

Morgan led the way, followed closely by Pat and the scowling gaugers. As long as the lads appeared fresh, Pat moved rather heartily, which he soon proceeded to account for by the cavalry boots, but the moment he saw them get tired, he stretched out his legs and pushed forward at a pace that baffled even the fastest of the men. He seemed bagged Boots.

Still the short winter's day was nearly spent in the tangled and almost impassable wilderness of bog and moor, and the shades of evening were gathering round when the party reached the shieling of Larry Heffernan, a small cottage built by exercise chain of rocks. Even in summer its stern and savage character was little improved, but in the furze bushes and a small crop of blue heather, which was all that found subsistence on its sterile soil. But now its appearance was singularly dark and gloomy. Immense bonkiers of brown rock towered to meet the sullen sky above, and almost shut out every glimpse of lingering twilight; below a stream of inky hue ran through the glen, and dashed against the rocks with the roar of a cataract. So artificially had nature framed the savage spot for the purpose of concealment, that the only entrance to it was by a small chasm in the cliff, so narrow and rugged as only to permit a single person to pass at a time.

The discontent of the gaugers now broke into open murmurs, as Pat, pointing triumphantly to the aperture, said:

"There's the end of yer journey, boys."

All declared that the glen was too dark and lonely to enter at that hour, and that night would be on them before they could attack Heffernan. Some of them even took the captain aside and expressed their doubts of the faith of the guide. But Williams, dazzled by the hopes of the prize, still persevered, alleging that it was now too late to retreat.

"But by the blessed light of heaven," said he, clenching a pistol from his breast, and turning to O'Neill, "if I find you've led us into a pathway of death, I'll send the contents of this through your brains."

"Musha, and I don't begrudge yez, captain dear, if you catch me at it," says Pat; "shure I'm here to the fore of yees all."

One by one the party entered the glen and pressed their way through it, as well as the darkness and ruggedness of the path would admit. About midnight they reached the hut.

"Do you see, captain sensible," said he, "that brown shoulder of a wall over agen the rocks at the other side, and that dawny wrath of the smoke curlin up beyant it?"

Williams raised his glass. "You're right," said he, after a moment's survey. "I see the smoke, and I think the walls of a cabin."

"Shure enough yer honour does," said Pat, approvingly; "it's the property of Heffernan's, and bedad they have the still hard at work now."

"But how are we to get at them, my good fellow?" exclaimed the gauger, angrily. "For I see at the other side of the glen, and I am really so tired and rumbled I'll never be able to climb these infernal rocks, and I see no other way of getting out of this place."

"Och, be asy now, captain, and don't ye be blamin' the rocks that the blessed Lord made them, glory be to his holy name! shure there's not a mate steps cut out in them for bringin' up the whiskey."

But these mate steps proved to be small jagged projections of rock, rendered obscure by the sea, that the benumbed and bewildered gaugers were often known to slip up the task in despair.

"Be gar! I'll tell you what we'll do, boys," said Pat, blowing his fingers; "I'm more used to the cowld than you, and shure, just give me a hitt, and while I'm at the top I'll drag yees all up after me."

"No, you rascal," said Williams, sternly, "you shan't stir a step without us."

"Mona sin dhoul! Is it afeard of one man yees are? Faith and I think I was a fuchoch (giant)" exclaimed Pat, indignantly. "Oh, very well, plase yerselves and ye'll plase me." And he placed his foot on the projection of the rock against the rocks. "But," continued he, with a significant nod, "I'd be after advising ye to spake asey, for if ye wouldn't wait the boys down on yees in no time."

This information was somewhat softened their obstinacy, the captain after a gentle hint of shooting him dead if he played them false, lent their assistance in shoving Pat up the slippery projection.

The last nail of the cavalry boots had hardly disappeared when a loud laugh of derision told the unfortunate dupes of the trap he had fallen into. The baffled party fired simultaneously, but the sharp echo of their pieces yet rang among the rocks when the gauger was dashing Pat, waving his cudgeon triumph over their heads. Before they had time to load and fire again he sprang down and moved off with his prisoner, leaving by the time of "The Wind that shakes the Barley."

Night coming on, in a wild, gloomy glen, far from home, and in the power of those he had given just cause to hate, for a lone in his body, it may be supposed the feelings of Captain Williams were by no means enviable. Nursbed, however, Lacy acted as a generative, and straight showers of snowballs as big as church steeples came thundering down. The fun waxed fast and furious, and the boys, now more than devils threw themselves on a heap of snow, and pulling the cases of their great coats over their heads, sat quietly awaiting the issue of their luckless enterprise.

A strong party of the "boys" now got down into the glen, and Williams and his men were dragged up like so many snowdrifts. When they recovered the use of their perspective powers, they found the still-house, shy proof, had thrown itself in Larry Heffernan's cabin. A large turf fire burned in the centre, over which was suspended the shining apparatus, namely, a large iron pot, over which Larry presided. In an old arbow chair beside him sat Pat O'Neill, comfortably supping after the fatigues of the day, and occasionally indulging in a sup, from a wooden measure of the liquor which stood on the hob at his elbow. Surrounding the dense smoke, at the upper extremity, stood a table filled with potatoes and dried fish, round which a considerable share party of both sexes were assembled. A dancing torch of bogwood, stuck in a tin sconce against the wall, cast a strong red glare over their faces.

The rites of hospitality were duly impressed to the miserable party, for in Ireland the bitterest enemy is never refused the victuals. After that each got a stomp out of the pot, while, we are bound to say, was drank without asking whether it had payed the king's duty. The "boys" piled them with plenty of the same stuff, until they got, as Pat termed it, "roaring drunk; and then they were the drollest fellows he ever saw." They laughed, sang, told stories, fought their battles over again. At last they grew maudlin, blubbered like hungry children for their bread and butter, and actually embraced each other's enemies.

But neither Pat nor Larry Heffernan were disposed to follow them off so easily. Boiling water was brought forward, and the whole party's heads and chins were shaved as smooth as glass. After this operation, Pat "axed" as they said, "that the deeths might be after catching cowld," they put on every stick and stone a warm jubilee of pitch, that covered them down to the neck.

The following morning considerable excitement prevailed in the village. Groups might be seen here and there conversing in low, grave tones, and an air of ill-concealed exultation was discernible on every face.

Presently a confused assemblage of men, women and children were seen marching up the main street of the village. In front came Pat, waving his old hat and shouting like a madman; then came a party of strapping fellows, bearing, on doors and pieces of wood, the bodies of several men, their faces covered with bits of rags and old rags. On they came, greeted with many a cheer and merthful slogorn from the crowd. They moved before the Traveller's Rest, and three vigorous cheers are given for the Rose of the Gutters. The burgers-on of the inn rush out, the cherry-cheeked servant-maids flutter, and the bewildered Phil at their head, but the crowd dash on until they reach the new barracks, and there, before the astonished eyes of their comrades, they deposited the gaugers.

All inquiry into the matter would have been needless in any part of the country where the law was rather loosely administered. But the Board of Excise got some inkling of the affair, and William's friends contrived to keep his place; however, he was so thoroughly disgusted with the good people of Arthmore, that he contrived, shortly after, to exchange for another station. Ellen, somewhat ere by no means of so active and enterprising a disposition, and therefore soon became a prime favorite with the ladies. Paul Purcell made no further opposition to Frank Lacy's addresses, and to his unspeakable delight, a few weeks after his return from Dublin, he rose of the Rose became his, and on the wedding-day Phil presented the happy pair with a well-stocked farm.

With a supply of potheen at Ellison, the Traveller's Rest recovered its pristine popularity, and its proprietor, secretly grateful for Pat's exertions, promoted the latter's cheeks, to the office of barkeeper, caretaker and general factotum, in which capacity he acquitted himself to his complete satisfaction. His jokes and witticisms, if possible, a larger share of customers than ever to that renowned establishment.

LONGING.

BY MATTHEW ARNOLD.

Come to me in my dreams, and then
By day I shall be well again;
For then the night will more than pay
The hopeless longing of the day.

Come as the sun can't a thousand times,
A messenger from summer climes,
And make us day new world, and be
As kind to others as to me.

Or, as thou never can'st, in south,
Come now, and let me dream it truth,
And part my hair, and kiss my brow,
And say: "My love, why sufferest thou?"

Come to me in my dreams, and then
By day I shall be well again!
For then the night will more than pay
The hopeless longing of the day.

The Executioner.

The clock of the little town of Medida had just struck midnight. At that moment a young French officer was leaning over the parapet of a terrace which bordered the gardens of the castle of Medida, engaged in a profound depth of abstraction than seemed habitual to the thoughtlessness of military life—but never were hour, site and circumstances more propitious for meditation.

Above his head the beautiful sky of Spain stretched its dome of dark azure. The twinkling of the stars and the soft radiance of the moon cast a capricious light over an extensive valley, which lay in all its wealth of loveliness at his feet. Beside the spot on which stood the officer, the young chef-de-bataillon could see, a hundred feet below, the town of Medida, which seemed to have nestled itself for shelter from the storms which at the foot of the cliff on which the castle was built. Turning his head, he could behold the sea, whose waters flowed in tranquil and huge masses like a broad belt of silver. The castle itself was illuminated. The joyous confusion of sounds from a festive scene—the clinking of glasses, the laughter of some of the officers and their partners in the dance, reached his ear, softened into harmony by the distance, and blended with the far-off murmur of the waves. The fresh coolness of the night infused a new energy into his frame exhausted by the heat of the day, while the gentle breeze played with trees so odoriferous and flowers of such exquisite sweetness that the young man fancied himself, as it were, plunged in a bath of very delicious perfume.

The castle of Medida belonged to a grandee of Spain, who at that period was residing in it with his whole family. During the whole of this evening the gloom of his daughters had directed her looks towards the officer with an intensity, blended with so deep a sadness, that the sentiment of pity expressed by the beautiful Spanish girl might well have given rise to the young Frenchman's reverie. Yet how dare to imagine the possibility that the daughter of the most haughty and fastidious noble in Spain could ever be bestowed on the son of a Parisian shop-keeper!

The French were held in detestation. The marvels having been suspected by General G——, the governor of the province, of being engaged in plotting an insurrection in favor of Ferdinand VII., the battalion commanded by Victor Marchand had been placed in cantonments in the little town of Mendo, to hold in check the surrounding country, which belonged to the Marquis de Léganès. A recent despatch from Marshal Ney gave reason to apprehend that the English would shortly land in the west, and pointed out the marquis as a man engaged in correspondence with the cabinet of London. So that, notwithstanding all the hospitable welcome with which the latter had received Victor Marchand and his soldiers, the young officer kept himself vigilantly on his guard.

While directing his steps towards that terrace, to which he went for the purpose of observing the state of the town and country entrusted to his supervision, he had meditated on the problem how he ought to interpret the friendship which the marquis had never ceased to manifest towards him, and how to reconcile the tranquility of the country with the anxieties of his government. On the last few minutes all these thoughts had been driven from the mind of the young commandant by a feeling of prudential caution and by a very legitimate curiosity.

He had just observed a considerable number of lights in the town. Now, notwithstanding it was the festival of St. James, he had that very morning commanded that every fire should be extinguished at the usual hour previous to the hymn of general silence. The castle alone had been exempted from that order. He could perceive, indeed, here and there the gleam of his sentries' bayonets at their accustomed posts; but where was that deep solemn in the silence that prevailed, and noising announced that the Spaniards were plunged in the intoxication of a festival.

After seeking in vain to explain this general violation of his orders on the part of the inhabitants, Victor Marchand came to the conclusion that mysterious as he had intrusted to some officer the charge of the police and the rounds of the night. After the imprudence of revolt, he was about to leap down by a breach in the terrace to effect more rapidly the descent of the rocks, and the sound of a little pool of the ocean, which was stationed at the entrance of the town, on the side next the castle, when he was arrested by the sound of a large mass. He fancied he saw in the gravel of the alleys grate beneath the light tread of a woman. He turned his head back but saw nothing; eyes were struck, however, by the extraordinary whiteness of the ocean. He suddenly perceived there so fatal a spectacle that he stood motionless by surprise, accusing even the senses of deception. The glancing rays of the moon enabled him to distinguish a crowd of sails at a considerable distance. A third shot through his frame, and he tried to convince himself that this terrible vision was only some optical illusion produced by the capricious play of the waves and the moonlight.

At that moment a hoarse voice uttered his name. The officer looked towards the breach, and he threw on the head of the soldier who called he had been attended to the castle, raised slowly and cautiously in the air.

"Is that you, mon commandant?"

"Yes. Well—what?" answered the young man, warned by a sort of presentiment to act with mystery.

"Those scamps down there are twisting about like worms, and I have hastened to communicate to you, if you will permit me, the little observations I have made."

"Speak," replied Victor Marchand.

"I have just been following one of the people of the castle, who directed his steps this way, with a lantern in his hand. Now a lantern is a devilish suspicious thing, for if I have not lost the good Christian there has any occasion to light pipes tapers at this hour of the night. They want to torment us, said I to myself, at first, about eyeing him pretty closely. And so, mon commandant, I discovered, hardly three paces from here, on a platform of rock, a certain pile of fagots."

A terrible cry echoed through the town and interrupted the soldier. A sudden glare flashed over the face of the commandant, the poor grenadier at the same instant received a bullet in his head and fell dead. A fire of straw and dry wood blazed within ten steps of the young man. The musical instruments and the laughing voices were hushed in the saloon of the ball. The festal gaiety had suddenly given place to a silence as of death, interrupted only by groans. The report of a cannon burst over the ocean's placid and still bay. A cold sweat started to the young officer's forehead. He was unarmed. He understood at once that all the soldiers had perished, and that the English were about to land. He saw himself dishonored if he survived, he saw himself dragged before a council of war, and there he stood, and with his eye the depth of the valley. He was in the act of plunging off, when his hand was seized by that of Clara.

"Fly!" she said, "my brothers are behind me. At the foot of the rock, down there, you will find Juanito's swift Andalusian. Fly!"

She pushed him forward. The young man, half stupified, looked at her for a moment, but presently, yielding to the instinct of self-preservation, which never abandons even the strongest man, he plunged among the trees in the direction indicated, and sprang across the wall, before trodden by no other feet than those of the wild goats. He heard Clara crying to her brothers to pursue him, he heard the steps of his assassins, he heard the bullets of several shots whizzing by his ears, but he succeeded in reaching the valley, found the horse, leaped upon him, and disappeared with the rapidity of lightning.

In a few hours the young officer arrived at the headquarters of General G——. The latter was at table with his staff.

"I bring you my head!" cried the chef-de-bataillon, as he made his appearance, pale and exhausted.

He sat down, and related the horrible adventure. His narrative was received with a fearful exclamation.

"You have been more unfortunate than criminal," at last replied the terrible general. "You are not responsible for the English and the Spaniards; and unless the marshal shall decide differently, I acquit you of blame."

Three weeks elapsed but feeble consolation to to the wretched officer.

"When the emperor shall come to know this," he exclaimed.

"He will want to have you shot," said the general; "but we shall see. However, no more of this." he added, in a low tone, "except to draw from it a vengeance which shall strike a salutary terror upon this country of treachery."

An hour after the whole regiment, a detachment of cavalry, and a train of artillery, were on their march. The general and Victor marched at the head of this column. Before the commencement of the massacre of their comrades, were filled with an unexampled fury. The distance that separated the town of Mendo from the Spanish frontier was traversed with a miraculous rapidity. On the route the general found whole villages in arms. Every one of these rebellious hamlets was reduced to ashes, and their inhabitants decimated. By some inexplicable fatality, the English vessels had remained lying to, without advancing—all was afterwards ascertained—when these vessels carried only artillery, and that they had outsailed the rest of the transports—so that the town of Mendo was surrounded by the French troops with scarcely a blow struck. The inhabitants, seized with consternation, and seeing themselves destitute of that aid which the appearance of the English sails had seemed to promise them, offered to surrender at discretion. By one of those acts of clemency which, during the wars in the Peninsula, those concerned in the assassination of the French, foreseeing, from the well-known character of the victors, that no mercy would probably be given to flames, and its whole population be put to the sword, proposed to the general to give hostages against themselves. He accepted their offer, adding to it the condition that all the inhabitants of the castle, from the lowest valet to the highest, should be delivered into his hands. The capitulation being agreed upon, the general promised to pardon the rest of the people of the town, and to withdraw his soldiers from sacking or setting it on fire. An enormous contribution was imposed on it, and the richest inhabitants were obliged to remain as prisoners to guarantee its payment, which was to be consummated within twenty-four hours.

The general, in order to secure the execution necessary for the safety of his troops, and provided for the defence of the country, refused to admit his soldiers in their billets. He encamped them, and then ascended to the castle, of which he took military possession. All the members of the family of Léganès were assembled, the two daughters and three sons, together with the servants, were placed under careful guard, and planned. The general had given orders formerly to be shut up in the saloon in which the ball had taken place. The windows of that apartment embraced a view of the whole of the surrounding town. The staff was established in a neighboring gallery, where the general first held a council of war on the measures to be taken to oppose the landing of the English.

After having dispatched an aide-de-camp to Marshal Ney, and given orders for the erection of batteries on the coast, the general and his staff turned their attention to the prisoners. Two hundred Spaniards whom the inhabitants had delivered up were immediately shot on the terrace. After the military execution, the general commanded as many scaffolds to be planted on the terrace as there were persons in the saloon, and the executioner of the town to be brought to the spot.

Taking advantage of the interval to elapse before the service of dinner for the staff in the gallery of the castle, Victor Marchand went to see the prisoners. Presently he returned to the general.

"I come," he said, in a low voice of strong emotion, "to ask a favor."

"You?" answered the general, with a tone of bitter irony.

"Alas!" replied Victor, "they are melancholy favors. The marquis, seeing the scaffolds planted there, has indulged the hope that you would for his family grant the favor of death. He entreats you that the nobles may be decapitated."

"Be it so," said the general.

"They ask also that the consolations of religion be afforded them, and that they may be released from their bonds. They promise to make an attempt at escape."

"I consent," said the general, "but you will be answerable for them."

"The old man, moreover, offers you the whole of his fortune if you will pardon his young son."

"Indeed!" replied the chief; "but his fortune already belongs to King Joseph."

He paused. A scornful smile wrinkled his brow, and he added:

"I will even go beyond their wishes. I guess the importance of the last request. Very well—let him purchase the perpetuation of his name, and let Spain preserve for ever the memory both of their treachery and their punishment. I grant a pardon, and the whole of that fortune, to whichever of his sons shall perform the office of the executioner. Begone—and not a word more on the subject."

Victor remained thunderstruck.

Dinner was served. All the officers, seated at table, satisfied the demands of a hunger sharpened by fatigue. One only of their number was missing from the circle; it was Victor Marchand. After a long hesitation he proceeded to the apartment in which were mourning the proud family of Léganès. He entered. He cast a mournful glance over the spectacle now presented by that saloon, where the evening before he had seen the gay and brilliant heads of the young girls and the three youths shining in the stream of light which fell from a star. He thought that they were soon to roll to the ground, severed by the sword of the headsman. The father and the mother, the grandfather, and two daughters, plighted to the gift sofas, remained in a state of perfect motionlessness. Eight servants were standing in silence, with their hands bound behind their backs. These fifteen persons were gravely contemplating each other, and their eyes, sometimes, by the avarice of horror, also were harrowed. A profound resignation, mingled with regret for the failure of their enterprise, seemed to be painted in their countenances. Motionless, and respecting the grief of these cruel enemies. A movement of curiosity animated the whole assembly at the entrance of Victor. He gave orders to unfasten the condemned captives, and happened himself to loosen the cords which fastened the hands of the two girls. They smiled mournfully. The officer could not help lightly touching in the process the elegant and delicate wrists of the young ladies. He looked with admiration on the dark wealthof her hair, and her lithe form—for indeed she was all Spanish in her style of beauty—somewhat slightly dark; and Spanish eyes, with long curved lashes and a pupil blacker than a raven's wing.

"Oh, my brothers!" said a girl, in the accent of those funereal smiles in which there is still something of the young girl.

Victor turned his eyes with a groan. He looked in turns at the three brothers and Clara. The one, the eldest, was thirty years old. Small, but well made, with haughty and dauntless air, he still was pale without a certain nobleness of manner, and did not seem entirely a stranger to that delicacy of sentiment which once made the Spanish nobility so celebrated. He was called Juanito. The second, Felipe, was about twenty years old. He resembled Clara. The third was a child of fifteen. Victor would have found in all the features of Raphael something of that Roman constancy which David has given to the children of Brutus. Clara, the old servant who had so head covered with white hairs, which seemed to have escaped from some picture of Murillo's.

The eyes of the old woman and of the child, despairing of seeing the general's bargain accepted by either of these persons. However, they remained mute without a sigh, a tear. She shuddered at first, but quickly resumed her calmness of countenance, and went to throw herself on her mistress's neck. He stopped.

"Oh!" she said to him, "make Juanito swear that he will faithfully obey the commands you will give him. He must not be outcome!"

A sensation of hope thrilled through the aged mother; but as soon as, leaning over towards Victor, she heard the horrible disclosure of Clara, she fainted.

Juanito understood the whole, and his sprang like a lion in the cage.

Victor took it upon himself to send away the soldiers, after having obtained from the marquis his solemn word of commission. Accordingly the latter were led away and delivered to the executioner, who hanged them all.

Victor had had no other spectator that Victor, the old father arose.

"Juanito!" said he.

Juanito, understanding his father's command, made no other reply to it, than by an inclination of the head expressive of refusal. He sank back upon his chair, and looked at his parents with a cold and cruel eye.

Clara came and sat upon his knees, and with a cheerful air:

"Juanito," she said, passing her arms around his neck, and kissing his eyelids, "if you know how much sweeter the death would be to those whom you love, than a life willing to see to the odious touch of the executioner's hand. You will rescue me from the cris that await me, and—perhaps—you will not have to submit to the same thing."

"General," said an officer, half intimated, "Marchand has just been telling me about that execution. I bet that you did not command it."

"Do you forget, gentlemen," exclaimed General G——, "that in a country where haughty French families will be in tears, and that we are in Spain? Do you want to leave our bones here?"

After this speech not a single word was found, not even a sous-lieutenant, who dared to empty his glass.

Notwithstanding all the respect with which he is surrounded; notwithstanding the title of Hi Verdugo (the executioner) with which the King of Spain is said to have enriched the name of the Marquis de Léganès, he remains a prey to grief, living in solitude, and rarely allowing himself to be seen. Every time that he appears in the midst of his sublime crime, he seems to await with impatience the time when the birth of a second son will give him the right to reject the abalone by whom he walks for ever surrounded.

THE late H. D. Thoreau, the eccentric New England philosopher, wrote as follows: "If one fancy that it would be a luxury to camp in one's city, to some retired swamp a-wide summer day, soothing the wall honeysuckle and hideous shows, and lulled by the minstrelsy of gnats and mosquitoes. Surely one may appreciate the delights in the juices of a swamp for one day as pick his way dryshod over it. Cold and camp—are they such an rich experience as warmth and dryness?"

VIEW OF THE INTERIOR OF THE NEW CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL AT PHILADELPHIA, PENN., CONSECRATED NOV. 20.—SKETCHED BY F. H. & F. B. SCHELL.

A GREETING FOR A NEW YEAR.

BY "HOWARD GLYNDON."

(LAURA C. REDDEN.)

Come in! come in!
Thou shining messenger of God!
Untroubled yet by grief or sin,
Thy weary pilgrimage untrod.
Thy unsunned brow is beautified,
And crowned with glory by His grace;
He breathes the blessing of His love
Upon thy young, unwritten face.

Come in! come in!
For millions of impatient hands
Are stretched to draw the stranger in,
From sunrise unto sunset lands.
The dusky children of the South,
With fair-haired Northmen, wait to press
Upon thy rich unsullied mouth
The greeting of their happiness!

Come in! come in!
And let thy brows be olive bound,
A hazel wand thy hand within,
And time thy footsteps to the sound
Of breathing lyre, in measure sweet;
So shall these notes of ruffian war
Die out abashed, in silence meet;
And Love become our guiding star.

Come in! come in!
And let thy song be sweet and mild;
So, happily, hearing thou shalt win,
And calm this storm of passion wild,
And bid this jarring discord cease,
To the grand chorus of our song
Restore the missing voice of Peace,
And crush the many-headed Wrong!

Come in! come in!
We crown thee with our holiest prayers,
Almost to suffering akin,
For they are breathed through suppliant tears.
We crown thee with a reverent hand,
That gives its nearest, dearest gift,
A wish—that from our troubled land
Thy coming may the shadows lift!

Come in! come in!
We'll pledge thee in a draught divine—
A rarer, costlier ne'er hath been—
And Hope shall bear the blushing wine.
It mantles with the high resolve
Of many a noble patriot heart,
No matter who may traitor prove,
We trust in God and do our part!

ONLY A CLOD.

BY M. E. BRADDON,

AUTHOR OF "LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET," "ELEANOR'S VICTORY," "AURORA FLOYD," "JOHN MARCHMONT'S LEGACY," "THE DOCTOR'S WIFE," ETC., ETC., ETC.

CHAPTER I.—THE MASTER.

Ensign Harcourt Lowther, of her Majesty's 51st Light Infantry, sat staring out into his garden at Port Arthur, watching a couple of convict gardeners—who were going about their work with a monotonous and exasperating deliberation of movement—and lamenting the evil fortune that had stationed him in his present quarters. He had a great many troubles, this elegant young ensign, who was for the time being destined to bloom unseen, and waste the graces that ought to have adorned Belgravia upon the desert air of the Tasmanian peninsula. He had, as he himself elegantly expressed it, no end of troubles. First and foremost, his cigar would not draw, and as it was the last of a case of choice cabanas, the calamity was not a small one. Secondly, there had been a drought in Van Diemen's land for the last month or so. The verdure was growing brown and leathery; the feathery masses of the tall fern shrivelled at the edges like scorched paper; the stiff foliage of the cedars seemed to rattle as it shook in the dry, dust-laden wind; and the thermometer stood at a hundred and ten in the shade—true, it might drop forty degrees or so at any moment, with the uprising of a moist breeze from the sea, but, pending the arrival of that auspicious moment, Mr. Lowther was in a very bad temper. What bad be done that he should be stationed in a convict settlement, with no chance of any gain or glory as compensation for his trials; with no one to speak to except a prosy old police magistrate or a puritanical chaplain; with nothing better to look at than the eternal blue of the ocean, or a whaling-vessel anchored in the bay; with nothing to listen to except the clanking of hammers, and hanging of timber, and jingling of iron in the busy dockyard; with no better enjoyment to hope for than a couple of days' quail shooting or kangaroo hunting in the interior?

"If I'd been Desperate Bill, the burglar, or Slippery Steeve, the smasher, I couldn't be much worse off," he muttered, as he gave up the unmanageable cigar and went across the room to a table, upon which there were some tobacco jars and meerschaum pipes. "Now, then, Tredethlyn, are those boots ready?"

This question was addressed to an invisible some one, whose low whistling of a jovial Irish air was audible from the adjoining room.

"Yes, captain," answered a cheery voice—the whistler had broken off in the middle of the "Wild Sweet Briary Fence that Around the Flowers of Erin Dwells"—"yes, captain, quite ready."

"That's another aggravation!" exclaimed Mr. Lowther. "The fellow will call me captain, as if it wasn't an underhand way of reminding me that for a poor devil like me there's no chance of promotion."

"But you see you are captain here, Mr. Lowther," said the whistler, emerging from the adjoining chamber with a pair of newly blacked Wellingtons in his hand; "you're captain, major, colonel, general and field-marshal, all in one, here, with seventy men under your control, and any amount of convicts to look after."

"If there's one thing in the world more excruciating than another, it's that fellow's cheerfulness," cried Mr. Lowther. "I can fancy the feelings of an elegant young French marquis of the vieille roche, a scion of the Mortemars or Birons, buried alive in an underground cell in the Bastile, with a lively commoner for his companion—a cheerful bourgeoise, who pretended to make light of his situation, and eat his mouldy bread with a relish. Now, then, Tredethlyn, where are the boothooks? That fellow always forgets something."

"That fellow," otherwise Francis Tredethlyn, was a tall, stalwart private soldier, of some seven-and-twenty years of age, who had been honored by an appointment to the post of valet and butler to Ensign Harcourt Lowther.

If the stalwart soldier had not been blest with one of those imperturbable Mark Tapley-like tempers, which resemble the patent elliptic springs of a crack coachbuilder's carriage, and can convey the traveller unjolted and uninjured over the roughest roads in the journey of life, he might have found his position as valet, major-domo and occasional confidant to Harcourt Lowther far from the pleasantest berth to be had in this great tempest-tossed vessel which we call the world. But Francis Tredethlyn's serenity of disposition was proof against the most wearisome burden a man is ever called upon to bear, the companionship of a discontented fellow-creature, and all the variable moods, from a feverish, cynical kind of gaiety to a dreary and ill-tempered gravity, which were engendered out of that perpetual discontent.

But Frank Tredethlyn bore it all cheerfully; with a manly, open-hearted cheerfulness that had no taint of sycophancy. If the young ensign wanted to talk to him, well and good; he was ready and willing to talk about anything or everything; but he had his own sentiments upon most subjects, which sentiments were of a very fast color, and did not take any reflected hue from Mr. Lowther's aristocratic opinions.

It is not to be supposed that Francis Tredethlyn, private soldier and valet, had any claims to intellectual equality with his master. The private wrote a fair commercial hand, very bold, and big, and resolute-looking; could read aloud without stumbling ignominiously over the big words; could cast up accounts; and looking back at the history of the universal past, saw glimmering faintly over a sea of darkness and oblivion such beacon lights as a Norman invasion; a solemn meeting on the flat turf of Runnymede; a Reformation, with a good deal of martyr-burning and head-chopping attendant thereupon; a fiery hook-nosed Dutch liberator, a Jacobite rebellion and a Reform Bill. Beyond these limits the attainments of Mr. Tredethlyn did not extend; and the ensign, when grumbling at the general discomfort of his life, was apt to say that it was a hard thing to be flung for companionship on a fellow who was nothing but a boor and a clod.

Mr. Lowther treated his valet very much as a spoiled child treats her doll; sometimes it pleased him to be monstrously cordial and familiar with his attendant, while at another time he held Francis aloof by a haughty reserve of manner, beyond which barrier the other made no effort to penetrate.

"The fellow does possess that merit," Harcourt Lowther said sometimes—"he knows how to keep his place."

The fact of the matter is, that the valet was infinitely less dependent upon his master's companionship than his master upon his. There were a hundred ways in which Francis Tredethlyn could amuse himself; and there was not a cloud in the sky, a wave of the sea, a leaf in the garden, out of which he could not take some scrap of pleasure, and which had not a deeper and truer meaning for him than for the idle young officer, who lay yawning upon his narrow couch with his feet in the air, and with nothing better to do than to admire the cut of his boots, obtained on credit from a confiding West End tradesman. Francis had that wide sympathy with his fellow-creatures which is a special attribute of some men, and he was on the friendliest possible terms with the two convicts, both of whom had achieved some renown as the most incorrigible and execrable specimens of the criminal class. Every dog in the little settlement fawned upon Frank Tredethlyn, and ran to rub its head against his knees and slaver his hand with its flapping tongue. He had made kennel for two or three of these canine acquaintances in a shady corner of the big garden, much to the disgust and annoyance of the ensign, who only cared for such dogs as are calculated to assist the sports of their lord and master. Staghounds and beagles, foxhounds and harriers, setters, pointers and retrievers, clever ratting Scotch terriers, well-bred and savage bulls, even little short-eared toy terriers, or fawn-colored and black-muzzled pugs were all very well placed in the scheme of creation; but Mr. Lowther could find no explanation for the existence of those mongrel creatures, who seem to have nothing to do in the world but to attach themselves with slavish devotion to some brutal master, or to lie in the most disreputable courts and alleys of a city in hot weather and catch flies.

But somehow or other Francis Tredethlyn seemed generally to do pretty much as he liked, in spite of military despotism and Mr. Harcourt Lowther. The dogs were unmolested in their shady corner; and the ensign was so good as to say that a little aviary of wickerwork and wire, which Tredethlyn constructed in his leisure hours and duly filled with tiny feathered inhabitants, that kept up a faint twittering in the sunshine, was an improvement to the cottage. Francis was very handy, and could do wonders with a hammer and a handful of tin tacks, and was, indeed, altogether a great acquisition to his master, as Mr. Corbett, the police magistrate, sometimes remarked to Harcourt Lowther.

"Yes," Harcourt answered, indifferently; "the fellow is a cut above most of his class. He is a Cornishman, it seems, and the son of a small farmer in that land of Tre, Pol and Pen; and he tells me that he has an old miser of an uncle, who is supposed to be preternaturally rich. Egad! I wish I had such an uncle! All my uncles are misers for the matter of that; but then, unluckily, the poor devils are misers because they are preternaturally poor!"

Mr. Lowther stood before the little looking-glass, in the sunny window, admiring himself, while Francis Tredethlyn helped him on with his coat. He was going to dine with Mr. Corbett, the magistrate, and to spend the evening in the society of Miss Corbett, who had come out to the colony with the idea that general officers and wealthy judges would be waiting on the shore ready to conduct her straight from the place of debarcation to the hymeneal altar, and had been a little soured by the disenchantment which had too surely followed her arrival. She was a gushing damsel of thirty-five, very tall and square, and of a prevailing drab color, and she played tremendous variations of shrill Scottish melodies on a piano, which had been warranted to preserve its purity of tone in any climate, but upon which the nearest thing to an harmonious octave was a wild stretch of thirteen notes. Mr. Lowther must have been very low in the world when he had nothing better to do than to sit by Miss Corbett's piano while she banged and rattled at the numerous disguises under which "Kinloch of Kinloch" appeared in a fantasia of twelve pages, now prancing jauntily in triplets, now rushing up and down the piano in chromatic scales, now scampering wildly in double arpeggios, now banging himself out of all knowledge of common chords, or wailing dismally in a hideous minor. Fate had done its worst for Ensign Lowther when he had no better amusement than to lounge by the side of that ill-used old instrument, staring reflectively at the thin places on the top of Miss Corbett's drab-colored head.

Harcourt Lowther stood before the glass admiring his handsome face, while his valet brushed the collar of his coat. Well, he had a right to admire himself! If Providence bad treated him badly, capricious Mother Nature, who, like any other frivolous-minded parent, elects her prime favorites without rhyme or reason, had been very bountiful to him in the matter of an aquiline nose, a finely modelled mouth and chin, and deep, womanish blue eyes, with a shimmer of gold on their lashes. No one could deny Mr. Lowther's claim to be considered a remarkably handsome man, an elegant young man, a very agreeable and accomplished gentleman. The world, of course, had nothing to do with that rougher edge of the ensign's character which he turned to his valet, Francis Tredethlyn, in his cottage at Port Arthur.

He went out presently, swinging his thin cane, and whistling all the triplets and cadences of an elaborate scena; he was an amateur musician and an amateur artist, playing more or less upon two or three different instruments, and painting more or less in half a dozen different styles. He could ride across country to the astonishment of burly Leicestershire squires, who were inclined to think contemptuously of his small waist and pretty blue eyes, his amber-tinted, jockey-club-perfumed whiskers, trim tops and unstained "pink." He was a good shot, and long ago at Harrow had been renowned as a cricketer. He spoke three or four modern languages, and had that dim recollection of his classic studies which is sufficient for a man of the world who knows how to make much out of little. He was altogether a very accomplished gentleman; but with him intellectual pursuits were a means rather than an end, and he took very little pleasure in the society of books or bookmen. He wanted to be in the world, foremost in the perpetual strife, amid the crash of drums and trumpets, the roaring of cannon and glitter of emblazoned standards, flaunting gallantly in the wind. He wanted to be one of the conquerors in the universal tournament, and to ride up to the Queen of Beauty flushed and triumphant after the strife, to be admired and caressed. This is why the inaction of his present existence was so utterly intolerable to him. He had a supreme belief in himself, and in the indisputable nature of his right to the best and brightest amongst earth's prizes. The time must be, indeed, out of joint in which there was nothing better for such as he than a dreary convict settlement in the Tasmanian peninsula.

Unluckily the time was out of joint. Robert Lowther, of Lowther Hall, Hampshire, had given his younger son an aristocratic name and a gentlemanly education, and then, having nothing more to bestow upon him, had been forced to leave the lad to fish for himself in the troubled waters of life. Under these circumstances the young man had elected to become a barrister, but after a three years' course of reading, in which the cultivation of light literature and modern languages was diversified by a slight sprinkling of legal study, he had grown heartily sick of his comfortably furnished third floor in Hare Court, Temple, and had gladly accepted the price of a commission in one of her Majesty's light infantry regiments from an affectionate maiden aunt, believing that the regiment would be speedily under orders for India, where glory and loot no doubt awaited a dashing young soldier with a very high opinion of his own merits.

Unhappily for Mr. Lowther, the regiment did not go to India; but he and his captain, with a detachment of seventy rank and file, embarked at Deptford, on a misty morning in October, in charge of four hundred and fifty convicts bound for Hobart Town. At the time of which I write the ensign had been nearly a twelvemonth in Van Diemen's Land, and before him lay the prospect of another dreary year which must elapse before there was much chance of his seeing a change of quarters. There are some people who take their troubles with a cheerful countenance, and make the best of a bad bargain, but Mr. Lowther was not one of them. He had begun to grumble before the convict ship left Deptford, and he had gone on complaining, with very little intermission, until to-day, and was likely so to continue until the end of the chapter. Napoleon at St. Helena could scarcely have felt his exile more keenly; nor could that fallen hero have more bitterly resented the injustice of his fate than Harcourt Osborne Lowther, who believed that there must be something radically wrong in a universe in which there was no provision of £40,000 or so a year for an elegant young man, with a perfect aquiline nose, a clear, ringing touch upon the piano, a trumpet tone on the flute, a talent for taking pen-and-ink portraits that were equal to anything of Count D'Orsay's, and an irreproachable taste in waistcoats.

He went out now in very tolerable spirits, first, because he had worked himself into a good temper by grumbling to himself and Tredethlyn all day; secondly, because he was going to have a good dinner and some rare old tawny port, which was the boast of Mr. Corbett, the magistrate; and thirdly, because he was going to be admired—and in a Tasmanian settlement even the worship of a young lady with bony fingers and drab-colored eyes and hair is not altogether a despicable tribute.

"When I hear 'Kinloch of Kinloch' tortured out of all semblance of himself upon that wretched piano, I let myself go somehow or other," thought the ensign, "and I fancy myself standing behind Maude Hillary's Broadwood in the long drawing-room at Twickenham. Twickenham! Shall I ever see Twickenham again, and Maude Hillary, and the twinkling light upon the river, and the low branches of the chestnuts, the sedgy banks, the lazy boats, the lights up at the 'Star and Garter' glimmering across the dusky valley? Shall I ever see that fair civilized land again, or shall I die in this condemned and accursed hole?—die, forgotten and unlamented before I have made any mark in the world!"

CHAPTER II.—THE MAN.

While Mr. Lowther went to eat his dinner with the hospitable magistrate, Francis Tredethlyn did his work briskly; folding his master's coats and waistcoats, brushing boots, clearing away little heaps of cigar ash, and picking up torn scraps of paper and open books cast recklessly upon the floor by a reader who was too badly disposed towards a world that had ill-treated him to find the opinions of any author entirely to his taste.

The soldier whistled that lively melody in praise of Erin's daughters all the time, and achieved his task with the rapid neatness of a male Cinderella specially endowed by some fairy godmother; and when Mr. Lowther's humble sitting-room and bedroom were restored to perfect order, his valet retired to his own little apartment, which was a shedlike chamber at the back of the cottage, and a kind of compromise between a dressing-room and a washhouse. Here Mr. Tredethlyn made his toilet, which consisted of a rapid plunge of his head and throat into a tub of cold water, some brisk operations with a cake of yellow soap, accompanied by sputtering and whizzing noises of an alarming character, a little fierce rubbing down with a coarse towel, and the smart application of a stiff and implacable-looking hairbrush. When this was done Francis Tredethlyn put on his jacket, and went out into the garden to smoke his pipe and converse with the convicts.

Now that the gifts of nature had been enhanced by the adornments of art, the ensign's valet was by no means a bad-looking fellow. He was tall, broad-shouldered, and muscular in build as a modern Hercules. His closely cut black hair revealed the outline of a well shaped head well placed upon his shoulders. Under his dark, almost gipsy-brown skin was a rich crimson glow, which deepened or faded under the influence of any powerful emotion. His nose was straight, but rather short, and of no particular type; but a sculptor would have told you there was a special beauty about the curve of his full open nostrils, and Honoré de Balzac would have informed you that a man with that kind of nostril is generally good for something in this world. His forehead was low, stronger in the perceptive than in the reflective organs; his eyes were of a clear gray, darkened by the shadow of thick black lashes. He was a handsome soldier; he would have made a handsome gladiator in the old Roman days; a noble-looking brigand, in the days when brigands were chivalrous; a dashing highwayman, in the age when Claude Duval rode gaily to his death on Tyburn tree; a glorious sporting farmer down in Leicestershire to-day; but no power upon this earth could have transformed him into an elegant West-end lounger, an accomplished dawdler in fashionable drawing-rooms, or a "gentleman" in the modern acceptation of the word.

He went out into the garden now, to smoke his pipe of bird's-eye and talk to the convict gardeners, who brightened at his approach, and deliberately planted themselves in a convenient position upon their spades, in order to converse with him. I am sorry to say that he was as much at home in their society as if they had been the most estimable of mankind, and that he encouraged them to talk freely of their burglarious experiences in the old world. Was there not a smack of brigandage and adventure in those experiences, and even a dash of chivalry, according to the two men's own showing? for they told stories of encounters in which they shone out quite with heroic lustre from their rooted objection to cut an elderly lady's throat, and their gallant bearing towards a high-minded young damsel who had led them from room to room in her father's mansion, and had pointed with her own fair hands to the whereabouts of the family valuables.

Francis Tredethlyn sat upon the trunk of a fallen acacia, watching the hazy clouds in the early evening sky, and smoking his pipe, long after the two convicts had struck work and retired to their own quarters. He sat smoking and musing; thinking, as I suppose a man so blinded must think, of that other far-away world which he had left behind him; and which it seemed at his sometimes, in such still moments as these, that he should never see again.

"So far away, so very far away!" he mused. "I wonder how the little village street looks now? still is looking now? It's winter-time now there, or getting towards winter-time, anyhow. I can fancy it of an evening, with the lights twinkling in the low shop windows, the big cassie gate frowning down upon the poor little cemetery that churchyard, where Lucy and I have played, all dark and lonesome in the winter night; and Susy herself—pretty little dark-eyed Susy—sitting by the hearth in the old parlor at Tredethlyn, stitch, stitch, stitch, while the old man nods and snores over his newspaper. Poor little Susy, what could he do if he died now, and the old man as rich as that king of somewhere—Cressa, don't they call him? of his neighbors are to be believed. Poor little Susy! is she fond of me, I wonder! and will she be pleased to marry me, if ever I'm able to go back, and say, 'Susy, the hard time I needs, afore running out to the cold world, was to save up money enough to buy my discharge, so that I might come home again to claim the old promise—for fear, you know, you should change your mind.' We couldn't well be poorer than we should be at present, for of course, the old chap would turn nasty, and tell Susy of the will, and the cash he had taken for that?" thought Francis Tredethlyn, snapping his fingers in the independence of his spirit. "If Susy loves me, and I love Susy, and we are both young and strong, and industrious, what's to prevent us getting on in the world, without anybody's money to help us?"

The soldier smoked another pipe in a dreamy reverie, in which his thoughts still hovered about one fondly-remembered little country cottage-home, stone-built farmhouse, standing alone upon a broad plateau of bare moorland, very dreary of aspect in the autumn evening, with dark-body-colored cloud, in which the ornamental had been sacrificed for the useful—a gaunt, naked-looking dwellingplace, upon which neither decoration or improvement in ten-pound note had not been expended within the memory of man—a home which had gone down through three generations, and which had grown grimer and dreamier under the rule of every generation.

The vast, bare, habitation which stood so clearly out against the vague background of Francis Tredethlyn's dreams as if it had been palpably present upon the broad moorland on the other side of the bay. This was the house, and in the low narrow doorway, framing the desolate expanse of stunted heather, the soldier saw also the slender young figure of a girl—a girl with dark, gentle eyes, and a quaker-like dress of coarse brown stuff—a girl, who stood with her hand shading her eyes, looking at the distant figure of an old man plodding homeward in the winter twilight. He had so often seen that old man, that he was only natural and inclined to be especially civil to his valet.

"Yes, Sir, I suppose I may as well say one word more—whether she loves me still? I wasn't like some of your fine fellows—I wasn't one of your corporate fellows. I had no hot, fits or cold fits, or jealous fits, or such like, and there are some folks that can't believe in love unless it's in them. But I was very fond of Susy—poor little tender-hearted Susy! I used to think of her somehow, as if she had been my little sister. I think of her like that now."

CHAPTER III.—LOVERS OF A FEATHER.

It was late in the evening when Lowther came home from his friend the magistrate's. The faint flush that lighted up his face, and the unwonted lustre of his eyes, bore testimony to the merits of Mr. Corbett's hospitality. All Sandemann's choicest vintages would have not tempted Harcourt Lowther to sit listening to a prosy old magistrate's civil reminiscences of Europe; but to the side of the world a bottle of good wine and a tolerably civil-spoken companion were not entirely to be despised. The cause might be a very good temper when he came into the little parlor, where a scraping fire burned brightly, and where a schoolgirl, a mercenary, a case knife or Schiedam, a tumbler, a jug of water, were set upon the table in front of the master of the domain. Mr. Lowther was in excellent temper, and inclined to be especially civil to his valet.

"Mr. Sandeman, so-night, Tredethlyn," he said, throwing himself into the wicker easy chair, and stretching his feet upon a smaller chair that stood opposite to him; "I've had a little bit of much of that old fellow's port. Devilish good stuff it is too, if it hadn't a tendency to spoil a man's complexion, and accumulate itself in his nose. I'll take a pipe, though. Just give me a light, will you, Tredethlyn."

He sat pulling, with his head thrown back against the rail of the chair, and dainthy arranged the stray shreds of tobacco in the bowl of his pipe with the delicate tip of his finger, while the private lighted a long strip of folded paper and handed it to his master.

"Oh, by-the-bye," muttered Mr. Lowther, speaking with his teeth shut upon the amber mouthpiece of his pipe, "I've got some news for you, Tredethlyn. Just put your hand in my coat pocket, and take out the paper you'll find there. Goodness knows what it means—a gacy of fifty pounds or so, I suppose. Anyhow, you're a lucky dog, and I'm a fool enough to get over-much a windfall as that; but I never hear of anything to my advantage."

Francis Tredethlyn had taken the paper from his master's pocket by this time; it was an old copy of the Times, and he presented it to the consign, but the other pushed it away impatiently.

"I don't want it," he said; "I think I remember like of it while old Corbett was smiling over the thing. It's a fond advertisement in the second column of the supplement."

The soldier did as he was directed, and read the advertisement aloud very slowly, and in a tone of unmitigated wonder:

"Francis Tredethlyn, nephew of the late Oliver Tredethlyn, of Tredethlyn and Lanyon, Cornwall, Esquire. If the above-mentioned will apply to Messrs. Rusedale and Scrivelon, solicitors, 24, Verulam Buildings, Gray's Inn, he will hear of something to his advantage."

"The late Oliver Trethelyn!" cried Francis, staring blankly at the paper; "my uncle is dead then!"

"Was he alive when you left England?" asked the consign.

"He was alive when I left Cornwall. Dead! my uncle Oliver!" the young man said, in a thinny voice, as if speaking of some one whom in my fancy, plodding home from the outlying lands, as hale, and stern, and sturdy as ever. Dead! and he may have left me his money, for all they tell me," added Francis Tredethlyn, pointing to the advertisement.

"You were uncommonly fond of your uncle, I suppose, from the way you talk of him," Mr. Lowther remarked, carelessly.

He was in a very good humor to-night, and ready to talk about anything—inclined to take almost an interest in the affairs of another man, and that other man his valet.

"Fond of him!" exclaimed Francis Tredethlyn, "fond of my uncle Oliver! I don't think the greatest event that could befall me in this world would leave he'd have cared to have. He liked folks to obey him, and cut things as close as he wanted 'em cut; but I suppose that he took care what they thought or what they did. I suppose that he did love his daughter, though, after a fashion, but it was as a useful piece of property. So, sir, I wasn't particularly fond of my uncle, Oliver Tredethlyn, but I'm struck all of a heap by the news of his death coming upon me so sudden; and I'm thinking of the effect that it will have upon two people—one she's all alone in the world, now—poor little Susy!"

The consign looked up quickly.

"Susy," he said; "who the deuce is your cousin Susy?"

"She's my uncle Oliver's only daughter, sir; his only child, too, for the matter of that. We were engaged to be married, sir, but things went wrong with me at home, and I ran away and enlisted."

"Ah! How long ago did all that happen?"

"Nearly two years, sir."

"And you've kept up some sort of a correspondence with your cousin since then, I suppose?"

"Not I, sir; for after what I'd done to her I'd her write a letter that would cost a heap of money for postage, or to write any letter to such a scamp as me. I wrote to her, and her letter was closely watched, and too obedient into the bargain, to write without its leave. I've written to her now and then, but I've never known how long ago was the day I left it, except this that you've brought me to-night."

"And I suppose your uncle has left you a legacy?"

"I suppose so, sir; it isn't likely he much, seeing that he never was any great favorite of his."

"You'd better write to these lawyers, though, There's a mail to-morrow: bring out your deed and write at once."

"Here, sir?"

"Yes, here, sir."

Francis Tredethlyn hesitated a moment, but seeing that his master was resolute, he brought a tapsey, old-fashioned bureau desk from his chamber, at the back of the cabin, and seated himself at the corner of the table with the desk before him, while the light burned on a very respectful distance from Mr. Harcourt Lowther, but that gentleman, having finished his pipe, got up and began to walk slowly up and down the room, while the valet opened his desk and began to write.

"Tell them that you are Francis Tredethlyn, nephew of Oliver Tredethlyn, and that you are hiring forward plenty of witnesses to prove your identity, and so on, so soon as you get back to England, if you require them; they'll let you have your legacy till they see you. Ask them to tell you what the amount is, at any rate."

Mr. Lowther did not condescend to offer any his valet these hints upon the composition of his letter; he was good enough to stand behind the young man's chair, and look over his shoulder as he wrote. But as Francis Tredethlyn's penmanship was not of a very rapid order, the consign's eyes soon wandered from the paper, and straying to an open division of the desk, lighted on some thing that looked like a water-colored sketch, covered with silver paper.

"Why, you sly dog," he cried, with a laugh, "you've got a woman's picture in your desk."

Francis Tredethlyn blushed and looked very sheepish as he took the little water-colored sketch out of its silver paper envelope and handed it submissively to his master.

"It's my cousin Susan's portrait, sir," he said. "It was taken by a travelling artist, who came down our way one summer. It isn't much of a likeness, but it pleases me to look at it sometimes, for I can tell by all that's wanting in the face out of my own mind, and see my cousin smiling at me, as if I was at home again."

Mr. Lowther stood behind his servant's chair, looking at the portrait, while the soldier went on writing. He was not the work of a very brilliant artist; there were none of those deliciously careless touches, none of that transparent lightness, which a clever painter's manipulation would have displayed. It was a stiff, laborious little portrait of a girl with hard brown eyes and smooth-banded brown hair, and an uncouth childish mouth, red and fresh, and smiling as summer's morning in the country. It was only the picture of a country girl, who could not have looked stilly at the smile as he painted her.

"So that's your cousin Susy," said Mr. Lowther, laying the sketch down on the table by Francis Tredethlyn's elbow. "I don't stop while you address your letter, and I don't want anything more, so you can go to bed at once if you like. Good night."

The consign took a candle from a little side table as he spoke, and lighted it at the lamp above Tredethlyn's head, and went out of the room. Francis finished his letter, and placed it on the mantelpiece, where it would be ready for the early bag for the next day's mail. He did not go to bed at once, though it was late, and he was free to do so; he sat for some time with his head resting upon Tredethlyn's portrait in his hand, looking at the girlish face, and thinking of the changes that had come to pass in his old home.

The old cheap was hard and stern with her, and her life was a dull one, poor little girl," thought the soldier; "and if I'm to be left a fine fortune, I suppose, now he's gone; but somehow I don't like to think of her left lonely in the world, she's too young, and too much like a child to be innocent for that. Innocent! why, bless her poor tender little heart, I don't think she knows there's such a thing as wickness upon this earth."

THE DEMON OF MUSIC.

BY R. H. STODDARD.

THERE'S a demon in Music,
Whatever its tone:
He dwells in the crowd
Of the noisiest throng;
He moans when they laugh,
He laughs when they moan.

This demon of Music
Hath somehow been crossed;
He longs for a bride,
Or was, and is lost:
That life is a torture
He knows to his cost.

O demon of Music,
I pity your woes,
I have felt it myself,
And shall feel it again:
I'm the victim of love,
This living in vain.

THE NEW CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL AT PHILADELPHIA.

WHEN WILLIAM PENN mapped out in memorial vision the City of Brotherly Love, he saw before him the fair green country, the broad rivers, the fine harbors and in the solids there was a Square or Park, shadowed by noble trees. For only he could have painted his imaginings! If only he could have given us opportunity of comparing the probable of his day with the actual of ours! We have to say that, where the picture might have been, the dull monotony of the roads would seem to have been laid out by means of many caunchers that, certainly, the bird-eye view of the city would not have been surmounted, as now, by the grave country-house that was taken by the first dome of the cathedral. Never upon the founder of the Quaker city would have dawned the thought that the most beautiful, perhaps, of its future pleasaunces and one day, serve as a plaza to a cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul—cathedral, that is to say, which, when the most possible advantage, a grand culmination into works of a faith so completely the reverse, in ritual and architectural expression, of that which he professed and labored to establish, on "the green banks of the Delaware."

The cathedral stands in the northwestern section of the city of Philadelphia, on the eastern front of Logan Square. The site is a noble one, even widely so, for a laverite, for the past few years, in our Atlantic cities. There is here no high and restricted boundary, as there is somme hue affords scarce enough relief of light and shade and—in this case—some hardly suited to the architectural display of that which by its very conformation of the building is that of a cross. It is designed, indeed, after the manner of the Italian Borromeo in Rome, and is not far inferior to that Italian structure in symmetry and beauty. Seen from the street, it presents the appearance of a Greek cross, with the appearance of a large square edifice, dark almost to gloominess, surmounted by a dome and upholding a golden cross. Whether designedly or not, the effect is both well brought out—that each is the object of the structure—that the dome and roof and cross are not there just to uplift that cross. And the splendid pedestal that they combine to form looms up, so large and massive, as to overwhelm the building—indeed, to make the statelest mansions in the city—dwindle into nothingness. Even the Girard College, though it was designed for entering, pause a moment between the two mighty colums that guard its portal, that you receive your first impression of its size. Then, indeed, as you enter, and how far above your their bases rest upon their pedestals, you are somewhat prepared for the feeling that will upon you, when you stand beneath the dome, and look up, up, up to the great picture of the Assumption, in the painting of which the artist would realize by means of the building is, do not stand still and gaze about you for that the interior of which perpetually endless, but walk up and down the aisles, in and out of the chapels, and note how many minutes you have occupied in so doing. Speak, and listen to your own voice. Send your companion towards the door under the organ gallery, and mark how he realizes his pathos as he recedes. Call to him, and find how much you must raise your voice to make him hear. And then, looking up into the dome again, think, if you can, without turning giddy and faint, "What if the painter of the Assumption had made a misstep upon his scaffolding, and had fallen from the Virgin's foot above down upon that marble floor!"

Of course, you have said that, after the vastness, the chief thing remarkable about the interior is its severe simplicity. Of course, also, you have been grievously in error. Within, as without, the cathedral is loaded with ornament. Yet the decorations are so blended and harmonized that they no more obtrude themselves upon the view, apart from the columns and vaultings, the roofs and arches which they render rich, than do the carvings, and tracerie, and panellings, of some mature cathedrals for own cathedral-lovers. Also tastefully to nature's own designings. To hum has built up a grand pile for his worship, and to him has sworn, sought to display its adoration of the God in whom it trusts by the admirable taste it has shown in its detail praise. But beside Le Brun, one other man has made himself immortal upon the walls of the cathedral: Constantine Brumidi, the painter of the frescoes. For three years he toiled at his work, not for gain, but for the love of it, for the love of God, and, as we cannot doubt, for love of the great Giver.

One can't help trying to imagine how he may have felt, during those years, according, as the people of Philadelphia, throughout with that noble hurrying, to and fro, in the streets below, or, as they sat in the pews or the peculiarities of the day, and went, alone, to the unfinished house of the cathedral, to behold the form of the city could not follow him, to his toil upon those many-colored walls and roofs. Then, at last, he consumes, after he is under the sod.

It stands here upon the highest point of the present into the future: out of the dim and turmoil of achievement. Its towers and spires rise, and detail of progress.

Few knew him while he labored; but now that he is gone are crowded out his friends and those who claim-like in their mutual relief, his memorial. Peace be to the soul he wrought so much for the glory of God lovingly, for God.

But after all, the real grandeur of the cathedral, not apparent to the eye or sense, is its moral grandeur as a consecrated temple, and already it have been so. The shutter round it assails long surpassing in sublimity those of the grandest cathedrals of the Old World. It is a memorial: not only of the talent that reared and the genius that adorned it, but of the faith that built it up and the devotion of Brumidi; but of the Christian faith, of those who undertook it, and by their munificence and self-denial, achieved it. To toil patiently through it by years, and to bring it home to a free, abode by stone, such a structure devoted to such a purpose is a thing to ponder upon that encouragement most favorable, but been enough to challenge attention. Still to have seen the rise of the Roman Catholic churches had been laid in ashes, by the violence of popular excitement, have appeared, even to the most evidently, through all the churchings of political preacquisitions of bringing no single Protestant national convulsion—all that is, surely, a great and glorious thing. And that here, in the very city which has laid those stones one upon another—no slate upon which only, or chiefly, the Catholic faith was fostered the undertaking, and, amid contending factions, civil discords, religious outbreaks, war, poverty and embarrassments of every name, this—that secret, as nobody knows, and as nobody cares, the fitful structure of its kind in Northern America, has, through all, been steadily reared and come complete, by the voluntary offerings of the Catholic poor, the orphans's gifts and the clergyman's—that is the most sacred and reliable at the sixties of their equal faith.

"Oh, Protestant!" we can say for you, and you may little into the treasury. And its saw, also, a certain poor widow coming in indeed to give. And its saw, of a truth I say unto you that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all.

In closing these remarks upon the New Catholic cathedral—a further view of which will be found on page 264-265—we take occasion to render our thanks to Peter McConomy, the artist employed, at Brumidi's decease, to complete, or conclude, his work.

We have had the pleasure of meeting Mr. McConomy with those which appeared in our paper of Dec. 17th, and which gave a full view of one of the most magnificent pieces of modern architecture.

SHROUDLESS IN OLD TIMES.—A Washington lady wrote recently to a friend in Boston to send her, at once time, in regard to the President's Message: "Time is here." By mistake a shirt and a cravat were put in the paper-man costs, by a little stodgy familiar to the cash, and a clerical error in the address sent the "Time" to himself, and publish the message, or its contents, before it was laid on the table. But all is well that ends well, and have been exhausted, and they are of such a character that they will be read with interest by all. Some of them not newspaper men, on the other day, left a longhair copy of Prince Albert's New Year's papers which we got this interesting document mentions. The message was printed in the silver-gilt paper which would have had been loaned to the printers against contemplating the information to the Democratic majority in the Senate. The message was searched before leaving the typo-room, to see that no "Time" was left in the pockets of any of his person. Journalistic ingenuity was put to the test, but it was found impossible to get the "Time" to the correspondent behind one of the types to wear a pair of gloves, and to obtain a copy of the message was a very favorable opportunity, to his the type, and then put a number of the copies. In all the 500 or 600 pages of the message, the "Time" was left for a few moments and appeared in no other page to be found. The "Time" was left for a few moments and appeared in no other page to be found. The "Time" was left for a few moments and appeared in no other page to be found. The "Time" was left for a few moments and appeared in no other page to be found.

WAR—ITS LIMITS AND MORAL LAWS.—War is an agency which can be lawfully invoked only for the attainment of certain objects, which are few and simple of civil government. A defensive war, waged for the preservation of the State, is necessary and right. It is righteful and expedient. And in a war so waged it is not only a part of the essential conditions of existing, it that moral ends shall be subserved and secured. The very equilibrium of the universe is disturbed, and iniquity and avowedly stage outside of the province and sphere of law, and making a clear and strong pronunciation towards the commons of Heaven by added force. This should be thoroughly understood by those who think that he is grossly ignorant of the laws which regulate the moral world who does not know the limits of war in the universe. He then transcends his authority, and by so doing becomes a flagrant offender on his well-meant schemes and overleaps at the bounds of right.

A Boston paper tells the following story: The city bookseller keep what is called a "subscription book," in which are entered the titles of books ordered, and the names of those who order them, and who agree to collect the books so ordered. One of these youths, new to the business, received an order for a certain book, and read from his book an order for "The Heathen Chinee," recommended. "Another Chinee" for the book; recommended. "Another Chinee" and "One Chinee" for the book. The young man was mistaken in the office asked to look at the order, and on doing so, read "The Heathen Chinee" twice over! "Come, now, that's the last, your sir?"

"Herald, sir," said Jemmy, "to do for his what you cannot do for your self."

"Eh! oh! How's that—how's that?"

To which Jemmy, with a burst of genuine feeling, said:

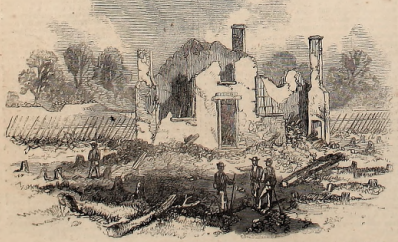
"I intend to make him a better man than his father!"

"I'm torpedo heat Stromboli, on her passage from New Brunswick, N. J., to Baltimore, caused much excitement at towns along the route. Some said, 'There comes the devil, sure!' others called out, 'What do you call that thing?' One old man, screaming at the top of his voice, cried, 'Come here, Bessy, and see this relic of the Revolution!'

THE LATE JAMES WILLIAM WALLACK, AS BENEDICT, IN SHAKESPEARE'S COMEDY OF "MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING."—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.

JAMES WILLIAM WALLACK, SEN.

THE most accomplished of actors, and one of the most polished gentleman on the stage, passed away on Christmas Day, when James W. Wallack, the elder of a family renowned for histrionic talent, died at his house in Fourteenth street, New York. With the exception of the Kemble family, there has been none so remarkable for talent in their profession as the Wallacks.



J. W. Wallack was born in London, 50th Aug., 1795, and had consequently entered upon the threshold of the scriptural three score and ten. Commencing his theatrical career in his seventh year, he may almost be said to have become a naturalised actor, and seldom has one so steadily progressed in his art; for if there were occasional evidences of some decline in physical vigor in his later personations, it was amply atoned for by those artistic touches which gave force and finish to such splendid creations as Shylock, Benedict and Iago, of all which characters Mr. Wallack was the most living exponent. It must be confessed that his early youth was spent with those great actors, Kemble, Elliston and Booth in tragedy—King, Munden and Jones in comedy—with Liston and Reeve in farce. The competition of such critics necessarily leads to more careful study, and the result is an actor whom the requirements and emulations of our modern stage neither demand nor deserve, either in professional pride or careful training.

In September, 1818, Mr. Wallack made his first appearance in America, at the Park Theatre, New York, and achieved a great success. The grace of his person, the intellectual beauty of his face, the ease of his manner, and the excellence of his elocution had so seldom been embodied in the same person, that the public was charmed.

In 1819 he went to Savannah, where his reception was even more enthusiastic than in New York. For the next 18 years he divided his time between England and America.

In 1836 he opened the National Theatre in this city with considerable success. Upon its destruction by fire in 1839 he took to starring. During one of his tours he was thrown from a stage coach, and broke his leg—the marks of which accident were visible to the last, in the slight limp with which he walked.

In 1841 he resolved to make New York his home, and leased Brougham's Lyceum—here he remained till 1861, when he built a theatre at the corner of Thirteenth street and Broadway. As a manager he preferred the old school and legitimate drama, and demonstrated that SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—VIEW OF THE BATTLEFIELD, NEAR ATLANTA, WHERE GEN. M'PHERSON WAS KILLED, JULY 22.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—VIEW OF THE JAIL AT DECATUR, GA., IN WHICH UNION PRISONERS WERE CONFINED.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—BURNING OF THE RAILROAD ROUND-HOUSE AT ATLANTA, GA., NOV. 14—OUR SOLDIERS AT WORK ALONG THE RAILROAD TRACK.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

here as a great play-going public here who prefer that staple to these sensation melodramas which startle but do not satisfy. In this view alone the name of the elder Wallack will always be entitled to the respectful memory of every New Yorker. To recapitulate the merits of an actor so well known would be a waste of space. He was excellent in all he undertook, and in such parts as Shylock, Don Cæsar de Bazan, Benedick, Julian St. Pierre, De Brijsard, Jaques, Strahlel and Reuben Glenroy he was unsurpassed.

It is pleasant to add that in his private life he was equally deserving of regard. He was an honest, upright man, a kind and liberal employer, and a courteous gentleman. He was much beloved by his family, and died surrounded by his grandchildren, full of years, and crowned with every honor which one of his profession can aspire to.

GOV. REUBEN E. FENTON.

THE new Governor of the Empire State was born in Carroll, Chautauqua county, in this State, July 14, 1819. His father was one of the earliest settlers in Western New York, and one of the number of enterprising men who, by their labor and capital, transformed the almost pathless wilderness of "Holland Purchase" into the valuable agricultural tract now lying west of Genesee river. Upon his father's farm in this district did the youthful Reuben work till he was 15 years old, his only learning being what he could pick up in the log schoolhouse of the primitive place. Afterwards he spent some time in an academy at College Hill, near Cincinnati, and also at Fredonia Academy, New York. His father wishing him to be a lawyer, he commenced the study of that refuge for one-half our young men. It soon, however, grew distasteful to him, and before he was 21 he turned his attention to mercantile pursuits. He then engaged in the manufacture and transportation of lumber at the head waters of the Allegheny—in this he made a large fortune. In 1852 he was nominated for Congress on the Democratic ticket, and elected. In 1854 he was defeated by the Know-Nothings. In 1856 he regained his position, and was re-elected in 1860 and 1862. Mr. Fenton has served with great distinction and ability on many important committees in Congress, and is much esteemed by both parties. Last year the Republicans, requiring some man capable of neutralizing the great personal popularity of the Democratic Governor, Horatio Seymour, very wisely chose the subject of this biography, who, despite the Democratic tendency of New York city, was elected by a large majority. Gov. Fenton has the rare merit of never suffering political rancor to tempt him to those personal controversies which too frequently degrade our public men. He is consequently one of the fittest men that could be selected to occupy the Gubernatorial chair.

REUBEN FENTON, GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.

SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

THUS once prosperous city, the entry port of Georgia, contains about 19,000 inhabitants, and is built on a sandy plain, 40 feet above low water mark. It is the centre of a very extensive system of railroads, which constitute greatly to her commercial importance. As a harbor for blockade-runners it has not been of much account since Fort Pulaski fell into our hands. Savannah was founded by Gen. Oglethorpe in 1733. The river is navigable for steamers up to Augusta, 230 miles from its mouth, Savannah itself being 18 miles from the sea. Our view is taken about six miles from the city, with South Carolina on the left hand—the immediate land on the left being Hutchinson's Island—farming for its rice plantation, situated on Savannah river. The steamer in the centre is a rebel gunboat firing on our advance to cover the retreat of Hardee's rebel army, which crossed over about two miles below the city, and escaped by the road known as the Union Causeway.

THE JAIL AT DECATUR, GEORGIA.

DECATUR is a handsome and thriving post village, capital of De Kalb county, Georgia, on the Georgia railroad, 163 miles west of Augusta, and about six miles from the famous Stone mountain. Decatur will hereafter be infamous as the prison and grave of many of our brave soldiers, who were confined in the town jail, which our Artist says "is a dirty, filthy place—not fit for a hog to live in." Side by side with our view of this gloomy den we present a view of a yet gloomier scene—the battlefield on which the gallant Gen. McPherson was slain, in one of the earliest attacks on Atlanta.

LOCKJAW CURED.—The following remarkable cure of lockjaw is related by the Italian Medical Gazette of Milan: "A hairdresser of that city accidentally received a cut with a scythe on the palm of his left hand, near his wrist. This occurred about the middle of March, 1861; the wound healed in six days, and it was not until the 30th following that on arising from his bed, he felt some difficulty in opening his mouth, besides contraction in his left hand, which he could not stretch out, and pain in his right hip and thigh. During the first days the phenomena disappeared on going to bed, but commencing again as soon as he arose and exposed himself to the open air. On the 15th day of April, the symptoms becoming more intense, he was taken to the hospital. On his following day a spasmodic contraction of the lower jaw, and rigidity of the muscles of the neck were observed; the left hand experienced a contraction every time it was taken from under the bedclothes, and the pain on the right side continued; the pulse was very slightly agitated. Sixteen ounces of chloride of baskus, dissolved in a pound of distilled water, were prescribed, to be taken in the course of twenty-four hours. This treatment was continued until the 31st, when the symptoms of lockjaw having nearly or entirely disappeared, the doses were reduced to eight grains a day, and the remedy was entirely left off on the 26th; two days later, the patient left the hospital in perfect health.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—ARSENAL AT MILLEDGEVILLE, GA., DESTROYED BY UNION FORCES, NOV. 24. SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN—DESTRUCTION OF MACHINE SHOP ON THE GEORGIA STATE ROAD, AT ATLANTA, GA., NOV. 14TH.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

A PREVALENT METHOD OF SUICIDE.—A merchant, in "lending a hand" on board of one of his ships on a windy day, found himself at the end of an hour and a half pretty well exhausted, and perspiring freely. He sat down to rest. The cool wind from the sea was delightful, and engaging in conversation, time passed faster than he was aware of. In attempting to rise he found he was unable to do so without assistance. He was taken home and put to bed, where he remained for two years, and for a long time afterwards could only hobble about with the aid of a crutch. Less exposure than this have, in constitutions not so vigorous, resulted in inflammation of the lungs, pneumonia, ending in death in less than a week, or causing tedious rheumatisms, to be a source of torture for a lifetime. Multitudes of lives would be saved every year, and an incalculable amount of human suffering would be prevented, if parents would begin to explain to their children, at the age of three or four, the danger which attends cooling off too quickly after exercise, and the importance of not standing still after exercise or work or play, or of remaining exposed to a window or door, or of pulling off any garment, even the hat or bonnet, while in a heat. It should be remembered by all that a cold never comes without a cause, and that, in four times out of five, it is the result of leaving off exercise too suddenly, or of remaining still in the wind or in a cooler atmosphere than that in which the exercise has been taken.

FIRST PREMIUM

$5 FAMILY GEM $5 SEWING MACHINE

THE WONDER OF THE AGE!

Just Out. THE FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, a most Wonderful and Elegantly Constructed Novelty; is NOISELESS in operation, uses the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, sews with DOUBLE OR SINGLE THREAD. Makes the Running Stitch more perfect and regular than by hand. Will Gather, Hem, Ruffle, Shirr, Tuck, Run up Breadths, &c., &c.; requires no Lubrication or Change of Stitch—IS NOT LIABLE TO GET OUT OF ORDER, and will last a LIFETIME, and is the prettiest and most useful Christmas Gift you can buy. Read the following:

"For the Dressmaker it is invaluable; for the Household it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Ladies' Book.

"At length the desideratum so long sought for, combining usefulness, speed and cheapness, has been gained. The simple structure of this compact and beautiful little Machine will at once command attention, and the speed, certainty and ease with which the work is done will make it THE FAVORITE with the ladies."—MRS. ANN S. STEVENS, in N. Y. Weekly.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.

This ingenious and useful little Machine is perfect in its construction, and has none of the faults of the High-Priced Sewing Machines. No one will pay from $50 to $100 for a Sewing Machine when this one can be bought for the small sum of $5.

This wonderful Machine was awarded the FIRST PREMIUM by the New York State Fair, showing its superiority over all others.

All imitations of this GENUINE ARTICLE are liable, as infringements on the Patent.

☞ Agents wanted all over the world.

Single Machines sent to any address per Express, packed in box on receipt of $5.

Address all orders to
FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
tf 102 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Gold Pens 50 cts. to $2. Pens in Silver Extension Cases $1 to $2. Send stamp for Circular. GEORGE F. HAWKES, Agent, Manufacturer, 64 Nassau St. Also for sale the only perfect Fountain Pen in the World.
483-95

Beauty.—Hunt's Bloom of Roses,

A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and cannot be detected. Price $1. 18 cents by mail, securely packed from observation. HUNT & CO., PERFUMERS,
000 133 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

Beauty.—Hunt's White Liquid Enamel, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enamelor. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address
HUNT & CO., PERFUMERS,
133 South Seventh Street, and 41 South Eighth
000 Street, Philadelphia.

New Map of Richmond,

Showing all of the Fortifications surrounding the Rebel Capital, together with a Description of the City and of all the Forts, etc. Price only 10 cents per copy; Wholesale 60 cents per dozen, or $5 per 100.

NEW MAP OF MOBILE. A Splendid Map. Price, 20 cents; Wholesale, $1 20 per dozen.

MAP OF PETERSBURG, a very desirable Map. Price, 15 cents; Wholesale, $1 per dozen.

NEW MAP OF ATLANTA. Price, 10 cents; Wholesale, 60 cents per dozen, or $5 per 100.

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS of Gens. Grant, Meade, Sherman, Sheridan, Butler, Foster, Hooker, Hancock, Howard, Gilmore, Farragut, Lincoln, McClellan, etc. Price 10 cents each; Wholesale, $6 per 100.

NEW POCKET ALBUMS, holding 16 Cards—Very Desirable. Price only 75 cents. Goods sent Postpaid. Agents Wanted. Catalogues sent free.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

FURS! FURS!! FURS!!!

WILLIAM S. BURKE,
IMPORTER AND MANUFACTURER OF
FURS,
208 Broadway, cor. Fulton St., N. Y.,
has a large and handsome assortment of every description of Furs, of the newest and most approved styles,
AT THE LOWEST CASH PRICES.

The West Indian Hair Curler, warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair, on the first application, into short ringlets or waving massive curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1. Address
WAUD GILBERT LYON,
Box 5251, New York Post Office.

Americans! The German Nobility know the secret of Curling the Hair. Send 50 cents, and get the preparation, to DR. R. H. HOPKINS, Box 4656, New York Post Office.

GOLD PENS

FOR THE MILLION!

PENS TO SUIT THE HAND
AND
PRICES TO SUIT THE POCKET.

The Best Gold Pens in the World!

On receipt of the following sums, we will send, by mail, or as otherwise directed, a Gold Pen or Pens, selecting the same according to the description, namely:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES,

For 50 cts. a No. 2 pen; for 75 cts. a No. 3 pen; for $1 a No. 4 pen; for $1 25 a No. 6 pen; for $1 50 a No. 6 pen.

The same Pens, in SILVER PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 No. 2 pen; for $1 25 No. 3 pen; for $1 50 No. 4 pen; for $2 No. 5 pen; for $2 25 No. 6 pen.

These pens are stamped THE IMPERIAL PEN, and are well finished and fine writing Gold Pens, with good iridium points, although they are unwarranted, and cannot be exchanged.

First quality 14 carat, Warranted Gold Pens.

Our name (American Gold Pen Co., N. Y.), is stamped on all pens of this grade, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accidents.

Second quality Gold Pens.

These Pens are all stamped THE NATIONAL PEN, with the initials of our Firm, A. G. P. Co., and are carefully made, having the same points as our first quality Pens. The only great difference being in the quality of the gold.

The numbers indicate the size only: No. 1 being the smallest and No. 6 the largest adapted for the pocket; and No. 3 the smallest, and No. 12 the largest mammoth Pen for the Desk.

Gold Pens without Cases.

For $1 08 a No. 1 pen 1st qual., or a No. 2 pen 2d qual.
For $1 25 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 3 pen 2d qual.
For $1 75 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $2 00 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $2 50 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $3 25 a No. 6 pen 1st qual. For $4 50 No. 7 pen; $5 75 No. 8 pen; $10 00 No. 12 pen; all 1st quality.

The same Gold Pens, in Solid Silver Extension Cases, with Pencils.

For $2 00 a No. 1 pen 1st qual., or a No. 2 pen 2d qual.
For $2 25 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 3 pen 2d qual.
For $2 75 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $3 50 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $4 50 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $5 50 a No. 6 pen 1st quality.

Gold Pens, 1st and 2d qual., in Solid Silver or Gold-Plated Ebony Desk Holders and Morocco Cases.

For $2 26 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $2 50 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $3 20 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $4 00 a No. 6 pen 1st quality. For $5 50 a No. 7 pen. For $6 75 a No. 8 pen. For $12 00 a No. 12 pen; all first quality.

Our Pens rank throughout the country as equal—if not superior—to any Gold Pens manufactured, not only for their writing qualities, but durability and elegant finish. The greatest care is taken in their manufacture, and none are sold with the slightest imperfection which skill can detect.

Parties in ordering must invariably specify the Number, Name and Quality, whether coarse or fine, stiff or limber.

To CLUBS.—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $15, if sent to one address, at one time; 15 per cent. on $25; 20 per cent. on $40.

All remittances by mail, Registered, are at our risk, to all who enclose 20 cents extra for registering. We guarantee the safe delivery of the goods.

Circulars of all our new styles, with Engravings of exact sizes, and prices, sent upon receipt of stamp, if desired. Pens repointed for 50 cents, by mail.

AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO.,
000 No. 200 Broadway, N. Y.

Dr. Talbot's Concentrated Medical
PINEAPPLE CIDER

is a PREVENTIVE of SICKNESS. The experience that Dr. Talbot has had for the last Twenty-five years convinces him that it is time the public had an article offered that will prevent sickness. The article offered is Dr. Talbot's Medicated Pineapple Cider, designed for all classes, old and young. It is not new to the Doctor, but is entirely new to the public. One quart bottle will last a well person one year. This is rather a new mode of doctoring; nevertheless it will save millions from being sick. Is it not better to pay three dollars a year to keep from being sick, than to pay ten or twenty dollars in doctor's bills, and as much more for the loss of time and the inconvenience of being sick? To prevent sickness, use as follows: Add one teaspoonful of Medicated Pineapple Cider to a tumbler of cold water, and drink the first thing after you rise in the morning, and the same before you retire at night. It will increase the strength and give vigor and action to the system. A celebrated New York merchant, who has made a thorough trial of the Pineapple Cider, assures Dr. Talbot that he gained ten pounds of flesh in one month at the first trial. He continues its use as above directed, and finds it very beneficial; says it has proved an entire preventive to sickness in his case. Also, another well-known gentleman in New York has used the Medicated Cider constantly for ten years, and has not been sick one day during that time.

Price $3 per bottle (full quart); pints, $2; half-pints, $1. One quart bottle, two pint bottles, or four half-pint bottles, sent free by Express on receipt of price. All orders should be addressed to
B. T. BABBITT, Sole Agent,
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., N. Y
474-499

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Fail not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y.

J. TOWNSEND & CO.,
IMMENSE HOLIDAY SALE!
95,000 Watches, Chains, Gold Pens with Case, Sets of Jewellery, Lockets, Sleeve-Buttons, Gent's Pins, &c.,
to be sold for $95,000,
and valued at $750,000!!!
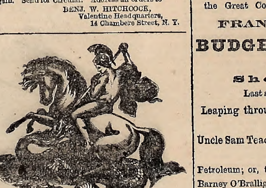
all to be sold at
ONE DOLLAR EACH,
without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive.

Read this list of articles to be sold at $1 each:

500	Ladies and Gents' Gold Watches,	$50 to	$100 each.
500	" "	25 to	50 "
1,000	Hunting Cased Silver Watches,	15 to	30 "
2,500	Neck Chains - - -	8 to	20 "
8,000	Fob and Guard Chains - -	5 to	25 "
5,000	Sets Ladies' Jewellery - -	5 to	15 "
5,000	Ladies' Gilt and Jet Buckles -	5 to	15 "
5,000	Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Bars and Balls - - - -	5 to	10 "
3,000	Ladies' Onyx Eardrops - -	5 to	10 "
8,000	Gold Band Bracelets - -	5 to	10 "
3,000	Enamelled, Coral and Opal Eardrops - - - -	5 to	10 "
8,000	Plain and Fancy Rings - -	4 to	8 "
4,000	Sets Sleeve Buttons - -	4 to	8 "
10,000	Pieces Silver Ware - -	5 to	15 "
10,000	Gold Pens, with Silver Mounted Holders - - - -	5 to	10 "
8,000	Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Holders - - - -	3 to	8 "
3,000	Gold Watch Keys - - -	2 to	6 "

All to be sold at One Dollar each. Certificates of all the different articles, stating what each can have, are put into envelopes and mixed, and, when ordered, are taken out, without regard to choice, and sent by mail. On receiving the certificate you will see what you can have. Then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. In all transactions by mail we charge for forwarding the certificate, paying the postage and doing the business, 20 cents each, which must be enclosed when the certificate is sent for. 6 Certificates sent for $1; 15 for $2; 40 for $5; 100 for $10. Agents will be allowed 10 cents on each certificate, when ordering to the amount of $1.

Agents wanted in every town in the United States or Canadas. Address
J. TOWNSEND & CO.,
484-8 15 John street, New York.



Shults's Onguent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid for 30 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.
484-97

Valentine Price List:

144	Spicy Comic Valentines, postpaid		-	$1 00
1	Neat Sentimental Valentine	"	-	1 00
1	Pretty " "	"	-	1 50
1	Handsome " "	"	-	2 00
1	Elegant " "	"	-	3 00
1	Superb " "	"	-	5 00
1	Lot (assorted for retailing)	"	-	5 00
1	" " "	"	-	10 00
1	" " "	"	-	20 00

Any of the above sent in a box by mail nicely packed on receipt of the price.

Liberal discounts made to all persons buying to sell again. Send for Circular. Address all orders to
BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK,
Valentine Headquarters,
14 Chambers Street, N. Y.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusel oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, anti-bilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 59 CEDAR STREET.

☞ Asthma Cured. ☜

Relief guaranteed in ten minutes, and a permanent cure effected by the use of "UPHAM'S ASTHMA CURE." Cases of from ten to twenty years' standing yield at once to its influence. Price $2. Sent postpaid to any address, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 482-94

3 RECEIPTS, each warranted to curl the hair in heavy luxurious curls, sent on receipt of 25 cents and stamp. Address J. JENNISON, Box 5374, P. O., New York. 465-8

$8 OFFICER'S WATCH. $10

Our Whole Stock of Imported Watches, being of rich and novel designs, durable and correct timekeepers, are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale rates.

AN ELEGANT WATCH in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases, Richly Engraved, Turned Centre, Carved Balance Bridge, English Full Plate Jewelled Movements, adjusted Regulator, Spring Bolt, Spade Hands and Fine Enameled White Dial, a serviceable article in running order, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and a Gent's Handsome Vest Chain and beautiful MINIATURE GOLD LOCKET to match, with Double Cases, Box and Glass for Two Likenesses. A Beautiful Holiday Present. Sent by mail to any address for only $10.

A NEAT SILVER WATCH, especially adapted for Army use, in Heavy Double Cases, Small Size, same as the above, with Key, Case, etc., complete, and Gent's Vest Chain, Engraved Double Case Locket, etc. Sent by mail to any address for only $8.

The Imperial Watch,

OR BRITISH ARMY OFFICERS' TIMEKEEPER, containing a Rare and Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Effects, combining within its cases and attached to its machinery a beautiful and correct working THERMOMETER, an accurately adjusted Mariner's Compass in miniature, sunk in Dial, and a Reliable Calendar, indicating day of month, week, etc., in Case, rendering this Watch a perfect STORM, HEAT and TIME INDICATOR. The beautiful machinery of this valuable Watch is encased in Finely Finished DOUBLE HUNTING, Magic Spring 19 Line Cases (the outer cases being of fine 18 Carat Gold, inner cases of Solid Gold Composite), Richly Engraved top and bottom, with Panel for Name, Turned Nerl, movable Pendant Bow, and Fancy Push Spring. Genuine English Improved Jewelled Action, M. J. Tobias movements, Polished Cap and Doome Self-acting Click, Equal Balance, Independent Actions, Fine White Dials, Polished Steel Cut Hands, and is an Exact Imitation of a $100 watch, and used by the ROYAL ENGINEERS and Officers of THE BRITISH ARMY. None Genuine unless bearing our private trade mark. Price per single one, all complete, with Case, Key, &c., by mail, $20.
CATELY BROTHERS, Sole Importers,
tf 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Established 1855.

Now Ready,

A Great Christmas and New Year's Number,

Being No. 83 of the Great Comic Paper of the Age,

FRANK LESLIE'S

BUDGET OF FUN,

containing

Sherman's

Last and Greatest Feat,

Leaping through the Map of Georgia!

also,

Uncle Sam Teaching Law to the Canadian Lion;

Petroleum; or, the Wonderful Adventures of Barney O'Bralligan in Search of Oil—How to Keep Horses Up—and numerous other illustrations, by the first living Artists of America and Europe, Newman, John Leech, Fiske, Hogan, Rosenberg, Bellew, Howard, Tenniel, &c. The Literature is also equally excellent, being full of original Stories, Bon Mots, Western Yarns, Humorous Poems.

PRICE 10 CENTS.

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl street, N. Y.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PIERRE BIBON, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

20 Years' Experience.

For $1 I will forward, postpaid, Two valuable Preparations, one to produce a heavy growth of Beard in two weeks, the other to remove effectually Freckles, Pimples and all Eruptions of the Skin. Address J. S. EASTMAN, Waterford, Saratoga county, N. Y.

American Badge Company.

SOLID SILVER BADGES for every Corps, with Name, Company and Regiment engraved, $1 50 each; American Shields, $1; Gold, $8. Vulcanized Rubber Rings, with 18 carat Gold Corps Marks inlaid, $2 50 each. Army Finger Rings, of solid Silver, with Name, Company and Regiment on the outside, $2; 18 carat Gold, $6.
R. KEITH & CO.,
15 John street, N. Y.,
Manufacturers of Gold Pens, Jewellery, Lockets, &c.

Diagram of the U. S. Government.

A person gains a better idea of our Government from this Diagram than can be gotten from any volume with which we are acquainted.—Journal and Messenger. Mailed, postpaid for 75 cents. Agents wanted.
J. L. G. PIERPONT,
37 and 39 Nassau Street, N. Y.

The Arm Telegraph. Pamphlet or Chart, 10 cts. each. Mailed by J. G. KONVALINKA, Astoria, L. I. [New York.] Invaluable to Military Men. Many hundreds been mailed to Sherman's army.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 50 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, and the terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Soldiers of the Union!

Read the following letters received from your comrades in encampments of the

WORLD KNOWN AND WORLD TRIED REMEDIES, KNOWN AS PROF. HOLLOWAY'S

PILLS AND OINTMENT.

You will here find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country where our army of occupation is in force. SEE TO YOUR HEALTH! All of you have some one interested in your welfare, then do not delay. YOUR LIFE IS VALUABLE! Not only to yourselves, but to Fathers and Mothers, Sisters, Wives and Brothers. Then while you may, purchase your Health.

35 cents, 88 cents, or $1 40,

Will, when expended in these medicines, bring you down to the greatest and ripest old age.

The following are a few specimens of genuine letters on file for inspection at this office. Copies sent by mail to any inquirer.

60 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT,
20th Illinois Volunteers,
FORT LEAVEN, IL., Nov. 4, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:
SIR—Enclosed please find two dollars, for which send me one dollar's worth each of your celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please direct to this at once, for I am much in need of the above remedies.
Address LIEUT. A. W. YELLOWLY, Q. M.,
20th Illinois Vols.

CAMP NEAR BRANDY STATION, VA., Nov. 7, 1864.
Prof. HOLLOWAY:
DEAR SIR,—I have heard a great deal of talk about your famous Pills, and as I never was in the need of them till now, I will say that they do a fellow a heap of good while at the present time; and more the worth of the enclosed. Yours, &c.,
JOSEPH WALSH, Co. E, 5th Regt., Excelsior Brigade.

FULASKI, Tenn., Nov. 6, 1864.
Prof. HOLLOWAY:
DEAR SIR—Please find enclosed one dollar, and send me the Ointment and Pills, as I am troubled with Dyspepsia, and seek cure. Yours, &c.,
THOMAS P. CHRISTIAN, Co. G, 1d Iowa Infantry.

MORRIS ISLAND, S. C., Nov. 9, 1864.
Prof. HOLLOWAY
Please find inclosed the sum of one dollar (or Fifty. I have Diarrhœa, and can't get it stopped, so I want to try your Pills. Yours,
WILLIAM CHRISTY,
Co. D, 104th Regt. Penn. Vols.
609 Morris Island, S. C.

TWENTY-FOUR
CARTES DE VISITE
OF
FRENCH CRISETTES,
In different attitudes of art.
Enclose $1 25 and 3 cent stamp.
CHAS. SAINT, 34 Nassau St., N. Y.

$125 A MONTH!

WANTED—Seven Machine Agents! Everywhere, to introduce the new Shaw & Clark Stitch Sewing Machine, the only low price machine in the country which is licensed by Grover & Baker, Wheeler & Wilson, Singer & Co., and Bachelder. Salary & Wheeler & Wilson, Singer & Co., and Bachelder. Salary & Commission allowed. All other machines and expenses, or large commission allowed. All other machines now sold for less than $50 each are infringements, and the seller and the user liable. Illustrated circulars with Price. Address SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine. 475-521

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple, mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., true by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 50,000 sold. Agents should send.
T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Six Dollars from Fifty Cents.

Agents, come and examine Invention, or Samples sent free by mail for 50 cents. Retails for $6 easily. R. L. WOLCOTT, 119 Chambers Street, New York. 475-484

An Article that Every Married Lady should possess will be sent securely sealed for $1.
482-5 Address Box 5057, P. O., New York.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
600 VICTOR BELLAU, 89 Nassau St., N. Y.

O'DOR! O'DOR!

DR. BRIGGS'S
GOLDEN O'DOR
Will force a Beautiful Set of Whiskers or Moustaches on the Smoothest face in five weeks, AND NO HUMBUG
Also, HAIR ON BALD HEADS in eight weeks.
I receive RECOMMENDATIONS most every day: Testimonials of thousands.
I will send my Golden O'Dor by mail, sealed and postpaid for $1 25. Or Whiskerine—Sil. Send all orders to
DR. C. BRIGGS, P. O. Drawer 6866, Chicago, Ill.
482-6

Sent Everywhere by Mail, Postpaid.—An Extension Silver-Mounted Holders, WITH COMPOSITE

REVERSE LEAD PENCILS.

In case of one dozen, the boxes are finely finished and cloth lined, so that the contents can remain in them for transportation. Prices same as before the War.

The holders are of the most handsome and durable construction; are heavily silver-plated, with an extra plate of three bright. Are engraved, chased or engine-turned, and for beauty are not surpassed by any holders. Our prices for the holders and pens, sold by dozens only, are as follows:

Size One—When open, 5¼ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $10 25; retails at $1 each.

Size Two—When open, 6 inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $12 25; retails at $1 50 each.

Size Three—When open, 6¾ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $15 25; retails at $2 each.

Size Four—When open, 7½ inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $18 25; retails at $2 50 each.

Size Five—When open, 8 inches in length; Price per dozen, by mail, postpaid, $20 25; retails at $3 each.

Sent to the Army and elsewhere, by mail, postpaid.
Send WALLACE AND FRENCH'S Catalogue of Great Variety at the lowest prices for each. Sender Circular. Reduced letters at our rates. Orders promptly executed.
Address T. & H. GAUGHAN, Manufacturers,
119 Broadway, N. Y.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy," or "Psychomancy," plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, secure the affections and marry whom they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 25 cents and 3 cent stamp. Address
469-76 E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1023, Portland, Me.

Shults' Curlique, for curling the hair. Price 50 cents. Sent securely by mail.
471-83 C. F. SHULTE, Troy, N. Y.

The Brazilian Hair Curler. One application warranted to curl the most straight, stubborn hair into wavy ringlets or heavy massive curls. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1.
S. S. CHASE, Cohoes, N. Y.

PLAYING CARDS!

The American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards, National Emblems.

They are the prettiest cards made, and suit the popular idea. The suits are Eagles, Shields and Flags, Colored in place of Kings, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack.

All the games can be played as readily as with bordered designs—besides, the pack is put up in an elegant cordeau, and then in Dozen Boxes for the trade.

In order that ALL dealers may have an opportunity to handle our Cards, a reduction of twelve packs will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of $3. Address,
AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

If you want to Know, &c., read
MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

A curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. Price $1 50. To be had at all News Depots. Contents table mailed free. Address
DR. R. V. PIERCE,
No. 1,120 Broadway, N. Y.
465cow

The Book of Wonders tells how to make CIDER without apples or any other fruit. It also contains the Butler's Secret, how to speak Fish and all kinds of game; how to make all kinds of Liqueurs; all kinds of Dyestuffs and Coloring Fluids; how to use Hydrocyanic Acid Gas; Information of immense value; how to paint the best of any one, &c., &c., &c. Sent, securely sealed, for 25 cents.
Address ALBERT WOLF,
482-5 P. O., New York.

Gayest of the Gay!

Transparent Playing Cards, used same as common cards (65 French Pictures). Sample pack, by mail, $1 25; 3 packs, $3; 6 packs, $5. Also, Transparent Dice, 50 cents per pack. Address
D. HEMMITJE, 68 Liberty Street, N. Y.
600

WONDERFUL DEVELOPMENTS

In the case of
WOODWARD'S Patent Self-Adjusting LANTERN (just out) has the following improvements over all lanterns yet invented:
1st—The glass can be instantly removed for cleaning, or replacing when broken.
2d—It is the best made, most convenient, and cheapest.
3d—Every Burner gives the best light of any Lantern in the world.
SAVAGE & CO.'S CHEMISTRY
SELLING, 79 Fulton and 183 Washington Streets, Brooklyn, N. Y.
486 SAVAGE & CO., 700 Broadway, N. Y.

For Nervous Debility, &c.,

Use "Crean's Concentrated Cure." The only reliable remedy. Price, per vial, $1—6 for $5. Sent free by mail. Send for Pamphlet. Address
C. K. ELLIS & CO., 700 Broadway, N. Y.
600 Sold by Druggists everywhere.

Royal Havana Lottery.

In Drawing of December 3, 1864,

No. 28945	drew	$100,000
No. 17078	"	50,000
No. 11613	"	25,000
No. 17197	"	10,000
No. 12937	"	5,000

Being the five capital prizes.
Seventy-five per cent. premium paid for prizes. In formation furnished. Highest rates paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
16 Wall St., N. Y.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION!
250,000
Watches, Chains, Diamond Rings, Etc.

WORTH OVER

One Million Dollars!

All to be Sold for One Dollar Each!!

WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE! NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL EACH BUYER WILL KNOW ARE TO RECEIVE.

Splendid List of Articles! All to be Sold for $1 each!

	PRICE.
250 Gents' Gold Hunting-case Watches	$75 to $150
250 Ladies' Gold and Enameled-case Watches	35 " 70
500 Gents' Hunting-case Silver Watches	25 " 50
4,000 Diamond Rings	10 " 200
3,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains	5 " 25
2,000 Gold Lockets	5 " 15
3,500 Gold Oval Bead Bracelets	5 " 10
2,000 Gold Band Bracelets, Engraved	5 " 10
2,000 Gentlemen Chains & Guard Chains	4 " 10
2,000 Solitaire and Gold Brooches	4 " 10
2,000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 " 8
3,500 Coral, Opal and Florentine Brooches	4 " 8
5,000 Mosaic, Set, Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 " 8
7,000 Coral, Opal & Emerald Ear Drops	2.50 " 10
4,000 Diamond Breast Pins	2.50 " 8
3,000 Gold, Fob and Vest Watch Keys	2 " 10
4,000 Fob and Vest Chain Slides	2 " 10
5,000 Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, etc.	3 " 8
3,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc	2 " 8
3,000 Sets Lockets, Chains and Charms	2.50 " 8
4,000 " " " Maple Sprigs	2 " 8
4,000 Gold Toothpicks, Pencils, etc	2 " 8
4,500 Plain Gold Rings	2 " 5
3,000 Chased Gold Rings	2.50 " 10
10,000 Sleeve Set and Shirt Studs	2 " 15
10,000 Gold Engraved Lockets	2 " 15
7,500 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Jet & Gold	3 " 10
10,000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Extension-bold-ers and Pencils	4 " 12
10,000 Sets Ladies' Gold Mounted Pearl, etc., Jewelry	3 " 8
5,000 Gold Pens and Gold Extension Holders	2 " 10
10,000 Gold Pencils and Drinking Cups	2 " 10
3,000 Silver Castors	20 " 50
4,000 Silver and Plated Baskets	20 " 50

PER DOZEN

9,000 Dozen Silver Tea Spoons	$10 " 20
6,000 " Table Spoons & Forks	20 " 40

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, through the war, being thrown off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of Valuable Jewellery, originally intended for the English market, has been sent out of bond in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT ANY SACRIFICE!

Remember it is positively WITHOUT A DOLLAR & CO., acting as Agents for the principal European Manufacturers, who have placed upon a great part of this stock, subject to the following regulations:

Certificates, containing each article and its value, are placed in Sealed Envelopes and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

ALL ARTICLES SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE!

On receipt of a Certificate, you will see what you are going to have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and get the article or not. Purchasers are to obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any set of Jewellery on one dollar. Not more than ONE Dollar's worth, as no one can buy less, and GREENBACKS ALONE are to be used.

Certificates will be forwarded by return mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

Agents will be allowed to dispose of in every Certificate contained in their remittance amounts to the value of Ten Dollars, and forward 25 cents for every One Dollar. Agents will act as either in cash or purchase, and remit 17 cents per CERTIFICATE to
GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION,
161 Broadway, New York.

JUST OUT.

And sent FREE on receipt of stamp.

EVANS'S NEW CATALOGUE
FOR 1865.
(Eleventh year of the Enterprise.)

NEW BOOKS,	NEW GIFTS.
NEW BOOKS,	NEW GIFTS.
NEW BOOKS,	NEW GIFTS.

Books for Soldiers, Books for Sailors, Books for Civilians, Books for Ladies, Books for Children, Historical, Biographical, Religious, Scientific, Musical, and Miscellaneous Books in every department. Also, Photographic Albums and Presentation Books, Card Pictures of all the Celebrities.

A Gift worth from 50 cents to $100 with each Book!

All Books sold at publishers' regular prices, with Liberal Inducements to purchasers forming Clubs.

Send your orders for the NEW CATALOGUE and any Book you may want to EVANS'S ORIGINAL GIFT BOOK ENTERPRISE, by G. G. Evans, in 1854). Orders FILLED PROMPTLY and satisfaction guaranteed. Address
G. G. EVANS, 439 Chestnut St., Phila.
482-5

The Great Money-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 per day. Sample, with circulars, sent for 25 cents. Address
E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.
600

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face! without stain or injury to the skin. Sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.
Address J. WORTH & CO., 343 Canal St., N. Y.

"Album Gems"—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most fantastic Cards ever published—containing the Prettiest Actresses, Danseuses, Celebrities, Fancy Dresses, Bewitching Christmas, Smiling Beauties, Comic Scenes, &c., &c., &c. Sent by mail for the 100, etc., etc. Price only 3 cents each, or $1 for the set of 14 choice Cards.
G. W. CARLETON, Publisher,
211 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT, a Powerful Stimulant. Each pot is warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in from 30 to 40 days, upon the smoothest skin or injury to the skin. Any person using this Ointment and finding it not as represented by performing one of the feats, can have their money returned to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address
A. G. CLARK,
P. O. Drawer 183, Albany, N. Y.
458-81

$70 A MONTH! I want Agents every where, $70 at $70 a month, expenses paid, to sell PATENT LIGHTNING SAD IRONS. Sample Free. Full particulars free. Address OTIS C. GARY, Biddeford, Maine. 479-491

REMINGTON'S

ARMY AND NAVY REVOLVER!

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.
460-78

IMPORTANT TO GROCERS.

Consult your own and the Interest of your Customers, and have for sale the London Family Washing Soap,

Being a highly concentrated compound of the most select materials used in soap making, whereby great economy is manifested by using less in quantity and obtaining much more elasticity. The perquisite claim for it are, that it readily takes hold of the dirt in linen, flannel, clothing and making the articles washed to be of a soft and durable appearance.

SOLE AGENTS—

Moore & Le Breton,
Produce Merchants, 69 Broad street, New York.

Dr. Glover's Lever Truss retains the most severe cases of rupture in any position. It gives perfect ease and comfort. Physicians, Ruptured Patients, Dealers, Druggists, Orders promptly filled. Chet, &c. No. 4 ANN STREET. Established 30 years.

Whiskers! Moustaches!!—The celebrated HUALAH PLANT is warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in two weeks. Sent by mail, postpaid, price, with directions for using, $1. Address Dr. H. DE FORREST, Troy, N. Y.
482-6

THE BEST THING OUT!

Can be used the same as any other Cards, and contains 50

BEAUTIFUL SCENES.

Enclose $1 25 and three red stamps for sample pack. $14 per gross, twenty per cent. off to the trade.
T. ALLEN,
34 Nassau street, New York.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should not. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. BATH, M. D. Just published. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 29 White Street, New York.

C. S. Sea, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years Professor of Diseases of Women and Children, "Diseases" for $5. Programme for return stamp. Surgical for $1 in part for a package.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New. Patent Pin Cushion, Universal Needle Threader, Invisible Pencil, Patent Corset Steel, Patent Pipe, Magic Tobacco Box, Gentle Vest Pocket Match Safe, Silver-plated Spectacles, for Circulars write W. HICE & CO., 83 Nassau Street, N. Y.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing $1 50 or $3, according to the quality desired.
HOWARD BELT CO., 426 Broadway, N. Y.

$1 Whiskers. $1

For one dollar I will send, sealed and postpaid, my "Genuine Compound," highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of hair on the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon bald heads in eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Entire satisfaction or money refunded. Descriptive circulars sent free. Address Z. L. BANFORD, Lexington, Ky.

Lost Manhood Restored,

Speedily and effectually, by the use of "DR. LA FORCE'S LIFE ELIXIR." Cure guaranteed. Price $2. Sent post-paid by mail. Send for circular. Address Joseph Sulphin, Pa. Circulars sent free. 482-94

ADVANTAGE OR MARKED PLAYING CARDS.

I have constantly on hand and for sale a very style of MARKED BACK PLAYING CARDS, which, when learned, can be read by the back as well as the face, and are the complete instructions forwarded with each pack. Marked Cards, $12 per doz., $1 50 per gross. Sample pack sent by mail for $2. Send for circular to
C. BRIGGS, Chicago, Ill.,
P. O. Drawer 6866.
482-6

Hair Uprooted

From all parts of the body in a few minutes, without danger to the skin, by the Electric Needle. Circulars mailed to any address for 3 cts. Address J. H. DUPUY, 26 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. 482-94

The Chimney Corner:
By Mrs. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.
Dr. JOHN (A ROMANCE):
By R. MAYNE.
Notes of a Pianist;
By LOUIS M. GOTTSCHALK.
are among the attractive features which will be offered to the readers of the

Atlantic Monthly

during the year 1865. For the low price of four Dollars a year can be obtained more than fifteen hundred pages of the best reading. The first American writers contribute. Send 25 cents for the January number, as a specimen, with full particulars. Address
TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

SOMETHING NEW.

The Patent Army Pocket Pipe and Cigar Holder combined, is decidedly the best Smoking Pipe ever invented. It imparts a rich soothing flavor to the Tobacco; is of elegant appearance and finish; with fine carved Horn Mouthpiece and Cigar Holder. It is easy to carry, easy to clean, and is always ready for a good smoke. Sample dozen sent free on receipt of $3.50. Address
RICHARDS & CO.,
97 William Street, New York.

INQUIRE FOR
TUCKER'S PATENT SPRING BEDS.
For sale by the Furniture Dealers generally through the United States. At wholesale by HIRAM TUCKER, 117 and 119 Court St., Boston, Mass. 484-90

WARDS SHIRTS

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

French Flannel Overshirts.

Cut 38 inches long, $4 75 and $5 each. Sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 32 cents postage each shirt.

STEEL COLLARS

Enameled White, having all the comforts of linen collars. Washed and dried in a moment. A simple Collet mailed free on receipt of 16 cents. Cuffs $1 00 per pair. Ladies' Collars and Cuffs same price.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD,
487 No. 387 Broadway, New York.

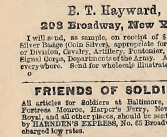
TO CONSUMPTIVES.—You will get the Incomparable Cough Cure Congha, Consumption, and all Lung Complaints, by sending to DR. ENCAS BRAN, P.O. Box 4,015, New York. He sends it free. Write for it. It has cured thousands. 484-90

FOR A FORTUNE!
Address FRANKLIN S. H. CO., Box 960, Boston, Mass

FREE READING!
Soldiers, sailors, Mothers, Everybody—send us your address. We will, in return, send you a large family newspaper, replete with good miscellaneous reading matter. Sent Gratis.
484-6t CHAS. E. MACKEY, 68 Nassau St., N. Y.

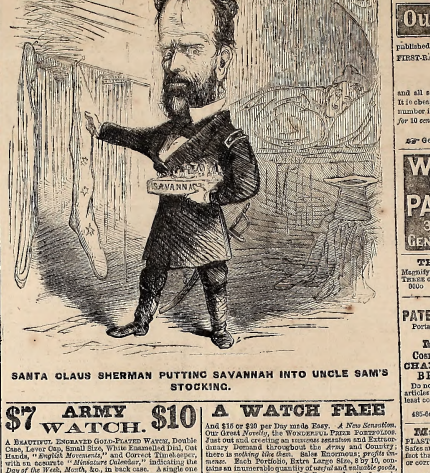
ARMY BADGES.

E. T. Hayward,
203 Broadway, New York.



I will send, as sample, on receipt of $1 50, a Solid Silver Badge (Gilt Letters), appropriate for officers of Company, Cavalry, Artillery, Pontooner, Engineer, or Signal Corps, Department of the Army. Agents wanted everywhere. Send for wholesale Illustrated circular.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!
All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harrison's Ferry, Newbern, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 62 Broadway. Rooms charged low rates. 0606



A REMARKABLE NOVEL!
Just Published by JOHN BRADBURN (Successor to M. DOOLADY), 49 WALKER STREET, New York,
"THE MORRISONS,"
A Story of Domestic Life.
BY MRS. MARGARET HOSMER.
485-4 One Volume, neat beveled Cloth, $2.

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S PIANOFORTES.
99 & 101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years.

The Magic Wheel, Price $1 50.
This is the cheapest optical delusion ever invented, and is equally attractive to youth and age.
JOHN BRADBURN (Successor to M. Doolady).
483-6 49 Walker Street, N. Y.

Electric, Self-Adjusting, Enameled White, $3 to $5 per box; Specimens, 50 cents, 75 cents, $1; Snow-white Bleaching Enabled, $1 50. Invisible Tie, $1. Ladies' superbly Enamelled, Snow-white, elaborately Illusion Embroidered Steel Collars and Cuffs, $1 per set. Gents' Cuffs, $2. Mailed, on receipt of price and size.
JEANERET, 79 Nassau Street, N. Y.

SANTA CLAUS SHERMAN PUTTING SAVANNAH INTO UNCLE SAM'S STOCKING.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD-PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, White Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movement," and Correct Time-keeper, with an accurate "Miniature Calendar," indicating the Day of the Week, Month, &c., in back case. A single one sent free, by mail, to any address, in neat case, with a Beautiful Vest Chain, for only $10.

A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with the Miniature Calendar, &c., specially adapted to the Army. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.

English and American LEVERS from $20 up. Good Watches of all descriptions.

Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers, 89 and 40 Jan Street, N. Y.
0fc

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
GOLD MEDAL
Grand and Square
PIANOS,
BALTIMORE, Md.

Certificates of Recommendation from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, D. Satter, and other leading artists. Every instrument warranted for five years.
Price lists promptly sent on application.
WM. KNABE & CO.
A full assortment of the above celebrated instruments at J. AUER & CO'S Warerooms,
No. 564 Broadway, N. Y.

THE UNIVERSAL PAPER COLLAR

TAINTER & JACKSON'S
PATENT, AUGUST 2ND 1864

The Trade supplied at No. 389 Pearl Street, New York.
0

GOLD PENS.

If you want the best Pen ever used send to Johnson for Circular giving exact sizes and prices. Pens sent $1 to $5, to suit every hand and pocket. Pens Repointed, by mail, for 50 cents.
E. S. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office,
478-26 15 Maiden Lane, New York.

Friends.—Send a Stamp for information and my Circulars. Address I. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Special Causes, both secret and solitary, and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT

For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.

Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth. Purifying and Sweetening the Breath, the most convenient, efficacious and beneficial article for the Teeth the world has ever seen.
Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—75 cents per bottle.
HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors,
0000 218 Greenwich St., N. Y.

A WATCH FREE

And $16 or $20 per Day made Easy. A New Sensation. Our Great Novelty, the WONDERFUL PRICE POMPEIAN. Just out and creating an immense sensation and Extraordinary Demand throughout the Army and Country; there is nothing like Sale. Sales enormous, profits enormous. Each Portfolio, Extra Large Size, 8 by 10, contains an immense quantity of curious and fine novelty goods, Pictures, etc., worth Several Dollars, and sells for only 50 cents. Articles that no Soldier or Family can possibly be without. Thousands Sold Every Day. Soldiers can clear a Month's Pay in a Single Day. Agents Wanted in Every Camp and Village. A Beautiful Gold or Silver Watch Presented Free as a Premium to Every Agent. This is the Greatest money-making Business of the Day. We Guarantee that any agent $10 per Day. Previous and with Goods same day the order is received. Onte agnes containing Extra, Premium, Inducement and Terms by mail Free. S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 192 Nassau St., N. Y., Sole Manufacturers.
0

TO CONSUMPTIVES.—The advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c. The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted and spread information, which he considers to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing. Parties wishing the prescription will please address
Rev. EDWARD A. WILSON,
0 Williamsburg, Kings County, N.Y.

Ladies, use no more Rouge for your complexion. It can deceive no one, no matter how well applied. If you would have sparkling eyes, roses on the complexion of dazzling beauty, follow my directions. Address, enclosing $1, DR. C. J. RADWAY,
485-6o Box No. 6188, N. Y. P. O.

LADIES' LETTER.

FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS
Of the Human Female, published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.
Address Box 4615, New York Post Office.
0

Vineland Lands.

Large and thriving settlements mild and healthful climate, 20 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $20 to $50 per acre; payable within four years. Good business openings for manufactories and farmers. Cheap building lots for sale. Now is the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are seeing full information will immediately. Letters answered. Papers sent free. Apply to or address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland County, New Jersey.
From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural editor of the Tribune:
I find it one of the most promising fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER

Is the latest improvement in Fire-Arms, combining great power with effectiveness with compactness, durability, and convenience, both for operating and carrying. Is the most effective Revolver Gun ever in the world.
Is loaded, without removing the cylinder, with Central Fire Waterproof Self Metallic Cartridges. The cartridge is sure to fire, the shell easily ejected after firing. The cylinder never gets in but 7 inches extreme length, 12-inch ball, six shot and weighs but 14 ounces. For sale by the trade.
GEO. HICKOCK, 56 Cliff Street, New York.

CERTIFICATE.

I have thoroughly tested the new "National Revolver," and find it an effective weapon, of rare fire and convenient size. At fifty yards I think I could hit with this pistol all as every shot. I take pleasure in recommending it as a weapon in every way desirable. In company with Captain Scott, Provost-Marshal, and other officers, I fired this pistol a large number of times, and not one cartridge failed to explode.
JOHN CHARLESTON, Chief of Police, Cairo, Ill.
0 (Sig.cod)

Good Reading and Good Pictures for the young. A first class
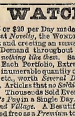
ILLUSTRATED JUVENILE MONTHLY is long been needed. The want is now supplied by the New Magazine,

Our Young Folks

published by the subscribers. It is filled with
FIRST-RATE STORIES,
FIRST-RATE SKETCHES,
FIRST-RATE PICTURES,
and all sorts of entertaining and instructive reading. It is cheap, too, only Two Dollars a year. The January number is just published, and will be sent as a specimen for 10 cents. It ought to be a very large one. Address
TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston, Mass.
Get up a Club.
0

WARD'S PATENT FRENCH PRINTED PAPER COLLARS

387 B'WAY, NY. & ALL GENTS FURNISHING STORES.



THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,
Magnifying 600 times, mailed to any address for 85 cts. TERMS of different powers for U. S. Address 0000 F. B. BOWEN, Box 2304, Boston, Mass.

Sanford's
PATENT CHALLENGE HEATERS,
Portable or in Brick, heating with hot air through registers

Mammoth or Globe Heaters;
Cosmopolite Parlor Radiating Stoves;
CHALLENGE KITCHEN RANGES;
BEACON LIGHT RANGES.
Do not buy until you have seen the above superior articles for applying heat, with the greatest benefit and least cost, at the manufactory
485-6o SANFORD, TROSLOW & CO.,
229 and 231 Water Street,

Marvin's Patent Alum and Dry PLASTER FIRE AND BURGLAR SAFES. Our Parlor Safes are highly ornamented, and vary from others in the fact that they are perfectly dry and do not sweat, impart or corrode silver. Manufactured only by
MARVIN & CO.,
Send for a descriptive circular. 265 Broadway.

KENDALL'S is composed of extracts from Flowers, Roots and Herbs, having the rich and permanent Vigor of the Hair. It prevents hair falling out or turning grey, eradicates dandruff, and is a delightful and pleasant dressing.
After effects a cure for most diseases incident to the scalp.
A trial will prove our assertion.
For sale by all Druggists.
Price $1 per case.
WARING & CO.,
Proprietors,
0 55 Dey Street, N. Y.

GREAT CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY!

And receive a Watch free, by selling our great
NOVELTY AND NATIONAL PRIZE PACKETS,
Now Package just issued for the Holiday Trade. Each package contains over one dollar's worth of valuable Stationery and Jewellery—besides one Certificate in the great sale of $250,000 of Watches, Diamonds and Jewelry. Thousands of these packets can be sold.
We want an Agent in every town and county, thus making a profitable business for a smart man in each place.
SPLENDID GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES
given to our Agents. Sell within 120 Packets and a Gold or Silver Watch. Circulars mailed free. Sample Packet and Certificate sent on receipt of 20 cents.
G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
483-4o No. 50 Beekman Street, N. Y.

Use of Tobacco, in all its forms, Cured and Preventive. Particulars free.
481-60 JAS. DAY & SON, New Haven, Conn.

To all wanting Farms.

Lands in the old settlements of Randolph and adjoining counties, Illinois, on the line of the Illinois Central Railroad, 50 miles south of the city of Cairo, are now offered for sale in tracts to suit purchasers, on long credits and at low prices. Title perfect. Climate healthful. Productions, fruit, grain, stock, coal, &c. Markets at the doors. Price of land, $5 to $10 per acre. Apply to
WILLIAM H. BRISBANE,
Land Commissioner Illinois Central Railroad Company, Chicago, Illinois.

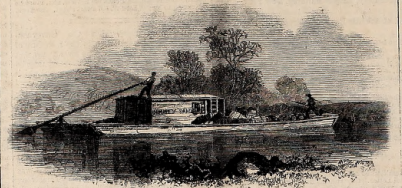
FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

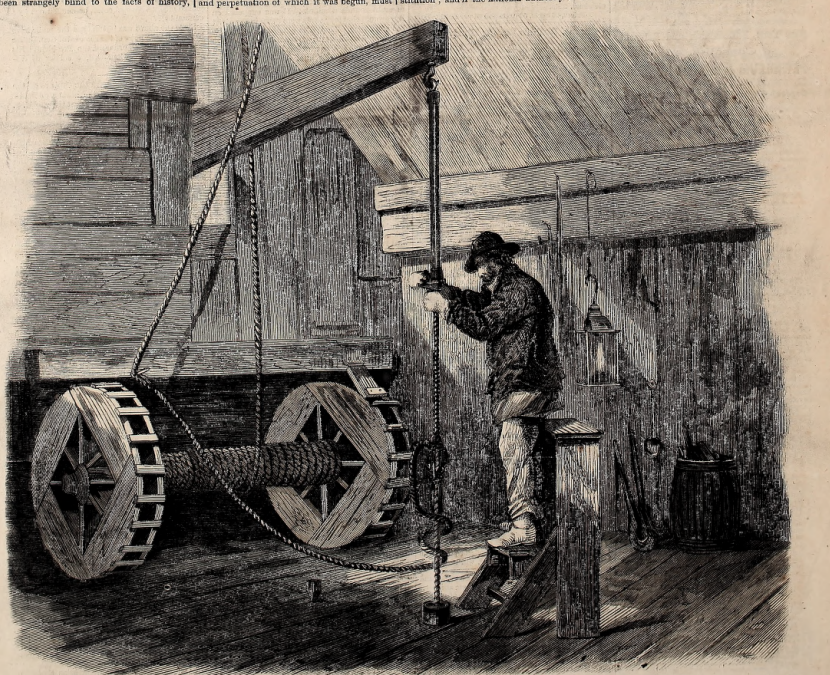


Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 486—VOL. XIX.] NEW YORK, JANUARY 21, 1865. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY. 13 WEEKS $1 00.

Suicide of the Rebellion.

IF anything can reconcile a patriotic mind to the horrors of war, it is the reflection that almost every grand stride in human progress has been made through convulsion, and has been consecrated by blood. As storm and tempest purify the polluted atmosphere and herald a brighter day, so it would seem civil commotion and the shock of arms can alone clear the moral atmosphere of its noxious elements, and give to the nation a better life. War often anticipates the slow advances of peace, and crowds into a decade the ordinary results of a century. Its sword cuts, at a blow, those Gordian knots which had defied and promised to defy for ever the unravelling fingers of the statesman. Its clouds and blackness envelope the land and oppress all hearts, yet from out its gloom there often emerges a spirit of Brightness, even as did the radiance of Deity from out the thick darkness of Sinai.



If any one ever supposed that the great conflict in which we are engaged would end without some compensating result, he must have been strangely blind to the facts of history, and strangely distrustful of the wisdom of Heaven. However the war may terminate, we see already that the system of human slavery, out of which it sprung, and for the extension and perpetuation of which it was begun, must terminate with it. If the national authority be re-established, it is no longer doubtful that, whatever may remain of slavery will be swept away through the forms provided by the Constitution; and if the national authority be not re-established, the struggle will, nevertheless be so far prolonged that the exigences of the insurgents will force them to sacrifice the system as a necessity to their existence. Already, notwithstanding it was unblushingly proclaimed at the outset of the war, that slavery was the "corner-stone" of the proposed great oligarchical organization, and that it was the only admissible condition of the black man, yet, at the end of four years, we find the apostles of the rebellion openly advocating the employment of the negro in the army, and advising his liberation as the only means of securing the practical sympathy of Christendom, and of securing what they are pleased to call their "independence!"

FLATBOAT WITH CARGO OF OIL FOR PITTSBURG, PA.

Such propositions as these are not only made but advocated in the Southern capital, and in portions of the press believed to reflect the opinions and feelings of Mr. DAVIS. It is true they are talked of as contingent on an emergency not unlikely to happen, the continued success of the national armies, and as an alternative to submission to "Yankee rule." Rather than thus submit, says the Richmond

THE OIL REGIONS OF PENNSYLVANIA—BORING FOR OIL ON THE SAUNDERS' FARM FOR THE "NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA & BALTIMORE CONSOLIDATED PETROLEUM AND MINING COMPANY."—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, F. H. SCHELL.

Sentinel, and the sentiment is echoed by the Enquirer, the "Confederate States would surrender their independence into the hands of those from whom we [they] wrested it, Britain, France or Spain." But none of these would take them, they are candid enough to admit, with slavery, hence its abolition is a necessity towards securing even the melancholy result for their long and bloody struggle! We quote literally from the Enquirer:

"If France and England will enter into a treaty with these Confederate States, recognizing our nationality and guaranteeing our independence upon the abolition of slavery in all these States, rather than continue the war, we should be prepared to urge the measure upon our people. We believe such a proposition would be favorably received and acted upon by these nations, and it ought to be considered."

So, then, it is no longer slavery, nor even "independence" that the leaders of the insurgents are struggling for, but to get rid of a Government under which they were rich and enjoyment of its blessings, with or without slavery, on the other, and their decision would be swift and final.

What our sympathy the insurgents might score for themselves abroad, by the abolition of slavery, they may be certain they will obtain no practical intervention through that or any other consequence or sacrifice. The United States have exhibited a strength and an ability for offence and defence which no power on earth will put to a second test, except under circumstances absolutely of no other alternative. Intervention, on any grounds, means war, nothing more and nothing less, and neither "Britain, France nor Spain" is ready to accept the responsibility of six millions of free-eaters, and the responsibility of fixing the new relations of three millions of emancipated negroes, at the cost of a long and bloody war with a nation three and a-half million and a-half of trained soldiers in the field, and turn loose a navy of six hundred effective war vessels on the ocean.

New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore

Consolidated

PETROLEUM & MINING COMPANY

Capital, $1,500,000. 300,000 Shares.

Par, $5 per Share; Subscription Price, $1 per Share.

President.
J. S. CLARK, New York.

Vice-President.
R. H. WISHART, New York.

Treasurer.
H. F. DEVOE, New York.

Secretary.
J. CONKLIN, New York.

Directors.
R. V. R. RETCHUM, Baltimore, Md.
C. KING, Baltimore, Md.
R. H. WISHART, New York.
Dr. S. T. LING, New York.
J. H. GOULD, Philadelphia.
W. WOODRUFF, Baltimore, Md.
A. CLARK, Tarr Farm, Oil Creek, Pa.
B. B. CLARK, Oil City, Pa.

General Superintendents.
J. S. CLARK, New York; A. CLARK, Tarr Farm, Pa.; H. B. CLARK, Oil City, Pa.

This has been selected with great care during the last three years by Directors of the Company who have been constantly operating on Oil Creek, and throughout the entire oil region of Pennsylvania, as well as Western Virginia, and was not selected so soft, but for the purpose of development and producing oil, having now some ten wells under contract, and being bored with large Engines and the Company's property is handsome, and the best of boring land, much of it on Oil Creek; Carey Run, Oil Creek, Wolford Island, Allegheny River, and other streams, where the lands are being developed and operated. The shares of the Company are nearly all taken up, and application must be made soon, in order to secure them. Books of the Company direct, at either of their Offices, No. 71 Broadway, New York; No. 23 South St., and 614 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.; and Baltimore, Md.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
Also Importers of
501 BROADWAY, N. Y.
In addition to their extensive assortment of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, they have on hand a full supply of
STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,
Of Cities and Scenery in the United States, including their own publications of Views in Central Park, Niagara, Saratoga, Newport, Watkins Glen, Catskill Mountains, Lake George, Trenton Falls, Harper's Ferry, Washington, &c. Catalogues will be sent to any address on receipt of Stamp.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS.
We would call attention to our Albums as the best made in the United States, and we are confident that our facilities for manufacturing them enable us to give them to our customers at lower prices than can be obtained elsewhere. Our ALBUMS therefore, combine quality and cheapness, and are unsurpassed in capability of receiving, in beauty and durability of binding.
They will be sent by mail, POST PAID, on receipt of the following prices, viz.:

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS.
Our Catalogue contains over FIVE THOUSAND different subjects, which we constantly keep on hand of Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., viz.:
1,000 Statesmen, 300 Jewish Celebrities,
1,000 Military Heroes, 100 Prize Fighters,
300 Rev. Generals, 300 Other Officers,
300 Actresses, 100 Authors,
42 Actors, 12 Physical Wonders,
1,000 Groups of Works of Art, including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statuary, etc. Catalogue sent free to any address on receipt of stamp. Price for Catalogue will be filed on the receipt of $1.00, and sent by mail, free.
Photographers and others wishing goods C.O.D. will please remit Seven Cents for each of the negatives they order, to insure prompt attention to their orders.

Soldiers' Pocket Albums for 16 pictures, 75 cents.

New York and Liverpool

PETROLEUM COMPANY

CAPITAL STOCK, $1,000,000.

100,000 Shares at $10 each,

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE FIVE DOLLARS PER SHARE.

Lands already Titeling Largely.

President:
RON. DANIEL S. DICKINSON.

Vice-President:
WILLIAM H. PHILLIPS.

Secretary:
ROBERT BASSETT.

Treasury:
ATLANTIC BANK, 142 BROADWAY.

Mining Superintendent:
H. J. BURTIS, TITUSVILLE, PA.

Books are open for Subscription at the Office of the Company,

71 Broadway, Empire Building, New York, Room No. 24;

and at Atlantic Bank, 142 Broadway, New York.

The lands of this company are situated in the heart of the oil regions, and include portions of those well-known localities, the McElheny Farm, the two McClintock Farms, extensive tracts of oil lands on Church Run, and other proved and valuable working territories, including of the best oil territory along Oil Creek, West Virginia and Ohio, now under process of successful development, and oil is regularly and largely produced from several wells upon them.

Over Two Thousand Acres in Fee

Address

The New York & Liverpool Petroleum Co.,

BOX 6568, POST OFFICE,

NEW YORK CITY.

Remittances can be made by Draft, Express or Registered Letter. Government Bonds and Securities taken by payment for Stock.

The Pain Killer,

So justly celebrated, was introduced to the public several years ago, and now enjoys a popularity unequalled by any other medicine. It is a sovereign remedy for Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, Rheumatism, Coughs and Colds, Scalds, Burns, etc., it is without an equal. Sold by all the principal druggists and by Perry Davis, Cleveland, Ohio.

Prices, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1 per Bottle.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This annual contains a greater amount of useful and entertaining information than any publication of the day or year. It is indeed the only Lady's Illustrated Almanac published. It is embellished with fine steel engravings, by the finest Artists of the day, the beautiful colored style of which, originally introduced in the Ladies' Magazine, has become a favorite in the kitchen, garden, nursery, sitting-room, store-room, and parlor, and wherever else it is seen. In a word, it is the nation's model almanac, as well as the young lady's companion, and it should be found in every household. In addition to general illustrations, it contains splendid portraits of Mrs. Lincoln and Miss Dix, on toned paper, engraved in the highest style of graphic Battling-Scene at Long Branch, printed on fine paper. The engraved Lady's Manual—which contains more reading matter than an Annual—also contains over 60 cuts, as well as new octavo volume—costs only 50 cents. It will be sent, postage free, on receipt of 50 cents, either in currency or postage stamps. Address

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This valuable work is far superior to its predecessor, the London Illustrated Almanac, and much cheaper. It contains valuable Astronomical, Political, Historical, Statistical, Astronomical and Useful, besides wide varieties of Amusing Matter by the first side writers of American Artists, engraved in the highest style of art, and is embellished with fine steel engravings, Photographic Portraits, printed on fine paper, of Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Admiral Farragut, from recent photographs. Price 50 cents.

TERMS FOR

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months	$1 00
One copy, six months	2 00
One copy, one year	4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	15 00
Five copies, one year	20 00

(With an extra copy gratis to the person sending a club of five.)

One copy of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper and one copy of Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine for one year | 7 00

Single Numbers, each | 10 cts.

Address

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

To Correspondents.

The columns of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED Newspaper are always open for contributions from good writers.

All communications will be promptly considered; and liberal prices will be paid for all manuscripts that are deemed worthy of insertion.

Interesting stories, lively sketches, and poems of a high order of merit, if not too long, will be received with favor.

Short stories, fraught with incident, character and dramatic effect, are always preferable to long ones.

All manuscripts should be legibly written, on good paper, and on only one side of the sheet. Manuscripts written on both sides will be declined without examination.

Correspondents are requested to write their names and addresses, legibly and in full, on each manuscript that they send to this office.

Articles that have appeared in other publications are sometimes copied and sent to this office as original contributions. This detestable species of fraud and imposition will be exposed in these columns, whenever detected, and, if possible, will be punished and published by it.

Barnum's American Museum.

Glorious triumph! Third week of the gorgeous spectacle, every afternoon at three, Evening at half past seven, THE RING OF FATE; or, PIZIR, AIR, EARTH AND WATER. Previous to which the Afternoon, the TRAILOR OF YARROWDEN. And in the Evening, the Local Drama, THE VERMONT WOOL DEALER. CLOG DANCE BY TOM RYAS. Morning and Afternoon, THE LITTLE BEAUTIFUL GIANT AND FAT WOMAN, weighing nearly 700 pounds, and her husband, A LITTLE MAN, weighing 67 pounds. Also, Just added, a curious animal, the Prehensile Tailed Porcupine, Gentle Boy, Learned Seal, Living Others, &c. Admission, 50 cents; Children under ten, 15 cents.

MESSRS. WM. RYAN & CO., BALTIMORE, MARYLAND. Gentlemen—I have great pleasure in certifying that I have tried your Square Pianos and them equal, if not superior, to any in the country. Among the special qualities which distinguish them, is the evenness of tone, the elasticity of touch and volume of power. Wishing you all the success which you so highly deserve, I am, Yours, truly,

S. THALBERG.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,

537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JAN. 21, 1865.

All Communications, Remittances, and Orders, must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl Street, New York.

THE President who is the Governor-General of Canada, refused to the request of the assassins and burglars, who recently invaded our soil from that hyperborean region, may be inferred from the indignation of the reward which he offers for their apprehension—two hundred dollars! This is about half as much as is generally offered "in the States" for the capture of a horse thief.

On experimenting with artillery there seems to be, as with the rifle, no limits, no end. Among the objects (of doubtful utility), sought to be obtained, rapidity of firing is one, and in this respect, at the late trial, the firing of what was falsely done at Shoeburyness by the "Armstrong and Whitworth Committee." A hundred rounds were fired from the Armstrong 12-pounder breech-loader field gun. There was an interval of 10 minutes after the first 50 rounds. The time, as taken by the chronometer, for the first 50, 6m. 58s., and for the second 50, 6m. 35s.; 13m. 33s., in all. Thus the gun was fired throughout the 100 rounds at the rate of seven rounds and a half a minute; and for the second 50 rounds at the rate of eight rounds a minute. It was supressed on the ground that the shot were often in the air at the same time. This, it is alleged, is by far the most rapid artillery fire on record, and it is more than twice as rapid as has been accomplished by any muzzle-loading gun. No water was used, nor any sponging, nor did any hitch of any sort occur.

THE English-speaking traveller on the Continent has a source of infinite amusement, in the polyglot notices to their guests which the hotel-keepers post up in every passage and dormitory of their establishments. The subjoined is a specimen of these, outside of Mandevilles Hotel, from the walls of the "Three Moors" in Augsburg:

"TO MY GUEST.

"In the interest of the Visitors who will honor my hotel with their presence, I don't fail to inform them that the proprietor is not responsible for the people employed in my house, and that also he charge to bring their Luggage to the Diligence and Steamers in a reasonable time. Those have to Pay and therefore nobody can request somewhat to a Traveller by what Pretext it would be."

We call attention to the prospectuses, which we publish in our advertising columns, of the "New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore" and "New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore Consolidated" Petroleum Companies. Both of these are established, honorable concerns, and both offer special advantages for investment. The "New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore" Company has organized a powerful corporation, able to make investments proportionate with their means. The names of the president and directors of the "New York and Liverpool" Company are a solid guarantee that the affairs of the company will be well managed and its business actively prosecuted.

A MR. O'CONNOR MORRIS, who, it seems, once filled the office of Postmaster-General of Jamaica, has published a book in London, in which he recounts his "hairbreadth 'scapes" and other experiences in a trip from New York to Canada. In the usual vulgarisms about the Yankees' ambition "to lick all creation," and especially the "Britishers," for whom he seems to have a holy horror; yet the author is constrained to admit that American pretensions, in one thing at least, are not unfounded, viz.: the perfection they display in speaking and writing the English language. He says: "On the whole, I think that, man for man and woman for woman, the Americans speak better English than themselves, though, I believe, our highest standard to be above theirs."

THE new Governor of the State pays a graceful and merited compliment, in his initial message, to the condition and management of the Central Park. Public parks are common in the country, of equal magnitude and in the construction and support of which so much money has been expended, has ever been kept so free from partisan meddling and corruption, or been administered so faithfully in the public interest. And if the citizens of New York and the people of the Union who visit the metropolis have our spirit soared to decency, good order and good taste, they owe no little of the credit to the Commissioners who have kept one of the bands of the corrupt and vulgar horde of needy and irresponsible politicians who control the affairs of this city. Their efforts to get the Park into their hands, and fill it with shoulder-hitters and "bed-bolsters," have been persistent, and are unceasing. Let the Legislature continue to protect us from them. Good citizens will watch jealously every measure of legislation, emanating from the city, which may come up in Albany, to see that nothing shall be smuggled into it whereby the Park shall, either so entirely, come within the administration of our local authorities.

THERE is something in the Book of Proverbs as enlarged and amended by Abraham, a wise man of the West, about the impolicy of trying to drive seniors, even from round holes, and the thought the importance of keeping "the right man in the right place" has been so often impressed on the Government by precept and example, as to need no further illustration. When it was proposed to make Gen. Grant President, because he had proved himself one of the most successful of the leaders of the rebellion, because he had never evinced the remotest desire for office for an hour, and for this magnitude, [illegible] a he failed to remonstrate when we learned this, Gen. Butler was sent to command the land forces against Wilmington, it was for the reason, we fear too much respected by a patriotic people, that the thing was done, and we did not wish to drive a man out of the Army of the Government by adverse criticism on its conduct. Does any one doubt if Sheridan, or Hooker, or a hundred others we might name of our soldiers, who never failed "to keep a hotel," and who would pretty certainly fail as Governors of New Orleans, had been in command of Fort Fisher, at the time? Gen. Butler would now be floating over its walls? Gen. But ler, every one knows, is not the man to be associated with any enterprise requiring the powers of adaptation are by no means wonderful. Besides, we think the life of the Governor prospective of Richmond, chief of the people, should not be put in peril by doing the work of a soldier. How is Charleston to be "conciliated" were he to be shot dead or by a sharpshooter, or smoked out by a cannon ball?

SINCE the above was put in type the mails have brought us the news of the removal of Gen. Butler from command, by order of the President. His successor is Major-Gen. Ord, a soldier of distinction.

THE facts connected with the capture of the pirate steamer Florida, in the harbor of Bahia Brazil, on the 7th of October last, by the U. S. gunboat Wachusett, Capt. Collins, are familiar to the public. As soon as the capture was known there has been made the subject of remonstrance on the part of Brazil. A letter from the Brazilian Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, of the date of the 12th ult., with the reply of Mr. Seward of the date of the 20th, have found the light. The Brazilian representative gives it as the grand error of the Florida the character of belligerents, and after recapitulating the circumstance of the capture, accuses the officers of the Wachusett of "having gravely offended the territorial immunities of Brazil by passing beyond the laws of war in seizing treacherously and by surprise the pirate a defenceless ship," and concludes by expressing the belief that the United States will disavow the act and make reparation for the violation of neutrality.

MR. Seward assures the Brazilian Minister that he is right in supposing that "the President will not approve of the proceedings at Bahia," and adds that he will "suspend Capt. Collins and order him before a court-martial." The consul at Bahia will be ordered to leave that port. Mr. Seward wishes it to be understood that the Government does not admit or credit "the charges of falsehood, treachery and bad faith brought forth against the captain and consul." He wishes it to be understood, also, that the action of the President "rests entirely upon the proof that Bahia the capture of the Florida was an unauthorized, unlawful and indefensible exercise of the naval force of the United States within the neutral waters of Brazil, in defiance of its established and duly recognized Government."

STILL Mr. Seward insists that the Florida and its crew were not lawful belligerents, and that the ascription of that character to them by Brazil is but a form of conversation, "used by United States, and in derogation of the law of nations, and that the harboring and supplying of ships of the Confederate States by Brazil are acts of wrongs and injuries for which the latter owes reparation to the United States." As for the proof of the Florida's piratical character, not having been brought lawfully under the authority of the United States, they cannot be subjected to the consideration of a court. Therefore, it is consequently be turned loose—subject, however to recapture if found beyond the jurisdiction of the country. Finally, Mr. Seward seems to think that the Florida itself would be given up on the same grounds, only she happens to have been taken by the United States, which casts no responsibility on the United States.

IT is somewhat difficult to reconcile the positions assumed by Mr. Seward with the action of the Government in respect to Capt. Collins, the Consul at Bahia and the crew of the Florida. Perhaps future correspondence will make things clear.

IN this connection, we may mention that the New York Chamber of Commerce, while disavowing any intent to indicate what should be the conduct of the Government in the Florida affair, or to criticise it in any way, nevertheless "does not forbear to express the gratification that prevailed throughout our community when the capture of the Florida was announced—more especially as they believe that by violating the neutral waters of Brazil, that vessel had forfeited every claim to protection." The Chamber has unanimously thanked Capt. Collins "for his courage and conduct in generously subjecting himself to the risk of censure, and to the possible loss of his commission, in order to rid the seas of a scourge, and our commerce of an incendiary foe."

THE occupation of Savannah by Gen. Sherman has developed a great change in the temper of the Southern people involved in the rebellion, as compared with their fierce and implacable hostility, when brought under the military rule of "the Yankees," in the earlier stages of the war. For example, with the occupation of New Orleans by Gen. Butler, in 1862, he found the mass of the whites of both sexes restless, ferocious, defiant and dangerous in their implacable spirit of hatred and vengeance. It was only after a long course of the most stringent military measures, including executions, imprisonments, expulsions and confiscations, that they were brought to an unresisting submission to his authority. Such, too, at that time was the prevailing spirit among the people throughout the rebellious States. They were confident, imperious, swaggering, cruel and defiant, and in entering one of their towns or cities, the soldiers of the Union were received with jeers and insults, and vindictively refused all social communications, except under a military warrant admitting of no refusal. Now compare New Orleans with Savannah, and mark the change.

In the fourth year of Jeff. Davis and the blessings of his Southern Confederacy, the Union army, under Gen. Sherman, enters the city of Savannah. How is that army received? Not by sneers, jeers, and insults from scurvy loafers or beautiful women; but with those manifestations of respect and decorum which severe experience seldom fails to teach. Instead of studied seclusion and dark conspiracies, Gen. Sherman is met by a sensible submission; and a public meeting of the citizens is called to provide for the recognition of the supreme authority of the United States, and for such social and commercial reciprocities as will secure harmony between the citizens and the army. Prominent among the citizens concerned in these proceedings stands the name of G. B. Lamar, the importer, if we are not mistaken, of that famous cargo of slaves into Georgia, from Africa, in the bark Wanderer, some six or seven years ago; and a most active speculator and financier during this war, in English contracts for rebel vessels of war and blockade-runners, and in all sorts of financial operations in London, Liverpool and New York calculated to assist Mr. Davis and damage the national treasury. Now had not a great change come over the mind of Mr. G. B. Lamar, he would have left Savannah with Hardee. He preferred to remain like thousands of others, because he had discovered that [illegible]vis and his Confederacy, to use a familiar expre[illegible]n, were "played out."

From these s[illegible]estive peace proceedings in Savannah, it is but a step to a general movement among the people of Georgia for a return to the "old Union," and the next lesson of Sherman, we expect, will be apt to "set the ball in motion."

THE London Daily Star of the 24th of December publishes a long and interesting letter from a British field officer in active service, describing his visit to Gen. Grant's army before Richmond. He speaks of Gen. Grant as bearing a most striking likeness to the late Lord Charles Wellesley, second son of the Duke of Wellington, and as "showing no signs of wear, notwithstanding his manifold occupations and responsibilities." He spent several days with the General, and visited the various works, as well as that somewhat disagreeable place known as "the front." He visited "Dutch Gap," and in describing the canal there, pays incidentally the following compliment to the accuracy of the sketches made by our Artists in field:

"As we approached the working party engaged in this huge excavation, we found that they were being shelled by the enemy's batteries. We therefore left our orderlies and horses at a safe distance, and Captain —— and I crept along the river's bank, and a shell burst in the river, throwing up a column of water. Curiously enough Frank Leslie (the Illustrated News of the States) has, in his paper of the 19th November and the 26th of November, given two sketches, which I enclose, as affording a far better elucidation of what I witnessed than is possible by any description with the pen."

It is not a little remarkable, that this officer, alluding to the design of blowing out the head of the canal, predicts precisely what has happened, viz.: that the earth would be blown into the canal, so as to prevent its early use.

Summary of the War.

SAVANNAH.

On the 31st December the 3d division of the 20th corps moved across the Savannah river into South Carolina, and defeated a regiment of Wheeler's cavalry.

The rebel Gen. Hardee, with the troops that evacuated Savannah, had reached Charleston. In a telegram, dated 2d Jan., Hardee says that large bodies of Union troops were landing on the South Carolina side of the Savannah river, and had driven the rebel pickets before them. It is also reported that Gen. Kilpatrick's cavalry had occupied Hardeeville, 22 miles from Savannah, on the Savannah and Charleston railroad.

VIRGINIA.

The attempt to open the Dutch Gap has resulted in a failure, the explosion forcing all the earth back and refilling the canal. It has also, by destroying the screen, which protected our men while laboring in the excavation, left them open to the rebel batteries, which command that spot. The armies before Richmond and Petersburg remain quiet.

TENNESSEE.

The reported escape of the scattered fragments of Hood's army over the Tennessee river proves to be truth. This was occasioned by some blunder in the orders given to the commander of the pontoon train, who was ordered to proceed by the Murfreesboro road, instead of the Franklin. This delayed the Union pontoon train for two days, which enabled the rebels to cross the river and get safe beyond the reach of our cavalry. The pursuit was vigorous as far as Duck river, 40 miles from Nashville, but when it arrived there it was compelled to halt for want of pontoons.

MISSISSIPPI.

Gen. Grierson's raid on the Mobile and Ohio railroad has been successful, so far as heard from, without the loss of a man. He started from Memphis on the 21st Dec., and struck the road just below Corinth, Miss., and on the 27th had completely destroyed it to beyond Okalona, a distance of over 70 miles, together with 29 bridges, a great deal of trestle work, a number of cars, 300 army wagons, 4,000 rebel carbines, and much other property. He had dispersed Forrest's dismounted camp, and was pushing on with the intention of rendering the line utterly useless as far as Meridian, 100 miles further, and, if possible, releasing the Union prisoners at Catawba, Miss.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—It has been satisfactorily proved that damaged hard bread and hay mixed together, and subjected to steam pressure, to remove mould and sourness, constitute the best food for fattening cattle.

——A Rhode Island paper records the most contemptible instance of counterfeiting which can well be imagined. A man, with the talent for such business, cuts out the cyphers of the ten cent fractional currency and pastes them on the five cent notes in such a manner as to make them pass for fifties. Several such ingenious petty forgeries have been found in circulation.

—— In boring for oil, near Chicago, recently, they struck, at the depth of 720 feet, a subterranean lake. The water has since been running at the rate of 400 gallons per minute.

—— An Adrian (Mich.) paper says that Miss Augusta Chapin was ordained a minister of the Universalist denomination last week.

—— The inauguration of Reuben E. Fenton as Governor of New York, in place of Horatio Seymour, whose official term has expired, took place in Albany on the 2d of January. Gov. Seymour, in receiving Gov. Fenton, made a brief address, setting forth the important and responsible character of the office, to which Gov. Fenton replied, expressing his determination to strive to advance the interests of our great State, to promote the welfare and honor of the people, and also, to the extent of his executive authority and influence, faithfully maintain the national freedom and unity, and perpetuate the liberties of the people.

—— The habitans of Canada resist the draft very energetically. Lord Monck has sent four companies to enforce the law.

—— One thousand dollars are now paid to all persons enlisting for three years or the war. This will, undoubtedly, avert the necessity of a draft, as New York now only requires about 5,000 to make up her quota on the last call.

—— The Police made 54,751 arrests in New York city last year, and 14,820 in Brooklyn. A larger number of policemen have been killed and wounded during 1864 than any preceding year. There were 16,855 arrests for intoxication, and 56,959 persons applied for a night's lodging in the Station-houses. There are 173 slaughter-houses and 84 fat-boiling houses in the city. The deaths were about 25,000—of which 14,000 were children under five years. In August alone 1,700 children died from causes which might be prevented with better sanitary arrangements; 683 deserters were arrested; there were 10,000 lost children found in the streets by the police.

—— The California vote for President is before us. The highest Presidential Lincoln elector, including Soldiers' votes, was 62,134; McClellan, 43,843—showing over 18,000 Union majority.

—— The San Francisco Bulletin says: "During the last three years, which have been the most trying of the transition period, the assessed valuation of this city has increased from $147,000,000, in round numbers, to $177,000,000. showing an average gain of $10,000,000 per annum, in spite of Washoe and drought. The increase in one year alone, from 1862 to 1863, was about $14,000,000."

—— The public debt of Pennsylvania has been reduced $117,000, leaving it on the 1st of December $39,379,000.

—— The quota of Pennsylvania under the new call for volunteers is nearly 67,000. Gov. Curtin attributes the deficiency to frauds on the people.

—— Mr. Hecker, of Pearl street, has filed an injunction to the city authorities, commanding them to pay no more money for street cleaning. He says in his petition "that by an unlawful agreement between Boole, Brennan and Guther, about $652,000 has already been paid out, and $108,500 more is about to be taken, when the law allows only $300,000 per year in all. The defendants are to show cause on the first Monday in February why the injunction should not be made perpetual." There is consequently every prospect of the streets being soon impassable.

—— A very pleasant festival was held on the 22d Dec. at Poughkeepsie—it was the annual parade and banquet of the Eastman National Business College. The banquet was quite a mammoth affair, covers being laid for over 2,000 guests. The music was excellent. Mr. W. Ross Wallace recited an ode written expressly for the occasion, and the whole was a great success.

—— The Starlight Coterie commenced their Sociables on the 22d Dec, which was a very pleasant event. It was held at their rooms, 59 West 14th street. The next takes place on the 12th Jan.

—— During the past year the enormous sum of $28,522,000 was lost by fires in the loyal States, without counting losses under $20,000 or losses by the war, as at Chambersburg.

—— During the year 1864, 4,800 vessels arrived at the port of New York from foreign ports—a decrease of 273 from 1863; 198,342 passengers arrived, the most of them emigrants, who have settled in this country.

Southern.—The Richmond Sentinel has an article declaring that "rather than again enter the old Union they would much prefer to put themselves under the protection of England, France or even Spain!" The protection of the last named power would certainly be an amusing fact. The Charleston papers say this is Mr. Jeff Davis's idea, and is not shared in by the people. The openness with which the Richmond press speaks of making Gen. Lee Commander-in-Chief of the armies is a decided attack on the President, for in a military condition, to take from the Executive the control of the armies would be to reduce him to a cipher.

—— Despite their boasting that the fall of Savannah would strengthen their cause by concentrating their troops, the rebel papers now admit, by their attacks upon the lukewarmness of the Georgians in opposing Sherman's march, that the moral effect is damaging to the Confederacy, more especially in the eyes of Europe.

—— The Richmond Whig says: "When ill luck sets in, it is apt to flow on until it exhausts itself. The tide then sets in the opposite direction, and continues until another reflex occurs. Fortune has been setting steadily against us for some months. It may be hoped that the turning point has now been reached—that we have suffered all that we are doomed to suffer on this occasion—that we have sufficiently expiated our faults or our follies, or whatever has brought misfortune upon our arms—and that henceforth, for some time to come at least, we may look forward to a reasonable share of good fortune."

—— Gen. Dick Taylor has been lecturing the Alabamians for their indifference to the Southern cause, as evinced in their refusing to allow their militia to leave the State. Strange to add, he quotes the praiseworthy example of Georgia as a reproach to them.

—— On the 28th Dec. a meeting of nearly 400 of the prominent citizens of Savannah was held, over which the Mayor presided, when it was resolved to seek to have peace, "in the language of the President of the United States," "by laying down our arms and submitting to the national authority and a strict obedience to the laws of the United States;" and the Governor of Georgia was requested to call a State convention to make arrangements for allowing the people to vote on the question whether they will have a continuance of the war or give in their adhesion at once to the national authorities of the United States. Many of the inhabitants have taken the oath of allegiance.

Personal.—The Hon. Gerritt Smith lectured at Cooper Institute on "Amending the Constitution and Laws," on the 4th of Jan. His argument on the main topic of amendment was to the effect that Slavery could be effectually abolished by Congress as a war measure, without an amendment of the Constitution, which, however, he was not averse to.

—— Simeon Draper, the Collector of New York, sailed for Savannah on the 4th, to superintend the shipment of the cotton captured in Savannah.

—— Fitzhugh Ludlow gave his first lecture on the Rocky Mountains, at Dodworth Hall, on the 7th Jan.

—— John K. Porter, of Albany, has been appointed Justice of the Court of Appeals, by the Governor, in lieu of Mr. Seldon, who declined to serve.

—— John Johnston, of Summit county, has been elected Speaker of the Ohio House of Representatives. The Governor represents the finances of the State to be in a sound condition.

—— Mr. S. R. Fiske, one of the editors of the Herald, has been appointed editor of the Leader, Mr. Clapp having resigned that position.

—— Some of the leading managers of New York paid Mr. Lester Wallack the compliment of being present on the occasion of his first appearance after his father's death.

—— Col. Julian Allen has arrived from Savannah as agent of the Mayor and Corporation of Savannah, to purchase food for the destitute inhabitants of that city. He of course came with Gen. Sherman's sanction.

—— The two Blairs, Silver Spring and the late ex-Postmaster-General, were not allowed by Gen. Grant to carry out their intention of visiting Richmond on their peace mission. It was not, of course, authorised by the President. It is said by some that Mr. Blair, Sen., went merely to reclaim his stolen correspondence.

—— Mr. Stanton, Secretary of War, has gone to Savannah, to consult with Gens. Sherman and Foster. On his way he called at Fortress Monroe, where he had an interview with Gen. Grant.

—— The Hon. Wm. Pitt Fessenden has been unanimously nominated for United States Senator for six years from the 4th of March next, by both the Senate and House Union caucuses.

—— Mr. Benjamin Wood, editor of the Daily News, has invited Mr. Greeley to take a tour North, for the purpose of inspecting the condition of the rebel prisoners now in our hands.

—— Alexandre Dumas, author of "Monte Christo," with several secretaries, is about to make a tour through the United States. It is his intention of writing a book on the occasion.

—— Herman, the celebrated prestidigitateur, has been astonishing the Sultan. One of his tricks was so marvellous, that Reschid Pacha declared it was equal to anything Mahomet had ever done.

—— Brignoli, the ladies' pet of New York, but the rejected of Madrid, has made a brilliant success in Paris, the most eminent critics declaring him equal to Mario.

—— John Brougham is writing a play for Adah Isaac Jenkins Menkins. It is to be a "horse play.".

—— The Hon. Jacob M. Howard has been re-elected Senator for Michigan.

—— Out of the 12 Revolutionary patriots living on the 1st of January, 1863, but five survive to welcome this New Year. Lemuel Cook resides at Clarendon, N. Y., and does not know his age; Samuel Downing resides at Edinburg, Saratoga county, N. Y., and is 98 years old; William Hutchins resides at Penobscot, Me., and is 100 years old; Alexander Maroney resides at Yates, Orleans county, N. Y., and is 94 years old; James Barham lives in Missouri, and is 100 years of age.

Obituary.—S. H. Gardner, U. S. Collector of Revenues for the First District of Missouri, died in St. Louis on Christmas day. He was a leading member of the Western bar.

—— John C. Brane, of Baltimore, one of the leading merchants of that city, died recently on his passage from England to Havana, aged 49.

—— The Hon. Jacob M. Merseles, a well-known New Jersey politician, died of paralysis on the 2d of Jan., at his house in South Bergen.

—— Hon. G. M. Dallas, ex-Vice-President, and formerly Minister to London, died in Philadelphia, Dec. 31, aged 72.

Accidents and Offences.—Darney Frierly, proprietor of the low saloon No. 12 East Houston street, accompanied by a party of ruffians, early on Tuesday morning, the 3d Jan., entered the adjoining saloon, No. 14, kept by Harry Lazarus, and after a few words with the proprietor, stabbed him in the neck, killing him almost instantly. Later in the day the murderer and his friends were arrested by the 12th Precinct Police.

—— The office of the Daily Traveller, Boston, was burnt on the 1st Jan. Everything was destroyed except the press in the basement. It was the work of an incendiary.

—— The number of offences against the person, such as stabbing, shooting, &c., have so greatly increased lately, that it is proposed to alter the law for these crimes, considerably increasing the penalty.

—— A locomotive exploded in Jersey City on the evening of the 3d Jan., killing and wounding several, besides damaging some houses in the neighborhood.

—— Mr. D. F. Osbon, a naval reporter of this city, and correspondent of the London Army and Navy Gazette, has been arrested, and sent to the Old Capitol Prison, for publishing an account of the Wilmington fleet, so that reinforcements were sent to meet the attack at Federal Point.

—— The preliminary hearing in the case of C. Milton Allen, cashier at the Philadelphia Custom House, charged with being concerned in the recent robbery of $90,000 in that department of the Treasury, has resulted in his remand for a further hearing, in default of $20,000 bail.

—— A collision occurred on the 5th inst. in the Bergen Tunnel between a train of the Morris and Essex line and one of the Erie, in which one was killed and several severely injured. It was occasioned by part of the Morris and Essex 4 o'clock train becoming disengaged, and blocking up the way was run into by the Erie train.

—— There were more people killed and wounded by railroad accidents last year than in any preceding year since 1854—140 accidents occurred, 404 lives were lost, and 1,846 persons were wounded.

Chit-Chat.—At a recent sale in London, the copyright of the music of "Over the Sea," a ballad, was sold for $620; and that of "The May Queen" for $2,770.

—— Chapman & Hall received $500 for the advertisement which appeared on the last page of Chas. Dickens's Christmas Story, "Mrs. Lirriper's Legacy." It is only octavo size.

—— The King of the Sandwich Islands has determined upon an established religion for his kingdom, and chosen the Episcopal.

—— A French paper says Paris is becoming religious. There are no less than six churches building at the present minute. What would this writer say of Brooklyn?

—— The fashionable world of Berlin is much shocked at the Count of Westphalia, one of the oldest titles in Germany, marrying Catharine Friedburg, a beautiful ballet dancer. He is enormously rich, and intends winning over the beau monde by a series of splendid fêtes.

—— Byron's "Sardanapalus" has been translated into Swedish, and performed in Stockholm with great success.

—— Stays were quite unknown in Russia until Peter the Great danced with some of the Hanoverian ladies on his journey to Pomerania. Quite astounded, the monarch exclaimed to his suite after the ball, "What confounded hard bones the German women have!"

—— How completely the English mind is enthralled by its veneration for royalty is amusingly developed in the following dedication by Earl Derby, one of the most illustrious of British noblemen: "To His Royal Highness Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, K. G., this translation of the Iliad of Homer is, by his Royal Highness's gracious permission, with profound respect and dutiful attachment, humbly dedicated."

—— A saw-filer in New Bedford has put this over his door: "James Nokes, Saw Dentist!"

—— Earl Carlisle, better known here as Lord Morpeth, died of paralysis, caused by softening of the brain.

—— King Leopold was 74 on the 15th Dec.

—— Servantgalism is rampant in New Orleans. A fair Hibernian, who had been discharged for toddying a little too much and too often, when the hour of her departure came positively refused to leave, saying, "that if she didn't suit the missis, the place suited her." The result was that the services of a policeman were required to eject the fair creature.

—— Dan Rice, the Circus proprietor, has had to pay $991 damages for causing a spectator to be ejected from his booth during the performance. Cause—he hissed!

Foreign.—A farmer at Colesburg, Cape of Good Hope, at a recent meeting of the Agricultural Society of that place, indicated a new source of wealth to farmers. He had found that 35 ostriches could be reared on about 300 acres of pasture land, and feathers fully grown can be obtained from them every six months. The value of each plucking is about £12 10s. per bird. The original cost of the young bird was £5 apiece.

—— The substitution of iron for wood in the construction of ships is going forward with such rapid strides in the United Kingdom, that in some of the old shipyards a timber ship is scarcely ever seen. It is a fact worthy of observation, that on the Clyde only two wooden ships have been built within the past year, out of an aggregate of 319 vessels launched there, or still in process of construction.

—— The nurse of one of the wealthiest families in Paris has been detected exposing her master's child in the Champs Elysée, begging for charity.

OIL-BORING ON THE SAUNDERS' FARM.

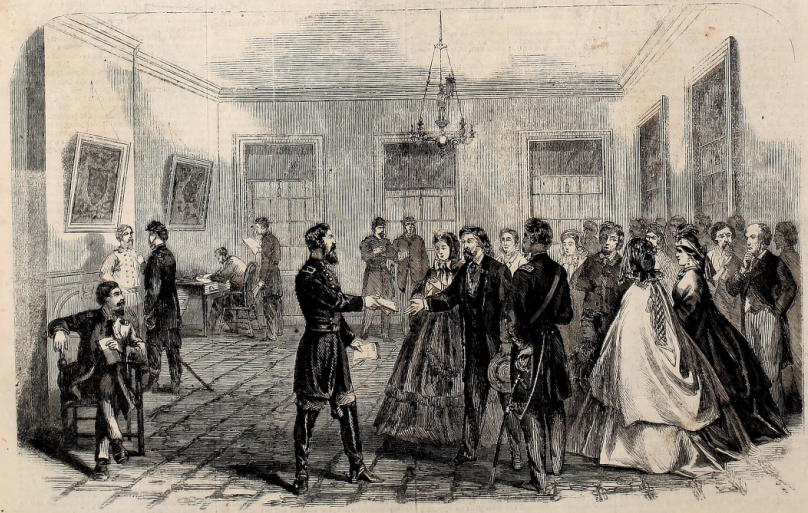
ON our first page will be seen a striking and spirited sketch of boring for oil, as daily practised in the principal (Venango county) oil region in Central Pennsylvania. The drawing was made on the spot a month since, by our Special Artist, Mr. Schell, and represents the interior of a derrick, with so much of the machinery as is seen inside. A length of iron pipe, six inches interior diameter, and one inch thick of metal, has been previously driven down to the solid rock by means of a ram; the edge of the tube is seen protruding. The boring gear, connected with an engine outside by means of the walking-beam seen in the upper part of the picture, works a centre-bit, the sand and debris being removed at intervals by a sand pump. The workman is represented bending over his monotonous task, waiting for the relief of the night-hand; the lamp, covered to prevent danger from explosive gases, hangs behind him. The floor is bored to drain off an accidental overflow.

The expenses of boring are necessarily heavy. The engine alone, when delivered on the location, will cost over $2,000; the derrick $150 more. The engineer, working probably for from 60 to 100 days, receives $3 per diem for his superintendence. The contract for drilling is at the rate of about $2 25 per foot. The cost in toto of putting down a well 600 feet deep is estimated at over $6,000 in the most favorable circumstances. The work is done under many disadvantages in a wild region, where transport of material is unusually difficult, and nothing but the invincible Yankee pluck would have given the whole region its present thoroughly riddled appearance, and its immense financial importance.

The personal adventures of our Special Artist and his companion are described in a pleasant article on another page. To that narrative we refer the reader for an account of the investigations, of which our engraving represents an episode.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE London Times has made another call upon the Queen to throw aside her private sorrows, and fulfil her public duties. It adds, that no recluse can fill the British Throne without weakening the monarchy.



The Papal Government has replied to the recent manifesto of the Commissioners and Congress of the Southern Confederacy. Cardinal Antonelli states that the sentiments expressed in the manifesto are entirely in accordance with the disposition and the character of the Pope, and that the Pope will not fail to avail himself of any favorable occasion that may present itself for bringing about peace.

The Spanish Cortes was opened on the 22d of December. The Queen's speech says that Spain has no ambitious projects upon the South American Republics. It is silent about San Domingo, but the announcement that a bill of great importance will soon be laid before the Cortes to remedy the unsatisfactory condition of Spain is supposed to have reference to the San Domingo question.

The Italian Government has issued an address to the prefects in North Italy, warning them of the probability of a new outbreak in favor of Venetia next spring, and declaring that the Government is determined to discountenance all such foolish attempts. This settles the question for the present as to the probabilities of a war between Austria and Italy this year. The coolness between the British Cabinet and Victor Emmanuel springs from the assurance Lord Palmerston gave the latter that he would not see the power of Austria crippled, considering her as a more reliable ally to England than even Prussia.

REBEL PRISONERS, UNDER ORDERS OF GEN. SHERMAN, TAKING UP THE TORPEDOES IN FRONT OF FORT M'ALLISTER, CAPTURED BY THE UNION FORCES, DEC. 13.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

CAPTURE OF SAVANNAH—GEN. GRARY ISSUING PASSES TO CITIZENS.

EXHUMING THE BODIES OF UNION SOLDIERS KILLED IN THE ATTACK ON THE WELDON RAILWAY, VA., TO BE SENT TO THEIR FRIENDS.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. E. TAYLOR.

DAY AND NIGHT.

BY AMANDA T. JONES.

ONE eve my Margery and I
Sat watching—blissfully alone—
The splendor creeping down the sky,
The darkness climbing to its throne.

The sun was somewhere in the west:
We knew it by the jets of light
That leaped against the evening's breast:
But he was sunken out of sight.

And as we marked the gleams that gave
To twilight transient hues of dawn,
The Night, that painter pale and grave,
Brushed out the lines that Day had drawn.

On lake and landscape, cloud and sky,
With violet shades, blurred all the parts:
Until we felt—my love and I—
An evening in our very hearts.

And so I said—her hand in mine,
Her head against my shoulder laid—
"Wise nature oft inscribes some sign,
Which, to interpret, makes afraid.

"While sunlight, Margery, always fair,
Is symbol, sweet, of what thou art,
This hour, that darkens all the air,
Portrays my own sad counterpart.

"Day dies with the approach of Night:
Thus do I read the fateful sign—
Thy life, with its transcendant light,
Will perish, if 'tis linked with mine."

Straightway she answered, while a glance
Of radiant meaning lit her eye,
"The shades of life its lights enhance,
And I, for love of thee, would die.

"Yet Day dies not; but being drawn
Beyond itself (so love is given),
Makes for the Night a silver dawn,
And gains a twilight glimpse of Heaven!"

It is said that a joint expedition to the North Pole over the ice is being organized by the French and English Governments.

THE MISER'S BRIDE;

OR,

WHICH STARVES FIRST?

BY Z. W.,

AUTHOR OF THE "THE SERPENT WOMAN," ETC.

ALTHOUGH I was the possessor of one of the handsomest new fowling-pieces that ever delighted the eye of a sportsman, I had not obtained a shot at anything the whole morning, and was sitting on a bank, eating some cakes with which my grandmother had considerately stuffed my pockets, when I heard a rustling in the thicket before me. My piece was in my hands in a moment, and I was about to take a deadly aim at the moving object, when I discovered it to be a pale, thin young woman, whose eyes glared with avidity at my luncheon. Notwithstanding her almost ghastly emaciation, she was beautiful, and it must [illegible]

DYING FOR WANT OF FOOD.

THE MISER'S DEATH.

heart ached to gaze upon her handsome but famine-pinched features. As soon as I recovered from the confusion I felt, in consequence of mistaking her for lawful game, I was so much moved by her famished look that I could not refrain from offering her a portion of the bountiful provision my resourceful relative had made for my matutinal appetite. She made an effort to refuse, but it was faint, and I easily prevailed upon her to accept what she so evidently craved. It gave me more satisfaction to see her eat than the richest feast a monarch ever enjoyed could have afforded me. In spite of the restraint she put upon herself, she devoured, rather than ate; and I was filled with curiosity to learn how so lovely a creature could, in a land of plenty, be brought so near the verge of starvation.

"You need not be afraid of my grandmother's cakes," I observed, as I forced her to take the last one; "she was always a famous hand at pastry, and what she makes is just as wholesome as it is nice."

"They are indeed delicious," she replied. "I wish I could make such."

"My grandmother would take great pleasure in teaching you how; she does not live far from here."

"She could teach me all but the most essential particular."

"What is that?"

"How to obtain the materials."

"Are you so destitute?"

"No.

"I cannot understand you."

"Nor I explain."

My curiosity was now, of course, much increased, but my diffidence and politeness prevented me at the time from questioning her closer. While looking round at this moment, puzzling my brains with the enigma, I espied a pair of pigeons settling upon a tree that I had been watching, and I fired at them, making so good a shot that both came tumbling, fluttering from limb to limb, to the ground. I cast a glance of triumph at my new acquaintance, which she met with a look of immense horror. I ran to fetch the birds, but when I returned, with the view of presenting them to her, she was gone, and I could discover no trace of her.

In the evening I related my little adventure to my grandmother, in the hope that her extensive knowledge of her neighbors would enable her to gratify my curiosity. I was not disappointed. She informed me that the young woman I had met was the wife of a notorious old miser, Jacob Skimpin, who almost starved her and himself, because he loved money so much that he held it extravagant to buy more food than was barely sufficient to maintain life. She added:

"The poor thing was doubtless seeking her aries."

"But how on earth did the old money-grubber get so handsome a girl for his wife?"

"In a manner that reminds me of the romances I used to read when I was young: Her father, Mr. Swilton, had mortgaged his property very heavily to old Skimpin, who was about to foreclose, when a sudden illness struck down the precious pair that Skimpin should have Miss Rosina, and that her father should retain his property and his decency. Rosina refused to receive the offer, and to benefit immensely by the arrangement. Swilton hoped that Skimpin would soon starve himself, and Skimpin that Swilton would soon drink himself to death. It was a race between them. Swilton won—that is to say, he drank himself to death before Skimpin starved, and Skimpin's hopes were realized, and he is now the possessor not only of the Swilton property but of the fair girl who could not be induced to marry him. She ought to have something besides, inherited from another source, but he withholds it from her, and the chances are that he will forbear, accustomed as he is to starvation, will yet survive her, and, perhaps, prove her heir."

"Why, this is monstrous!" I exclaimed, after a pause.

"Frightful!" echoed my grandmother. "But such is the fruit of drunkenness and avarice. It is hard to decide which is the worst vice; but, if they be not equally bad, I think it must be drunkenness."

"No, avarice—by far," I replied. "Drunkenness has some excuse, if not reason in it. It is frequently but the thoughtless indulgence of pleasure, conviviality and wit; but avarice has its source in selfishness and meanness of soul."

"I beg your pardon," resumed my grandmother. "Drunkenness is the offspring of caress, and engenders every crime in the calendar, from pilfering to murder; but avarice is merely the extreme of economy, and means only providence."

We continued the argument for some time, without altering one another's conviction in the slightest, as we kindly compelled, with a deepened consciousness of my aged relative's superior theory of speech and tenacity of purpose, to relinquish the dispute in despair.

The next day I revisited the spot where I had met the miser's wife, but she did not appear. I afterwards reconnoitred the dwelling, a dilapidated, forlorn pile of wood, but the gates and doors were all closed, locked, bolted and barred. Not a sign of animation was visible, and I knocked at the door of the neighborhood reconciled, but hollow echoes were the only answer I received. The wall was high, and fortified on the top with a thick chevaux de frise array of broken glass bottles. Though almost a match for a monkey at climbing, I hesitated to scale the wall, till I espied a bough of a tree hanging over it and the yard it inclosed. It was sport for me to climb this tree, to run along the limb and let myself down into the yard, but when I was safely landed there, it struck me that my egress might not be effected with the same facility. I went round to the front door and hammered away at it with the same observance of diligence by which I had endeavored to gain admission at the gate. At last one of the upper windows was opened, and a voice I recognised as that of the miser's wife demanded:

"Who's there?"

"Pardi! Sylvan."

"What do you want?"

"I merely wish to speak with you a few moments. I thought, perhaps, you might like to see me again. I have brought delicious specimens of my grandmother's skill in pastry."

"I understand you, sir. I am very much obliged, but must decline your intended favor. My husband is absent, and I dare not open the door while he is away—indeed I cannot, for he has the key with him. I am a prisoner here. If he should return and find you in the yard, heaven only knows what would be the result. He himself would have no peace, and he would certainly give me none for the rest of my life."

"Surely he shall not find me: I will take good care of that."

"He comes so stealthily, that even I am not sensible of his approach. Pray begone! Your intended kindness will only increase my misery, by rendering me an object of suspicion and, perhaps, persecution, as long as I live."

"Can I do nothing for you?"

"Nothing—only leave me."

"How can I leave you in such a prison as this? Your husband may possibly never return, and then you must starve. He has no right to lock you up in this manner. You will, at least, accept this little provision I have brought you."

"No, no, no! Sorry am I that I ever accepted anything at your hands. To what degradation it exposes me! How wretched I am! Pity me—leave me—for mercy's sake!"

"I am not sure that I can."

"How did you get over the wall?"

I explained my mode of ingress, but how I was going to get out was a puzzle to myself, and, consequently, something I could not make clear to her.

Suddenly she called in a voice of alarm:

"I see him! he is coming! he is crossing the road! Go, quick, or you will be too late!"

She shut the window and disappeared. I heard the key turn in the lock of the gate, and had barely time to hide behind the old pump before Mr. Skimpin himself entered. To my dismay, he fastened the gate carefully on the inside, locking, bolting and barring it. His eyes were everywhere, especially on every side, and it was a very sly peep at his person that I ventured to allow myself. One glance was sufficient to show that he was long, cunning face and slim figure on the memory as something strange, grotesque and impossible to forget.

As soon as he had disappeared inside, I stole round the yard to ascertain the most convenient method of escape, but finding no better shelter than observation that had afforded by the pump, deemed it advisable to conceal myself there till dusk, when I trusted to be able to exercise my ingenuity and retrace my steps homeward. Shortly afterwards the miser's wife came out with a pitcher in her hand, and approached the pump. I told her that I was still there, as she demanded:

"How do you purpose to escape?"

"As I came in. I see a clothes line in the rear of the house. I shall climb over, secure the limb of the tree, climb up the double cord to the branch, and there bid you good evening."

"It is a dangerous experiment, especially as Mr. Skimpin has a loaded gun, and, having been lately warned that burglars meditate an attack upon his long cherished property, he has sworn to shoot the first who attempts to enter clandestinely. You are not safe a moment where you are. You had better go into the house, and I will hide you in the library, where he never goes, and, as soon as I can get the key of the gate, will let you out in a more convenient manner."

Her proposal was too reasonable to refuse, and I followed her at once into the house with as quiet a tread as I could command. She led me to a small but cosy dingy little room, furnished with an oaken bookcase, a table and a couple of chairs.

"Here he never comes," she said that his former wife died in this room, in that great armchair—of starvation, I presume, and that is sufficient reason why he should never enter it."

She spoke in a low sad tone, as if anticipating the same frightful fate for herself. I pressed the provisions I had brought with me upon her; she accepted a quantity, and placed the most of the table, telling me that I m gutuced it myself. The miser's squeaking voice calling "Rosina!" now became audible, and she left me alone hastily.

I waited patiently for half an hour, when, becoming enwined, I opened the old bookcase, which I found, to my surprise, to be well supplied with valuable works of ancient and modern languages, and took out a volume to beguile the time with, till the return of my unwanted hostess. I felt in the pocket of the book, and when I awoke it was quite dark. A few seconds elapsed before I could collect my thoughts and realize where I was. At last I grew tired of waiting, and had just resolved to effect my own deliverance and clamp my footing-piece across my shoulder, when I heard a light footstep approaching. The door opened and a voice whispered:

"Are you awake?"

"Yes."

"I durst not come before. My husband has been to-day again informed of the danger that threatens him, and determined to watch all night. I am now going the round that he has taken many times to-night, and which he will yet repeat before he goes to sleep. If you will peep at the hall door, break. Follow me as well as you can in the dark. Light is a luxury I am not allowed."

By my own instinct I was assured to the obscurity, and I followed my guide to the gate without stumbling. Just as she was about to lift the bar, she stopped suddenly, and said:

"Don't you hear voices outside?"

"I do—Gliniely."

She stooped down and listened at the keyhole for a few seconds, and then whispered to me in a frightened way:

"Heaven have mercy on us! it is they—the burglars, at last! They have a ladder, and are about to mount the wall. There must be four of them, at least. We shall be murdered!"

I thought a moment, and then replied:

"How fortunate it is I am here to-night! We had better go round to your husband, and do you let me tell the story."

She hesitated.

"There is no alternative and not a moment to be lost."

"Perhaps you are right. Quick! I think I hear them climbing the wall. Come!"

She hurried into the house, locking and fastening the door carefully. She prudently suggested that I should leave my shoes in the passage, as the slightest of it might frighten her husband and excite his suspicions. I complied, and was immediately afterwards ushered into the presence of the old miser, who was nearly startled out of his senses at the unexpected introduction, and I did not keep him time to recover from the shock before I broke at once into the subject, informing him that I had accidentally, or rather, providentially, overheard a conspiracy to rob his house and murder its master, and that I had hurried hither, fortunately reaching the gate just in time to gain admission, through my earnest representations of the danger to his wife.

The old man, during my hasty relation, regarded me with great suspicion, cast a look of wrathful upbraiding at his spouse, and moved towards the gun which stood in the corner. With an air of indignation, I told him that he had better, if he doubted my statements, verify them at once, by looking from his upper front window, as the robbers had probably followed closely at my heels. At this intimation, he seized his gun, hurried out of the room, still keeping a wary eye on me, and proceeded up the stairs to the second storey and through a passage, at the head of which was a window that afforded a view of the gate and the front yard. The moon was just bright enough to enable us to discern the burglars who were getting over the wall, and the old man exclaimed in terror:

"They are coming! Good heavens! what can I do against so many? Rosina, are you sure you fastened the back door?"

"I locked, bolted and barred it with my own hands."

"Yes, I remember—I heard. See, they are unfastening the gate—they have unlocked it. Shall I fire now?"

"By no means; wait till you are sure not to miss."

"Sure not to miss! how can I be that? I am no marksman."

"I am; shall I fire for you?"

"No, no!" said he, shrinking from me at the proposal with suspicion. "I shall fire myself."

"Just as you please, only hold steady, and don't fire in a hurry."

The burglars had succeeded in opening the gate, and now advanced towards the house, and planted the ladder against the library window. The miser exclaimed in trembling accents that he could not tell whether that window was secure or not. I told him that it made little difference, as they would make for the door in search of the plunder, however strong it might be, unless he aimed straight and shot the foremost. It was impossible for him to comply with my suggestion, as he trembled from head to foot in an ague fit. He opened the window, however, and aimed at the man who had mounted the ladder, but the muzzle of his gun described a circle in the air, and when he fired his tremulousness was so great that the piece fell from his hands into the yard below.

The robbers were not to retreat. For a moment I imagined that the leader was wounded, as, in his descent from the ladder, he fell, but the next instant he had scrambled to his feet and ran to the gate dispated that illusion. One of their number, who had been placed on guard at the gate, opened it to receive the going outcle of his, and boldly advancing to the house, picked up the gun, laughing hoarsely, and went back with it to his companions. After a brief consultation, they all returned to the ladder.

"Have you no other weapon?" I demanded of the miser.

"Have I none!" he exclaimed, and broke out into the most awful lamentations that fear and avarice could inspire and express. The extremity of his wife, even as to courage, was made manifest at that moment. As I turned, with the intention of descending by the footing-piece, I heard her say, as she handed it to me, saying calmly and sadly:

"If you can shoot little doves so far away from you what danger is there that you will miss a man?"

"None, madame; yet believe me I am not cruel."

"I do not think you so; the brave seldom are."

I took a steady aim at the first who ventured to ascend the ladder, and my shot brought him head first from the top to the bottom. The man who had first acted as watch for the rest, was at the door, and, terrified at seeing two of the others, attempted to hear off his wounded comrade. I admired his fidelity too much to punish it, and let him go unscathed, more for the benefit of the contents of the extra barrel, which accelerated their flight, if it did not punish their crime. The burglars fled precipitately, and I reloaded my piece, although I was under little apprehension of their return, and spent the remainder of the night in the most pleasant manner, in the society of an old wretch it was impossible not to despise and of his victim I pitied from my very soul.

She was like a flower growing on a rock, the sterile surface of which refused it sufficient nourishment to sustain existence. She was pining and withering away, and sinking into the grave under the tomb. As he continued to gabble to me with a sort of idiotic cunning, I turned from him with loathing, and gazed upon her with a sweet but pitiful smile of suffering face, and wondered at the monstrosity of a union of existence, of the very antipodes.

Mr. Skimpin regained some confidence in me, but it was mingled with dread, if not with suspicion. He afterwards received my visits without hesitation, and seemed to regard my presence as a protection to his house. He believed that burglars would have a dread of my prowess, after the repulse they had received at my hands, and he doubtless hoped that they would entertain the conviction that I was a constant resident of his more than occasional guest.

It seemed to be my fate to save his wretched life, although I must confess I had no zeal in the task. One day he attacked his little servant girl in chopping a branch which the storm of the preceding day had severed from a tree on his property, and which lay on the ground. He filled an old wheelbarrow with the wood and trundled it along with great effort. He was about to cross a narrow bridge, for many years had required repairing, and which spanned a stream that the recent rains had swollen to a rapid flood. Through it had borne his light weight a hundred times within the year, it now gave way, beneath him and his wheelbarrow, and precipitated both into the torrent below. I had been watching him, and now, for a moment, debated with myself whether I ought to risk my life in attempting to produce an impossibility and useless existence, or leave him to his fate. The instinct of mercy, however, prevailed, and I rushed to the spot, plunged in, disputed with the waters for their prey, and succeeded at last in dragging the old man up the bank, and in saving the remnant of his life.

His lamentations were characteristic and farcical, being devoted to the lost wood and wheelbarrow. I should have been more disgusted, had I not been so much amused. A sweet smile from Rosina repaid me for the trouble and risk I had undergone, but, at the same time, made me almost curse my folly in hazarding so much to save a life that appreciated and undervalued love.

I afterwards felt at liberty to remonstrate with Mr. Skimpin concerning his treatment of his wife. When I told him that she was half starved, he assured me that I was altogether mistaken; that I had no idea how much she ate, and, finally, that she had the most convention that ever lived. I would he the death of her, as drunkenness had been the ruin of her father.

"I am sometimes ashamed to see her eat," he continued; "she never has enough, and I verily believe that she would, if left to do as she pleased, continue to eat till she dropped down dead."

I found that my reasoning had about as much effect upon the heart of the old miser as tapping against a rock with a fan would prove towards its demolition. So long as I remained in the neighborhood, I was enabled, under various excuses, to supply poor Rosina with sustenance for her young life, but my holiday soon passed away, and I was compelled to return to the metropolis. I bade her farewell with mingled misgivings of the head, and I felt as if I was leaving one I had learned to esteem, if not to love, to a cruel fate, perhaps an early and violent death.

In the November following, in reply to my anxious inquiries, I received a letter from my grandmother, in which she referred to Mrs. Skimpin as follows:

"I saw her last Sunday, as I passed Skimpin House. She looked more like a ghost than a human. I called at the house the next day, but could not obtain admission. I cannot learn that anybody has seen her since, except her husband, who, I am told, has made it so ill that she has ceased to clamor for food; at the same time he expressed the hope that, on her recovery, she will be cured of her appetite. I am sorry, and cannot but condemn the notion which has enstamed him in health to his present advanced stage of life."

The communication haunted me. It forced the conviction upon my mind that a woman, whom I might possibly save, was being slowly murdered. The more I reasoned upon the circumstance, the more that they would admit of my departure for a few weeks, but I felt that I must go, and the inevitable delay that I was forced to endure enhanced my impatience and anxiety to spainful degree.

I arrived at my grandmother's farm rather late on a Saturday afternoon, but ignorant of stopping on a journey straight on to Skimpin's. The old miser answered my noisy and impatient summons with unusual alacrity, and the sight of me seemed to afford him pleasure.

"I am glad you are come," said he. "Rosina is very low; she does not eat nearly so much as she used to, and indeed her appetite is quite moderate. This of itself is a favorable symptom, but the misfortune is, that at the same time she has become very weak. She has lost her strength. She has not lately helped me in the slightest. She does nothing now, not even eat, and hardly takes a bodkin to her mouth."

He continued to chatter in this strain, while leading me to the room she occupied. When I entered, I was deeply impressed, and grieved for the sight, I was startled with horror. Her form, scantily clothed, lay upon an old settee, and her head was thrown back, where so little could be seen to resemble a skeleton more than a living human being. She exhibited no signs of life, and I exclaimed in terror:

"Heavens! she is dead! Wretch, you have murdered her!"

"Don't say that," whined the miser, frightened by my vehemence. "I don't think she is dead, and, if she is, I did not poison her; I gave her nothing—"

"You gave her nothing, I know; that is what killed her. You have starved her to death."

This accusation threw the old fellow into a state of the most acute excitement, but I would not listen to his clamor.

"Silence!" I cried. "If the woman is dead, it will be your province to make your defence when you stand at the bar of justice. Have you no wine, no liquor in the house?"

He equivocated, and this drove me almost to madness.

"Dog!" exclaimed I, fiercely. "Will you force me to ransack your house in search of wine? Fetch instantly what I ask for, or I swear before just heaven not to rest till I see you hung for this diabolical deed!"

He brought a bottle of brandy, which had doubtless been in the house for an age, and I poured a little of it down the throat of the poor wretch, which had the effect of animating the little life that remained in her attenuated frame.

"Thank heaven!" I cried, "she lives!" I added, "but it will soon expire if more skilful hands than mine are not employed to keep it alive. I will send instantly for a doctor and a nurse. As for you, down on your knees, and thank God that you have yet a chance to escape the gallows! If, however, she dies while I am away, that chance is gone!"

In half an hour I returned with a doctor and a very efficient nurse. The doctor pronounced without hesitation upon Rosina's case, declaring that he had never seen a human being so nearly starved without perishing, and that nothing but the most careful nursing could possibly save her. Mr. Skimpin's horror at the prospective expense of the diet and attendance the physician prescribed for her exceeded that the miserable creature manifested when accused of her murder.

He was, however, notwithstanding his ingenious protests, borne down by our united denunciations, and looked the picture of despair. I took special care that the doctor's directions were followed to the letter, and met every attempt at evasion on the part of the miser with an iron resolution that he could not move a jot. He grew quite wild, and seemed to consider himself a ruined man. As his constant presence appeared to retard the recovery of the patient, she was, as soon as her strength admitted of her removal, taken to a neighbor's house, where her health, the bloom of her youth and beauty revived with a rapidity and perfection almost magical. After the lapse of a few weeks, it was almost impossible to identify her as the same person I had so recently found a pallid "anatomy," almost inside of the portals of the tomb.

In the meantime Mrs. Skimpin had been persuaded to institute a suit against her husband with the view of obtaining separate maintenance, and of gaining possession of the little property which he withheld without rights; but he heard of these proceedings, and fortified himself in his house, so that no one could serve papers upon him, or obtain a glimpse of his person. At last so long a period elapsed without his being seen, that it was thought advisable to enter his residence without ceremony and by force, to ascertain whether he had been murdered or was still actually inhabiting the premises. After a diligent search of his dwelling, his skeleton-like form was found in its cellar, lying dead across a heavy box filled with old gold and silver-plate and coin. It was evident that he had been starving himself more rigorously than ever, and that he had exhausted his remaining strength and life in the effort he made to lift the chest out of its hiding-place. Its key had fallen from his hand before he could unlock it, and he died without the pleasure of gloating, even in death, upon the treasure dearer to him than life—ay, then heaven itself.

His widow inherited all his property, for he had no other heir. Unhappy as she had been in her first matrimonial experience, she did not long remain single. It would not become me to pronounce upon the judiciousness of her choice, but I believe she has never had occasion to repent it. I should be more explicit, if it were not disparaging the penetration of the reader to consider a more explicit and detailed éclaircissement necessary.

TRIP TO THE OIL REGIONS.

The railroad is in running order to Shaffer's farm, seven miles below Titusville, and we took advantage of the morning train to pursue our journey.

The cars, of course, were crowded beyond the possibility of breathing; by the time a man got out he only asked to take with him the necessary accompaniment of legs and arms, whether they were his own or another person's was a matter of supreme indifference.

The conversations were all upon the same theme, even politics were unmentioned, and you might almost have forgotten there was any struggle going on except the one to obtain a fortune out of petroleum.

An honest old Dutchman, who had lately made a comfortable fortune by the sale of his land, and was on his way out of the territory to select a new home, was, perhaps, the happiest creature I saw during the whole time I was gone; although probably the thousands he had pocketed would be only a drop compared to the sum the purchasers realised a few weeks or, maybe, days later.

There were stray women scattered here and there, and I absolutely saw one baby, alive, too, and likely to remain so—the most disreputable-looking baby, with its knitted cap cocked over its left eye in a rakish way, its fists clenched as if ready for a set-to with life at any moment, never smiling or crying, not receiving any more attention from the woman who carried it than if it had been a bundle of old clothes, and apparently not desiring it—a baby whose whole appearance said more plainly than ever that of a baby did before, that it never had any father in particular and no mother to speak of, but didn't intend to succumb on that account—in short, a baby so wonderfully adapted to the region, and so very, very greasy, that one might have fancied it King Petroleum's proper offspring.

Shaffer's was the first halt, and the rush for the car doors can only be conceived by those who happen to have been in a crowded theatre or lecture-room when an alarm of fire roused each man to the consciousness that his own life was more valuable than the lives of the united throng.

Everybody was good-natured, however, with the exception of an elderly female descendant of the monarchs of Ireland, travelling with her worldly possessions packed in a wooden pail, the crowning ornament a battered tin oil can, which evidently held something as refreshing as Sarah Gamp's teapot, from the frequency with which she tested its contents. She attracted a good deal of attention by the piquancy of her remarks, and an odd determination neither to get out of the "gangway" or let anybody pass her, assuring the crowd, in the most frank and engaging manner, that there was not "a gintleman in the whole country; and she believed they'd squaze a lady to death as quick as look at her—only jist let them try it, it was all she axed."

Shaffer's consists of a little knot of houses, of course either hotels or drinking-places, set down in the midst of the woods, but doing a thriving business, and as crowded as a world's fair on its opening day.

It was about noon when we reached there, and, although very cold, the sun shone so brightly that the day seemed fresh from Paradise compared with the diabolical malignity of the preceding one.

We walked along the bank of the creek to visit the Noble well and a few other marvels within easy reach. A large gang of men were at work on the railroad, which is perched in the air, between the stream and the cliffs, in the most graceful way possible.

I had heard so much of the dreary aspect of the scenery that I was agreeably surprised to find pretty little views peeping out at every bend of the capricious creek, the hills upon the right bank, as we trudged along, standing up sombre and precipitous, crowned with stately pines and hemlocks; here and there a summer waterfall, arrested in its headlong descent, and scattered in icy embroidery over the gray rocks; while the city of derricks, which began to rise on either side, with the billows of smoke and steam curling up into the sunshine, lent a life and animation to the scene, which only enhanced its wildness and singularity.

A little below the once famous Sherman well we crossed the creek, and came upon the Noble, with its group of immense tanks, into which on one day 3,400 barrels of oil are said to have flowed. This well has been in operation about a year and a half, and has realised for its owners a cool little $5,000,000, and is still flowing at the rate of 300 barrels daily.

The centre tank, into which the oil streams directly from the well, was of a goodly height, and covered with a board roof, so that the only means of getting a look within was by climbing an uncertain ladder, covered with a yellowish green slime, that was not pleasant either to sight or smell, and rendered mounting somewhat insecure.

But up we got, and peered over the top of the tank, and saw the tireless stream boiling and hissing from the pipes, the surface of the slimy pool broken into waves by the rapid flow, looking and smelling more like some little corner in hell than anything else I can imagine.

This well is situated just on the bank of the creek, so that, by means of a hose attached to the tanks, the oil is conveyed to the barges without the slightest trouble or loss.

The Sherman well, which we passed before crossing the ferry, is, I believe, the second great flowing well struck on the creek. This was somewhere in the spring of 1862. The operation was begun and carried out under great difficulties. Mr. Sherman, the original owner, was a poor man, and began boring with exceedingly limited means. It is said that his wife, true to her sex in having faith in her husband's endeavors, furnished pecuniary means as long as it was in her power; but after a time an engine became a necessary purchase, and there was no money left wherewith to make it. A couple of men who were the happy owners of the coveted assistant were given shares for the engine, but at the time when it was believed that only a few days more labor were required to strike oil the funds gave out entirely. Somebody was offered a sixteenth interest for $100, and refused with scorn; at last the share was sold for $60 and an old shot-gun. Then a horse was needed, and another share was given for the animal—blind in one eye at that. Another season of anxiety, and at length, without warning, oil was reached and flowed at the rate of 1,500 barrels per day, and continued to do so for several months, then declining to 700 barrels.

The well flowed for twenty-three months, and though during the first year the owners made little money, owing to the low price of oil and the difficulty of getting it to market, before the stream ceased a colossal fortune was realised, and even now over 30 barrels are gained daily from the pumps which have been introduced.

We went on to the McElhenny or Funk farm, to look at the now silent Funk well, the first flowing well struck on Oil Creek. Early in the summer of 1861 this well began to flow at the rate of 250 barrels per day, to the wonder of all beholders and the unbelief of all who heard the tale.

Of course even those who were forced to believe the thing could not be classed among the humbugs of our strange century, at least predicted the speedy cessation of the supply, but in spite of the greatest wiseacres of them all, the well continued flowing for some 15 months, and having made its owner a richer man than reason could have desired, saw fit to stop operations almost as suddenly as it began.

By this time several wells below were astonishing all who saw or heard; but the McElhenny tract evidently had no intention of giving up, for the Empire burst forth with nearly 4,000 barrels daily, reaching, it is said, an amount that has never been equalled.

The very owners were stupified; the demand for oil had gone down, so that the price fell to a few cents per barrel, and the coopers of the region could not furnish barrels enough to hold the fluid. The owners actually tried to choke off their well, and then built a dam about it, but the oil refused to be dammed, and poured into the creek until its waters were even more greasy than when we watched their turbid flow.

Before we got back to Shaffer's the snow began to fall rapidly again, and there was no longer any mistaking the fact that winter intended to show us how she looked on Oil Creek.

The Persons House that night was crowded to its extremest capacity, but for the first time we found comfortable meals and warm rooms, and no man with the slightest perception of humor could have failed to enjoy the evening immensely.

At dinner the young woman who waited on the table was apparently smitten with my friend's blonde beard, for she actually brought us cream for our tea, and came up once to inquire "if either of those other ladies made any mistake in our desert."

At supper there was a somewhat dilapidated boy playing waiter in a jolly young Bailey fashion, and as he good-naturedly hunted me up some hot biscuits, I slipped what I thought a reasonable expression of gratitude—even considering the region—into his widely open palm. He looked at the postage currency, and he looked at me with an expression which "words are weakness" to paint, then he turned to a somewhat smaller, more dilapidated youth than himself, and exclaimed in a tone of mingled patronage towards his satellite and withering contempt for me:

"Here, Jim, he's offered me a twenty-five center—you kin have that!"

Everybody within hearing exploded of course, and I retired very meekly from the dining-room, covered with confusion as with a garment.

The bar and reading-rooms were crowded with noisy groups; a late train from Titusville was just in, bringing a new supply of amiable lunatics, hungry and tired, and determined to have food and beds, even if they eat their nearest able-bodied relations and took their coffins for sleeping-places.

We met here that evening Mr. J. S. Clark, the President of the New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore Mining Company, and had to thank him for more real, solid information concerning the operations of the region than we had found anybody able to give before. As the head of a company which has the reputation of having begun business on the surest basis, and with the most extensive possessions of any association in the region, his thorough knowledge of everything connected with the subject, and his agreeable manner of imparting information, really made us, for the first time, feel there was something tangible and real in the vast scene of confusion upon which we had entered.

A good night's sleep made us greet the next morning with the feeling of giants refreshed, and we stood looking out on the snow which had fallen to the depth of several inches during the night, and discussing ways and means for pursuing our journey down the creek.

A flatboat was going down in a few hours all the way to Oil City, a distance of 11 miles, but setting aside the fact that we wished to stop at Rouseville and make an exploration up Cherry Run, the idea of a slow death by freezing on that melancholy barge was worse than the prospect of a walk through the snow—horses were out of the question, earlier arrivals had engaged everything in the shape of Bucephalus flesh, even to a venerable old mule, on the preceding day.

The Cherry Run region is becoming Petroleo-Metropolitan. This we knew; and to reach that crater, or focus, or geyser, or vertex—whichever you choose—of oil, was a prospect not to be foregone. There are the newest and the "spoutingist" wells. There are gathered the widest-awake of the oil land men. There are the shrewdest and most prosperous of the Petroleum Companies establishing themselves. There, for instance, is one of the chief estates of Hon. D. S. Dickinson's Company, the New York and Liverpool; the Henderson farm, a wide tract of 100 acres, all paid for, deeded and warranted, and capable of being instantly leased out in lots at $1,000 an acre a year and half the oil besides.

In truth, this energetically managed Company is one whose success is both rapid and real in a degree very uncommon in these days of bogus speculation. The ten dollar shares of its million dollars of capital are rapidly absorbed. Its funds are in hand, and its real estate, instead of being unsalable mountain lots put in by managers to sell, is selected carefully for its real value, as worth paying the cash for. Its trustees, instead of being only general business men, include men of the very oiliest wisdom, gained by actual experience. Such are J. H. Anger, Esq., of the great millionaire firm of Brewer, Watson & Co., of Titusville; L. W. Myers, one of the largest shippers of Titusville, and a well owner besides; Dr. W. M. Jennings, of Titusville, whose varied excellences as a skilful physician and surgeon, a wise and shrewd man of business, and as a social and delightful companion, entitle him to many praises; and Wm. F. Newton, Esq., well known as a safe and careful investor. Then again; they have already sliding up and down this very Cherry Run valley, and other places where oil or the hope of it make sliding easy, a mining superintendent who knows his business, Mr. H. J. Burtis, long experienced in all sorts of tubes, pipes, engines, shafts, holes in the ground and other real mining matters.

I looked at my friend, an old campaigner, ready and able to endure anything that came along, and he looked at me somewhat quizzically. I saw that he had very little faith in my courage or sinews, so I was goaded into saying with reckless determination:

"I go in for a walk, if you think you can stand it."

He only smiled a little and left the decision entirely to me, adding somewhat to my irritation by taking a survey of a carpetbag I had been weak enough to bring into the oil regions in spite of his expostulations, and coolly whistling Dixie as he tossed it from one hand to the other, as if making a mental calculation in regard to its weight.

That diabolical carpetbag had already proved a perfect Nemesis to me for every small sin I might have been deluded into during the last year, but just then I wouldn't have given up if the infernal thing had been twice as heavy, which certainly was not necessary, for it weighed a good 20 pounds.

I picked up the fiendish instrument, returned my companion's look with a stare that might have become a Southern incendiary, and hinted that if he was going to Oil City with me he had better step out, for I was off without delay.

At least four miles to Petroleum Centre, and considering the weather and the road equal to 10; but we started, my carpetbag and I leading the way in what I thought at the time, and still think, a very gallant manner.

The railroad is graded several miles farther down the creek, but we lost the benefit of the improvement, crossing the stream at a little ferry near the Noble well, in order to visit several important wells in the vicinity.

Indeed the passage of the creek became a necessity, at least three or four times during the walk, and we were highly amused with a small boy who owned one of the ferries, and gravely told us he thought of selling his lease, for business was getting dull—he was only making $80 per week, and did not feel that would pay.

With the crossing of the ferry we found ourselves in the very midst of the great wells which have made the grand flow for the excitement upon which half the world has gone mad.

It is not possible in a newspaper article to do more than give a brief mention of a few of the most famous wells on the route.

At the Egbert farm we reached the Maple Shade well, until lately flowing at a dizzy rate, but just at present almost, if not quite, silent; however, as its owners are interested in the Coquette well, at present pouring out 600 barrels, and making itself the great attraction of the region, they certainly have no need to complain. The Coquette was only struck a short time since, flowing at first at the rate of 1,500 barrels daily, and is now variously estimated at from 600 to 800.

The Jersey well is near at hand, and until recently has been credited at 500 barrels per day; and on the same farm three Keystone wells are keeping up the reputation of the district.

On we trudged, crossing and recrossing the creek, the day gray and chill, snow falling at intervals, the road or path in places frozen hard and very passable, in others covered with a treacherous crust that without any warning let you comfortably through to the knees; the artistic campaigner pointing out effects in the way of pine groves feathery with snow, ice-barred cliffs, like immense organs for the wind to play on, graceful bends in the creek, sudden glimpses of flatboats being towed up stream by four horses abreast, distant derricks, like the towers of some Rhine castle, Ruskinish description of clouds, and other airy nothings; all of which may have been well in their way, but the road grew worse, the Nemesis, in the shape of a carpet-bag, heavier, and, except that we found occasionally a private well, which discoursed honest old Bourbon, I doubt if either my energy or enthusiasm would have stood the test.

Past Petroleum Centre, where hotels in their wisdom grant no man a bed unless he pays for at least two meals into the bargain; down within sight of the Tarr farm and the great Phillips well, which claims a history equal to any we have mentioned, with new derricks rising on every side, to note where the New York and Philadelphia commence their vast operations—on we toiled and struggled, sorely buffetted by the wind, laughed at and laughing in turn at the mishaps of travellers whom we met, more cheered than anything by the sight of a passenger barge, which left Shaffer's before we did, and was last seen near the Tarr farm, with its half score of passengers huddled together, like a group of misshapen icecream moulds.

The afternoon grew grayer, the snow fell heavily, and when the shanty roofs of Rouseville did loom in sight, they were pleasanter to our eyes than the first glimpse of St. Peter's dome to the gaze of the most poetical traveller that ever suffered from enthusiasm and discomfort on the plains of Italy.

TOWN GOSSIP.

New York has so many and such continual subjects of excitement that it becomes a matter of infinite thought for the gossiper to know to which he shall give prominence. That which would throw a small city into a fever of commotion is utterly lost in the vortex of the great metropolis, and the citizens feel the meaning of the word blasé to that extent that nothing having less significance than a glaring conflagration, or an earthquake, can arouse them to a fair degree of excitability.

A fire occurs and several hundred thousand dollars of property are sent flying in hot cinders and smoke upon the midnight air, and the matter is dismissed the next day in a daily paper paragraph. A difficulty occurs relative to the payment of the sweepers of the streets, and a thousand needy, reckless men march through the streets ready for mischief of any kind, and by good luck rather than management do not riot or murder, and perhaps one in a score of our citizens knows of the event, and one in a thousand has any realization of it. A man is shot dead in the streets, or, by a knife, sent to his long account in some well-known drinking-house, and on it goes in the mass of events, all but those immediately interested forgetting it within the hour. Once in a while something floats to the surface and the attention of the community is interested in what simply creates astonishment, not at the fact itself, but at the reason why it should have attracted that attention.

The city at this moment has a new element infused in it in the shape of a large influx of soldiers and officers, from our armies, especially those from Sherman's. Furloughs have been granted to the extent of 20 per cent., or one in five, and with money to spend, our streets are full of the bronzed and hardy-looking men who have borne our country's flag on many a victorious field.

Speaking of this, and of Sherman, brings to our mind one of the few pleasant incidents of the war as connected with the taking of Savannah and its commercial position with New York. No sooner was the city under Federal rule and communication opened than its merchants, or the honest portion of them, instantly began to think of settling up the old standing accounts previous to the rebellion; and we know of several business houses here who have been astonished out of their equanimity the past week by the remittance of debts, the record of which was almost forgotten, and the hope of collecting become almost an absurdity. In this respect Savannah has shown herself an honorable exception, and, unlike New Orleans, Memphis and many other Southern cities, that her heart was in the right place, notwithstanding the difficulties of her position. As part and parcel of this subject we may mention that her authorities have appealed for food for her starving poor, and though we have plenty of want in our own midst, yet we trust the call will not go unheeded, and the suffering loyalists of Savannah will be fed from Northern bounty.

We have taken occasion several times to speak in this column of the practicability of associations for the purpose of supplying coal and provision to persons of limited means at cost or near it, and we are glad to see that one move has been made in that way on a business basis. It is in the shape of an association, calling itself "The Consumers Mutual Coal Company," with a capital of $500,000. Each stockholder is entitled to a certain quantity of coal at cost, and a share in such profit as may accrue from business with outsiders. The calculation is that by doing the affair on so extensive a plan, the coal will not cost the consumer over $4 per ton. If this is honestly carried out, it will be an enterprise worthy all commendation.

Among the fashions which we hoped to have seen long since die out is that of surprise parties. Our hope has been without realization, for this season they are as rife as ever. We will put away in our condemnation of them all the impertinence and grossness of a party, many of whom are perhaps strangers, forcing its way into a gentleman's house when he is entirely unprepared to receive them, or when it may be a positive pain, and simply take the thing up on a financial ground. This year it is customary for a few snobs, who possibly never have money enough to pay their washerwoman, to get together and making a list of some gentleman's friends, send to each of them a notification that a surprise party is about to be given him, and he—the gentleman's friend—is invited, and as his share of the expenses is taxed $20. It is a social tax, he hardly feels as though he could refuse, and consequently, whether he approves of the thing or not, sends his double X. We have known these parties to reach as many as a couple of hundred, and where, if each was taxed alike, the collection would amount to several thousand dollars, but we never yet saw one of them where we believed that the money collected was honestly spent. Protect us from all such social swindles!

In a letter written from London to a friend of ours, we find a paragraph that is suggestive of a reform for a most absurd custom prevailing in our churches. It is the mention that, in the British metropolis, persons arriving at church, whether male or female, take their seats in the pews according to the order of their arrival, and the ridiculous custom of gentlemen rising and marching out into the aisle that a newly arrived lady may take the seat in the pew farthest from the door, is utterly unknown. The custom originated in this country when a worshipping congregation was liable at any moment to a surprise from Indians, and it was requisite that the men should be seated where they could be available at a moment's notice. As the day of this danger is past, we cannot exactly see why the custom is still kept up, unless it be to create trouble and annoyance both to ladies and gentlemen.

Most of our readers will remember Dr. Colton, the exhibitor of laughing gas, one who without being much given to the comic himself, has perhaps made more people laugh than any other man living. The doctor has given up exhibiting, and has struck a vein worthy the attention of every sightseer. He has established himself at Cooper Institute; where he administers the gas to all comers, and whips out grumbling teeth in a manner that small as it may seem is really wonderful. To many of us the dread of the dentist is worse than to a soldier would be the facing of a battery, but under this wondrous treatment the operation of tooth-pulling becomes an absolute pleasure. A letter we held in our hand, written by a gentleman close on to 80, will tell the story better than we can:

My Dear Tom—Some 60 odd years ago, we, then lads, were at times much amused by the vocal music of the barn, where our happy fellows were wont to indulge in singing ballads of a very primitive character, and among them was one that pleased us more than all the others, which jingled off somewhat after this manner:

"Adam was laid in a slumber,
While a rib was removed from his side;
And when he awoke in wonder,
He beheld a most beautiful bride."

I know you must remember it, for we have laughed at it scores of times since we became men. We were most tickled by what we deemed the extreme hyperbolic character of the whole song. But, Tom! I now think that there was no hyperbole, exaggeration, or any manner of fiction in it, and that it was a true, simple recital of facts. A little while ago, you know, there was a fellow they called "Anderson, the Wizard of the North," who kept the world "agape" by his necromancy. We have a greater wizard than he, and, I think, more useful, and not less wonderful, who makes people gape indeed, and gape to some purpose. Yesterday I went to this wizard, and asked him if he were the magician, who took teeth out by legerdemain or witchcraft? "Yes, sir." Then, please go on with your hocus-pocus, and out with these six teeth of mine, that have of late become a nuisance to me. Then I was bidden to open my mouth (gape), I did, and it was propped open by a cork; a bag of wind was handed to me, out of which I filled my lungs, and then was "laid in a slumber." And, when the doctor, or magician, or whatever he be, gave me a gentle shake to rouse me up, I awoke, and was kindly assured that my teeth were out, and but for such assurance I should not presently have known it. I was at no time conscious of anything being done in a mechanical way, or indeed in any way, during the time I lay in a "slumber," and, I, as Adam did, awoke in "wonder," under the belief, to which believe I still adhere, that no resort at all was had to [illegible] of the appliances usual in extracting teeth, and that the doctor is, in reality, in league with the evil one.

Our Amusements.

What can we say of the theatres? From week to week we can only record no change, and a success of a kind beyond managerial hope or memory. Every theatre full every night, and yet no novelty.

"Hamlet" at the Winter Garden for an untold number of weeks, and likely to run for an untellable number more. New York must believe in Edwin Booth, or full houses for the fourth week of a Shakespearean play is no jest.

"The Streets of New York" at the Olympic is crowding the house nightly, and as long as such is the case the management must be satisfied, and so must the public.

The Irish drama at Niblo's sends hundreds away every night unable to get seats. We confess to a non-admiration for that department of the drama, but our opinion cannot be shared by the public, or else the public is trying to deceive us.

At the Broadway, John Owens is running into his fourth month of Solon Shingle. We recognise there nightly old playgoers, who admit to having seen it done almost twenty times during his engagement, and yet come some more, and laugh as heartily as on the first seeing. The success of Mr. Owens has raised this house to a prosperity and fashion quite equal to what it enjoyed under the old Brougham and Wallack régime.

Wallack's rings the changes on the sterling comedies, always to full houses. The people seem to have so pinned their faith to this house, that we doubt much whether they ever read a bill, but march blindly in, content to take such fare as may be set before them.

We are glad to see that Oscanyan's Turkish entertainment is a success. He has endeavored to give it without the fulsome puffery generally descended to on offering anything new to the public, and its success is therefore a true test of its merit.

This is the last week of Heller's pantomime. He withdraws it for other novelties now in preparation.

Exhuming Bodies of Union Soldiers.

We present to our readers a sketch of melancholy interest to all, but more especially to some whose relatives have fallen in this fearful war. It represents the exhuming of the bodies of our slain soldiers, for the purpose of sending them to their friends. The person who undertakes this solemn duty, having ascertained the soldier's name, writes to his friends, and for a certain sum has the body exhumed, and forwarded to them, for the purpose of family sepulture. It is a feeble consolation at the best, but still it soothes the mourners to feel that the relics of those we love rest in their native place, and where they themselves will one day repose.

CAMPAIGN IN GEORGIA.

We continue our illustrations of Sherman's last achievement.

Rebel Prisoners taking up Torpedoes.

From deserters, and the infidicious boasting of their newspapers, our men were aware that the approaches to Fort McAllister were crowded with torpedoes. To prevent so far as possible the evil results of their explosion, when our troops made their advance upon the fort, some of the rebel pickets, who had just been captured, were made to march before our advancing column, and take up these cowardly and concealed instruments of destruction, as our officers suspected many of the men employed in thus "applying the accolade had planted the bane." Our Artist has given a graphic sketch of them engaged in this useful but somewhat dangerous occupation.

Gen. Geary giving Passes.

With that courtesy and consideration which has distinguished our commanders in all their transactions with the vanquished, Gen. Sherman announced that all who wished to leave Savannah might do so, upon receiving a proper pass from Gen. Geary, who took up his headquarters at the office of the railroad depot. Our Artist says it was a curious study to observe the different manners of the applicants—the ladies being, as usual, the most defiant; generally speaking, however, there was less bitterness than he had seen in other captured places. Many who applied for passes were those who had fled from their plantations to Savannah, to get out of the way of the Union army. For, misled by the Richmond press, they never believed for a moment that Savannah could be taken.

BURNING OF THE NAVY YARD OF SAVANNAH BY THE REBELS, ON THE 21ST OF DECEMBER.—DESTRUCTION OF AN IRONCLAD, NEARLY FINISHED

PONTOON BRIDGE ON SAVANNAH RIVER, ON WHICH THE REBELS CROSSED ON THE EVACUATION OF SAVANNAH, ON THE MORNING OF THE 21ST DEC.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

View of Savannah.

In our last we gave a description of this restored city to accompany our Artist's sketch of it taken about six miles distant, on the right or Georgian side of the river. We now publish another picture of Savannah taken from the cupola of the Exchange, looking west, with Fort Jackson on the left.

Burning of the Navy Yard.

When the rebel Gen. Hardee resolved to evacuate the city he ordered the Navy Yard to be set on fire, but the destruction was not as complete as he had expected—and it will be soon restored to its usual efficiency.

HORRIBLE DEATH OF A BRIDE.—A fatal accident, caused by a chemical match, has just taken place at Marseilles. A young girl of 18, residing in the Rue Longue-des-Capucins, who had been married in the morning at the church of St. Theodore, proceeded with her husband and friends into the country to pass the day. The bride, who was walking about in high spirits, was suddenly seen with her dress in a flame, and heard to utter piercing cries. She had trod on a chemical match, which had ignited and set fire to her muslin dress, and in spite of every exertion on the part of those near her the flames could not be extinguished until she had been so dreadfully burnt that she expired on the following morning.

A TRAGIC ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.—From Breslaw, on the Wolga, there reaches us one of those strange tales, these tragical social dramas, which seem to belong more properly to the middle ages than to our more civilised epoch. M. R., one of the richest landholders in the Government of Tiflid, was waiting with a friend, when suddenly, without apparent provocation, Count R. sprang upon him, and struck him violently in the face. They fought next day, and the count fell mortally wounded with a ball in his breast. He had lived in great retirement with his wife and two lovely daughters in a castle adjacent to an estate of M. R.'s. The latter, a very handsome man, applied himself to the seduction of the count's eldest daughter, and having succeeded, abandoned her after a time in order to seduce her sister. The elder girl, furious with her lover, confessed all to her father, and hence the duel. Mdlle. De R., in despair of her father's death, of which she accused herself as the cause, in her turn challenged her faithless lover, and when he refused to fight a woman, she put on man's clothes and struck him in the public cafe. To avoid scandal M. R. thought it advisable to fly from the woman he had injured, and he set out on a journey. It is said that Mdlle. De R. has sworn to partake and overtake him, and, judging from her previous conduct, she may well have the courage and energy to keep her word.

SAVANNAH, GA., LOOKING EAST TOWARDS FORT JACKSON.—SKETCHED FROM THE TOWER OF THE EXCHANGE, BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE

"ARMA PETROLEUMQUE CANO."

Virgil.

The oils I sing! the oils I sing!
(And so do joint stock companies too).
No matter where you bore they'll spring—
If what lot sellers say be true—
But luck, methinks, counts more than toil,
In boring for Petroleum oil.

Were shoddy merchants all combined
To put their greenbacks in a pile,
And with it buy Petroleum land,
They might not catch Dame Fortune's smile;
Now here, now there, they'd pierce the soil,
But perhaps ne'er strike Petroleum oil.

A Dutchman from his "faderland,"
An Irish pauper from his isle,
Are lured by fortune's glittering hand
To regions where she deigns to smile;
"Mein Gott!" "Och hone!" one week they toil,
Bore deep and strike Petroleum oil.

And now a princely team Pat drives,
While Hans up in the "Fifth" doth dwell;
Like Lazarus once, they're now like Dives,
That is, before he went to—Well!
No more they need to sweat and toil,
Since they have struck Petroleum oil.

When half a million greenbacks flow
Into the hands of men like these,
Smith, Brown and Jones excited grow,
And sniff Petroleum in the breeze,
What hitherto they've sought through toil,
They'll now seek through Petroleum oil.

"Place me on Pennsylvania's strand"
('Tis thus, methinks, I hear them cry),
"And give me ten square yards of land—
But pray be careful where it lie—
It matters not how poor the soil,
So it o'ertop Petroleum oil!

"If Pennsylvania lots be scarce,
Then West Virginia perhaps will do,
Provided blood no more se verse
(That's French for pour, farfetched 'tis true),
If Mosby's gang still curse her soil,
I'll seek elsewhere Petroleum oil.

"Then railroad stocks farewell, farewell,
And you, ye copper mines adieu,
These latter oft are but a sell,
Such mines exist, but—"how are you?"
There's nothing now beneath the soil
Compares with thee, Petroleum oil!"

And thus the goddess they pursue,
Forgetful of the battle's shock,
As though they'd nothing else to do
But dabble in Petroleum stock;
Smith, Brown and Jones thou canst not foil,
Spring up, spring up, Petroleum oil!

Five thousand years thou perhaps hast cours'd
Thy dark and silent caverns through;
But now to upper realms thou'rt forced—
No, not exactly forced, 'tis true,
Thou spring'st impetuous through the soil,
As though in joy, Petroleum oil!

Oh, earth! it needs must be confessed,
Thou dost with lavish hand bestow
Upon us children of the West
The treasures that within thee grow;
But what we shed upon thy soil
Outvalues far Petroleum oil.

What canst thou give us for the blood,
The precious blood we've given to thee?
A never-ending golden flood
Compared with that would worthless be.
Well may'st thou spout from 'neath thy soil,
This latest gift, Petroleum oil.

Keep, keep thy riches, mother earth,
And give us back the glorious dead;
One patriot heart alone were worth
Thy richest glistening treasure bed.
Yes, let the dead rise from thy soil,
Then perish thy Petroleum oil.

Alas! alas! they slumber on,
No more they'll hear the battle cry,
But what these dead so well begun
We'll finish or we'll glorious die.
When treason's band divides our soil
Spout, spout no more, Petroleum oil.

No more I'll sing Petroleum mines,
Let Wall Street brokers look to these;
Till treason's head in death reclines,
The flashing sword let patriots seize,
And fly to battle and turmoil,
And say, adieu, Petroleum oil!

ONLY A CLOD.

BY M. E. BRADDON,

AUTHOR OF "LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET," "ELEANOR'S VICTORY," "AURORA FLOYD," "JOHN MARCHMONT'S LEGACY," "THE DOCTOR'S WIFE," ETC., ETC., ETC.

CHAPTER IV.—TREDETHLYN'S LUCK.

Francis Tredethlyn had to wait a very long time before there could be any possibility of a letter from the Gray's Inn solicitors, but he endured the delay with perfect tranquillity of mind, and if either of the two men seemed anxious for the letter, that man was Harcourt Lowther, and not Francis Tredethlyn. The ensign had a trick of alluding to his servant's good fortune whenever things went especially ill with himself.

"Here am I without a friend in the world to lend me a five pound note," he would remark, impatiently; "and there are you with the chance of a nice little legacy from that old uncle of yours. I shouldn't wonder if you stand in for four or five hundred at the least."

"I don't think it, sir," the valet always answered, coolly. "I've heard our neighbors say that what with farming, what with mining, and dabbling a good bit with funds and railway shares, and such like, my uncle must be as rich as a Jew; but for all that I don't look to be much better off for anything that he'll have left me. I suppose he's left everything to my cousin Susan, seeing that he had neither kith nor kin except her and me. But somehow or other I can't imagine his parting with his money to any one, even after his death. I almost fancy that he'd rather have tied it up, if he could, so that the interest upon it might go on accumulating for ever and ever, thinking, as be might, perhaps, being old and eccentric, that he'd have a kind of satisfaction, even in his grave, from knowing that the money was going on getting more and more, instead of being spent or squandered."

Francis Tredethlyn did not make this remark in any spirit of ill-nature; he spoke like a man who states a plain fact.

"I dare say he was a regular old curmudgeon," Mr. Lowther answered; "but he must leave his money to some one, and the fact of these lawyers advertising for you is ample proof that he must have left some of it to you."

Such a conversation as this occurred pretty frequently during the long interval in which Francis Tredethlyn waited for the answer to his letter. Sometimes, when Harcourt Lowther was in a very bad temper, he would accuse his attendant of having grown proud, and insolent, and lazy, since the advent of that Times newspaper, which the ensign had borrowed from Mr. Corbett; but every one of the accusations was as groundless as many other of the officer's complaints against people and things in general. There was no change in Francis Tredethlyn; he did his work cheerfully and well, obeyed orders in a frank, manly spirit, and behaved himself altogether in a most exemplary manner.

The time when a letter from England might be expected came round at last, but Francis Tredethlyn evinced no anxiety for the arrival of the solicitors' epistle. A long season of drought had given way before a sudden downfall of rain, and Harcourt Lowther, who had planned a couple of days' kangaroo hunting, and had made all necessary arrangements for the performance of his duties by a good-natured and efficient color-sergeant, found himself a prisoner in his cottage at Port Arthur, with nothing to do but wait for a change in the weather.

It was very tiresome. The accomplished, light-hearted Harcourt Lowther, who could take life so pleasantly in the drawing-rooms of Tyburnia or Belgravia, to whom a summer afternoon amongst a group of fashionable gossips in the smoking-room of his favorite club was only too short, found this terrible Tasmania day intolerably long. He had tried every available way of getting rid of his time. He had sketched a little, and read a little, and played the flute a little, and smoked a great deal, and had relieved the oppression of his spirits by an incalculable number of yawns, and a little occasional bad language. And now, having exhausted all these resources, he stood with his head leaning listlessly against the roughly-finished sash of the window, watching the convict laborers at work under the heavy rain. He derived some faint ray of comfort from the sight of these two men. At any rate, there were some people in the world worse off than himself, unlucky wretches who were obliged to work in wet weather, and wear a hideous dress, and eat coarse, unpalatable food, or food that appeared abominably coarse and unpalatable in the eyes of Mr. Harcourt Lowther, who had been known, upon occasions, to turn up his nose at the culinary masterpieces of Soyer and Francatelli.

"Why don't they kill themselves?" muttered the ensign. "They could drive rusty nails into their veins, and make an end of themselves somehow. There are plenty of poisonous things in my garden that they might eat, and make a finish of their lives that way; but they don't. They go on day after day, drudging and toiling, and enduring their lives somehow or other. I suppose they hope to get away some day. However should I bear my life if I didn't hope to get away—if I did'nt hope it would come to an end pretty soon?"

Mr. Lowther, having exhausted the pleasure to be derived from a contemplation of the convicts, took to pacing up and down the two rooms, in the the inner of which Francis Tredethlyn was busy cleaning his master's guns.

Walking backwards and forwards, and backwards and forwards, and passing the valet every time, Harcourt Lowther was fain to talk to him, rather for the pleasure of hearing his own voice than from any desire to be friendly towards his vassal.

"No letter yet, Tredethlyn?" he said.

"No, sir; but it may come any day."

"And you wait for it as quietly as if a legacy, more or less, was nothing to you. I suppose if they send you a remittance you'll be wanting to buy your discharge and leave this place, and I shall have to get another servant—some awkward, ignorant boor, perhaps?"

"I don't know about that, sir. There's plenty as good as me, I dare say, among our fellows. Other folks may have been brought up respectably, and taken to soldiering, like me. And as for buying my discharge, I don't say but I should be glad to do that, if these lawyer people gave me the chance. I should be glad to get back to England and see my little cousin Susy. I always call her little Susy, because I can't help thinking of her as she was when I remember her first, when she and I were boy and girl sweethearts together. I've thought of her a deal since I got the news of her father's death, and I feel anxious about her, somehow or other, when I fancy her left alone among strangers."

Harcourt Lowther, always walking backwards and forwards between the two rooms, was in the sitting-room when his servant said this. He stopped to look out of the window again, and there seemed to be a kind of dismal fascination for him in the convicts, towards whom his eyes wandered in a moody, absent-minded stare.

"And where do you expect to find her—your cousin, I mean—when you do go back to England?" he asked presently.

"At the old farm, sir, to be sure. Where should I find her but there? Poor little soul! she's never known any other home but that, and isn't likely to leave it in a hurry, of her own free will."

"Humph!" muttered the officer, "there's no calculating upon the changes that take place in this world. I never expect to find anything as I left it when I return to a place or people that I've been absent from for any length of time. I expect to find plenty of changes when I get back to the civilised world again. Do you suppose the people there can afford to waste their time thinking of wretched exiles here? Life with them is utterly different from what it is with us. When I left England I was engaged to a beautiful girl with fifty thousand pounds or so for her fortune—a girl who would have married me, and given me a grand start in life, if it hadn't been for her father; but do you think I expect to find her in the same mind when I go back? Do you think two years' absence won't act as a sponge, and wipe my image out of her thoughts? What has a beautiful, frivolous creature like that to do with constancy? Every man who looks at her falls over head and ears in love with her. She is fed upon flattery and adulation. Is it probable, or natural, or even possible that she will remember me?"

It was not likely that Mr. Lowther would ask this question of his valet. He asked it of himself, rather in a peevish and complaining spirit, and seemed to find a dismal comfort in harping on his wrongs and his miseries.

"I was a fool to think that Maude Hillary could be constant to me," he muttered, angrily. In his anger against a world that had treated him so badly, he was angry with himself for having been so much a fool as to expect better treatment. He walked to a little looking-glass hanging over the mantelpiece, and looked at his handsome face. Was it the face of a man who was to have no place in the world? Were his many graces of person, his charm of manner, his versatility of mind to serve for nothing after all?

"When I think of the fellows who get on in the world, I feel inclined to make an end of all this by cutting my throat," he said, as he frowned at the image in the glass.

He felt the region of the jugular vein softly with the ends of his fingers as he spoke, and wondered whether death by the severance of that important artery was a very painful finish for a man to make. He thought of how he might look if Francis Tredethlyn, finding him late to rise one morning, broke into his room and saw him lying in the sunny little chamber, deluged with blood, and stone dead. He had been very religiously brought up, amongst gentle, true-hearted women; but there was no more pious compunction in his mind as he thought of suicide, than there might have been in the mind of an aboriginal inhabitant of the Solomon Islands. He had a mother at home—a mother who believed in him, and idolized him, to the disparagement of all other creatures; but no image of her grief and despair arose between him and the scheme of a desperate death. His thoughts travelled in a narrow circle, of which self was the unchanging centre.

"I have heard of men making away with themselves on the very eve of some event which would have made a complete change in their fortunes," he thought presently. "I never read the story of a suicide that did not seem more or less the story of a fool. No, my death shall never make a paragraph for a newspaper. I must be very hard pushed when I come to that. This place gives me the blue devils, and everything looks black to me out here. I wish Abel Janz Tasman and Captain Cook had perished before ever they sighted this dismal land. I wish all the lot of petty Dutch traders and navigators had come to an untimely end before ever they discovered any one of these miserable islands, which have been a paradise for convicts and scoundrels, and a hell for gentlemen during the last half century. How was I to know, when I bought a commission in her Majesty's service, that the first stage on the road to martial glory was to be the post of head jailor at a settlement in the antipodes? The papers talk of a change in the transportation system, a change that will rid Van Diemen's Land of its present delightful inhabitants; but no change is likely to come about in my time. I shall have to drag my chain out to the last link, I dare say. It's better to be born lucky than rich, says the proverb; but how about the poor devils who are neither rich nor lucky?"

A rap on the little door that opened out of the sitting-room on to a patch of garden which lay between the house and the high road, startled Mr. Lowther out his long reverie.

"It's the fellow with the letters," he cried, and before Francis Tredethlyn could emerge from the inner room, his master had opened the door and had taken a little packet of letters, newspapers and magazines from the man who brought them. "One from my mother, one from—yes—from Maude, at last; the Times, Punch, Blackwood, United Service, and the lawyer's letter!—Francis Tredethlyn, Esq.! eh? The legacy must be something more than five hundred, my man, or they'd hardly dub you Esquire."

He tossed the letter over to his servant as he spoke, and looked at the Cornishman furtively, with something like envy expressed in his look. Francis Tredethlyn received the lawyer's epistle very coolly, and retired into the adjoining room to read it, while his master sat at the table in the parlor, tearing off the flimsy envelope of a letter with a hasty nervous hand.

"From Maude!" he muttered. "At last, my lady; at last, at last!"

The letter was a very long one, written in a clear and bold yet sufficiently feminine hand, on slippery pink paper, scented with a perfume that had survived an Australian voyage. The contents of the letter must have been tolerably pleasing to Harcourt Lowther, for he smiled as he read, and seemed to forget all about Francis Tredethlyn's legacy:

"I miss you very much, though papa surrounds us with gaiety—indeed, I think we have been gayer than ever lately, and he never seems so happy as when our dear old lawn is crowded by visitors. But I miss you, Harcourt, in spite of all the cruel insinuations in your last letter. The summer evenings seem long and dreary when I think of you, so far away, so unhappy, as your letters tell me you are, Harcourt, though you are too unselfish to admit the truth in plain words. I scarcely open the piano once in a month now that I have no one to play concertante duets. I scarcely care for a new opera, for the men who come into our box bore me to death with their vapid talk, and I know that not one of them understands what he talks about. I am not happy, Harcourt, though you taunt me with my wealth, and my position, and the difference between our lives. I am not happy, for our future seems to grow darker and darker every day. I have mentioned you to my father several times, and every time he seems more angry than the last; so now I feel that your name is tacitly tabooed, and any chance allusion to you from the lips of strangers makes me tremble and turn cold. I have tried in vain to comprehend the reason of my father's aversion to any thought of a marriage between you and me. I have been so much a spoiled child, that to be thwarted or opposed on any subject seems strange to me, most of all when that subject is so near my heart. I can scarcely think that my dear father would allow any consideration of fortune to stand in the way of my happiness, and yet that is the only consideration that can influence him, for I know that he always liked and admired you. You must awhile be patient; what I can do I will. And you must trust me, dear Harcourt, and not pain me again as you have pained me by those unkind doubts of my constancy. You know that money has never been any consideration with me; and you ought to know that I would willingly lose every penny of my fortune rather than sacrifice my promise to you."

"Oh, yes, that's all very well!" muttered Mr. Lowther, peevishly, after having read this part of Miss Hillary's epistle twice over; "but Lionel Hillary's daughter with fifty thousand pounds or so, and without a penny, are two very different people. Not but what she's always a beautiful girl, and a charming girl; but a man can have his pick of charming and beautiful girls, if that's all he wants to set him up in life. I love her, heaven knows; and the sight of her writing sends a thrill through my veins like the touch of her hand, or the fluttering of her breath upon my cheek. But poverty makes a man practical, and I think I never read a letter that had less of the practical in it than this letter. It's a woman's epistle all over. We must be patient, and wait till we're worn out by waiting, and the engagement between us becomes a chain that binds us both from better things, and the sound of each other's name becomes a nuisance to us from its associations of trouble and responsibility. That's what a long engagement generally comes to. If I'd distinguished myself in India, led a desperate charge against orders, or taken the gate of an Affghan fortress, or done something reckless and mad-headed and lucky, and could have gone back with a captaincy, and a dash of newspaper celebrity about my name, I might have hoped that old Hillary, in a moment of maudlin after-dinner generosity, would have given his consent to my marriage with Maude; but how am I to present myself at Twickenham, and say: 'I have been taking care of convicts for the last two years, not particularly well, for more convicts have escaped into the bush in my time than in any other man's time, according to reports; and I have come back to England with the same rank that I had when I left, and with less money than I took away with me?' Can I go to Lionel Hillary and say that? Is that the sort of argument which will induce a man to give me his daughter and her fortune?"

He went back to Miss Hillary's letter. It was only a frivolous letter, after all; and it contained more intelligence about a morning concert in Hanover Square, a regatta at Ryde, and a preternaturally sagacious Skye terrier, than was likely to be gratifying to a discontented exile at Port Arthur. But Mr. Lowther was fain to content himself as he might with the pretty girlish gossip. It was something, after all his grumbling, to receive the assurance that he was not entirely forgotten by the only daughter and sole heiress of one of the richest merchants in the city of London.

He looked up presently from his letter, to see Francis Tredethlyn standing in the doorway between the two rooms, pale to the lips, and clutching at his throat as if he had some difficulty in breathing.

"What's the matter, man?" asked the ensign; "hasn't the old chap left you any money, after all?"

"It isn't that, sir," gasped the soldier; "there's money enough, and to spare. It's my cousin Susy, that poor little innocent creature, that was as pure as the blossoms on the gnarled old trees in the orchard when I left home. She's done something, sir, something that turned her father against her. She's gone away, sir, and no one knows where's she's gone, or what's come of her, or whether she's dead or alive. And her father disinherited her, poor lost lamb; and—and that'll tell you all about the fortune, sir, if you want to know about it."

Francis Tredethlyn threw the lawyer's letter upon the table before his master, and walked away to the window, the same window at which the ensign had stood looking out at the convicts half an hour before.

Harcourt Lowther read the lawyer's letter, at first with a listless, indifferent air, and then as eagerly as if he had been reading his own death-warrant. It was a long letter, worded in a very formal manner, but it set forth the fact that his fortune left by Oliver Tredethyn to his nephew Francis amounted to something over thirty thousand a year.

For some minutes after this fact had been made clear to him Harcourt Lowther sat with the open letter before him, staring at the lines. Then suddenly he let it slip upon his face gave way to a look of despair. The cesign flung his head and arms upon the table, and burst into tears.

"I have been eating my own heart in this place for nearly two years," he sobbed, "and for one day of light—for the heaven above me! not one—has dawned upon my life; and a valet, a private soldier, the fellow who cleans my boots and blacks my boots, has thirty thousand a year left him."

There was something so terrible in this hysterical outburst of rage and envy, something so utterly piteous in this unmanly revolt against another man's good fortune, that Francis Trededthyn forgot his own trouble before the aspect of his master's degradation.

"Don't, sir," he cried, "for God's sake don't do that. All the riches in the world wouldn't pay a man for taking on like that. If you want money, you're welcome to borrow some of mine as soon as ever I get the power to lend it. There's more than I care to have, or could ever spend. You'll be welcome to what you want, Mr. Lowther. I don't say much account upon money, and I don't think I ever shall; and the thoughts of this fortune don't give me half the pleasure I've had in the gift of a seven piece long ago, when I was a little lad. I suppose it was because I thought then there was nothing in all the world worth the shillings—which I buy, and because I'm wiser now, and know there are some things a million of money can't purchase. The man at this minute has bought all the thoughts of my father and mother back to me, Mr. Lowther. I'd give every sixpence of it if it could bring back the past, and pay out the last man that was sitting by our kitchen fire at home when my mother lay ill upstairs. But it can't do that. My father and mother have gone, and all this money can't buy back one of the sorrowful days they spent in the old farm, when things went from bad to worse, and the old ruin came down upon us. I don't seem to care for the money, Mr. Lowther; I am dazed and bewildered, somehow, by the greatness of the news, but I don't seem to care."

The cesign had calmed himself by this time. He got up and brushed the tears from his eyes in a real town of envy, mortification and despair. There was a faint blush upon his face, the one evidence of his shame which he could not suppress in his emotion, but all other evidences of feeling had passed away.

"You're a good fellow Tredethyn," he said, "an excellent simple fellow; as simple-hearted as a baby, for who but a baby ever talked as you talk about this money? and I congratulate you upon your good luck. I see these lawyer fellows send you a bill for a couple of hundred; that'll buy you off here pleasantly, and get you back to England. My advice to you is to get back as fast as ever you can, and enter into possession of your property. It seems a complicated kind of estate from what I can make out—consisting property, in agricultural property, and shares in half the speculations of modern times—but it's a great estate, and shall give you what you know. Go back and as soon as ever I can get away from this accursed hole I'll look you up in London; and I—I will borrow of you if I want any pecuniary assistance, and I'll turn bear leader, and show you what life is in the upper circles, to which thirty thousand a year has universal l'open session."

The cesign slapped his hand upon his servant's shoulder with a jovial air, and spoke almost as gaily as if the unlooked-for fortune was to be in some way or other a stroke of good luck for himself.

"Thank you, sir," Francis answered, thoughtfully, "you're very good; but I don't care to force myself in among grand folks because I'm rich enough to buy the way. I've got a task before me, and it may be a long one."

"A task!"

"Yes; I've got to look for my cousin."

"Your cousin, Susan Tredethyn?—the girl whose portrait you showed me?"

"Yes, sir. No money would have been been, most likely, if she hadn't done something to turn my uncle against her. I can't forget that, you see, sir, when the first use I make of the money will be to spend some of it in looking after her."

"Susan Tredethyn," muttered Harcourt Lowther—Susan Tredethyn. The portrait you showed me was a very bad one, for I haven't the least notion of what your cousin is like."

CHAPTER V.—COMING HOME.

When the jolted horses of the Electric coach drew up at the inn placed below the Crown Inn, at Landredale, in the county of Cornwall, on the 13th of July, 1852, the landlord of the little hostelry was somewhat startled by an event which was of very rare occurrence in those parts. A passenger alighted from the back of the coach, and demanded his accommodation from the guard—a passenger who, carrying this portmanteau as easily as if it had been a parcel of flimsy milliner's ware, walked straight to the little private parlor opposite the bar, and ensconced himself therein.

"I shall want my dinner, and a bed, Joseph Penruffin," he said to the proprietor of the Crown. "You'd better see the coach off, and then you can come and talk to me."

Mr. Penruffin retired, aghast and staring.

"I don't know who he is, Sarah," he remarked to a comely-looking woman, who was sitting amongst a noble array of shelves and bottles in a shady little bar that seemed a good deal too small for such a portly presence. "His name's as clean gone out of my mind as if I'd never set eyes upon him; but I know him, and he knows me, Sarah, for he called me by my name as glib as you please, and like face—Lord bless us and save us!—his face is as familiar to me as yours."

The passenger who had surprised the Crown Inn from its lazy tranquility stood at the little window looking out at the coach. The passenger was Francis Tredethyn, heir to a foot soldier in her Majesty's service, now a gentleman of landed estate and funded property; the bottle holder succeeded by the change in his fortune. As he had been independent and fearless in the days when he ruled his life by the orders of other men, so he was simple and unpretending now in the hour of his sudden prosperity. What he had said to his master in the cottage at Port Adelaide—the first flush of his good fortunes appeared to be equally true of him now. He did not seem to care about his wealth. It was to him as the story of a change of fortune which would have sent some men into a madhouse.

"It seems to me, somehow, as if there was a kind of blindness here in this world between good and evil, like the debtor and creditor sides of a ledger. I sat down my uncle Oliver's one side, and I sat down me as if I was the luckiest fellow in Christendom. But there's the loss of poor little Susy must go down on the other side, and then the balance don't look quite right. There's the loss of her—yes, the loss—that's the word! If the earth had opened and swallowed her up, she couldn't be more lost to me than she is."

The passengers of the Electric had refreshed themselves by this time, and a fresh pair of horses had replaced the old, and were waiting in the road steaming in the great stable-yard. The coach rolled slowly off, along a road that lay straight before it for more than a mile, and was then swept under the steep slope of a thickly-wooded hill, defended by an old crumbling wall, which, even in the decay of time and neglect, showed that my modern wall that ever girdled a modern gentleman's estate. The dark red brick wall, and all the sombre woods that rose behind it, were the ruins of Landredale, upon whose mansion or estate the little town or village of Landredale was a kind of dependency, and whose people were almost all of them supported indirectly or directly by the patronage of the great man and his numerous family. Landredale people the Carlyle nobleman was spoken of with awe and reverence as the "Marquis;" and that the world held any other nobleman was a fact which would have been utterly ignored—it may be, even discredited—by the ratepayers of Landredale. Under the shadow of Landredale Castle, and in the shadow of the old ruin church which was only a kind of mausoleum for the departed nobles and dames of the House of Landredale, the Landredale people lived and died, until, in the minds of some heroworshippers, the figure of the Marquis grew into a giant shape that blotted out all the world but the Landredales.

"How familiar the old place seems to me, and yet how strange!" thought Francis Tredethyn, as he looked at the old ruin. "Standing on the scott, the cobbler over the way, sitting in the very same attitude he was in when I stopped at the window and looked at him, and yet how changed! But the street seems as if it had dwindled and shrunk away into half the size it used to be; and that as! Surely that was not the house I resided and buried, and had come to life again after folks had forgotten all about me; even the very seasons are all wrong, and the time of the year as they might seem to a man that had been lying dead ever so long."

Francis Tredethyn rubbed his broad palm across his forehead, as if to clear some kind of cloud away from his intellect. It was scarcely strange that he should be somewhat bewildered by the seasons. He had left autumnal clouds and winds in the antipodes, and after a hundred days of sunshine, found himself in the very shores his native land, and he felt as if he had, somehow or other, been cheated out of a winter. He looked at the trees, expecting to see them bare, while some names and addresses, and other memoranda, and in which the initials "S. T." occurred very often. These memoranda, with a few pencil sketches, and the memoranda in the pocketbook chiefly related to inquiries which Francis had made about his lost cousin.

Those inquiries had resulted in very little information. The lawyers had only been able to trace Susan Tredethyn from her uncle Oliver's death; how one day, when they least expected to see the old man, he had suddenly presented himself at their office, and given Susan a check for seven hundred pounds on his haggard features; how he had seated himself quietly in his accustomed place, and had dictated to them, deliberately and unflinchingly, the terms of a will, by which he bequeathed every shilling he possessed to his nephew, Francis Tredethyn; how, when they, as in duty bound, remonstrated with him about this injustice that was a will under which his only daughter, a hideous frown had distorted his face, and he had struck his clenched fist upon the office table, and told them that if they used the expression ever uttered in that place, that no penny of his gotting should ever go to save his daughter from starvation, they were starving to death on the king's highway—he had said this, and in such a manner as to most effectually put an end to all remonstrance on the part of the lawyers. This was all that the lawyers could tell Francis Tredethyn about his cousin Susan; but they had gone on to tell him how she had vanished on leaving the office alone, and on foot; how he had walked the best part of the way from Gray's Inn to an old-fashioned commercial inn in the Borough, and how he had broken down at last, only a hundred yards from his destination, and had fainted away on the threshold of a chemist's shop, whence he had been carried to his deathbed. This had happened on the 20th of Jun—as the preceding year; and this was all that the lawyers had to tell Francis Tredethyn, over and above such intelligence as related only to the extent and nature of the property, bequeathed to him by his late uncle.

But in Landredale the name of Oliver Tredethyn was almost as well known as that of the Marquis himself, and in Landredale Francis hoped to learn the true story of his cousin's fate. He stood now looking out of the window into the main street, and saw on the opposite evening gain an old man, a stout, portly man, with a face that was somewhat purple in its drowsy aspect as if no palpitating human heart had ever carried its daily burden of care and sorrow along the narrow footways, beneath the shadow of the peaked roofs and overhanging gables. He stood there looking out, and remembering himself a boy in that old hillside street; he stood there now, remembering all the past and present, which by contrast seemed both equally strange and unnatural; he stood there in all the flush and vigor of his youth, a tall, broad-shouldered, simple-hearted sailor, with a fortune far exceeding the narrow limits of his aristocratical powers, as ignorant of all the world that lay before him as a little country lad who rides to town upon the top of a load of hay and expects to find the streets paved with gold, and the very men dressed in fine livery and crowns and sitting on her throne with the ball and sceptre in her hands for ever and ever.

The landlord of the Crown came bustling in presently with a wooden tray of knives, and forks, and glasses, and cruets, that would have amply served for a dozen people at half-a-dozen. He had the cloth with great ceremony, although with a certain air of briskness inseparable from intercourse with the world at large and cultured village in all England; and he kept a furtive watch upon his guest throughout all his operations, from the preparatory spreading of the cloth on the mahogany table to the final flourish with which he removed a very large cover from a very small pan steak.

"I'll wait upon you, sir," he said, at last, confectously, as Francis Tredethyn seated himself at the table.

"I think you ought, Joseph Penruffin; I think you ought to remember Francis Tredethyn, son of your old friend John Tredethyn, of Pen Gordal, who used to be very kind to you in the house, perhaps, for his own property."

"Francis Tredethyn!" cried the landlord, clapping his hands together, "Francis Tredethyn, yes! To be sure it is! To think that I should forget a face that was once as familiar to me as my own sons! Francis Tredethyn! Why, I remember you a lad playing cricket on the green yonder with my own boys. And you've come into a very fine fortune, sir, I understand; and I hope you will continue to Liberty, if I make so bold as to wish you every happiness with it, Francis Tredethyn. Lord bless us and save us! if it was twenty! I ask your pardon, sir, for so bold and freelike, but the sight of your face takes me back to old times, and I'm apt to forget myself."

Francis Tredethyn replied graciously divided between the memories of the past and his desire to be duly reverential to Francis Tredethyn's new fortunes, which latter circumstance he considered the influence of his newly-acquired wealth at war with the associations of his boyhood. He had seen gentlemen of fortune dining in the office of Messrs. Krusdale & Scardon. He was beginning already to perceive that an income of thirty thousand a year was a kind of barrier between himself and poorer men, and that they regarded him with the same feeling of mingled reverence and hatred with which they would have looked upon a very ordinary satire seated across a wonderful screen of virgin gold.

"And so you're all of your face taken me back to old times, Mr. Penruffin," he said, with rather a mournful accent, "and I'd freely give half this great fortune to be a boy again, and kneel beside one of those summer Sunday mornings in the old church, and see myself a little fellow again, sitting by my mother, with a great big prayer-book bag of prayer-books on my arm. I'd give five thousand pounds for a silk dress I saw in a shop-window in Penzance the other day, which was too poor to do anything but wish for it, if my mother were alive to wear it. I used to think, when I was a little lad, that my mother possessed out of the first five pound note I ever earned, and now I've got thirty thousand a year, and there's nothing I can buy that will give me such a gratification as to snatch the spot where she lies."

"Thirty thousand a year!" muttered the landlord, in an undertone, which had just a tinge of disappointment in it. The Landredale people had given their imaginations free play since the death of Oliver Tredethyn, and the old man's fortune had assumed almost fabulous proportions with the lapse of time; and thirty thousand a year is scarcely worth paying attention to, after all. There had been an idea in Landredale that Francis Tredethyn would most likely marry the Marquis's favorite child—Lady Adela, or Lady Blanche, if practicable, and make a handsome offer for the purchase of the title.

"I'm sure, sir, your feelings do you credit," said Mr. Penruffin, after that brief sense of disappointment; "I may say very great credit," he added, with emphasis—as if any display of feeling on the part of Francis Tredethyn, thousand a year were specially meritorious. "I suppose you have come down this way to survey your property, sir, and look about you a little, eh?" inquired the landlord of the Crown, when Francis had finished his frugal dinner.

"Not I," the young man answered; "I sincerely know what my property is, except that the lawyers told me a big figuratick about it. No, I've come on a very different errand," he added, gravely. "You remember my cousin, Susan Tredethyn, I daresay? I have come to look for her."

Joseph Penruffin shook his head solemnly, and breathed a long sigh that was almost a groan.

"If that's your errand here, sir, I'm afraid it most likely to be a very fortunate one. Folks in Landredale never expect to see Susan Tredethyn again; she went away from the farm four years ago; no one knows exactly where she went; no one knows why she went. There's your uncle's old servants, Mr. Tredethyn, of course they might be able to tell something, if they'd a mind to. But you may as well go and question the tombstones in Landredale Churchyard as question them. Mr. and Mrs. Tredethyn all applied to in this place is, that your cousin Susan went away and never came back again, and it stands to reason that she must have done something very bad indeed, and made her father very desperate against her, before the old man would have gone and driven his daughter away from her own home to disrespect to you, sir, but only looking at it in the light of human nature in general," added the landlord, accordingly.

"I'll never believe that Susan Tredethyn did anything wicked or unreasonably ill her own lips tell me so," said Francis, bringing his hand heavily down on the table. "She may have made my uncle desperate against her, that's likely enough, for he was always hard and bad to deal with when I think of his having hoarded all this money, and remember the life my cousin Susan used to lead, I'm not seriously bring myself to believe that she was his own flesh and blood. I'll never believe that she did anything wrong. I'll never believe that she should grow to be anything different from what she was when I left home—a gentle, modest little creature, who was almost frightened at even a pretty looks when she caught a sight of herself in a glass. But I'm going to the old house, and if Mark's Drysdell or her husband know anything of my lost cousin, I'll get the truth out of them, though I have to wring it out of their wizen old throats."

The young man rose as he said this, and took up his hat, and walked to the door in a cloud of shadow. Joseph Penruffin watched him with something like alarm upon his countenance.

"You're not going to-night, sir?" he asked.

"Yes; I'm going straight up to the Grange, and I don't know be long I may be gone: but I'll come back to you to sleep. I'm not absolutely fancy lying down in one of those dreary old rooms; I should expect to see the wandering spirit of my uncle appear and look at me from the dark darkness outside my window. No; however late I may be, I'll come back here to sleep."

"Then you would like some little trifle for supper, sir, having made such an uncommon poor dinner," suggested the landlord.—"a chicken or a brace of grass, or a tender young duck and a dish of peas?"

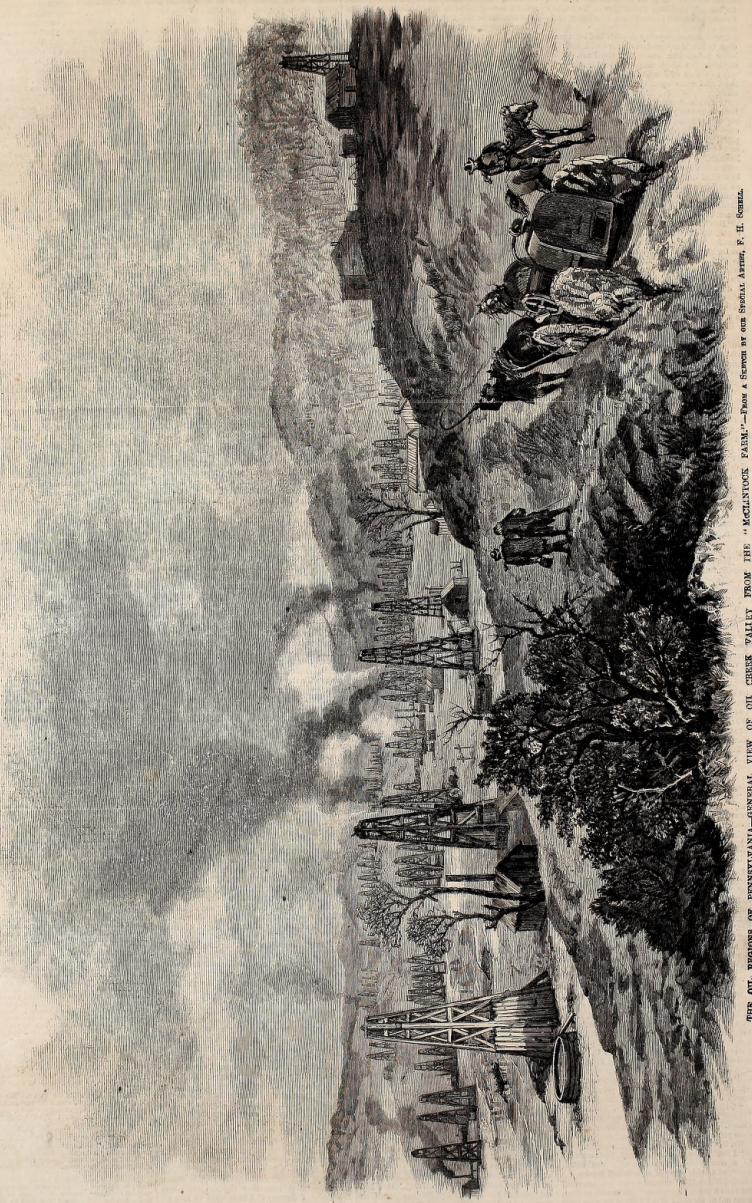
But Francis Tredethyn was walking up the street, unconscious of a single one of the savory suggestions before the landlord had finished his sentence.

"I don't call that manners," muttered Mr. Penruffin; "but I shall cook the chicken for ten o'clock, and chance it; he can afford to pay for it, whether he eats it or not. And I think, taking into consideration old acquaintance and thirty thousand a year, it would only have been friendly in Francis Tredethyn if he had ordered a bottle of wine with his dinner."

A NEW PIANO.—The new instrument made by Lindeman & Sons, called the Cyclod piano is exciting much attention among professional and amateurs. It is virtually a square piano, but the back corners being rounded off, it takes the shape of a Cyclod, which is the name given to a segment of a circle, or an ellipse which cuts off a straight line. The curve is very elegant, the beauty of form was not the chief idea of the design. Its construction was the main one, and it has been gained by the arch shape, which is recognized by all to be the strongest form. The inventor of the piano has fastened the instrument from all the useless timber which keeps up the square piano, and the Cyclod is simply an arched-shaped case, of such great strength as to require no iron plate, and to necessitate no bar to the strain of the strings, excepting the iron plate. The result is a magnificent sounding piano, with solid tone, and, as a consequence, a noble and sonorous tone never found in a square piano. The tone is rich and full, rich and clear, full and ringing, with a power of sustenance, or prolongation of sound, which is unknown in other pianofortes. It is capable of the softest inflections, and can be played with the smallest exertion or without losing any of the purity of its tone. The action is admirable in every respect, equally responsive to the slightest touch, and can be regulated so to suit the style of player. The touch is elastic, and is so modified that the slightest movement of the finger produces the most delicate effect. The whole instrument is a triumph of mechanical skill, and is hardly more young than once a year. This fault, as it is called, is remedied by the use of the Cyclod and power of its tone, and its excellent touch, will render it a favorite piano, while it is the most sterling the most sought after piano of the day.

The manager of a Berlin theatre got up a drama in which a human skull was to be offered to a tyrant. In order to produce as much effect as possible, he ordered from a London toad. The stage was placed a table covered with a cloth, on the table was a dish, and in the middle of the dish was placed the skull. He had brought a hole in the table, so as to seem to be placed in the dish. When the time arrived for the audience applauded and trembled. Unluckily a wag, who had been behind the scenes, had seen the trick of the piece, and just as the tyrant finished his address to the skull, he cried out from the gallery, "Sir, you have a little bit of sausage, sticking the audience. "From grave to gay there is only a step."

One of Artemus Ward's jokes is going the rounds of the press in the following guise:



"Now, gentlemen," he says you was all in battle of Bull Run! when I seen you at 5th Ave. York on the same night!"

"Yes, Joshua, you did for certain. Yer see, Colonel, says he, 'I'm sorry for our country and yer brave fellers, but some strategy for our defeat, and die child he struck for home! But spease de master, yer see!"

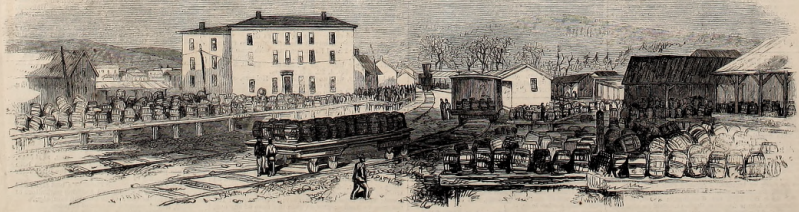
"I want you wouldn't give such short weight for my money," said a customer to a grocer, who had an outstanding bill against him.

"And I wish you wouldn't give me such long wait for mine," replied the grocer.

"CONSCIENCE," cried an indignant female, "do you suppose nobody has got any conscience but you? My conscience is as good as yours—and better too, for it has never been used in the course of my life, while yours must be nearly worn out."

THE OIL REGIONS OF PENNSYLVANIA—GENERAL VIEW OF OIL CREEK VALLEY FROM THE "McCLINTOCK FARM."—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, F. H. SCHELL.

SCENES IN THE OIL REGIONS OF PENNSYLVANIA.—From Sketches by our Special Artist, F. H. Schell.



"FIRST-CLASS PASSENGER PACKET" DOWN OIL CREEK.

MODE OF FILLING BARRELS WITH OIL FROM TANKS.

FILLING OIL-TIGHT FLATBOATS WITH OIL FROM TANKS.

DEPOT OF "OIL CREEK RAILWAY" TITUSVILLE.

THE Spiritual Harbinger announces that—

"In the twelfth hours of the glory of God, the life of God, the Lord in God, the Holy Freedom shall crown the Trium Creator with the decisive Illumination. Then shall the creation, in its effulgence, above the divine seraphine arise into the disclosure in one comprehensive revolving galaxy of supreme created beatitude."

In which the Campus Chief earnestly responds:

"Then shall blockheadism—the jackassical dome of decisive proclamation—above the sublimed great feather fancies of Peter Nipsinipsy, the great gooseberry prelate, rise into the dense darkness of mind—complex-extensive and conglomerated humanes into one great comprehensive mass, shall assimilate into one thing, and revolve like a bob-tailed pussy cat after the space where her tail was."

A GENTLEMAN went into a tore in Manchester (N. H.), the other day, and inquired for cigars supposed to be Cubans. The shopman immediately ordered him off, saying that that was no time or place to talk politics.

FIRST PREMIUM

$5 FAMILY GEM $5 SEWING MACHINE

THE WONDER OF THE AGE!

Just Out. THE FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, a most Wonderful and Elegantly Constructed Novelty in sewing machines, more than one-half the size of other sews with. DESIGNED FOR SINGLE THREAD. Makes the Female Stitch more perfect and regular than by hand. Will Gather, Hem, Tuck, Ruffle, Skirr, Tuck, Run up Seams, &c., &c. Pictures no Lubrication or Liability of Stitch—IS NOT LIABLE TO GET OUT OF ORDER, and will last a lifetime. And is the prettiest and most useful Christmas Gift you can buy. Read the following:

"For the Dressmaker it is invaluable; for the House, bold it cannot be too much prized."—Godey's Lady's Book.

"At length the desideratum so long sought for, combining usefulness, speed and elegance, has been attained. The simple structure of this compact and beautiful little Machine will at once command admiration."—Scientific American.

"It is a complete success, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.

This ingenious and useful little Machine is perfect in its construction, and has none of the faults of the High-Priced Machines. No one can will pay over $50 to $100 for a Sewing Machine when this one can be bought for the trifle of $5.

This wonderful Machine was awarded the FIRST PREMIUM at the New York State Fair, showing its superiority over all others.

All infringers of this GENUINE ARTICLE are liable, as infringements on the Patent.

☞ Sent free of all charges over the world.

Single Machines sent to any address per Express, packed in box, on receipt of $5.

Address all orders to

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
1t 122 NASSAU STREET, N. Y.

Soldiers of the Union!

Read the following Letters received from your comrades in the service of

WORLD KNOWN AND WORLD TRIED REMEDIES, KNOWN AS PROF. HOLLOWAY'S

PILLS AND OINTMENT.

You will here find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country where our army of occupation is now. SEEK TO YOUR HEALTH. All of you have some one interested in your welfare, then do not delay. TIME IS IS VALUABLE! SEND a box to yourselves, but to your Fathers and Mothers, Sisters, Wives and Brothers. Then while you are in purchase your Health!

32 cents, 88 cents, or $1 40,

Will, when expended in these medicines, bring you down to the freshest and ripest old age.

The following are a few specimens of genuine letters on file for inspection at this office. Copies sent by mail to any inquirer.

80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT, }
39th Illinois Volunteers, }
FORT HALLECK, S. C., Nov. 2, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:

SIR—Enclosed please find two dollars, for which send me one dollar's worth each of your celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please attend to this at once, for I am about to send of the above amount to

Address Lieut. A. W. FELLOWS, Q. M.,
39th Illinois Vols.

CAMP NEAR BRANDY STATION, VA., Nov. 7, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR—I have heard a great deal of talk about your Ointment, and as I never was in the habit of using it, I went to try them, as diarrhœa is very prevalent in the army at present time; send the value of the inclosed. YOURS, &c.,

JOSEPH WALSH, Co. B, 5th Regt., Excelsior Brigade.

PULASKI, TENN., Nov. 6, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR—Please find inclosed one dollar, and send me the amount in your famous Pills, as I am troubled with Dysentery. Send me a box. YOURS, &c.,

THOMAS F. TURNER, Co. 1, 2d Iowa Infantry.

MORRIS ISLAND, S. C., Nov. 1, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

Please find enclosed the sum of one dollar, for Pills. I have Diarrhœa, and can't get it stopped, so I want to try your Pills. Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM CHRISTY,
Co. D, 104th Regt. Penn. Vols.,
Morris Island, S. C.

PERRY'S MOTH
AND
FRECKLE LOTION.

CHLOASMA, or MOTH PATCHES, LENTIGO, or FRECKLES, Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of a fair complexion, as the discolored spots on the skin show more strongly on a delicate than on brunettes, but it is unjustifiable greatly in marring the beauty of either; and anything that will remove them without injuring the skin in texture or color, would be considered a great achievement in medical science. DR. B. C. PERRY, of ——, devotes all his time to diseases of the skin, and discovered an infallible remedy for the removal of Moth, Freckles and other discolorations, without injury to its color or texture. Prepared only by DR. B. C. PERRY, Dermatologist, 49 Bond Street, New York. WILLIAM A. HALL, 177 Washington street, Boston, Sole Wholesale Agent for New England. Sold by all Druggists. Call for Perry's Moth and Freckle Lotion. Price $2 per bottle.

GOLD PENS
FOR THE MILLION!
AND
PENS TO SUIT THE PURSE
AND
PRICES TO SUIT THE POCKET.
The Best Gold Pens in the World!

On receipt of the following sums, we will send, by mail, or as otherwise directed, a Gold Pen or Pens, selecting the same according to the inscription, namely:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES,

For 50 cts. a No. 2 pen; for 75 cts. a No. 3 pen; for $1 a No. 4 pen; for $1 50 a No. 5 pen; for $1 60 a No. 6 pen.

The same Pens, on SILVER PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 No. 2 pen; for $1 25 No. 3 pen; for $1 60 No. 4 pen; for $2 No. 5 pen; for $2 50 No. 6 pen.

These pens are stamped FINE IMPERIAL PEN, and are well finished and fine writing Gold Pens with good serviceable points, although they are unwarranted, and cannot be exchanged.

First quality 14 carat, Warranted Gold Pens.

Our name (American Gold Pen Co., N. Y.), is stamped on all pens of this grade, and all pens are warranted for six months, except against accidents.

Second quality Gold Pens.

These Pens are all stamped THE NATIONAL PEN, with the initials of the Pen Co., N. Y., and are carefully made, having the same points as our first quality pens, the only great difference being in the quality of the gold.

The numbers indicate the size only: No. 1 being the smallest and No. 6 the largest adapted for the pocket; and No. 2 the smallest, and No. 12 the largest mammoth Pen for the Desk.

Gold Pens without Cases.

For $1 30 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 2 pen 2d qual.
For $2 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 3 pen 2d qual.
For $2 75 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $3 50 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $5 50 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $8 25 a No. 6 pen 1st qual., or a No. 7 pen 2d qual.
$6 75 No. 8 pen; $10 00 No. 12 pen; all 1st quality.

The same Gold Pens, in Solid Silver Extension Cases, with Pencils.

For $2 00 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 2 pen 2d qual.
For $2 25 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 3 pen 2d qual.
For $2 75 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $3 50 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $4 50 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $6 00 a No. 6 pen 1st qual., or a No. 7 pen 2d qual.

Gold Pens, 1st and 2d qual., in Solid Silver or Gold-Plated Ebony Desk Holders and Morocco Cases.

For $2 25 a No. 2 pen 1st qual., or a No. 4 pen 2d qual.
For $2 50 a No. 3 pen 1st qual., or a No. 5 pen 2d qual.
For $3 50 a No. 4 pen 1st qual., or a No. 6 pen 2d qual.
For $4 00 a No. 5 pen 1st qual., or a No. 7 pen 2d qual.
pen. For $6 75 a No. 8 pen. For $12 00 a No. 12 pen; all 1st quality.

Our Pens rank throughout the country as equal—if not superior—to any Gold Pens manufactured, not only in the warranted quality, durability and elegant finish. The greatest care is taken in their manufacture, and none are sold with the name and stamp unless the finish can detect.

Parties in ordering must invariably specify the Number, Name and Quality, whether coarse or fine, stiff or flexible.

TO CLUBS.—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $5 and upward for one Pen, at one time; 15 per cent. on $25; 20 per cent. on $40.

All remittances by mail, Registered, at our risk, to all who enclose 30 cents extra for registering. We guarantee the safe delivery of the goods.

Specimens of all our pens, styles, etc., Engravings of exact size, and prices, sent upon receipt of stamp, if desired. Pens repaired at moderate rates.

AMERICAN GOLD PEN CO.,
009 No. 220 Broadway, N. Y.

GREAT PRICE DISTRIBUTION
OF
Rosewood Pianos, Melodeons, Guitars, Music Boxes, Elegant Work-Boxes, Gold and Silver Watches;

Diamond Rings, Diamond Pins, Gents' Gold Vest Chains, Opera Glasses, Portemonie Monde, Jet, Lava and Cameo Ladies' Sets, Gold Pens with Gold and Silver Extension Pencils, Sleeve Buttons, Sets of Studs, Neck Chain, Vest Chains, Gold Lockets, Gold Crosses, Gold Thimbles, Lockets, Silver Spoons and Forks, and PINE JEWELLERY of every description, to be given away with Latest styles, at

WORTH $500,000:

New York Gift Association,
939 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Distribution is made in the following manner: CERTIFICATES, containing a list of the articles which are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, which are well mixed. One of these Certificates will be sent by mail, sole or order for some Article, will be delivered at our office. Upon receipt of this Certificate you will be asked to choose, on receipt of 25 cents. On receiving the Certificate the purchaser will see what Article it draws, and its value, which may be FROM ONE TO FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS, and can then send ONE DOLLAR and receive the Article named, or can choose any other Article of our List of Articles of equal value.

NO BLANKS. You must get the value of your money. We will send by mail or express the article which the purchaser may draw. Entire satisfaction guaranteed in all cases. Six Certificates for $1; 13 for $2.

AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamp for a Circular. All letters should be addressed

T. BENTON & CO., Box 6667, P. O., New York.

THE PERUVIAN SYRUP

Supplies the Blood with its LIFE PRINCIPLE, IRON, forming Scurvy, Vices and New Life into all parts of the System. Thousands have been changed by its use of the Remedy, from Weak, Sickly, Suffering Creatures, to Strong, Healthy and Happy Men and Women the proof of which will be sent (free) to any address. Pamphlet free. Depot, 32 Dey street, New York. J. P. DINSMORE.
Sold by all Druggists. 476-486w

J. TOWNSEND & CO.,
IMMENSE HOLIDAY SALE!
95,000 Watches, Chains, Gold Pens with Case, Set of Jewellery, Lockets, Sleeve-Buttons, Gent's Pins, &c.,
to be sold for $95,000,
and valued at $750,000!!
all to be sold at
ONE DOLLAR EACH,
without regard to value, and not to be sold for until you have given us what you are to receive.

Read the list of articles to be sold at $1 each:

500 Ladies and Gents' Gold Watches,	$50 to $100 each.
500	20 to	50	"
1,000 Hunting Cased Silver Watches,	16 to	20	"
5,000 Nickle Watches	8 to	20	"
3,000 Fob and Guard Chains	4 to	8	"
5,000 Set Jewellery	6 to	15	"
5,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Pins and Balls	3 to	10	"
5,000 Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Barrettes	3 to	10	"
3,000 Ladies' Gilt, Coral and Opal Earrings	5 to	10	"
3,000 Pairs and Fancy Rings	4 to	8	"
4,000 Sets Sleeve Buttons	4 to	8	"
10,000 Pieces Sheet Music	5 to	10	"
10,000 Gold Pens, with Silver Mounted Holders	6 to	10	"
8,000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils	8 to	8	"
3,000 Gold Watch Keys	1 to	2	"

All to be sold for One Dollar each. Certificates of all the different articles, stating what each one is worth, are put in envelopes and mixed, and, when ordered, are sent by mail. Upon receiving the certificate you will see what you can have. You are then at liberty to send us one dollar and take the article or not. In all transactions by mail we charge for forwarding the certificate, paying the postage and doing the business, 20 cents each, which must be inclosed when the certificate is sent for. 3 Certificates sent for $1; 12 for $3; 25 for $5; 100 for $15. Agents will be allowed 25 cents on each certificate, when ordered to be sent to a party town in the United States or Canada. Address

J. TOWNSEND & CO.,
484-8 15 John street, New York.

Shultz's Oxygen, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid for 50 cents. Address C. T. SHULTZ, Troy, N. Y.
484-95

Valentine Price List :

144 Sigley Comic Valentines, postpaid			$1 00
1 Sentimental Valentine	"	"	1 00
1 Pretty	"	"	1 50
1 Handsome	"	"	2 00
1 Elegant	"	"	3 00
1 Superb	"	"	5 00
1 Lot (assorted for retailing)	"	"	5 00
1	"	"	10 00
1	"	"	20 00

Any of the above sent in a box by mail nicely packed on receipt of the price.

Liberal discounts made to all persons buying to sell again. Send for Catalogue. Address all orders to

HENRY W. HITCHCOCK,
Valentine Headquarters of the Universe,
14 Chambers Street, N. Y.

PLAYING CARDS!

The American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards, National Emblems.

They are the prettiest cards made, and suit the purpose nicely. The suits are Eagles, Shields, Stars and Flags; Colonel in place of King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack.

The Eagles on the playing cards are all made, each bearing foreign emblems. Each pack is put up in an elegant case, and then in Dozen Boxes for the Trade.

In order to introduce them to merchants generally, we will these cards, a sample box of twelve packs will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of $2 50.

AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
No. 14 Chambers Street, New York.

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Every Pen Warranted!

Read these prices of a few of our many styles:

A fine 10 karat Pen and Solid Silver Extension Holder:

Size No. 1,	No. 2,	No. 3,	No. 4,
$2 50.	$2 75.	$3 00.	$3 50.
$3 25.	$3 75.	$4 00.	$4 50.

10 karat Pens with Rubber Reserve Holder:

Size No. 1,	No. 2,	No. 3,	No. 4, No. 5,
$2 75.	$3 00.	$3 50.	$4 00. $4 50.

Gold Pens in Gold Plated Extension Cases and Rubber Holders:

The Best Pocket Pen, Case and Pencil, ever made.

Size No. 1,	No. 2,	No. 3,	No. 4, No. 5,
$2 50.	$3 00.	$3 50.	$4 00. $4 50.

A 14 karat Pen, with Gold Plated Case and Rubber Holder or in Silver Plated Extension Case with Pencil:

Size No. 1,	No. 2,	No. 3,	No. 4, No. 5,
$1 each,	$2 00 per doz.	$2 50.	$3 00. $4 50.

14 karat Pens, with any of the above Holders, only 50 cents extra.

Pens repointed for 50 cents each.

Pens that will please you, $2 each.

All other styles equally cheap.

Parties wishing to act as Agents or to purchase large quantities, should send for Circular.

All goods sent by mail prepaid.

Address R. KEITH & CO.,
15 John Street, N. Y.

The Book of Wonders tells how to make Gold Pens, Pencils, or any other article. It also contains the Hunter's secret, how to catch Fish and all kinds of Game; how to make all kinds of Liqueurs, all kinds of Gunpowder and Candies, Gambling Exposed, Fortune Telling, Dreams, Confectionery, Information to Ladies; how to gain the Love of any one, Depot, &c., &c. Secret, country sealed, for 26 cents. Address Box 5087 N. Y. Post Office. 486-9

$8 OFFICER'S $10 WATCH.

Our Whole Stock of Imported Watches, being of rich and novel designs, durable and correct timekeepers, are now offered at reduced prices. Single Watches at Wholesale rates.

AN ELEGANT WATCH in Fine Gold Plated Double Cases, Richly Engraved, Turned Centre, Curved Inside Bridge, Solid Full Plate Jewelled Movements, adjusted to Isochronism, Spring Dial, Spade Hands and Fine Enamelled White Dial, warranted a reliable timekeeper, sterling Key Wind, is now complete, and a Gent's Handsome Vest Chain and beautiful Morocco Lined Locket is made, with Initial Engraving Box and Glass for Two Likenesses. A Beautiful Gilding Process. Sent by mail to any address for only $10.

A NEW SILVER WATCH, especially adapted for Army use, in Heavy Double Cases, Solid Size, same as the above, with Key Wind, Jewelled Movements, Vest Chain, Engraved Double Case Locket, &c. Sent by mail to any address for $10.

ON BRITISH ARMY OFFICERS' TIMEKEEPER, containing a New and Wonderful Combination of Mechanical Effects, combining within its case and attached to the machinery a beautiful and Useful Working Thermometer, an accurately adjusted Mariner's Compass in addition to the usual Dial, a Reliable Chronometer indicating day of month, week, etc., in Case, rendering this Watch a perfect Ready Reckoner. Watch and Thermometer. The beautiful machinery of this valuable Watch is exposed in Heavy Crystal Cases, and the Elegant Maple Spring 19 Line Case (the outer cases being of fine 18 carat Gold), forms one of Solid Gold Compactness. Richly Engraved top and bottom, with Panel for Name, Turned Rest, round Bezel and Heavy Crystal Hinge Spring. Genuine English Improved Jewelled Action, M. J. Tobias movements, Lever Escapement, and Recent Improved Dial, Equal Balance, Independent Actions, Fine White Dials, Polished Steel Dial Feet and Bezel. Perfect Imitation of a $100 watch, and used by the ROYAL ENGINEERS and Officers of Royal Artillery. Heavy Gold Hunting Cases bearing our private trade mark. Price per single one, as complete, with Key, $15. Sent by mail.

1t CATELY BROTHERS, Sole Importers,
65 Nassau Street, P. O. Box No. 5,643, Manhattan.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Catalogue.
009 PIERRE BIBON, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People.

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Rheumatism and Consumption; Insanity of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Pulpitation, Impotency and Sterility explained.

Sent Full post to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute;
Author of Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 90 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y.

Gold Pens 50 cts to $3. Pens in Silver Extension Cases $1 to $2. Send stamp for Circular. GEORGE F. NESBITT & CO., MANUFACTURERS, 64 Nassau st. Also for sale the only perfect Fountain Pen in the World. 485-95

REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE.

FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE has fully established the superiority of

Redding's Russia Salve

Over all other Healing Preparations.

It cures all kinds of Sores, Cuts, Scalds, Burns, Boils, Blotches, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Ring Worm, Scurvy, Rose, Lips, Sore Eyes, etc., etc. Removing the Pain at Once, and relieving the most angry Swellings and Inflammation as if by Magic. Only 20 cents a Box; by Mail 27 cents. For Sale by all Druggists.

474-84eW No. 491 Broadway, N. Y., and by all Druggists.

New Map of Richmond,

Showing all of the Fortifications surrounding the Rebel Capital, together with a Description of the City and of all the Forts, etc. Price only 25 cents per copy. Wholesale 50 cents per dozen, or $5 per 100.

NEW MAP OF GEORGIA. A splendid Map. Price, 20 cents; Wholesale, $1 50 per dozen.

NEW MAP OF ATLANTA. Price, 16 cents; Wholesale, 60 cents per dozen, or $5 per 100.

NEW MAP OF SOUTH CAROLINA. Charleston, Sherman, Sheridan, Butler, Foster, Hooker, Hancock, Howard, Rosecrans, Meade, Burnside, Mosbiter, etc. Price 16 cents each; Wholesale, $6 per 100.

NEW MAP OF VIRGINIA. Also, a full Cards—Very Desirable. Price only 75 cents. Goods sent Postpaid. Agents Wanted. Catalogues and Circulars free.

G. W. COMMINGDEN, Publisher,
221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

A Grand Romance of the War.

LIFE IN THE SADDLE;

OR,

THE CAVALRY SCOUT.

BY NED BUNTLINE.

Late of the 1st Regt. N. Y. Mounted Rifles. Illustrations by Darley. Price 25 cents.

The author, in his preface, dedicates this work to his old comrades of the 1st New York Mounted Rifles and the 11th Pennsylvania Cavalry, illustrating, as it does, many of the most exciting scenes through which both regiments passed in the campaign on the Shenandoah and in the vicinity of Norfolk and Petersburg.

The story is written in Ned Buntline's best style, and is a most graphic, exciting and thrilling portraiture of the scenes and incidents of the late campaign.

Mailed, free of postage, on receipt of price.

FREDERICK A. BRADY, Publisher,
No. 22 Ann street, N. Y.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST CIPHOTYPITY EVER OFFERED
TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GILT PENS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, or wait to be sold for cash! you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you may have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
268 Broadway, New York.

TWENTY-FOUR CARTES DE VISITE
OF
FRENCH GRISETTES,
In different attitudes of art.
Enclose $1.25 and four red stamps.
CHAS. MANY, 14 Nassau St., N. Y.

$125 A MONTH!

WANTED—SEWING MACHINE AGENTS! Every where. We manufacture the Shaw & Clark $10 Family Sewing Machine, the only low price machine in the country which is licensed by Grover & Baker, Wheeler & Wilson, Howe, Singer & Co., and Bachelder, Salary and expenses, or large commission allowed. All other Machines now sold for less than $40 each are rip-rapper-sewers, and the law will soon seize them. Illustrated Circulars sent free. Address SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine. 479-491

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the affections of any person they choose, instantly. This simple method, equally applicable to both sexes, secures certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 30,000 already sold. Address, Dr. JAMES C. T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Six Dollars from Fifty Cents.

Agents, come and examine Inventions, or Samples sent free by mail for 50 cents. Retails for $6 easily. R. L. WOLCOTT, 161 Nassau St., New York. 475-84

An Article that Every Married Lady should possess will be sent securely sealed for $1. 483-6 Address Box 5037, P. O., New York.

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for Catalogue. 000 VICTOR DELAPO, 89 Nassau St., N. Y.

New Music for Flute, Violin & Accordeon.
WINNER'S EXCELSIOR COLLECTION.

FOR THE FLUTE	- - -	75 cents.
FOR THE VIOLIN	- - -	75 cents.
FOR THE ACCORDEON	- - -	75 cents.

Each book contains nearly one hundred and fifty Popular Melodies, Mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price.
OLIVER DITSON & Co., Publishers, Boston.

GOLD, $8—SILVER, $1 80

1st, 3d, 6th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 13th, 15th, 14th, 18th, 20th, 23d

ARMY CORPS,

Showing each Division.

BY ONE SINGLE ONE.
100 or 1,000.
Send for Circular.

Address

BROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers,
268 Broadway, N.Y.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Samples and Catalogues sent for 26 cents. Enclose an envelope with your name and address.
U. D. HEMMETTE, 58½ Liberty St., N. Y.

Rich and Rare Sporting Goods, latest styles. Catalogues sent GRATIS. Address CHAS. F. ATTWOOD & CO., N. Y. 48-8

Royal Havana Lottery.
In Drawing of December 3, 1864,
No. 28984 ..... drew $100,000
No. 17615 ..... " 50,000
No. 30766 ..... " 25,000
No. 17168 ..... " 10,000
No. 30767 ..... " 5,000
Being the five capital prizes.
Several other prizes amounting to $20,000 paid for prizes. Information furnished. The highest rates paid for Dombloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
16 Wall St., N.Y.

Beauty.—Hunt's Bloom of Roses,
A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains unaffected for years and cannot be detected. Price $1, 18 cents by mail, securely packed from observation. HUNT & CO., Perfumers,
000 138 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

Beauty.—Hunt's White Liquid Enamel, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Facinist Ladies' Examiner. It softens the skin persistently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, $1 per bottle. Address
HUNT & CO., Perfumers,
000 138 South Seventh Street, and 44 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

$2 Sent Everywhere by Mail, Postpaid. A Extension Silver-Mounted Toilets, WITH COMPOSITE

GOLD PENS

REVERSE LEAD PENCILS,

In case of one dozen each; the boxes are finely finished and these articles will be found most valuable no injury in transportation. Prices same as before the War.

The Holders are of the most handsome and durable construction; are heavily silver-plated, with an extension of three lengths. All are engraved, chased or engine-turned, and for beauty are not surpassed by any others. Our prices for the holders and pens, sold in dozens only, are as follows:

Size One—When open, 5¼ inches in length; when put down, by mail, postpaid, $10 25; retails at $20 each.

Size Two—When open, 6¼ inches in length; when put down, by mail, postpaid, $12; retails at $25 each.

Size Three—When open, 6¼ inches in length; when put down, by mail, postpaid, $15; retails at $30 each.

Size Four—When open, 7¼ inches in length; when put down, by mail, postpaid, $20; retails at $40 each.

Size Five—When open, 8 inches in length; when put down, by mail, postpaid, $30 50; retails at $70 and upwards.

Sent to any part of the United States, by mail, postpaid. Also WATCHES AND JEWELLERY in Great Variety at the lowest prices ever known in this country. Illustrated letters at our risk. Orders respectfully solicited. Address T. & H. GAUGHAN, Manufacturers, 116 Broadway, N. Y.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 160 pages, illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy;" plainly showing how any person may be successful in loving, and marry whoever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Mailed by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps. Address
469-76 E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1926, Portland, Me.

The Brazilian Hair Curler. One application warranted to curl straight, short, stubborn hair into wavy ringlets or heavy massive curls. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Address
S. S. CHASE, Ochoes, N. Y.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION
OF
Watches, Chains, Lockets, Bracelets, Gold Pens, &c., &c.

S. M. WARD & CO.,
MANUFACTURING JEWELLERS,
203 Broadway, New York.

100,000 Watches, Chains, Lockets, Bracelets, Sets of Jewelry, Gold Pens, &c.,

Worth $500,000,

To be sold at One Dollar each, without regard to value!

And not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive, and not to be kept unless you are perfectly satisfied.

Splendid list of articles to be sold for $1 each!

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	- $100 00
100 Gold Watches	- 60 00
200 Lockets	- 40 00
800 Silver Watches	- $15 00 to 25 00
1,000 Gold Neck and Vest Chains	- 12 00 to 15 00
1,000 Chatelaine and Guard Chains	- 8 00 to 15 00
1,000 Gold Vest Chains	- 6 00 to 10 00
4,000 Solitaire Jet and Gold Brooches	- 4 00 to 8 00
4,000 Gold Carved, Garnet, &c., Brooches	- 4 00 to 8 00
7,000 Gold Jet, Opal, &c., Ear Drops	- 3 00 to 8 00
9,000 Gold Bread and Scarf Pins	- 3 00 to 8 00
6,000 Oval Band Bracelets	- 3 00 to 8 00
1,000 Chased Bracelets	- 6 00 to 10 00
2,300 California Diamond Pins and Rings	- 2 00 to 8 00
2,000 Gold Watch Keys	- 2 00 to 3 00
2,000 Solitaire Sleeve Buttons and Studs	- 2 00 to 3 00
3,000 Gold Rings	- 2 00 to 5 00
5,000 Miniature Lockets	- 2 00 to 3 00
5,000 Mexican Spurs, Magic Spring	- 2 00 to 3 00
3,000 New Style Bead Bracelets	- 4 00 to 8 00
3,000 Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, &c.	- 2 00 to 3 00
6,000 Fob and Jubilee Slides	- 2 00 to 5 00
6,000 Chased Gold Rings	- 2 00 to 5 00
4,000 Stone Set Rings	- 2 00 to 5 00
4,000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Jetand Gold	- 3 00 to 8 00
6,000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—varied styles	- 3 00 to 15 00
8,000 Gold Plated Silver Sets—varied styles	- 3 00 to 8 00
4,000 Gold Pens, Gold Case and Pencil	- 5 00 to 10 00
1,000 Gold and Gold Mounted Pocket Books	- 5 00 to 8 00

Certificates of the various articles are placed in envelopes, sealed and mixed. These envelopes will be sold by dealers without regard to value, and sent by mail, receiving the certificate, and seeing what article it represents before you pay a cent for it. You will then pay or any other on the list of the same value, and state using the Express, which you prefer for the delivery, we desire you to return it and get the money. In all cases where we pay mail or express charges, add 25 cents; five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5. Agents wanted to sell them in every town and everywhere. We allow Agents ten cents on each Certificate, provided their returns amounts to $1 or more. An extra Premium for large orders.

Many Ladies who have paid $1 50 or $2 for a Gold and Silver Watch (pure coin) or Badge, for either Division or Star in the Army, or a Society, Address, Infantry, Engineer or Pentioneer's Pin, with your name, regimental and company engraved thereon, should send together with our wholesale illustrated circular to agents. S. M. WARD & CO.,
203 Broadway, New York.

WONDERFUL DEVELOPMENTS
In the use of Petroleum.

WOODWARD'S Patent Self-Adjusting Lamp Burner has the following advantages over any Lamp Burner yet known:

1st—The glass can be instantly removed for cleaning, or replaced when broken.

2d—It is the best made, most convenient, and with Sewer & Co's Non-Conducting Burner gives the full light of any Lantern in use.

SAVAGE & CO.'S CHIMNEY DURNER for Hand-Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene Oil, with a brilliant light, without chimney, smoke or odor. Saves 25 per cent.

Send for Price List with Engravings. Liberal terms to the Trade.

455 SAVAGE & CO., 256 Greenwich St., N. Y.

3 RECEIPTS, each warranted to curl the hair in heavy massive curls, sent on receipt of 25 cents. Address F. JENNISON, Box 2,000, Boston, Mass.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION!
250,000
Watches, Chains, Diamond Rings, Etc.
WORTH OVER
One Million Dollars!
All to be Sold for One Dollar Each!!
WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE! NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO RECEIVE!

Splendid List of Articles! All to be Sold for $1 each!

226 Carter Gold Hunting-case Watches	$50 to $150
500 Ladies' Gold and Enamel-Case Watches	35 " 70
500 Gents' Hunting-case Watches	35 " 70
200 Diamond Rings	50 " 100
2,000 Gold Vest and Neck Chains	10 " 30
3,000 " " " "	6 " 9
4,000 Gold and Pearl Bracelets	5 " 10
6,000 Chased Gold Bracelets	5 " 10
5,000 Imitation Hunting & Chased Watches	4 " 10
7,000 Solitaire and Gold Brooches	4 " 10
5,000 Garnet and Jet Brooches	4 " 8
5,000 Coral, Opal and Emerald Brooches	4 " 8
4,000 Ladies' Gold and Enamel-Case Ear Drops	4 " 8
7,500 Coral, Opal & Pearl Ear Drops	3 " 6
4,000 California Diamond Breast Pins	2 50 " 10
5,000 Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys	2 50 " 6
4,000 Fob and Vest Ribbon Sliders	2 50 " 6
4,000 Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, etc.	3 " 8
3,000 Gold Thimbles, Scissors, etc.	2 " 7
10,000 Miniature Lockets	2 50 " 8
5,000 Gold Rings	2 " 10
3,000 Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc.	2 " 6
4,000 Gold Pins	2 " 11
6,000 Chased Gold Rings	4 " 11
4,000 Stone Set and Signet Rings	2 50 " 10
10,000 California Diamond Rings	2 " 10
5,000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Jet & Gold	3 " 6
6,000 Sets Ladies' Jewellery — Cameo, Pearl, Coral, etc.	4 " 15
10,000 Gold Pens, Silver Extension-holder	4 " 10
10,000 Gold Pens and Gold Mounted Pencils	2 " 10
5,000 Gold Pens and Gold Extension Pencils	6 " 10
5,000 Silver Goblets and Drinking Cups	5 " 12
3,000 Silver Castors	12 " 30
2,000 Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets	20 " 50
9,000 Dozen Silver Tea Spoons	PER DOZEN. $50 " 72
6,000 Dozen Silver Dessert Spoons & Forks	50 " 72

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, through the war having cut off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of Valuable Jewellery, originally intended for the Southern market, has been thrown for sale in this country, and MUST BE SOLD AT ANY SACRIFICE.

Under these circumstances, ARRANDALE & CO., acting as Agents for the principal European Manufacturers, have received upon a Commission basis, subject to the following regulations:

Descriptive Catalogues of each article and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents, and result in cents to us, either in cash or postage Stamps. ARRANDALE & CO.,
167 Broadway, New York.

The Great Money-Making Article.
Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 per day. Sample sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of 25 cents. Address
000 R. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY CINCINET will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. It is worn by many, free from, to any address on receipt of an order.
R. G. GARLAND, 103 Nassau St., N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each package warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Onguent and finding it not as represented (by its use) will please call and have their money returned to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1, or $1 00 sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address
C. O. CLARK,
484-95 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

$70 A MONTH! I want Agents everywhere, to sell the best Family Sewing Machine in the world. Address the best selling ever offered. Full particulars free. Address (P) J. T. GAREY, Rockford, Maine. 479-491 Also

American Badge Co.

SOLID SILVER BADGES for every Corps, with Name, Company and Regiment engraved, sent free by mail, Artificial Shields, $1; Gold, $3. Vulcanized Rubber Rings, with Solid Gold Corps Badge, $2. Solid Gold Rings, with Finger Rings, of solid Silver, with Name, Company and Regiment on the outside, $2 50. Send Gold, &c.
R. KEITH & CO.,
Manufacturers of Gold Pens, Jewellery, Lockets, &c.

GAYEST OF THE GAY!

Transparent Playing Cards, used same as common cards. Can be seen through. Sample pack, by mail, $1 25; $10 per dozen packs. Also marked Cards, 42 kinds. Send stamp for Circular. Address FORWARDING AGENCY, 58 Liberty Street, N. Y.

Diagram of the U. S. Government.
A person gains a better idea of our Government from this Diagram than can be obtained from reading with which we are acquainted.—Journal and Messenger. Mailed, postpaid for 25 cents. Agents wanted.
J. L. G. FLEMING,
37 and 39 Nassau Street, N. Y.

For Nervous Debility, &c.,
Use "Dr. Gregg's concentrated Ozone." The only reliable remedy. Price, per vial, $1—2 for $2. Sent free by mail. Send for Circular. Address DR. GREGG, 000 G. S. ELLIS & CO., 708 Broadway, N. Y.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.

REMINGTON'S

ARMY AND NAVY REVOLVER!
Approved by the Government.
Wonderful superiority to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.
E. REMINGTON & SONS,
466-78 Ilion, N. Y.

Dr. Glover's Lever Trusses retains and cures more ruptures than any other. Hours—Ladies, 10 to 12; Gents, 2 to 4. Elastic Stockings, Belts, Bandages, Crutches, &c. No. 4 ANN STREET. Established 30 years. 486-8

Whiskers! Moustaches!!—The celebrated HUALAYALA OIL will force a luxuriant growth of Whiskers in two weeks. An English patent article, which does no injury to the skin. Sent, postpaid, for $1. Address Dr. E. DE TORRES, Troy, N. Y. 486-9

THE BEST THING OUT!
Can be used the same as other Cards, and contains 52
BEAUTIFUL SCENES.
Enclose $1 25 and three red stamps for sample pack. $144 per gross, twenty per cent. off. Address
C. ALLEN,
54 Nassau Street, New York.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to suit. Send this Illustrated Book, Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. RAEL, M. D., 500 pages, Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address, 12 White Street, New York.

C. S. Rea, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. His Celebrated Ointment" See $5. Prescriptions for return stamp. Sample for $1 in part for a package.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.
Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing 75 cts or $1 according to the quality desired. Address
HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.

$1 Whiskers. $1
For one dollar I will send, sealed and postpaid, the "Great Composition" which is highly perfumed, which I warrant to force a heavy growth of hair upon the smoothest face in five weeks, or upon the hands in eight weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Entire satisfaction given or money refunded. Descriptive circulars sent free. Address F. L. SANFORD, Lamsingburgh, N. Y.

Lost Manhood Restored,
Speedily and effectually, by the use of "DR. LA POSKY'S LIFE ELIXIR." Only prescription known. Sent postpaid, by S.O. UPHAM, 28 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 485-94

ADVANTAGE OR MARKED PLAYING CARDS.

I have constantly on hand and for sale every style of MARKED BACK PLAYING CARDS. These Cards, when packed, cannot be told by the backs from any other pack. Full and complete instructions forwarded with each pack. Marked Cards, 42 kinds, assorted. Sample pack sent by mail for $2. Send all orders to G. BRIGGS, Jamaica, L. I.
482-6 P. O. Drawer, 6506.

Hair Uprooted
From all parts of the body in five minutes, without injury to the skin, by "DERBY'S DEPILATORY POWDER." Sent by mail, free, on receipt of $1. Address S. C. DERBY, 28 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. 482-94

Susie Knight; or, the History of a "Pretty Water Girl." A Book, Rare and Racy, of 200 pages, beautifully illustrated, sent to any address. Mailed free. Address J. G. Box 12, Hinsdale, N. H. 484-96

Agents and Dealers.—Something New. Patent Stamp Box, Indelible Pencil, Mucilage and Magic Tobacco Stopper, and 30 more novel and useful articles. Send stamp for circular.
S. W. RICE & CO.,
82 Nassau street, New York.

Old Eyes Made New!

A pamphlet directing how to speedily restore sight and give up spectacles, without aid of doctor or medicine. Sent by mail, free, on receipt of 10 cents. Address
E. B. FOOTE, M. D.,
000 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

Shults' Curlique, for curling the hair. Price 50 cents. Send sealed, postpaid. Address
C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

The Chimney Corner:
A Novel. By Mrs. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.
Dr. Johns (A Romance):
By Dr. HAYDEN.
Notes of a Pianist;
By LOUIS M. GOTTSCHALK,
are among the attractive features which will be offered to the readers of the

Atlantic Monthly

during the year 1865. For the low price of Four Dollars a year can be obtained nearly two hundred pages of the best reading. The first American writers contribute. Send 25 cents for the January number, as a specimen, with full particulars. Address
TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

SOMETHING NEW.

The Patent Army Pocket Pipe and Cigar Holder combined, is decidedly the best Smoking Pipe ever invented. It imparts a rich soothing flavor to the Tobacco is of elegant appearance and finish; with fine carved Amber Mouthpiece and Cigar Holder. It is easy to carry, easy to clean, and is always ready for a good smoke. Sample dozen sent free on receipt of $2.50. Address
RICHARDS & CO.,
97 William Street, New York.

INQUIRE FOR
TUCKER'S PATENT SPRING BEDS.
For sale by the Furniture Dealers generally through the United States. At wholesale by HIRAM TUCKER, 117 and 119 Court St., Boston, Mass. 481-90

BALLOU'S
Patented
French Yoke
SHIRTS.
Warranted to fit, and to be CHEAPER
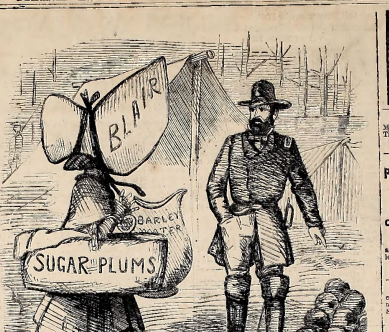
for the same reliable cloth and make than those of any other shirt Maker in the city.
Circulars containing drawings and prices sent free.
F.Y.S.
For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.
BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, New York.

FREE READING!
Soldiers, Sailors, Marines, Everybody—send us your address. Will, in return, send you a large illustrated paper, replete with good miscellaneous reading matter. Sent gratis.
484-90 CHAS. E. MACKEY, 31 Nassau St., N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!
All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fort Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newbern, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 45 Broadway. Orders charged like rates. 0000

The Magic Wheel, Price $1 50.
This is the cleverest optical delusion ever invented, and is equally attractive to youth and age.
JOHN BRUMEN (Successor to M. Dunlady),
482-6 49 Walker Street, N. Y.

Electric, Self-Adjusting, Enamelled White, 23 to 29 per doz.; Specimens, 50 cents, 75 cents, $1; Snow-white Linen Bosoms, $1 50; Suitable Ties, $1. Also, Linen superbly Enamelled, Snow-white, elaborately Illusion Embroidered Shirt Collars and Cuffs, $3 per doz.; Cuffs, $2. Mailed, on receipt of price and size.
JEANBRET, 78 Nassau Street, N.Y.



BOOTS! BOOTS!! BOOTS!!!
FOR THE HOLIDAYS.
AT GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICES
AT
Neely's Family Shoe Store,
No. 348 Bowery, corner of Great Jones street, who has on hand the Largest, Best and Cheapest assortment of Full and Winter Goods in the city.

Beautiful False Moustaches 50 cents and $1 a pair, sent postpaid. Send stamp for circular. Address C. W. FIELD, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Pianos, Melodeons and Cabinet Organs. Largest assortment in the city. New seven octave Pianos, $250; Melodeons and Cabinet Organs, from $50 to $200; second-hand Pianos, from $90 to $200, 10,000 pieces of Music, a little soiled, at 1½ cent per page. Pianos and Melodeons to let. HORACE WATERS,
481 Broadway, N. Y.

Why squander money on useless concoctions calculated to Curl Hair? when you can purchase Prof. Gilmore's Great Discovery for $2, which will Curl all kinds of Hair immediately, and will last six months. Prepared at my Chemical Laboratory, New York city. Address me at my residence,
L. GILMORE,
Practical Chemist, Bergen, N. J.

Asthma Cured.
Relief guaranteed in ten minutes, and a permanent cure effected by the use of "UPHAM'S ASTHMA CURE." Same as if from the family nurse' standing yield at once to its influence. Price $2. Sent postpaid to any address, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 482-94

A SELF-APPOINTED ENVOY.

OLD LADY—"Please Mr. Soyer, will you let me take these notions to Richmond. I kind of think they'll convert 'em."
GEN. GRANT—"Guess not! This other is the sort of sugar-plum just now."

$7 ARMY WATCH. $10
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD-PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, White Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, with an accurate "Miniature Calendar," indicating the Day of the Week, Month, &c., in back case. A full case sent free, by mail, to any address, in neat case, with A BEAUTIFUL TAPE CHAIN, for only $10.
A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with the Miniature Calendar, &c., specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, to any address, for only $7.
English and American LEVERS from $25 up. Good Watches of all descriptions.
Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers,
16 38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
GOLD MEDAL
Grand and Square
PIANOS,
BALTIMORE, Md.
Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, Satter, and other leading artists. Every instrument warranted for five years.
Price lists promptly sent on application.
WM. KNABE & CO.
A full assortment of the above celebrated instruments at 7 BATH & CO.'S Emporium,
0 No. 544 Broadway, N.Y.

A WATCH FREE
And $16 or $20 per Day made Easy. A New Sensation. One Great Novelty, the WONDERFUL PRIZE PORTFOLIO. Just out and creating an immense sensation and Extraordinary Demand throughout the Army and Country! Opens in a manner like none. Saves Enormous profits to purchaser. Each Portfolio, Extra Large Size, 6 by 10, contains an immense quantity of sacred and valuable goods. Prizes, etc., worth Several Dollars, and sells for only 50 cents. Articles retail as Soldier or Family can possibly do without. Thousands Sold Every Day. Soldiers can clear a Month's Pay in a Single Day. Agents Wanted in Every Camp and Village. A Beautiful Gold or Silver Watch Presented free as Premium to Every Agent. This is the Greatest money-making Business of the Day. We Guarantee any agent $15 per Day. Premium sent with Goods same day the order is received. Cuts sphere containing Extra Premium Inducements sent by mail free. S. M. RICHARDS & CO., 102 N. Seneca St., N.Y. Sole Manufacturers. 0

The attention of our readers is respectfully invited to the advertisement of Messrs. S. M. WARD & Co., which will be found in another part of this paper. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm, and can vouch for their responsibility in all business arrangements which they make, as we have a thorough knowledge of their mercantile integrity and their full ability to meet all obligations. This notice, of course, is intended for such of our readers as have no acquaintance with this firm; to all who know them no recommendation is necessary.—Army and Navy Gazette. 0

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN ODOR without Apples or other fruit in 12 minutes. The Receipt sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
0 T. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Ladies, use no more Rouge for your complexion. It can deceive no one, no matter how well applied. If you would have sparkling eyes, rosy cheeks, a complexion of dazzling beauty, follow my directions. Address, enclosing $1, Dr. L. DARBY,
483-90 Box No. 5086, N. Y. P. O.

LADIES' LETTER.
FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS
Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 30 cents.
0 Address Box 4062, New York Post Office.

THE DOWNS MICROSCOPE,
Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. THREE of different powers for $1. Address
0000 F. B. DOWNS, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Sanford's
PATENT CHALLENGE HEATERS,
Portable or for brick, heating with hot air through registers:
Mammoth or Globe Heaters;
Cosmopolite Parlor Radiating Stoves;
CHALLENGE KITCHEN RANGES
BEACON LIGHT RANGES.
Do not buy until you have seen the above superior articles for applying heat, with the greatest economy and least cost, at the manufactory,
SANFORD, DRUSLOW & CO.,
485-0 209 and 211 Water Street.

The West Indian Hair Curler, warranted to curl any straight hair until well set, on the first application, into short ringlets or waving massive curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1. Address
WAUD GILBERT LYON.
Box 2321, New York Post Office.

O'DOR! O'DOR!
DR. BRIGGS'S
GOLDEN O'DOR

Will force a Beautiful Set of Whiskers or Moustaches on the Smoothest face in five weeks, AND NO HUMBUG
Also, HAIR ON BALD HEADS in eight weeks.
Extensive Recommendations sent every day. Testimonials of thousands.
I will send my Golden O'Dor by mail, sealed and prepaid, for $1 50. Say WARRANTED.—Ed.
Send all orders to
DR. C. BRIGGS, P. O. Drawer 6108, Chicago, Ill.
482-6

Marvin's Patent Alum and Dry PLASTER FIRE AND BURGLAR SAFES. Our Parlor Safes are highly ornamental, and have proved, from the fact that they are perfectly dry and do not mould papers or corrode silver. Manufactured only by
MARVIN & CO.,
0 265 Broadway.

Send for a descriptive circular.

KENDALL'S

Is composed of extracts from Flowers, Roots and Herbs, for the Beauty and permanent Vigor of the Hair. It prevents hair falling out or turning gray, restores dandruff, and is a delightful and pleasant dressing.
Also effecting a cure for most diseases incident to the scalp.
A trial will prove our assertion.
For sale by all druggists.
Price $1 per case.
WARING & CO.,
0 Proprietors,
32 Bay Street, N.Y.

GREAT CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY!
And receive a Watch free, by selling our great
NOVELTY—A NATIONAL PRIZE PACKET.
New Packets just issued for the Holiday Trade. Each package contains over a hundred articles, including Jewelry and Ornaments—besides one Certificate in the name of a Watch, Sewing Machine, Dressing-case and Lexington gift sale of $500,000 of these packets can be sold.
We want an Agent in every town and city, thus making a profitable business for a smart man or lady. Shop-keepers given to our Agents. $12 will obtain 100 Packets and a Silver Watch. Circular mailed free. Sample Packet and Certificate sent on receipt of 50 cents.
SPLENDID GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES
S. M. RICHARDS & CO.,
482-6 No. 97 Beekman Street, N.Y.

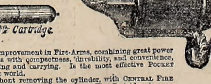
Use of Tobacco, in all its forms, Cured and PREVENTED. Perfectly safe. Address
481-90 JAS. DAY & SON, New Haven, Conn.

THE UNIVERSAL PAPER COLLAR
TAINTER & JACKSON'S
PATENT, AUGUST 2ND 1864.
The Trade supplied at No. 190 Pearl Street, New York.
If

FOR A FORTUNE
Address FRANKLIN S. M. CO., Box 202, Boston, Mass

GOLD PENS.
If you want the best Pen ever used end to Johnson for Circular giving exact sizes and prices. Pens from 50 to $5 by mail with gold holder. Reported, by mail, for 50 cents.
J. B. JOHNSON, Manufactory and Office,
0478-90 15 Maiden Lane, New York.

Friends.—Send a Stamp for information and my Circulars. Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.



Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, by home means—Safe and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. BELLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. 0

For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.
Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth, Purifying and Sweetening the Breath, the most convenient, efficacious and beneficial article for the Teeth the world has ever seen.
Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—8 cents per bottle.
HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors,
6000 215 Greenwich St., N. Y.

To all wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlements mild and healthful climate, 20 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces huge crops, which can now be seen growing. Yes, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $20 to $30 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place in the West. Healthy as settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. E. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.
Hon. Reuben Shumway, Agricultural editor of the Tribune:
"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasure, farming, fruit and vineyards of this side of the Western prairies."

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER

Ass Cartridge.
Is the latest improvement in Fire-Arms, combining great power and effectiveness with compactness, durability, and construction both for operating and carrying. Is the only Cartridge Revolver in the world.
Is loaded without removing the cylinder, with CENTRAL FIRE WATERPROOF COPPER SHELL CARTRIDGES. The cartridges are made for the shell easily ejected after firing. The cylinder will receive 14 but I prefer extreme length. 2.240th ball, six shot and weighs but 14 ounces. For sale by the trade.
GEO. A. HUCKEL, 54 Cliff Street, New York.

CERTIFICATE.
I have thoroughly tested the new "National Revolver," and find it an effective weapon, of sure fire and convenient size. As fifty yards I think I could with this pistol hit at every shot. I take pleasure in recommending it as a weapon in every way desirable. In company with Captain Scott, Provost-Marshal, Army of the James, this pistol a large number of times, and not one cartridge failed to explode.
JOHN CHALLEMON, Chief of Police, Cairo, Ill.
0 (Illinois)

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 487—VOL. XIX.] NEW YORK, JANUARY 28, 1865. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY. 13 WEEKS $1 00.

Wanted—A Foreign War.

THE great American civil war gives unmistakable signs of drawing to a close, and men are beginning to think, none too early, of what lies beyond. There will be many and difficult questions, connected with the civil reorganization of the country, which the statesmen of the day will be called on to solve, and which may safely be left to their experience and judgment. It is not with these that the public mind is most concerned; but with the reflection that the war will leave us, North and South, with two millions of men inured to arms, with a million of veteran soldiers in the field, and with an experienced navy, more powerful and effective, if not larger, than any which floats on the ocean. It is this reflection which excites our people with mingled curiosity and alarm. Are all historical precedents to be reversed in our case? Are we so different from the peoples that have gone before us, and is our system so new and peculiar as to justify the belief that this great army of trained soldiers will be quickly absorbed in the civil body, and the nation resume its old career of thrift and prosperity, without a jar? Is the bright, beardless boy, who unyoked his father's oxen four years ago, and took up the musket as a soldier in the ranks, but who now wears the chevron on his arm, or the bar, or, it may be, the star on his shoulder, the bronzed and bearded veteran of to-day—is it to be supposed that he will be content to resume his former lowly occupations, in a day, or a year, or ever? There are hundreds of thousands of stalwart men, now lying in hostile camps, familiar with danger almost to recklessness, who are impatient of quiet and eager for excitement, even though it come to them in the flame and thunder of battle—is it consonant with what we know of human nature to suppose that they, too, will resume cheerfully the routine of humdrum civil life?

That we will have in the future a large army and navy is undoubted, in which will be absorbed the large and perhaps the better part of our existing forces on land and sea. But there will remain the bulk of our armies, loyal and rebel, eager for whatever enterprise of daring and danger that may present itself, and ready to fraternise on all questions, and in all objects, not connected with our domestic affairs. In what direction will this great mass of restless energy, valor, daring and military skill find scope and exercise?

That is the pregnant question, not for us alone, but for Europe—that Europe which blindly, and for sinister objects, lent its aid to convert an unaggressive nation of Work into a formidable nation of War. When England and France, through troublesome interventions, belligerent recognitions, openly expressed sympathies, and by the more overt acts of furnishing ships, sailors, supplies and munitions of war, encouraged the slave States to insurrection, and enabled them to sustain it until the nation was constrained to gird itself in full armor and put forth its latent powers, did they then consider what manner of work they were doing? They were before called, and perhaps we were, arrogant and blustering, but we were harmless; our petty navy and holiday soldiers were little dangerous. What it was to learn experience that it was strong, or to give to bluster the ability to execute its wantes!

ESCAPE OF LIEUT.-COL. FOBY, 40TH INDIANA VOLS., AND CAPT. LORING, U.S.N., FROM CAPTIVITY IN TEXAS.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY LILIENTHAL, N. O.

It was openly declared, not long ago, by British statesmen and publicists that the United States must be broken upand crippled, because it had grown too strong, and was a menace to the world. And so the governing classes gave themselves to lying, and directed the policy of the nation to this genial work. We wish them joy of the result. The dreaded but impotent monster has been taught its strength, and that selfish, criminal and short-sighted policy of Europe has hastened, if not created, the very danger which it sought to avert, through the subjugation, shifts and medieval trickery of Old World statesmanship.

There was a time, and that not long ago, when a foreign war would have been depreciated by the entire country. It was a thing which the nation would have avoided at almost any sacrifice. The flippant talk about such an event, in those days, was confined to small newspapers of the lurid cast, to frowsy foreign refugees, and to spasmodic young gentlemen just from school.

But things are bravely changed. We contemplate foreign war, not only without alarm, but with real complacency. In fact, we look upon it not only as inevitable but desirable. We are not alone in believing that such a war offers the easiest escape from the difficulties which now attend the termination of our present struggle. In such a war, we care not with whom or for what cause, the soldiers of the North and South will fraternize in amicable sisterly compliment. If, indeed, Gens. Grant and Lee were to agree upon a truce, and permit the roll to sound "Volunteers for Mexico" in the two camps, who does not know that fifty thousand men from each fifty thousand men South, would file out, shake hands, and start harmoniously on their way to eject the foreign usurper, and reinstate the Republican Government in Mexico? Who doubts if half a million of men were needed for this enterprise, to punish the insolence of Spain in Santo Domingo and Peru, or to sustain "belligerent rights" in Ireland, they could be had, in unequal quotas, North and South? It may be that the arch-traitors who have staked all, and lost all in this rebellion, are willing to sell themselves and their followers to escape the latter, and are ready to become the vassals of kings again, cringing at the feet of viceroys, but the Southern people have no such wish or purpose. Disenchanted on the subject of "Southern independence," they are yet far from accepting the humiliations of a satrapy. They are equally with the people of the North devoted to that great continental idea formulated by Monroe, and which, even in the presence of this great struggle, has neither been forgotten or abandoned. European intervention in the war has not been of a kind to win the love or confidence of either section. The South has been deceived with unsubstantial promises and inefficient aid, and the North has been outraged by hostile intervention and International Law, or open violations of its provisions. Both sections have seen how Europe has sought to hedge them round, and overshadow them at a time when they were powerless to prevent it; and the South has seen also that the sympathy expressed in their favor, and the aid extended to them, were only directed to building them upa counterpoise to the United States, so that European designs could be safely carried out elsewhere.

Hence we claim, now that the war approaches its end, that both North and South have a common interest in a foreign war—a war that shall bridge over the gulf which a four years' struggle has dug between them, and which shall, at the same time, vindicate the great and ever-vital principle that "America belongs to Americans, and is sacred to Republican institutions."

Such also we think are not only exist in the South but find open expression. Let any one do doubte, foreigner or citizen, visit any detail of prisons and enter into conversation

"Napoleon might be startled with another phenomenon upon peace between the North and the South. It might not be impossible that a portion of the troops engaged in deadly conflict might unite under the same banner and at once march to the invaders of Mexico. We forbear to extend the suggestion; but it is borne out by the history of almost all nations who have fought with each other. The people continue hostile; soldiers will fraternize in common enterprise."

The debts of the states of Maine, Massachusetts, Illinois and Michigan, as stated in the annual message of the Governors are as follows: Maine, $5,337,903; Massachusetts, $20,000,000; Illinois, $11,176,000; Michigan, $4,641,000. The same States have furnished the following number of troops to the army since the outbreak of the rebellion: Maine, 61,000, one-tenth of her whole population; Massachusetts, 153,840; Illinois, 176,309; Michigan, 87,000.

New York and Liverpool PETROLEUM COMPANY

CAPITAL STOCK, $1,000,000.

100,000 Shares at $10 each.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE FIVE DOLLARS PER SHARE.

Lands already Yielding Largely.

President:
HON. DANIEL S. DICKINSON.

Vice-President:
WILLIAM T. PHIPPS.

Secretary:
ROBERT BASSETT.

Treasurer:
ATLANTIC BANK, 142 BROADWAY.

Mining Superintendent:
H. J. BURTIS, TITUSVILLE, PA.

Books are open for Subscription at the Office of the Company,

71 Broadway, Empire Building, New York, Room No. 24;

and at Atlantic Bank, 142 Broadway, New York.

The lands at this Company are situated on the heart of the oil regions, and include portions of those well-known localities, the McClintock Farm, the two McGonkey Farms, extensive tracts of oil lands on Cherry Run, and other proved and valuable working territories, including of the best oil territory in Venango, West Virginia and Ohio; new under process of successful development, and all in regularly and largely producted from several wells upon them.

Over Two Thousand Acres in Fee

Address

The New York & Liverpool Petroleum Co.,

BOX 6368, POST OFFICE,

NEW YORK CITY.

Remittances can be made by Draft, Express or Registered Letter. Permanent Bonds and Securities taken in payment for Stock.

New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore Consolidated

PETROLEUM & MINING COMPANY

Capital, $1,500,000. 300,000 Shares.

Par, $5 per Share; Subscription Price, $1 per Share.

President
J. S. CLARK, New York.

Vice-President
B. H. WISHART, New York.

Treasurer.
H. F. DEVOE, New York.

Secretary.
J. CONKLIN, New York.

Directors
R. V. B. RETCHUM, Baltimore, Md.
G. KING, Baltimore, Md.
H. H. WISHART, New York.
Dr. S. T. KING, New York.
J. H. GOULD, Philadelphia.
W. WOODRUFF, Baltimore, Md.
A. CLARK, Oil City, Pa.
H. B. CLARK, Oil City, Pa.

General Superintendents
J. S. CLARK, New Petroleum Clark Farm, Pa.;
H. B. CLARK, Oil City, Pa.

P. S. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
Manufacturers of and Wholesale Dealers in CHEMICALS,
PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS,
AND
STEREOSCOPES & STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,
591 BROADWAY, N. Y.
(Up Stairs.)
In addition to our well known stock of PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, we have now on hand, and are receiving daily,
STEREOSCOPES & STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS, of the most attractive character, including War Scenes, American and Foreign Landscapes, Groups, Statuary, Paintings, &c., &c., which we can recommend for public or private examination. Catalogues sent on application. Trade supplied at liberal discount.

PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS.

We were the first to introduce Photographic Albums in this country, and have always kept the largest variety, and sold them at the lowest prices. We have the largest assortment of being capable of beautifully binding; and especially of being capable of binding Photographic Albums in the most elegant manner.

FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER.

CARD ALBUMS, 40 PICTURES.

Our Card Albums are the most popular style of Albums ever introduced, and are universally being made of Patent Leather, Gilt and Morocco.

20 Morocco, gilt edge	$0 50
20 Morocco, gilt, full gilt sides, gilt edges	0 75
20 Velvet,	0 75
20 Velvet, gilt edges	1 00
20 Patent Leather,	1 00
20 Extra,	1 50

Including reproduction of the most celebrated Engravings, Statuary, Paintings, Groups, Landscapes, Views, &c., &c. All sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of price. Catalogues sent on application. Terms, Cash. Orders C. O. D. must be accompanied by one-third of the amount with their order.

Soldiers' Pocket Album for 18 pictures 75 cents.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This valuable work is far superior to its prototype, the London Illustrated Almanac, and much cheaper. It contains valuable information, National, Historical, Political, Statistical, Astronomical and Useful, besides upwards of 50 beautiful illustrations by the best European and American Artists, engraved in the highest style of the art. It will be embellished with four splendid Lithographic Portraits, printed on fine paper, of General Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Admiral Farragut, from recent photographs. Price 50 cents.

Barnum's American Museum.

Glorious triumph! Third week of the gorgeous spectacle, every afternoon at three, Evening at half-past seven. FIRE AND WATER. FIRE, AIR, EARTH and WATER. Previous to which, in the Lecture Room, the LIFE OF FORREST, at the close of the Evening, the Yankee FARCE, THE VERMONT WOOLDEALER. And DANCING by the BAND. Mermaid at eleven; THE LITTLE GIANT, 30 inches high. ADMIRAL TOM THUMB, and DANDY TOM THUMB and her husband, A LIVING SKELETON, weighing 87 pounds! Bad weather, and consequently no thrill. FAIRY, Cupid Girl, Albino Boy, Learned Seal, Living Giraffe, &c. Admission, 50 cents; Children under ten, 15 cents.

Dr. Talbot's Concentrated Medicinal PINEAPPLE CIDER

is a PREVENTIVE of SICKNESS. The experience that Dr. Talbot has had in the last twenty years is evidence that it is the public and an article offered that will prevent sickness. The article offered is Dr. Talbot's Medicated Pineapple Cider, designed for all classes, old and young. It is not put up for medicine but is entirely new to the public. One quart bottle will last a well person one week. It is rather a new mode of doctoring; nevertheless it will save millions from being sick. Price per bottle, three dollars a year to keep from being sick, than to pay ten or twen y dollars in a day's sick bill, and a great many times the loss of time and the inconvenience of being sick? To prevent sickness, is as we believe. Add one teaspoonful of Medicated Pineapple Cider to a tumbler of cold water, and drink the first thing after you rise in the morning, and the same before you retire at night. It will increase the strength and give vigor and action to the whole system. A well New York merchant, who has made a thorough trial of the Pineapple Cider, writes: "I believe that he saved ten pounds or flesh in one month at the first trial. He continues to use the above directions, and finds it very beneficial; says it has proved an entire preventive to sickness with him, and recommends it to every gentleman in New York has used the Medicated Cider finds it very beneficial, and says it is a delightful refreshing tonic.

Price $3 per bottle (full quart); pints, $2: half-pints, $1. One quart bottle, two pint bottles, or four half pint bottles, delivered free of charge on receipt of price. All orders should be addressed to

DR. TALBOT, 712 BROADWAY, Sole Agent,

64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., N. Y.

47t-439

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac for 1865.

This annual contains a greater amount of useful and entertaining information than any publication of the kind ever issued. It is indeed the only Lady's Illustrated Almanac published. It is embellished with over 70 beautiful engravings by the finest Artists of the day, printed on fine paper, and contains 44 valuable directions for the parlor, bell-room, boudoir, store-room, kitchen, cellar, nursery and work-room. In a word, it is the nation's sine nomine, as well as the young lady's companion, and it should be found in every household. In addition to general illustrations, it contains splendid portraits of General Grant, Mrs. McClellan, elegantly engraved on steel, and a graphic bathing-Scene at Long Branch, by Winslow Homer. The complete Lady's Manual—which contains more reading matter than an octavo volume—is given away with the book, on receipt of price, either in currency or postage stamps.

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 28, 1865.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

To Correspondents.

The columns of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER are always open for contributions from our friends.

All communications will be promptly considered; and liberal payment will be made for all manuscripts found deemed worthy of acceptance.

Interesting stories, lively sketches, and poems of a high order, not too long or too long, will be received with favor.

Short stories, fraught with incident character and dramatic effect, are always preferable to long ones.

All manuscripts should be legibly written, on good paper, and on one side of the sheet only. Manuscripts written on both sides will be declined without examination.

Correspondents are requested to write their names and addresses, legibly and in full, on each manuscript that they send to this office.

TERMS FOR

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months	$1 00
One copy, six months	2 00
One copy, one year	4 00
Two copies, one year, to a address	7 00
one wrapper
Four copies, one year, to one address, in s	13 00
one wrapper
Five copies, one year	15 00
(With an extra copy to the person getting up the club.)
Eight copies (and a club of 8 to)	24 00

One copy of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper and one copy of Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine (the most complete Lady's Book published) for one year | 7 00

Address

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

"J. W.," of Binghampton, asks us "What Petroleum Company would you recommend?" Clearly, a case of advertising in the reading columns. The appearance of these advertisements in our pages may be taken as an assurance of our readiness, founded upon careful inquiry or direct knowledge.

It may not be known to all of our readers that the poem, "Barbara Frietchie, on the burial of Sir John Moore, commencing:

"Not a drum was heard nor a funeral note,
As his corpse to the rampart we hurried," was written by the Rev. Charles White, of Clonmel, Ireland—a parish parson of moderate pretensions. Some recent investigations have shown that he was the poet of a single poem, even as there have been orators of a single oration. These investigations have also shown that he was not a good poet, preaching to a peasant people, and adapting himself to their comprehension. An extract from a sermon of his, on the text, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light," conveys a good sentiment:

"Such is our yoke and burden. Let him who thinks it too hard and too heavy, be prepared to state it boldly when he shall appear side by side with the poor miserable Indian, before the throne of the Judge of judgment. The poor heathen may come forward with his wretched life, and say, 'Lord, I always thought, as others thought, that an abstract matter, debarking in the nonentities of a creation, and a love longing for the term romance of a body which I have terminated in my conviction. And the Christian will come forward and say, 'I know that thou didst save me from such notions, and that I had no right to them, for only commissed me to keep my body in temperance, soberness and chastity; but I thought at the time that it was evil. What will be the answer of the Judge to the poor heathen, and to the Christian? Why, that he was sadly mistaken, in the means of salvation is beyond a doubt; but the judge may say, 'Come in one and all.' Come in, and I will give thee rest which thee couldst not purchase for thyself. Rest to the Christian—Rest who hadst to carry yoke and light burden; thou for whom all was already purchased; begone and pay for me with."

The Albany Atlas and Argus, the accredited organ of the Democratic party in New York, has an article on the war and its probable speedy close, from which we cut the following significant paragraph:

"Point out the vision of a Federation embracing all of North America and the West Indies, and the Republican party will gladly drop the present struggle, which is now without hope or honor, and take their place at the ballot box to declare a cyclone of a result not seen with the most President or his Congress, but which will be hailed with delight by the loyal and devoted both the denizens of the South in their hiums. Accept the terms above indicated, and the Union will at once by the banner of Stars and Stripes which they have not entirely ceased to wave over the whole interior portion of a continent. Let them prove their loyalty at Quebec as at Mexico, and the Union will soon extend from Canada on Mexico, and expel the Austrian pretender!"

A correspondent of the London Army and Navy Gazette, at the close of the year, renews the expression of his faith that the Northern States will succeed in establishing a military supremacy in the South, and that a war with Great Britain, to be fought in Canada, is not an improbable issue for a reinvigorated North and South, united, for purposes of aggression against a common enemy. The writer argues that though military supremacy does not mean the re-conquest of the Union, it may prove something more than argue and offensive to England.

Gen. Butler, in his farewell order to the troops lately under his command, makes use of the following language, which indicates clearly the reason why he was removed from command. It was his failure to assault Fort Fisher. The Government evidently agrees with the publicand Admiral Porter in the belief that the fort could have been carried in fifteen minutes by a coup de main. The General says: "Knowing your willing obedience to orders, and seeing your ready devotion of your blood in your country's cause, I have been chary of the precious charge confided to me: I have refrained from useless sacrifice of the lives of such gallant soldiers, and I am relieved from your command. The wasted blood of my men does not stain my garments: For my action I am responsible to God and my country."

A correspondent of The Citizen, the organ of the Citizens' Association of New York, who subscribes himself "Incognito, once else an Inmate of a Felon's Cell," writes to the Mayor, rebuking it for having opposed one of the candidates before the people in the late charter election, on the ground of his having served two years in the State Prison. "Incognito," insists that criminals may reform and become good citizens, and adds: "I am proud to say that, although I served in State Prison birds—hardly known as such, however—occupy, one a seat in our House of Representatives, another is the occupant of a seat among the most important European courts, another commands a gunboat, a fifth is a brigade surgeon of the army, and many for a long time past, who, though they once wore the striped jacket, now occupy honorable position of trust." People will naturally inquire, "who is the Ambassador to one of the most important European courts," here referred to.

Great efforts are making by the managers of the New York Central and other great railways to procure the repeal of that section of the tax bill which limits the rate of passenger fare to two cents per mile. They allege that two cents are not now equal to what they were when the limitation was imposed, and that, at present rates, their dividends are greatly cut down. The Tribune speaks of their complaints in homely style, but effectually. It says: "But suppose the change had been in the opposite direction—that our currency had somehow appreciated in value, so that corn was but 50 cents per bushel, oats 25, wheat $1, coal $3 per ton, wood $2 per cord, and so on, etc. Does any one imagine that the railroad would have consented to a legal reduction of its passenger fare to one cent per mile? We think not. They have made their bargain, and insisted that the State should keep its plighted faith? The question answers itself. And, as the Legislature would have had to take it as it was, so the State should do the same by the railroad." As for the profits of the roads of the Central road, it is notorious that the rents and stock represents nearly double the actual cost, and it is certain that the revenues of the road are sufficient to pay handsome dividends on both. Let the people see to it that their direct representatives in the Legislature be neither bribed nor bribed into a compliance with the demands of these great monopolists. Let them once get their fare up to three or four cents per mile, and they will be kept there for fun generation.

If we may credit the reports which reach us from Richmond, through the press of that city, the rebel Congress has appointed a committee of fifteen of its members, to confer with an equal number to be named by Washington, on the subject of peace. The names of some of the gentlemen composing the committee are given, and there seems to be no reason to doubt that steps will soon be taken by them to carry out the objects of their appointment. How they will proceed remains to be seen, and it remains also to be seen what action, if any, will be taken by the National Congress in the premises.

The committee appears to be purely a creation of the Congress, and to be entirely independent of the rebel executive, if not, indeed, created in hostility to it. Discontent with the Davis Government is deep and almost universal, and there is an evident disposition to deprive it of authority. We are told, by the Southern papers, that a call is out for a Convention of the States, for the avowed purpose of changing the existing order of things, and, if necessary, superseding the present Government by a dictatorship. The appointment of Commissioners looks to be a part of this movement, and may be designed rather to gain time than to subserve any purpose of peace.

We cannot conceive how Congress can appoint Commissioners to meet those said to have been named in Richmond. If these mean peace, their advance must be made to the Executive; there is no other power that they can approach. And to him they can bring no proposition except that of absolute submission to the national authority. The President can listen to no other, and can accede to nothing less. His powers are well defined, and in a matter of this kind he can exercise no discretion.

It is too much to suppose that the Commissioners are prepared, even if they were authorised, to propose peace on these terms. We therefore attach no importance to the proceedings of the rebel Congress. Peace will never come through Richmond, or any fiction of a Government established there. It will come when the military power of the rebellion is effectually broken, and then only through the separate action of the States. The principle upon which the so-called Southern Confederation is founded is that of independent State action—on "the sacred right of Secession." Any state weary of war, or desirous of reversing the illegal action through which it was forced out of the Union, has the "sacred right" of cutting loose from its rebellious neighbors, without hindrance or reproach. Our efforts, outside of the operations of war, should be directed to the States separately. We have nothing to do with the so-called Confederate authorities; we cannot treat with them except on the terms of unconditional surrender; they have no rights of a political nature which we are bound to respect.

Let us not delude ourselves with dreams of speedy peace; above all, let us not for a moment relax our efforts in the field. The "Confederacy" cracks under the pressure of our arms, and this should be a motive for a sterner compression. When Lee flies a fugitive from Richmond, and Davis is threading the swamps beyond the Mississippi, on his way to Mexico, then we may think and talk of peace as a practicable thing, but not until then.

When the Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill came up a few days ago in the Senate, the clause which makes an appropriation "for salary of Minister to Mexico," was so amended, on motion of Mr. Wade, of Ohio, as to read, "for salary of Minister to the Republic of Mexico." Mr. Wade observed that there were two governments in Mexico, and we could not recognise any except the Republic. "We can have nothing to do with the 'Empire.'"

The Pope of Rome has issued a bull, in which are denounced sundry "errors and heresies." Among the things which are declared to be "very hurtful," is the propagation of the opinion (we quote literally), that:

> "Liberty of conscience and of worship is the right of every man, a right which ought to be proclaimed and established by law in every well-constituted State; and that citizens are entitled to make known and declare, with a liberty which neither the ecclesiastical nor the civil authority can limit, their convictions, of whatever kind, either by word of mouth, or through the press, or by other means."

The judicial Dogberrys of Canada are greatly exercised with the questions started by the legal pundits who are defending the St. Albans thieves and assassins. At last accounts they were in solemn deliberation as to whether St. Albans was or was not within the United States. They have also decided to give time for the prisoners to get evidence from Richmond, as to whether Jeff Davis had authorised the thieves and robbers aforesaid to make their raid on St. Albans—just as though Davis had the right to send his minions to make war from a neutral territory! Suppose Davis avows that he sent the raiders to Canada, to invade the United States from it as a base of operations, what then? He will only confess to a violation of the Law of Nations, and to an outrage on the municipal laws of Canada. How the confession of additional crimes are to palliate these with which the raiders are charged is to better their case, is not clear.

Summary of the War.

VIRGINIA.

With the exception of an occasional foraging party perfect quiet is maintained by both armies before Petersburg and Richmond. The freshets on the James river had forced their way through the Dutch gap, but not of sufficient depth to be of any practical use.

On the 13th of Jan., as a foraging party, consisting of four companies of the 5th corps, under the command of Capt. Rice, were on a foraging expedition about two miles from our lines, they were attacked by a party of rebels, upon which our men fled in a most shameful manner, leaving Capt. Rice in the hands of the enemy. A stronger force having been sent in pursuit, the dead body of Capt. Rice was discovered, entirely stripped of everything, and with two bullet holes through his head—he having evidently been murdered by his brutal captors after surrender.

ALABAMA.

A recent number of the Mobile Advertiser reports about 4,000 Union troops at Franklin Mills, on Dog river, near Mobile city, "without transportation," their supplies being received by way of the river. The rebels had had a skirmish with them; but their position is described as "unassailable."

ARKANSAS.

A St. Louis correspondent says that Forts Smith and Van Buren have been abandoned, and that Fort Gibson, in the Indian Territory, no doubt, soon will be.

It is said that the President has ordered the reoccupation of these places.

TEXAS AND LOUISIANA.

Ensign Blume and a boat's crew of Union sailors had performed the gallant exploit, on the 3d, of cutting out, within 500 yards of the rebel guard-ship, a schooner laden with 120 bales of cotton, waiting a chance of running the blockade, and took her safely past the rebel batteries to the Union fleet.

The rebel guerillas, who for a time were very quiet along the Louisiana shores of the Mississippi, have again become active and troublesome, and a number of Union expeditions have been sent out from Baton Rouge and other posts.

Gens. Baldy Smith, Gilmore and Steele were in New Orleans on the 7th inst.

Gen. Bailey, of Red river engineering fame, has been appointed to the command of the Baton Rouge district.

MISSOURI.

Recently a party of the Home Guards and the 9th Missouri cavalry pursued, through several of the interior counties, the noted chief Jim Jackson, whom, with 17 of his men, they succeeded in overtaking and killing.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rebel papers assert that a large portion of Gen. Sherman's army has crossed Savannah river, and are marching towards Branchville.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The Opdyke-Weed libel suit has come to an end, and has resulted in the jury being discharged, having been unable to agree on a verdict. Seven were for a verdict of 6¼ cents, and five for a higher sum. It may therefore be considered as ended. The New York Herald facetiously suggests that Mr. Rufus Andrews should commence an action against Mr. Weed, or Mr. Weed against Mr. Andrews.

—— A meeting of clergymen was recently held in Philadelphia, to consider the propriety of increasing the clerical staff for the benefit of the sick and wounded soldiers. Dr. Kennard, as Chairman, made an eloquent appeal to the meeting.

—— The culture of the grape is increasing in California. The vintage of 1864 exceeded 5,000,000 gallons.

—— By the bark Rechabite, Capt. Leeman, news has been received of the total loss of the steamship Melville, bound from this port to Hilton Head. Albert L. Baydon, one of the passengers on the steamer, was picked up at sea by Capt. Hilton, on the 8th inst. Baydon had saved himself by clinging to a portion of the wreck. It appears from his statement that the vessel foundered on the 7th inst., with 65 passengers on board, and a crew numbering 16. The brig Hornet also arrived with three of the ship's crew on board. All the rest are supposed to have perished. Vessel and cargo together were valued at $110,000.

—— About 15 miles above St. Joseph, near the Missouri river, an extensive body of very peculiar clay has been discovered. When first taken out it can be easily cut into any shape desired, and a surface made as smooth as glass. In a few hours it hardens, becomes firm as a rock, and has a whiteness equal to snow. In Texas and Utah this kind of clay is used for building purposes, and is exceedingly beautiful.

—— The Starlight Coterie held their second soirée dansante on the 12th inst. It was a very pleasant affair, and fashionably attended. The music was excellent, and the company did not separate till a late hour.

—— Cooper Institute was well filled on the 13th inst. to hear the lecture to be delivered by Frederick Douglass before the Ladies' Bazaar Association. He argued strongly in favor of giving negroes the right to vote, and putting them on an equality as citizens. He asked the people to give them a trial, and if they failed then to do well, let them go. His lecture was quite interesting, and was listened to attentively to the end.

—— The contributions of our citizens for the relief of the destitute people of Savannah are most liberal. The steam transports Rebecca Clyde and Daniel Webster, the former generously placed at the disposal of the Relief Fund Committee by the New York and Washington Transportation Company, the latter under the control of Col. Allen, last sailed on the 13th.

—— On January 14th Gov. Fletcher issued a proclamation declaring Missouri a free State, in accordance with the emancipation ordinance passed by the State Convention. This event was celebrated in St. Louis by brilliant illuminations and every sign of popular rejoicing.

—— The Tennessee State Convention has unanimously adopted resolutions abolishing and for ever prohibiting slavery within that State, abrogating the secession ordinance, and all the laws passed in pursuance thereof. These are to be voted upon by the people on the 22d of Feb., and if they are adopted an election for Governor and members of the Legislature will be held on the 4th March next. The Convention also unanimously nominated Parson Brownlow for Governor. In accepting the nomination he said "that he would put an end to all guerilla fighting in Tennessee if he had to hang every man concerned in it." A few such Governors would soon extinguish the most disgraceful feature of the present age.

—— The power one man possesses of regenerating a newspaper has been strikingly exhibited in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, which since the first of the year has been conducted by G. W. Childs, the well-known publisher. Mr. Childs is one of those few men whose literary tastes, intellectual endowments, and varied knowledge have not impaired their practical ability. In every department of the Public Ledger his vigorous and able hand is seen. As a proof the appreciation we may mention that although he has doubled the price it has not interfered with the circulation.

Western.—The Overland Mail to California has been suspended for the present, or until Gen. Curtis can disperse the hostile Indians of the Plains, who recently captured and robbed an Overland coach near Julesburg, and murdered two of the Overland Mail Company's employés, and who at present threaten the route from Fort Kearney to Denver City. A severe skirmish is reported as having occurred between our troops and the Indians. The Mail Overland has been thrice interrupted within three years. During the winter of 1862-3 the coaches went through on time, distancing the steamers; but in the winter of 1863-4 the roads were blocked with snow in February, and in August last the Cheyennes and Sioux made an attack like that near Julesburg lately. The service is to be resumed as soon as the route can be rendered safe. The telegraph is intact, dispatches from San Francisco having come through.

Southern.—The Augusta Chronicle and Sentinel of Jan 4 contains a very interesting and apparently truthful account of Gen. Sherman's rule in Savannah, as seen through rebel eyes. It says the most perfect order is maintained; no soldier is allowed to interfere with the citizens; two insurance companies propose to open a National bank; the custom-house and post-office are being cleaned and repaired, preparatory to being reopened. The soldiers are not allowed, under any circumstances whatever, to enter private residences. The negroes, in most cases, are orderly and quiet, remaining with their owners, and performing their customary duties. Nothing but "greenbacks" are in circulation. The churches on Sundays are well filled with ladies. On week days, however, but few of them are seen on the streets. A majority of the male population have remained in the city. A majority of the citizens have provisions for some time to come, but there is a scarcity of wood; but Gen. Sherman has announced that he will soon remedy this last difficulty, by getting wood via the Gulf railway and hauling it to the citizens. No pass is allowed to any male person to go towards the city. The soldiers of Sherman's army had contributed 1,100 loaves of bread for the poor of the city.

—— Richmond papers say that Mosby is being nursed at his father's house in Amherst, and that he is rapidly recovering from his wounds.

—— Semmes, the pirate of Alabama notoriety, has been in Mobile lately. While there, he received the compliment of a serenade, after which he made a speech, stating that he had come to that port via Mexico. He said that we ought to be thankful that this war had occurred in our generation; that the eyes of all Europe were admiring the heroism with which our forces on land and sea were battling for our rights and liberties, and that we should live in after ages on the pages of a history such as the world has never before produced. He remarked that he had brought good news from across the water; that he had never commanded large armies or navies, but had under him only one or two small ships, which he had made efficient in wiping Yankee commerce from the sea, and that it was very rare that the Yankee flag was now found floating in foreign waters, and in bearing triumphantly through three-fourths of the globe the Confederate flag, which he had shown for the first time to foreign nations.

—— It is said that the clergy of Savannah omit from the usual formula the prayer for the President of the United States and Gen. Sherman is reported to have said, when one of these rebel Episcopal divines called upon him to ascertain if he would be allowed to pray for Jeff Davis. "Pray for Jeff Davis, why certainly! You ought to pray for him every day, for Jeff Davis and the d—l need praying for very much."

—— A dispatch from Nashville to the Philadelphia Ledger states, that "there is said to be great excitement at Mobile, owing to the fact that the city was being threatened on all sides, while the garrison for its defence was believed to be largely inefficient. If the fleet had a dozen light draft boats the city would soon be in our possession; but as it is, the work will have to devolve upon the land forces. There is a rumor that a part of Hood's forces are en route for the city."

Military.—It is stated by the Washington papers that the removal of Gen. Butler was made at the express demand of Gen. Grant; Gen. Ord has been appointed his successor.

—— The Washington correspondent of the New York Express says that the pressure upon the Administration to bring about the release of 60 odd thousand men now held in Southern prisons, has become sufficiently potential to institute measures to that end. Col. Mulford is about to proceed South, clothed with ample powers to arrange the matter.

—— It is not quite certain that New York has escaped the draft, as Gen. Fry has refused to abide by his former decision on naval enlistments. A deputation has proceeded to Washington to consult with him.

—— Gen. Thomas, in a dispatch dated Dec. 29, says: "From the best information I have at this time, Hood's losses, since he invaded the State of Tennessee, sum up as follows:- Six general officers killed, six wounded and one taken prisoner at Franklin—thirteen in all; and about 6,000 men killed, wounded and taken prisoners at the same battle. On the 8th inst., at Murfreesboro', he had one general officer wounded, about 1,000 men killed and wounded, and 207 taken prisoners, and losing two pieces of artillery. In the two battles of the 15th and 16th inst., before Nashville, he had one lieutenant-general severely wounded, one major-general and three brigadier-generals, with 4,462 officers and men made prisoners, besides losing 53 pieces of artillery and over 3,000 stand of small arms. During his retreat we have captured 15 more guns, and from 1,500 to 2,000 prisoners, and a large number of small arms have been picked up by the way."

Naval.—From affidavits taken in Liverpool, and published in the Post of that city, it appears that the Shenandoah, late the Sea King, of London, is now a regular Confederate cruiser, and that her outfit was obtained in the way described in the newspapers at the time. The steamer Laurel cleared from Liverpool with guns, powder, stores, men and officers on board. The Sea King at the same time cleared from London for Bombay, in ballast. Both, of course, were under the British flag. The vessels rendezvoused off Madeira, the armaments from the Laurel were transferred to the Sea King, the latter was rechristened the Shenandoah, hoisting at the same time the Confederate flag, and setting forth on her mission to prey on the commerce of the United States. Such is the history as told by two men who were offered an engagement on board the Shenandoah, but who declined it, and came home to tell the story of the transformation. They say that a bucketful of sovereigns was brought on the deck of the cruiser to tempt the men.

—— A Halifax, N. S., dispatch states that the late rebel pirate Tallahassee, now changed to a blockade-runner, and called the Chameleon, is under arrest at Bermuda. The blockade-runners Owl, Stagg, Charlotte Maria Campbell, Whisper, Susan Bierne and Dieppe are also at Bermuda, and the Col. Lamb is at Nassau. Forty-three blockade-runners have been lost out of 71 which have visited Bermuda during the past year.

Personal.—Theodore Tilton, editor of the Independent, during his recent visit to Chicago was entertained at a magnificent banquet by a fugitive slave—but now a wealthy merchant of that city.

—— The Louisville press is very enthusiastic in favor of Miss Emily Shaw, who has been reading Shakespeare in that city.

—— Major-Gen. Hancock has been in New York city, on business of his new division.

—— Gen. Howard has been called by the press the American "Havelock." It is somewhat singular that we are still so provincial in our epithets.

—— George H. Yeaman, the Democratic Congressman from Kentucky, who advocated the passage of the Constitutional amendment for the abolition of slavery, was born in Hudson county, Ky., in 1829; studied law and came to the bar in 1852. In 1854 he was elected Judge Advocate of Davies county, and in 1861 was elected to the State Legislature. In 1862 he was elected to Congress, and re-elected in 1863.

—— Richard Yates, the new United States Senator from Illinois, is a native of Kentucky, where he was born in 1818. He served in Congress from 1851 to 1855, as a representative from Illinois, and was chosen Governor of that State in 1861, for the term of four years, which has just expired. His Senatorial term will close March 4th, 1871.

—— Aaron H. Gragin, the new elected United States Senator from New Hampshire, for the term of six years from the 4th of March next, was born in Vermont, in 1821. He is a lawyer by profession, was a member of the Legislature of New Hampshire from 1852 to 1855, and was a member of Congress from 1857 to 1859.

—— Gen. George B. McClellan and his family are now on a visit to his relatives in Philadelphia, previous to their departure for Europe.

—— Hon. Henry S. Foote, member of the rebel Senate from the State of Tennessee, who recently declared his intention of leaving the Confederacy, has been endeavoring to carry out his purpose. He left Richmond a few days ago, in company with his wife, and succeeded in reaching a place about 15 miles south east of Alexandria. Here he was overtaken by rebel cavalry, and compelled to return to the rebel capital. His wife was allowed to come within our lines.

Obituary.—Mrs. Carmichael Smyth, the mother of Thackeray, died lately in London, aged 80. The great novelist's father died in 1815; his mother then married again Major C. Smyth, who died in 1855.

—— Serjeant A. J. Stephen died recently in England, in his 78th year. His commentaries on the Laws of England and the Pleadings in Civil Actions are much esteemed by the profession.

—— Andreas Edward Kozman, the Polish translator of Shakespeare, died recently in Gallicia.

—— Jules Gerard, the famous lion killer, was drowned recently in Africa, aged 48.

—— Hon. Alexander Stuart, Judge of the Vice-Admiralty of Nova Scotia, died in Halifax last week.

Accidents and Offences.—Michael Carrigan, a boilermaker, was suffocated on the 18th inst., by entering a still filled with noxious gases, at the tar factory at Hunter's Point. Three of the fellow workmen of the deceased, who went into the still at the same time, narrowly escaped a similar fate, and their condition is still precarious.

—— A brutal and bloody affray occurred on the 13th inst., at No. 31 Mercer-street, between Edward Brennan, the landlord, and David Sullivan, a soldier, and both combatants were seriously wounded by bottles and slungshots, the weapons employed. Brennan's skull was fractured. An inmate of the house summoned Officer Glynn, of the Eighth Precinct, and the men were taken to the police station of the Eighth, where their wounds were dressed by Surgeon Blivin.

—— Quite an exciting scene came off in the Park on the morning of the 12th January. It being the day appointed for hearing Mr. Hecker's injunction against paying the street cleaners, about 500 of the unpaid laborers, whose families are suffering greatly for want of their money, mobbed Mr. Hecker, as he was on his way to the court. By rare good luck he escaped with a few bruises, and the loss of his hat, which served as a foot ball to his turbulent persecutors. An attempt was made by the rioters to take Mr. Hecker from the court-room, but the officers barricaded the doors, and kept them at bay till the police arrived.

—— There is another dodge now practised—a young man, who is called by the reporters good-looking and fashionably drest, has been arrested, charged by two ladies with robbing them, while in their company, by administering chloroform to them. In both cases he disappeared with his plunder while his victims were under the influence of the chloroform.

—— Green, the Malden murderer, who was to have been hung on the 13th January, has been respited for a short time.

Foreign.—Great excitement was recently caused at Paris by a young man, who ran along the street scattering gold coins from a small wooden bowl, which he carried in his hand, at the same time crying out, "Here is money for those who want it!" People at first thought he was mad, but cries of "Stop thief!" being heard in the distance, he was arrested by two sergens de ville. It was soon ascertained that he had broken, with a blow of his fist, the plateglass window of M. Gourdault, money-changer, Carrefour de l'Odeon, and stolen a bowl containing about 200 napoleons. The thief, who was ascertained to be a workman, 19 years of age, was taken to the prefecture of police.

—— The Palace of Industry, destined for the Universal Exhibition of 1867, in Paris, will be erected on the outside of the triumphal arch of the Etoile, on ground between the Avenue de Neuilly and the Avenue of the Grande Armée. An American passenger railway from the Champs Elysées to the bridge of Neuilly will be made for the convenience of visitors.

—— About 10,000 pieces of Roman money, principally of the reigns of Augustus, Tiberius, Claudius and Nero, have just been discovered in the bed of the Mayenne, at St. Leonard. Their presence is explained by the fact of a dangerous ford having formerly existed at this spot, and the custom of travellers to throw in the river a piece of money ex voto.

—— It is said that the revenue derived from French newspaper stamps has been lately falling off at the rate of £100 a day, owing to the Moniteur du Soir, the Petit Journal and other prints issued at the small cost of one sou.

—— European papers state that the peninsula of Lenkoran (Asiatic Russia) contains numerous springs of petroleum. No fewer than 109 are now worked, and yield annually about 4,000 tons of petroleum, similar to that brought from America. There are also many springs of the kind in the Isle of Taman.

—— The Leipsic University in the present term contains 982 students, of whom 664 are natives of Saxony, and 318 foreigners.

Chit-Chat.—A French theatrical manager has addressed Dickens! in regard to his poem of "Mazeppa," which the Menken is playing in London. The manager's idea of English literature is rather confused.

—— The famous Swiss Demme-Trumpy case still occupies the European world, and, indeed, the American world. Dr. Demme was tried for poisoning his father-in-law, that was to be; his mother-in-law, to be, swore in court to criminal complicity in the poisoning, but he was acquitted. He then eloped with the daughter, Flora Trumpy. The bride and groom were then heard of by committing suicide by drowning in the Lake Geneva. The supposed dead parties next were heard of at Milan, and arrangements were made to arrest them, when a despatch from the Consul announced that they had committed suicide by poison.

—— The London Shipping Gazette says England last year received from all sources about 600,000 bales more cotton than in 1863. The consumption has increased about 270,000 bales, and there is a total stock on hand equal to 532,000 bales.

—— Cincinnati is exercised upon the gas question. It can easily be settled by the highest legal authorities —Black-stone and Coke.

—— Gen. Butler, in replying to an officer, who wished to know how he was to act in the cases of those who had conscientious scruples about taking the oath of allegiance, says: "I do not understand their reasoning. If they are well-disposed and loyal to the United States Government, it is no matter what their relatives are. If they are not well-disposed towards the United States Government, then they have no business to live under that Government, and should go to some country to whose Government they are well-disposed. There is neither conscience nor honesty in living under a Government to which they are hostile, receiving the benefit of its protection and laws, and returning no equivalent."

A Beautiful Magazine.—We have just received Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine, the handsomest publication of the kind in the country, containing six pages of handsome colored fashions for January, and filled with choice reading for the month. No family should be without it. It would make a complete and appropriate holiday present for anybody, and we suggest that this is just the time to make up clubs. The terms are liberal in comparison to what you get for the money; $3 50 a year for single subscriptions, four copies to one Post-office $14, and one copy of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, weekly, and the Lady's Magazine for $7. The Illustrated Newspaper itself is an old established periodical, and combined with the Magazine makes a subscription worth at least $10. There are no American periodicals more worthy the patronage of the people than these.—DeKalb (Ill.) Republican and Sentinel.

DIVING OUT OF THE BULKHEAD OF THE DUTCH GAP CANAL, JAMES RIVER, VA., JAN. 1.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. E. TAYLOR.

VIEW UP THE JAMES RIVER, VA., SHOWING OUTLET OF DUTCH GAP CANAL, THE SCENE OF THE RECENT EXPLOSION.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. E. TAYLOR.

PARTING.

Oh, sing to me some gentle song;
Some tender and melodious air,
That through my brain shall glide along,
And start low echoes there.
Care, like Eurocldon,
Has chilled me through with driving sleet;
Oh, let thy voice, subdued and sweet,
Like summer waves on loitering feet,
Against my throbbing temples beat,
Till all the pain is gone;

Forgetful of all dire mishap,
Beneath the kindness of thy face,
I lay my head upon thy lap,
And claim thy last embrace.
While thou art o'er me bowed,
I watch thy gentle loves arise,
And flout and kindle in thine eyes,
As some May morning's shifting dyes,
That tremble through the shadowy skies
And flush from cloud to cloud.

We part—and it may be for aye—
None know the number of their years—
Ah! at that thought thine eyes' soft day
Is lost in twilight tears.
Nay! be not grieving thus—
I did not mean for aye, sweet love;
Only, as life's swift shuttles move,
Like silken threads apart we shove;
But surely He who rules above
Most kindly watches us.

And when our parted lives are done,
What heavenly rapture it will be
To know them woven into one,
By careful Deity.
Call back thy vanished smile,
Let us, with sacred, reverent trust—
Sure that the ways of God are just,
And our bright love-links cannot rust—
Be severed, darling, if we must;
'Tis but a little while.

Then sing to me some gentle song,
And round my neck thy white arms wind,
While tender thoughts—a holy throng—
Float over thy pure mind.
And flower within thine eyes,
As lilies in smooth waters grow;
And, lovingly entwined so,
It may be we shall feel the glow
Of angel loves, and sweetly know
The strength of angel ties!

THE KOBOLDS OF THE VLEIGHTBURGH.

BY R. L. ABBEY.

I AM not one of those materialistic chemists who hold to the theory that the intellect is nothing but iodine, phosphorus and other elements in a highly electric state, however much the dogma may seem to favor the Baron Von Reichenbach's philosophy of odyle. I have insurmountable reasons for believing the latter, while my moral sense, aside from any other consideration, revolts at the other.

Odyle is a property perceptible in highly sensitive persons of both sexes, by which a peculiar influence is produced on such persons whenever they approach a magnet or anything in the material universe. I think the theory to a certain degree is illustrated by the case of Casper Hauser. The phenomenon of ghosts is but the excitement of odyle; the picture in the mind impressed upon the retina of the eye. Boswell relates instances in the life of Doctor Johnson which prove that author possessed that faculty. "He was observed upon innumerable occasions to suddenly stop, and seem to count his steps with deep earnestness; and when he had gone wrong in this magical movement, he would go back again, put himself in the proper posture to begin the ceremony, and having gone through it, break from his abstraction, walk briskly on and join his companions." This propensity I acknowledge to possess myself, and have observed it in others. It is odyle in its latent form. Its possessors are sure to contain a great amount of electricity, and in many instances are clairvoyant.

I have a friend who, by sliding her feet across the carpet, and touching iron or steel, will cause sparks of electricity to be emitted from her fingers. Other odylic persons dream dreams that are often verified, and are cognizant of the presence of others, though they may not have seen them. I have frequently been intuitively advised, when entirely alone, that some one was near me, and have heard clearly articulate whispers calling my name, though no person beside myself was in the room.

It was at the close of a warm and beautiful summer's day some years since that I nonchalantly wandered about the Vleightburgh, a high hill that from the suburbs overlooks a thriving village on the Hudson. The sun was sinking slowly to his emerald couch among the distant mountains. At my feet lay a town and a river. The roofs that sloped towards the sunset had caught the delaying light, and reflected it like mirrors, while their eastern sides, like everything which faced the darkness, seemed to welcome the night with shadowy hands. The masts of the shipping loomed up gaily pennoned, an arbor of wicker-work decked with flowers for a holiday. The dusk began to deepen down over the quiet landscape, and the shadows were lengthening in the water. The trees that reminded the banks grew gradually of a more sombre hue. Far away rolled the river, bearing on its dusky bosom the solemn barks, white robed, like ghosts. As the darkness grew denser they seemed more and more unreal. They took fantastic shapes, and groping among shadows, stalked about the waters. But the river passed on, and its breast with the breath of the tide imperceptibly rose. The tide was coming in with the night.

Walking leisurely I came to the entrance of a quarry, within which I was surprised to hear a chorus of voices. The music was most exquisite, and the harmony might have been such as one as Beethoven could have imagined but never composed. It was lovelier than the hymns of the Abencerrages. The tone became the time and place, weird as both were; being low and sweet and dreamy like twilight, and there were echoes that were vague as shade.

FALL OF THE ROCKS.

The entrance led the way to a deep cut that had been made in the hill for the purpose of a quarry; indeed, the whole Vleightburgh is tunnelled and mined for this use. The cut was upwards of three hundred feet in length. On either side it was walled by smooth and almost perpendicular rock, extending to the summit of the hill, a distance of perhaps one hundred feet. The rock against the hill leaned above the cut like a second tower of Pisa, and appeared ready to fall at any moment, though it was possible it might stand for ages. I had passed this same spot, and entered the quarry a hundred times before, in the daylight, and experienced no peculiar emotions; but at dusk, with the night brooding over, with no human being nearer than the valley, and with sweet, sad music floating from the gloom between the gaunt rocks, the feeling was different.

I tried to fancy what I heard was unreal, and that the sounds were the conjurations of imagination, but the music still lingered. The voices were too pure for those of mortals, and the words were of a language unknown.

While listening I was conscious a hand had taken mine, though on turning to behold its owner, I could see no one. I then placed my other hand on the wrist and arm above the mysterious stranger's, and was perfectly aware I grasped a substantial though curiously shaped arm, yet nothing was visible. I would have thought my sense of seeing failed me, had I not distinctly beheld the evening landscape as before. I began to doubt my own identity, and wondered if I was not laboring under some hallucination, until a voice said, close in my ear,

LISTENING TO THE SUPERNATURAL MUSIC.

"I am Bluejay, an orator of the Kobolds who inhabit this hill."

With this introduction, he shook my hand so warmly that it ached.

You will say, no doubt, this was very strange, and indeed I thought so myself. The report that had gained credit among the Indians who used to live hereabouts, that against the cliffs of the Vleighthurgh the spirits of the dead braves were wont to whet their arrows, ere they started on their celestial excursions to reshoot defunct buffaloes, immediately recurred to me at the mention of Bluejay; and I was almost certain the invisible individual by whom I was addressed was none other than one of the tribe who used to drive such a thriving trade in arrowheads, down in the valley. The suspicion was not weakened by the knowledge of the fact, that near the shore, and but just below me, there was an Indian burying-ground, which, I trembled to remember, had not been treated with much respect of late, as the sand of the hill was required for building purposes, and the dust of the savage sleepers had contributed its share, no doubt.

"What makes you hesitate?" inquired Bluejay, "you know the Kobolds were always the friends of man, and I have a secret to tell you of vast importance. There, here we are inside, with the precipice leaning over us like the vengeance of some of my declared foes. Those jets of blue flame just distinguishable over yonder are well known to you. You have read Goethe and Uhland. Perhaps the lights may account for the symphonies. But before I tell you my story or relate my secret, suppose you satisfy your curiosity as to what species of creature I am, by passing your hands over me. Your sight avails you nothing. Eyes that cannot see so apparent an element as the air, nor the swarms of life in a drop of rain-water, cannot be expected to behold as fine bodies as we are. Your sense of feeling is made acute by the extreme tension of the nerves. The blue flames are the crowns, the aureolas we wear. You never see the Kobolds themselves."

I now passed my hands over my companion as he had directed, and found him another Puck, and a very quaint person indeed. Like the Cynocephali and Acephali that Herodotus tells us inhabited Libya, the Kobolds have but one eye, and unlike them, it is in their foreheads; the eyes of the Libyans being in their breasts. Bluejay's hair was very fine, and fell about his shoulders in silky profusion. He could not have been more than three feet tall. His arms and legs were hairy, his beard unshorn, and as I immediately fell to liking him, I could not help being reminded of capillary attraction. While I had my hands upon his face I felt the dimples, and when I touched his neck he laughed outright as though I tickled him. His feet were like a lion's paws, and his limbs were shaped more like a deer's than a man's. As far as I could judge, he must have been a descendant of the Satyrs or Fauns, though this is pure surmise on my part, as he never related one word to me concerning his ancestry. This fact is almost wonderful, as in old time, when Bluejay was in the prime of life, it was necessary to trace one's pedigree back to Adam. I guessed from this and another noticeable circumstance, that my friend was innocent of the fashions of the world.

"Sit down on this stone," said Bluejay, "I will take the one opposite you. The stars are coming out finely. You observe my friends have ceased singing. There is music in the stars, that is far above all other music. Some men have heard it, but it is impossible to describe. The voices of the morning stars are not hushed yet.

"I am called Bluejay because I once cured a member of the feathered family of that name which had been accidentally wounded. My patient is one of the few birds that have been given to fame.

"It was in the year nine billion nine million nine hundred and nine, after the demise of her husband Dodo, that Queen Enib ascended the throne of the Kobolds in this hill. We measured time from the year in which the world began to revolve round the sun, immediately following its formation by the fusion of the three great comets, Reisende, Schatz and Blitzen. Queen Enib was beloved by her subjects. At her instigation I was made the representative of the people, and received an annuity. It was my duty in every event to explain important cases to her majesty, and see that redress was given if any party had been aggrieved. We allow ideas to rule the nation. Our code of laws was established on a series of fundamental truths, and jurisprudence was always in harmony with these. Under such rule the people prospered, and the treasure was augmented. Our caverns were enlarged, and population increased. New drifts were opened, and new lodes discovered. An extension was built to the royal palace. This palace is, in fact, the greatest treasure we possess. It is wrought entirely of diamonds, with the exception of the lintels and doors, which are of fine gold. Music with us is an indispensable adjunct, and strains of the most intense passion and splendor constantly echo in the lofty halls. Sensuous perfumes, divorced from the hearts of flowers, seem to mingle with the melodies, and every sense is satiated with enjoyment. The lower rooms contain vast deposits of precious gems. Here deep-hidden lies Eldorado, nearer than the valley of Avilion. The palace is the gateway of that land. The upper apartments are devoted to the royal household. Here dwelt the good queen, and her only daughter the Princess Louise. The latter is one of the most beautiful of all the Kobolds. A poet who saw her surrounded with harpists, said her life was an ark that floated on a deluge of music; and for the compliment, however equivocal it may have been, received a handsome compensation. Queen Enib was the friend of man. With that large liberality which characterised all her actions, she informed me some years since, she had resolved to share the national treasure with the people of the outer world, and wished me to publish her resolve. I did as directed, and the citizens as a mass favored the project, though there were some who were dissatisfied. For, my dear friend, never was a generous and noble deed accomplished by a ruler but that some found fault. There are always extremists and enthusiasts in advance of their age, but there are also old fogies and narrow-minded people enough to balance them. After a while, however, finding themselves in the minority, the dissenters gradually changed their views, and came round like rudderless barks into the current of popular opinion.

"Agreeable to the decision of the queen, a deputy was instructed to cause your people to open a quarry at a point on the outside of the hill nearest our cavern. Soon after this portion of the Vleightburgh was broken with pick and drill, and the great blasts shook the earth with their thunder, causing the Gnomes, who sometimes passed through the hill, to crouch and huddle together in corners of the rock, half dead with fright. The sound of the blasts kept coming nearer and nearer, though it troubled the queen some to hear the workmen had not attempted to pass the second perpendicular ledge of rocks, but were excavating along its side. This ledge stands in such a position, you observe, that to take away its natural props, as your people have done, leaves it in imminent danger of falling. For some time our own soldiers were assigned the duty of supporting this vast leaning layer, in the hope the workmen would soon attempt to penetrate it. The army held out as long as it could, and I was then sent to the Gnomes to negotiate for assistance. It was stipulated we should award the King of Nomia three diamonds a day for the services of three thousand troops.

"On my return to my native cavern, I brought with me the Prince Yebha, with whom I was at first very much impressed. All that he had not acquired he knew by intuition. The theory my old human friend Plato advanced, that men by nature know all things, but that through the darkness of the body the mind is cramped to its mortal condition, is illustrated by the Kobolds. For we, being a higher order of creatures, are more ethereal, and the mind in our persons is freer, so that the knowledge of each individual is almost universal. The Prince Yebha was highly delighted with the sight of our treasures, but still more with the Princess Louise. He gave her a necklace of alternate blue and yellow diamonds, with which she seemed to be very much pleased, though I mistrusted the good Queen Enib demurred at its acceptance, and regretted the visit of the young scion. On what ground she based her dislike it never was my fortune to ascertain, though I suspected it was nothing more than the chronic aversion the royal family of the Kobolds have always entertained for the Gnomes, on account of their duskier complexion. The queen subsequently intimated to me her displeasure at the turn of affairs, leaving it with me to devise some means to post the prince home at the earliest possible season. To accomplish this, I bribed a Gnome in the army to appear before him, saying his father, the king, desired his immediate presence to assist in concocting a plan for the overthrow of the Ghouls, who were already marshalling for invasion. This banished the prince and myself also, for the queen, hearing a falsehood had been employed, was very angry, and denuded me of office, commanding me not to appear before her again until I had perused, word for word, five folios on ethics, and as many on international law. My selfishness was so unrestrained, that I at first meditated inciting the people against the government, but remembering it was the best we had ever possessed, and the only legal one we could secure until the death of the queen, I incontinently resolved to sustain it. What transpired at the palace during my absence, I only know by hearsay.

"I incarcerated myself in a cavern, and became a hermit for the time. I read works on sorcery and alchemy, in addition to the imposed task. At the termination of my labors I went before the queen and was reinstated in all my honors. Benjamin, the chief butler, who had always been my friend, related to me the result of his watchfulness during my absence. He said he had observed the princess frequented a particular apartment, and by keeping his eyes and ears open one day as he very accidentally passed the door, apprehended two voices engaged in earnest conversation, though in a subdued tone. He at once recognised the coarser tones to be those of the prince, and the finer those of the princess. For fear of the displeasure of the latter, he had not revealed the secret, thinking it advisable to reserve it for me. Ben had no idea how the prince could have entered the room, as there was never so much as a keyhole or crevice for him to come in at. I afterwards cleared up the mystery. The prince had been secreted in a closet. The naughty princess was severely reprimanded by the queen, but every attempt to dissuade the former from her intimacy with Yebha was unavailing. As a last resort, and at the risk of displeasing the King of the Gnomes, the prince was requested to leave our cavern city. When so informed, he taunted us with the deception we had previously practised upon him, and said he would go, threatening to take his army and the princess also. His cooler judgment predominated however, and he departed, much to our relief, though we were not without some anxiety as to the result. Days passed, and there came news from Nomia that the prince had arrived in safety at his father's palace. His people were exasperated at the indignity to which their ruler had been subjected, were clamorous for war, and eager to avenge the insult. But the prince had appeared on the golden steps of the palace, and quelled the disturbance.

"He said when a being allowed deceit in the place of self-control to rule his actions, it would not be long before all the moral faculties would become perverted, for in permitting deceit to take the sceptre, the being acknowledges himself unequal to the moment, and thereby degrades himself. The Kobolds, in the employment of deceit, had degraded themselves, and would reap their own harvest. That he loved the Princess Louise he admitted, and believed he was beloved in return, but they could wait for the fruition of their affection. War should be only the channel in which great truths rush down to beautify the valleys of the world. War at this time could only make wider divergence between the two nations, and lessen the possibilities of his happy marriage. Moreover, a war for such a trite cause would be unjust.

"For this generous speech the prince was warmly applauded, and frequently interrupted with cries of 'Hear, hear!' The princess read the oration in the morning paper, the Kobollonian, and Benjamin informed me he afterwards saw her crying over it and kissing it, when she was quite alone. Whether it was the continual excitement wearing upon a fragile and esthetic nature, or whether it was really the unhappy result of her love for the prince that affected her, at first perplexed me to determine. She seemed to lose all spirit, scarcely spoke a word, and failed rapidly. Her cheeks grew pale, and when she smiled it was so sadly that we all pitied her. I met her in the hall of Chalcedony, and took both hands in mine.

"'Oh, Bluejay,' said she, 'perhaps you may be guiltless; surely you cannot know what you have done. When I die carry me out into the sunshine, and bury me near a lake where the water-lilies grow, because I am as pale as they. My friends have all become my enemies.'

"The princess passed on weeping, and I, deeply musing, and willing to forgive these bursts of sentiment in young people, though I own I have never experienced them, being an old bachelor, and not in love with anybody but myself.

"But now Queen Enib died, and all the people mourned her. At her deathbed, seeing the wan features of her daughter, she said she regretted her treatment of the prince, and hoped the princess, in due time, would accept his hand in marriage. Uttering these words the queen died, and the people fasted for her sake a year, and in the night, when the wind blew, would sit upon the Vleightburgh and mourn for her, under the calm stars. And she was called Enib the Good.

"The succeeding year Queen Louise married the Prince Yebha. It would be impossible for me to detail an account of the wedding. Suffice to say it was worthy the royal couple. The queen had fully regained her health, and looked more beautiful than ever. The viands at the banquet embraced every delicacy. The bill of fare was in French, and consequently not understood by anybody.

"After a little while the prince began to inquire into the affairs of the city. I give him credit for being diligent. He wondered for what reason his father's three thousand troops, and as many of the queen's, were employed outside the Vleighthurgh, with no ostensible purpose but to support a great flatsided rock, that was too indolent to stand of itself. On being informed of a fact I think he already partly understood, and having no particular desire to dispose of his newly acquired treasure, he issued a decree, signed by the queen, that at a certain date the forces employed are to be relieved of their laborious duty for the more cheering work of the battle, difficulty with the Ghouls being now really anticipated. There are conflicting opinions respecting this proclamation. I have considered the matter carefully, and have come to the conclusion that the original intention of Queen Enib should be carried out. The people are divided upon the subject. With a portion of my constituents I have come to you, therefore, the better to facilitate the event, and place mankind at once in possession of the hidden wealth, or a share of it at least. It will never do us any real good, and it may confer much happiness upon men."

With this conclusion of his story, Bluejay put his hands on my shoulders, and whispered his great secret in my ear. He told me the exact place where, with the assistance of a pick, I would find a fissure in the rock that would lead me down to the caves of the Kobolds. By repeating an incantation, not unlike some of the Delphic verses, no harm could come to me in penetrating into the hidden labyrinths. He described subterranean growths and estuaries to guide me. After this I was conscious of his departure. The music rose again, but grew fainter and fainter, as if sinking in the earth, and finally ceased. I do not think anything could have induced me to reveal that secret.

The next day a terrific crash was heard, and the great ledge fell. The residents of the town will tell you the statement is a fact, and, perhaps, some who read this will remember the occurrence. Vast pieces of rock came tumbling down into the valley, crushing fences and blockading the roads. A child was playing on a plot of grass in the rear of a building, its hand was scratched by a huge boulder, weighing a ton, but no one was injured. The fall of the ledge shook the country for miles around. Never was such a fall of rocks known. Giant pieces were rolled within a few feet of the dwellings, and there lodged, as though the Kobolds themselves kept them from doing any harm. The hillside is still covered with them, and some lie close by the roadside. Trees were uprooted and broken like straws.

From the foregoing circumstance I am led to suppose the prince discovered the plot of Bluejay, and foiled it by a sudden withdrawal of his troops. This at once precipitated the great ledge into the deep cut above which it leaned, and buried for ever all possibility of discovering the secret recess leading to the caverns. Whether or no Bluejay suffered for his opinions and boldness I never knew; I have no doubt he was pardoned, however, as the prince would not be likely to abuse power.

If any argue that this is a very unlikely story, I have only to point them to a thousand more unlikely. If one may see ghosts, there is no reason why I may not with another sense detect Kobolds. The accepted theory of odyle might so etherealize my touch that an atom could be recognized; and if so, why not Bluejay? Whether I really conversed with that worthy, whether I merely sat down on the Vleightburgh and dreamed the occurrence, or whether it never transpired, does not affect the main point of the case that I can see. The rocks fell; that is the settled fact. If any one can give a better reason for their so doing than I have given, let them do so.

WAR!

BY JOEL BATES SWETT.

War! war! war!
Blood-red stained is its fiery car,
A Juggernaut of a ponderous weight,
Crushing beneath it the life of state;
Onward it goes, with thundering tone,
While up to heaven ascends the moan
Of many a victim, and nations groan
Beneath its burden of sin and wrong,
As the cry of conflict is borne along—
War!

War! war! war!
Shrieks go up from the plain afar;
And shouts of triumph are mingled, too,
While gaudy banners, of gold and blue,
And crimson colors are brought in sight,
With ceremonies of pomp and might,
Which partially serve to mask the blight
That's caused by sinning—by heinous wrong,
While the cry of conflict is borne along—
War!

War! war! war!
Laying a track for its funeral car,
Leading it on with an armed tread,
Loading it down with the mangled dead!
Flooding the nation with bitter tears,
Wasting the hoardings of peaceful years,
Withering beauty by doubts and fears:
'Tis all the fruit of some wicked wrong,
And the cry of conflict goes borne along—
War!

War! war! war!
'Tis a locust plague, as it spreads afar—
A lava flame, but a recompense
For outraged men; and it drives from hence
The knotted scourge and the clanking chain,
And many a fearful cry of pain,
That long hath swelled in the fertile plain,
Is silenced, and in its place the song
Of Freedom's triumph is borne along—
War!

EDITH AND MAY HOWARD:

A Chapter from Everyday Life.

BY MARY CAMPBELL.

If any one wants to know why I present them with a story bearing the above title, it is because the life we see around us every day is oftentimes of the most thrilling description. Not that I mean to say that I am going to lay before the reader anything at all likely to chill his blood, or bring on that creeping sensation in the flesh so well known to all readers in the horrible. Far from it. This is a very simple, very ordinary, very everyday story indeed; and my strongest reason for writing it is—that virtue is actually its own reward in this instance, not a fictitious virtue and reward, for the tale is genuine.

My acquaintance with Edith and May Howard came to pass in the following manner:

One golden afternoon, in the early part of September, not many years ago, I visited a seminary for young ladies, in company with some friends, along with whom I had been spending the summer holidays, which had lengthened out into the first week in the fall before I knew it. For some reason that I never inquired into, and therefore cannot explain, the seminary was generally known as The College; and on all future occasions, when I have any need to refer to it, I will call it by the name it was best known by. As we entered the grounds, which were remarkably fine, and enclosed a handsome building every way worthy of them, my attention was attracted to the figure of a very sweet and ladylike girl, who was seated on the grass, beneath an oak tree, reading. By-and-bye, when I neared her, and could see the book, I found it to be a volume of Tennyson; and I was at once interested in the character of a schoolgirl who could make such a choice, for I judged that if she could procure the reading of Tennyson, she might also have procured that of less worthy authors, had she been so disposed. I recall that young girl's appearance very vividly, and as I do so it makes a pretty picture in my memory. The tree cast the long shadow drawn on the ground by the afternoon sun, the figure of the reader was slight and graceful, and drooped a little forward over her book. She was dressed in black, of some thin, gauzy material, for the day had been warm, and her skirts fell around her in folds, in those artistic, waving lines so seldom seen, and which some women—very few though—seem to have a knack of casting their drapery into, by even the simplest movement. Her naturally fair complexion seemed more snowily white and clear by contrast with her black dress, her hair rippled over her shoulders in shining curls, as yellow as the sunshine that glistened on it, and when she looked up at our approach I met the half-shy, smiling gaze of a pair of great bright blue eyes, that seemed to throw out light all over her lovely face.

This was Edith Howard.

"Are visitors allowed to enter the College this afternoon?" I asked.

"Certainly. Shall I go with you to the professor's room?"

I was slightly acquainted with the professor, and I at once agreed to her proposal.

We were soon in the professor's room, and he, having received us with as much courtesy as professors generally can, formally introduced us to his pupil, who seemed to be a favorite with him.

"Would you like to walk through the building and grounds?" he then asked, anxious to do the honors of his establishment.

Some one said "Yes," and we set out on our voyage of observation. I lingered behind the rest, and soon found myself quite alone with Edith.

We readily entered into conversation, which soon travelled far out of the College, and everything thereunto appertaining.

"Have you been a pupil here long?" I asked, together with a great many other questions which I had no right to put to a stranger.

"Only six weeks," she replied; "but it seems like six years. It is the first time I have ever been from home, and I could not stay even the short time I have mentioned if my dear mama was alive."

The unaffected earnestness of her tone, and the quick tears that sprang to her eyes at once won my sympathies, and I was encouraged by her confiding manner to pursue my inquiries.

"Have you any other relatives?" I continued.

"Oh, yes," she returned, with much animation. "I have the best and dearest father in the world, and one sister."

The eagerness of her manner, and the affection in her tone visibly diminished when she referred to her sister, and I could not help asking:

"Do you see your sister often—she is probably away from your home—married, perhaps?"

"Oh, dear, no! May is only two years older than I am, and still a schoolgirl. We room together here; so you see I have a good deal of her company. Perhaps we will see her while you are here."

She seemed rather anxious to change the conversation, and I seconded her efforts, though I felt curious to know the cause of her evident dislike to talk about her sister. It could not be her fault I felt assured, she was too sweet, too amiable to be the cause of any unpleasantness—if any such existed between her sister and herself. At that moment a tall, haughty-looking, dark-eyed and dark-haired girl crossed the corridor in which we had been walking while we conversed.

"Oh, it's here you are, Edith!" she exclaimed, in no very amiable tones. "I have been looking all over the grounds for you, having first searched the building."

Edith paled visibly, and answered with an effort:

"I am sorry if I have put you to any inconvenience, May; I have been engaged with this lady—we were just going into the grounds—will you accompany us?"

"No, thank you, I am engaged just now. I would like to see you when you can spare me a few minutes," she added, with an indescribable look, which had the effect of making Edith even paler than before, and then, with a slight, almost impertinent bow to me, Miss Howard turned away.

Edith gave a sigh of relief, and continuing our way, we soon found ourselves in the pretty, fragrant garden.

We had walked but a short distance when the outer gate opened, and a gentleman entered, who proceeded along one of the many winding paths, without apparently noticing us. I observed that Edith looked after him till he was hidden from our view by the end of the building. Again an unconscious sigh escaped my companion, but this time it was not one of satisfaction. Taken together with the sad expression of her face, it constituted a sign of bitter disappointment. I became rapidly interested in Edith Howard, and to me there seemed something very like a mystery gathering about her.

I had always a keen scent for a mystery; but before I could take the first step towards ferreting out this one, we were joined by the rest of my party, and very shortly afterwards we took our leave of the College and the acquaintances we had made there. The next day I left Daneville and returned to my home, many hundreds of miles distant. After the first day or two I naturally forgot all about the Howard sisters and the apparent mystery attending them, and would probably never have thought of them again but for the following letter which I received some months later from my friend Mrs. Gilbert, to whom I had confided the observations I had made during our visit to Daneville College:

MY DEAR KATE—You have no idea how lonesome we were after you went away—myself especially. Among other recollections I had of you, I often thought of your sudden interest in that pretty, fair-haired girl we saw at the College; and so, just for something to occupy my mind with, I thought I would keep a diary and put down in it whatever items of information chance might throw in my way about the Misses Howard. I make the extracts, leaving out everything in my diary not connected with them, and give you the story in the little manuscript enclosed. How I come to have such accurate information has nothing to do with the matter. But if you are curious on that point, I will tell you all about it when you come to Daneville again. If I thought it would bring you any sooner, I would keep the story; but there, don't be disappointed—don't you see it is enclosed. After all the trouble I have taken to make it properly dramatic, interesting, and so forth, I am not going to have merely my labor for my pains, and knowing how anxious you are to peruse it, I hasten to subscribe myself ever yours, MINNIE.

I give the MS. verbatim:

September 30—Kate was right about Edith Howard and the mystery. I have found out something about it to-day. The gentleman who seemed to be the hero in the romance is only one of the heroes; his name is Ernest Godville, French teacher in the College, supposed to be in love with Edith Howard, who is well known to be in love with him. Hero No. 2 is a Mr. Alfred Slighe, friend of the family, and rejected suitor of Edith's. Mr. Slighe is rich, and quite a desirable catch, much sought after by the managing mamas of Daneville. This young man, who turns out to be of a persevering turn of mind, is determined to marry into the Howard family; and failing Edith, has now turned his attention to May. May smiles and encourages him—rich, you know!—while at the same time I have had it dimly hinted to me that the elder daughter of the house of Howard is in reality smitten with the charms of her French teacher, and, jealous of her sister, has continued to make mischief, and sadly interrupt the course of true love. So much for to-day's notes. I wonder when these little clouds will be cleared up, and how soon I will know the rest.

October 5—Chance favored me, to-day, with a somewhat remarkable insight to the affairs of the parties above named. In one of the shady walks with which Daneville abounds there is a little natural arbor, so overgrown with vines that persons seated on one side of it are entirely concealed from the view of any one on the opposite side. There I happened to be sitting to-day, beguiling my leisure moments with an interesting novel I had picked up somewhere, when quite suddenly I became conscious of voices. Whose voices or what subject was under discussion I was not at first aware, for I was quite wrapt up in my book, till I was startled by the words:

"No, Mr. Godville, I cannot listen to you—I must not—I dare not hear anything that you have to say."

I then knew in a moment that it was Edith Howard who was speaking—at least if I had thought and put my thoughts into words I would have known; but I did not think, and like a spy, an eavesdropper, I continued to listen, but unconsciously I can consistently declare.

For some moments there was perfect silence, and then Mr. Godville spoke.

"Edith," he said, "this is torturing—cruelty on your part. I have a right to speak to you—it is your duty to listen to me, for I feel assured there is some painful mistake between us."

"What do you mean?" she asked, in a tremulous tone.

"Are you, indeed, engaged to marry Mr. Slighe?"

"Engaged to marry Mr. Slighe? I——" she exclaimed, in tones of the utmost astonishment and which might have served as sufficient contradiction for any man. "Rather, sir, let me ask, do you not love my——"

At this instant steps approached hurriedly, and the next moment I heard Miss Howard exclaim, with a more gracious manner than she generally adopted towards her sister:

"So we have found you at last, Edith. We have been walking about the village for an hour in search of you. I would have given up long ago, but Mr. Slighe insisted that we must soon overtake you. There, Mr. Slighe, take the reward of merit," and with the coolness of a practised coquette she passed Mr. Slighe over to Edith, and fastened her own company on Ernest Godville.

I could have shaken her well for interrupting the course of conversation that would soon have been a revelation to the parties engaged in it, though I easily guessed all that was to come. I could also have soundly shaken Miss Edith for her dread of and tame submission to the tyranical rule of a lying sister. But I was compelled to remain quiet, and watch the ill-assorted pairs walk off, which they did presently, in the manner Miss Howard had arranged them.

October 15—Quite a sensation for our quiet little town of Danville. The College took fire, and while enveloped in flames, Mr. Godville rescued Edith Howard from her chamber at the imminent risk of his life. Nobody was hurt, or I could not speak thus lightly—the College, however, was burnt to the ground. And now, it seems, the explanation so long sought for by the young French teacher was at length effected between himself and Edith, and it turned out to have been just as I suspected—May, who hated her younger and lovelier sister, determined to separate her from Mr. Godville, and finding that she could not fascinate the young Frenchman herself continued to be in the most adroit manner, so that while she encouraged the attentions of Mr. Slighe and determined to marry him, she was still successful in separating Edith and her lover. When she discovered that all was settled between them, and, despite her strategy and falsehood, they were formally engaged, her rage knew no bounds; and having expended it at first furiously and loudly, she finally attacked Edith with sarcasm, and made a strong effort to sneer her out of her choice. But that scheme failed too; and the brilliant Miss Howard has at length been obliged to settle down with her Slighe, and complacently observe the happiness she cannot experience. Both young ladies have left school entirely; and it is well understood in this neighborhood that a double marriage will shortly take place—of which May and Edith will be the brides, and Messrs. Slighe and Godville the bridegrooms.

Here my friend Minnie's MS. terminated; and it was fully a year before I learned the last chapter of this little romance. After repeated delays in starting I again found myself in Dansville.

After tea, when Minnie and I were left alone, and had exhausted our little budget of questions and answers, I suddenly remembered Edith Howard.

"By the way, Minnie, you haven't told me about the Howard girls yet?"

"Ah—thereby hangs a tale," she answered mysteriously.

"Why, what in the world do you mean? The marriages were not broken off?"

"No; the marriages took place, with the coupling I told you of; but just a week ago Mr. Slighe was arrested on a charge of murder."

"Murder!" I exclaimed, almost with a shriek, for I was inexpressibly shocked. "Not his wife, surely—bad as she seems to have been, she scarcely deserved that fate."

"No, not his wife; though that would doubtless have followed had he been allowed time enough, for he evidently married her for the money she was heiress to. His victim was the poor old gentleman himself."

"The father—Mr. Howard! This is very horrible. Is there anything like proof against him on this terrible charge?"

"You shall hear. After Mr. Slighe's marriage with May Howard it was observed that he obtained great influence over Mr. Howard. So much so that the poor old gentleman seemed to stand in absolute dread of him, and everybody that knew them remarked upon it. Mr. Howard's health became delicate, then there was trouble about his business, and health and business failed rapidly. A very short time after Mr. Howard had been declared bankrupt he was one morning found dead in his bed; and after the funeral, when his will was read—notwithstanding his bankruptcy—it was found that May had been left heiress, sole heiress too, to everything he had owned, which turned out to be a great deal more than any one had anticipated.

Edith's name was not even mentioned. Here was more mystery; and knowing his excessive fondness for his younger daughter, people were not slow in making remarks in no way complimentary either to May or her husband. Mr. Godville, it appeared, doubted the validity of the will from the first, and once having his suspicions aroused he determined to probe the matter. He took possession of the deceased gentleman's room and papers, in the face of all Slighe's opposition; and it was noticeable that Slighe did not appeal for the protection of the law, which confirmed suspicion that he did not feel secure in his position. In the course of his searches in Mr. Howard's room, among his papers, and under the carpets—for he left nothing unexamined—Mr Godville found sufficient to confirm his first impression of Slighe's character, and on information furnished by him the authorities were induced to arrest the intriguing villain on suspicion of forgery and murder.

I had listened to my friend with absorbed attention, and it was several minutes after she had ceased speaking before I found my voice; then made inquiries about when the trial was expected, and learned that it was to come off within the week. Both Mrs. Gilbert and myself attended the trial; to give anything like a detailed account of it would spin my little story out interminably. Suffice it to say, that after a lengthened trial a story of the cruelest description was elicited from the atoms, collected at various periods, of evidence against the prisoner; the will was proved a forgery; the true will was discovered, the murder of Mr. Howard by his son-in-law Slighe was proved, and the miserable villain expiated his crimes upon the scaffold.

Edith proved the genuineness of her true and tender heart, by offering her sister and her infant an asylum in her home; and has never by word or act reproached her for the many shameless artifices to which she resorted to blast her peace and happiness; but with every kindness and gentleness tries to make her forget that her evil efforts have redounded upon her own head.

A CHILD'S GARDEN.

SEEK in the hill, and seek in the vale
 For foxglove, and broom, and heather;
Seek in the woods for the primrose pale,
Seek for the hyacinths, dim and frail,
 And plant them all close together.
Flowers that are bold, and flowers that are shy;
The drooping bell, and the starry eye
 That looks bright in the cloudiest weather,
And fling in all seeds that twine and that trail,
 To bind them safe together;
Then plant the sunflower and lily tall,
 Tulip and crown-imperial;
With a blossomed rose for the heart of June
 Set in the midst of all, and say
A charm to make them come up as soon
As the mustard and cress that were sown last May
 And be all in bloom together!
Emblem of youth's warm heart, thick sown
 With blooms that need fear no weather;
With winged dreams, and hopes half-blown,
With flowers that love to bloom alone,
 And flowers that bloom together!

TOWN GOSSIP.

WHAT a multiplicity of subjects a great city presents to gossip about, and yet how few. Many when considering them merely as subjects of gossip, but few when the industry of those daily pickers-up of unconsidered trifles are taken into estimation. If we could but put the reporters out of existence what a spicy column might we make; what delicate bits of scandal; what thrilling accidents and adventures; what surmises, hints and sarcasms on passing events; what elegant feuilletons of the day, could we offer as a weekly repast. But as the case now stands, even though we may be possessed of some special information which we know the public would delight in devouring, before we could lay it before them with only our weekly facilities the Daily Blunderer, or the Milk and Water Gazette, with a full corps of wide awake reporters, and a capacity of serving up a daily dish for all appetites, has seized the morsel and handed it over the next morning as a breakfast relish for a hundred thousand readers. We make no complaint of this, it being part of the natural order of things, but it simply places the weekly gossipper in the position of the young lady, who having studied up severely on some new and popular song in the hope of being able to sing it at a party, to which she has been invited, finds to her horror and consternation, on the evening of the festival, that the young lady who is asked to sing just before her gets off the identical song, perhaps just a little better than she could do it. With this premise we will go on and discuss our gathered ideas.

As a matter of little consequence to those of rural localities, but of great to New Yorkers, and to show that we are but human, we shall discuss the subject of coal ashes; upon which subject for the last week or two nearly a million of people have been agitated. It shows how small a thing may throw a great community off its base, when we relate that this agitation was caused simply by the non-removal of the debris of our stoves and grates, and its accumulation for a period of about 15 days in back yards and cellars, on sidewalks and in areas, because there was a difficulty between the men upon whom we are dependent for its removal and somebody else, by which the men did not get their pay, and consequently refused their labor. The story is this. A certain set of taxpayers, terming themselves "The Citizens Association," believed that the half million annually taken from the city treasury for cleaning the streets went about one-half into the pockets of the officials—which without doubt it does—sought to remedy it, and find out where the fraud was by getting an injunction preventing the payment of any more money. In doing this they perhaps put the officials to little trouble, but succeeded in shutting off some thousands of poor street cleaners from receiving the pittance due them, and urgently needed. The result has been that for the last week these sweepers and carters had been on the verge of a riot, meeting daily in the City Hall Park, and marching through the streets in mad and melancholy procession, or swearing doughty oaths under the windows of the Mayor's office or the courts until one day the mover of the injunction, Mr. John Hecker, better known as Hecker's Self-Raising Flour—for which puff we charge him nothing—had the temerity to venture, single-handed into the Park, and was in an instant set upon by a thousand infuriated Irishmen; and a run for life with a broken head, a siege of the court-room, and a drawn battle between Paddy and the police, was the consequence. In due time, however, the injunction was dissolved, the men were paid, the ashes are in a fair way of removal, and all promises to go merry as a marriage bell, except Mr. Hecker's head which must naturally go the other way, but which he must set down to the account of his being a reformer, who always have been martyrs ever since the world began.

Among the moves now before the Legislature at Albany, and likely to be carried this session are, firstly, an underground railway through Broadway, the entire length; and secondly, a paid Fire Department. The first has been in agitation for some years, but not in a way of approaching a consummation until this winter. The fact of a subterranean railway is no longer to be doubted. It has been successfully done in London, and can be done here, and it is the only way in which it can be done on Broadway. It is to be hoped that if the company gets its bill passed, they will make a proviso in it for the abolition of omnibuses, for the reason, that if an underground railway is brought into competition with the "bus," the latter will surely be the winner, a large majority of the passengers preferring to stay above ground, where they could see the street sights, than glide ever so much more swiftly and cheaply below.

